It still bothers me—but I am only one member of the committee—as to what we are doing with this language. When I asked the Minister last time, "What have you to be fearful of and to provide against in this bill?", he immediately said that the top dealers, manufacturers, and producers—he named some of them—would willingly conform at any time to any request. He said there would be some little people around who would be difficult to handle, and this would be a big stick to deal with them. Certainly, it appears to me that this provision in the form in which it occurs in this bill might be justified much more readily in the Bankruptcy Act than in this act. You are dealing mainly with a difficult category of people.

The question is: How far do we want to take this? The law clerk, as a result of our further negotiations, has come up with a suggestion, which perhaps I should read so that you can decide whether or not you wish to go any further on it:

(3) Where a corporation

- (a) has been convicted of an offence under this Act, or
- (b) has been declared bankrupt or has made an assignment in bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Act, or has forfeited its charter, or in the opinion of the court is not in fact the principal offender, and, again in the opinion of the court, the corporation has been guilty of an offence under this Act,

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You state certain factual situations with respect to the company—whether it is bankrupt, or has made an assignment in bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Act, or has forfeited its charter, or in the opinion of the court is not in fact the principal offender. Does not that really come down to what you now have in the clause, that you must have a trial within the trial to determine whether or not the corporation is in fact the principal offender?

The Chairman: Under the section as it stands, the corporation must be established in the trial of the director as being the offender, and as being guilty of the offence.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): As it stands, that seems to be a backward step in so describing it in the draft. It forces the court to express an opinion as to extending the guilt of a corporation.

The Chairman: That is right. The question is whether this is leading to confusion in interpretation and administration. It may be that, in our effort to cover the situation as we think it should be covered, we are adding as many problems as we started out with.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): What we want to do is improve the legislation.

Senator Molson: What would happen if the opening phrase were omitted, and the paragraph commenced:

Any officer, director or agent of the corporation who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in, or participated in, the commission of the offence is a party to and guilty . . . ?

The Chairman: You would be creating a separate offence in relation to those persons, which would be a perfectly proper thing to do. Mr. Ryan, have you any comment on that?

Mr. J. W. Ryan, Director, Legislation Section, Department of Justice: On the last question, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes, Senator Molson's question. If we struck out the phrase starting with "where", and the last phrase starting with "whether", what would be your comment?

Senator Molson: No, not necessarily the last clause.

The Chairman: You would leave the last one in?

Senator Molson: Yes. I am suggesting we delete "Where a corporation is guilty . . ." and start with "Any officer . . .", and insert "an offence under this Act" in line 31 or 32. What would be the effect in law of that?

Mr. Ryan: I assume, Mr. Chairman, it would continue to read "...is liable on conviction to the punishment provided for the offence whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted or convicted"?

The Chairman: That is right.

Mr. Ryan: I am speaking now without having studied it in full detail. I am a little afraid of it, inasmuch as it may change the requirements of proving the offence by the corporation in the first instance.

The Chairman: Proving it where?

Mr. Ryan: In the trial within the trial.

The Chairman: There will not be a trial within the trial.

Mr. Ryan: You would have, "Any officer, director or agent of the corporation who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in, or participated in, the commission of an offence under this Act . . ." Is that correct?

Senator Molson: That is right.

Mr. Ryan: "...is liable on conviction to the punishment provided for the offence whether or not..." You have to make a change here because we have not referred to a corporation in the wording.

Senator Molson: You have said "Any officer, director or agent of the corporation . . ."

Mr. Ryan: Whether or not the corporation has been convicted. I am reacting rather hurriedly to it, so I do not want to be held too closely to what I say. I am afraid that you might remove the requirement that, within the trial of the officer, it be established that the corporation has been guilty of the offence.

Senator Flynn: Otherwise there would be no offence.

The Chairman: Suppose they did, would not there be a proof required somewhere?

Mr. Ryan: I do not know which side I should be on, in that case.

Mr. Beaubien: Are we not going into the Corporations Act now?

The Chairman: No.

Mr. Beaubien: Is it the Companies Act or...

The Chairman: It is the Canadian Corporations Act.

Mr. Beaubien: Is it not covered here?

Mr. Ryan: To some extent this is already covered in the Criminal Code, as I understand from Mr. Scollin.

The Chairman: Mr. Scollin remarked on the last day, when he was here, that you can make it an offence for a director to assist or join in the commission of an offence under this act.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Is it not our purpose in this section to ignore the corporation, on the basis that the minister suggested last week, and to say we are not going to worry about the corporation. What we want to get at is the offending person, and he may very well be a director, officer or agent of the corporation; he is the man who administers it. It is this fly-by-night fellow that we need to cover in some kind of wording similar to that. He is the man we want to get at. Why clutter it up by talking about the corporation? I think Senator Molson may not have the exact wording here, but his idea is a sound one.

Would Mr. Ryan like to have a look at that, and come back and tell us. I think we are helping the minister here to accomplish the purpose that he described when he said he wanted to get at the man who was responsible for having the offence committed, whether the corporation is proved guilty or not.

The Chairman: Yes. Is there any other comment?

Mr. J. B. Seaborn, Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs: Perhaps I should not be speaking, as I am not a lawyer, but I think I remember Mr. Scollin saying that there is an advantage—you mentioned this this morning, Mr. Chairman—in using existing wording, wording which has been tested before, in order to assist the court cases and the jurisprudence on it. I think he had some concern about that.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Also if there is no jurisprudence.

The Chairman: As a matter of fact, I can tell you there are only two cases. One is under section 134 of the Income Tax Act and the other is under the Excise Tax Act. In both cases the corporation had been convicted first, and then the director was proceeded against. What these cases really laid down was the manner of proof that the corporation was guilty. So to the extent that anything more might have been said, it would just be obiter.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): There is no decision on the point.

Mr. Seaborn: It is not an exact parallel.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It might be helpful if Mr. Ryan considered the use of words like "whether the corporation has been found guilty of an offence under the act or not", followed by Senator Molson's suggestion.

Senator Flynn: I doubt if that would change anything. I am wondering if we were to delete the paragraph altogether whether we would change the provision of section 20 at all?

The Chairman: If you take out subsection (3) completely, there would still be an offence under the Criminal Code?

Senator Flynn: That is so. That is why I am not so sure that subsection (3) adds or subtracts anything.

The Chairman: Senator Cook, have you any comment?

Senator Cook: No, I rather agree with Senator Flynn. It seems to me that if you are guilty, then this is only stating what the law is.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): There is virtue in legislation of this kind. Even if it is in the Criminal Code in exactly this form, I think it adds strength if you have it in this act.

Senator Flynn: The phrase, "Every person who contravenes any provision of this Act" would include the corporation, or any person.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): If you had a section like that...

Senator Flynn: It is here. Subsection (2) commences with those words.

The Chairman: Senator Cook, your point is that the offence is covered in the Criminal Code, although not in this language exactly. Therefore, if this provision were not in the bill a basis could still be found for proceeding on proper evidence.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, against directors.

The Chairman: Perhaps in those circumstances there is some value, since the situation would not be made worse for a person by inserting it specifically in the bill.

Mr. Ryan: The point made that the Criminal Code to some extent covers the same offence is accurate so far as parties to an offence, attempts, and other matters are concerned. One could proceed against the officers, directors and agents of the corporation as parties to the offence. However, I do not think that would apply so much to the acquiescing, assenting or participating. That is the only difference between being a party to an offence and committing an offence under clause 20(3).

However, I would suggest for your consideration, sir, that you should not alter this so that we cannot depend upon, not the jurisprudence, of which there is very little, but the practice and the use of this by the courts in the past. I understand from Mr. Scollin that there has been provision for this in the past. It might be better to rely on the Criminal Code rather than another provision which would differ essentially from that upon which we are modelling ourselves.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You are suggesting from a practical point of view that we eliminate clause 20(3).

Mr. Ryan: Rather than altering it in the manner suggested.

Senator Cook: Perhaps we could leave it as it is pending a revision of the provision in all acts.

The Chairman: On occasion, for some reason or other, you do not care for certain wording in a bill, but are persuaded to approve it. Later the bill returns and the first thing of which you are reminded is that this has been done before and should be done again. At some stage we must dig our feet in and say no.

Senator Molson: We are told the provision is contained in other legislation such as the Income Tax Act, and therefore it is fine here.

The Chairman: That is right and Mr. Ryan says that rather than make changes in clause 20(3), it would be clearer to delete it and simply leave the provisions of the Criminal Code applicable.

Senator Flynn: I would support that move, Mr. Chairman. I do not like the suggestion in the subclause to the officers in charge of the enforcement of the act to use it as a tool to force payment of a fine. A director is liable to jail whereas a corporation is not. There is certainly a very powerful suggestion in the clause to the enforcement officers to proceed against the directors in order to exact the fine that they are unable to collect from the corporation. It could probably be done otherwise, but I suggest that by leaving the text there it is an invitation.

The Chairman: That deterrent exists at the present time under the Criminal Code.

Senator Flynn: I know, but if it is there it may be suggestive.

The Chairman: The question would appear to be, and it is up to the committee to decide: Do we observe the comment which Mr. Ryan has made, and rather than amend clause 20(3), strike it out?

Senator Burchill: If we delete the subclause and depend on the Criminal Code, would it be necessary to prove the corporation guilty?

The Chairman: No.

Senator Burchill: You can proceed against an officer or director without that?

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): If we remove it and rely on the Criminal Code, would there be a problem for a charged person, because the provision of the Code is overlooked?

The Chairman: The provision has been there ever since the Code came into being; it has been used very, very often. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. Ryan: There may be a point of consideration as to whether it is more onerous to be charged under the Criminal Code as a party to the commission of an offence or an attempt to commit an offence. Would it be less onerous in the long run, with respect to reputation or otherwise, to have been charged under the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act?

The Chairman: Whether it is under the Criminal Code or not, this is a criminal offence.

Mr. Ryan: Yes.

The Chairman: What is the penalty under the Criminal Code?

Mr. Ryan: I am looking that up now, sir. It would relate to the offence, and it would be the offences already set out here.

The Chairman: I take it from what Mr. Ryan has said that the penalty provided in clause 20(2) on summary conviction or on indictment would be the same whether proceeding under the Code or under this subclause.

Senator Flynn: Subclause (2)?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps under the Code or under subclause (2) a charge could not be laid against a director who merely acquiesced in, because the acquiescence may be just having known, without having participated. However, I think it would be an improvement.

The Chairman: In acquiescing in an offence, yes.

Mr. Seaborn: I have a little uneasiness with respect to this point. I do not know how relevant it is to the deliberations of the committee today. A clause identical to this was very recently approved in the Weights and Measures Act, which is an act parallel with this. They fit well together as a pair. The public or, indeed, the courts may ask why a distinction is made in the writing of the two acts between the inclusion of this subclause in one and its omission from the other. It might be asked whether there was a quite different intent in the minds of those who passed the legislation, whereas, I believe we are agreed that the intent is not different at all.

The Chairman: I am not sure we are agreed on that.

Mr. Seaborn: As between the Weights and Measures Act and the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Seaborn: I thought that was so.

The Chairman: I am not sure that the quality of the offence is the same.

Mr. Ryan: One other difference is that the time limit on page 16 of the bill is 12 months after the time when the subject matter of the proceedings arose. Generally, under the Criminal Code the time limit with respect to a criminal offence is six months.

The Chairman: Do you mean that under this bill more time could be taken before laying a charge?

Mr. Ryan: Twelve months is proposed in the bill; it is six months under the Criminal Code.

Senator Flynn: Why?

The Chairman: Because it is in the bill.

Mr. Ryan: It is a matter of policy, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Seaborn, have you something more to say?

Mr. Seaborn: No.

The Chairman: The only thing that occurs to me is that if we are going to make a change, possibly we should give the minister a chance to say whatever he may have to say in respect of it.

Senator Burchill: I agree.

The Chairman: Let me find out first what the view of the committee is. Senator Flynn, I think your suggestion is that we strike out subsection (3) and let the provisions of the Criminal Code apply. Would those who would favour that please indicate? Would those to the contrary please indicate? That suggestion is not accepted.

The view of the committee, therefore, is that subsection (3) in some form should remain in the bill. The next question is whether it is to remain in the form it which it is, or should we follow Senator Molson's suggestion?

Senator Flynn: I doubt if we could improve the provisions of the subsection very much by changing it in that way.

Senator Cook: I agree with Senator Flynn. I am not persuaded of the merits of the subsection as it is now, but neither am I persuaded of the merits of the amendment; that it will make it any better. I should just leave it.

The Chairman: As I understand Senator Molson's suggestion, it is that we create in subsection (3) simply an offence in relation to any director or officer, whether the corporation was proceeded against or not.

Senator Flynn: That is what is in the wording now.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): No.

Senator Molson: No, Mr. Chairman, with respect, may I disagree. In our earlier meetings there was a great deal of discussion on the opening phrase, "Where a corporation is guilty", and how this applied in any hearing. We heard a great deal about this, and I gathered it presented difficulties. This was my understanding.

Senator Flynn: I know that was the first reaction but, come to think of it, even if you do not mention that the corporation is guilty, the director will have to be guilty.

Senator Cook: We are still talking about an offence of the corporation.

Senator Flynn: There would have to be guilt somewhere.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): As I understand it, what was complained about was whether you would have to have a trial within a trial of the officer, director or agent to establish the guilt of the corporation.

Senator Flynn: No, you would have a set of facts which would prove an offence has been committed.

Senator Cook: The starting point is that there must be an offence.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): By the corporation.

Senator Cook: By the corporation. In subsection (3) that is right.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It has to be proved.

Senator Flynn: The question would be whether you can prosecute a director when the corporation has not committed an offence. Is that possible? Can you imagine this?

Senator Cook: There has been an offence.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): He has already been found guilty.

Senator Flynn: I cannot imagine a case where the offence could not be attributed to the corporation.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I can see the difficulty. I think this was the original problem, in spite of what Senator Flynn says, and it still bothers me, and perhaps it may still bother Senator Molson.

Senator Cook: Without an offence by the corporation there is no point in it at all.

The Chairman: Another suggestion has now been made to me. Would it be acceptable to the committee if the opening words were changed to: "Where a corporation has committed an offence"? I know the words are different, but to say "Where a corporation is guilty of an offence" involves adducing evidence from which the judge trying the director can decide that the corporation has committed the offence. We are using different words, but I think the procedures to prove it would be just the same.

Senator Flynn: If that is the only point we are going to make, I do not think it is worth making an amendment.

The Chairman: I do not think so either. The merit in Senator Molson's suggestion lies in the fact that you could proceed against a director without bringing in the corporation at all.

Senator Molson: That is right.

Senator Flynn: When the corporation is guilty you have to prove it. The only point is whether evidence adduced against the director would create, let us say, a presumption that the corporation has been found guilty at the same time. What we were worried about was prosecuting someone who is not a party to the proceeding. I think it is a good point but, legally speaking, I doubt that once a director has been found guilty that verdict could be used against the corporation. They would have to start all over again, and the corporation could certainly offer a defence.

The Chairman: That is right, and vice versa—if the corporation has been found guilty and you then proceed against the director. One of the cases we referred to is in point. You had to adduce evidence to show that the corporation was guilty, and you could not simply file a certificate of guilt of the corporation; it had to be proved.

Well, we have run the whole way around the mulberry bush on this, and we seem to be coming back to where we started. Senator Molson, have you anything more you want to add?

Senator Molson: Mr. Chairman, I made the suggestion, and I did so realizing that my legal training was not perhaps of the highest order. I am very happy to leave it to the legal brains of our committee to sort out.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): If you could get them to agree.

Senator Molson: Yes, if we could get them to agree. I should have said that.

The Chairman: I thought by the process of elimination we were getting very close to it. Are we now in agreement that subsection (3) of clause 20 should stand; in other words, we approve specifically of subsection (3) of clause 20?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: There is one clause about which we talked last week, to which I would like to call your attention. It is clause 18, dealing with regulations. The opening words are: "The Governor in Council may make regulations".

When I go over to page 14 and refer to paragraph (h), I frankly have trouble in figuring out exactly what is intended in this regulating-making power. Mr. Seaborn or Mr. Ryan, are you ready to give an explanation?

Mr. Seaborn: I can attempt one. Mr. Ryan can perhaps be more precise.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Beseau had more to do with the discussion than I did. Do you have a specific question, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: I would like you to give an illustration of how it would apply.

Mr. Seaborn: I think I could give an illustration of that. The main thrust of the bill, of course, has to do with prepackaged consumer products. It seemed to us, as we were preparing instructions for drafting, that we should take into account the fact that there are other consumer products that are not prepackaged. I am thinking of such things as rugs, carpets and pieces of furniture sold for use in the home which are not prepackaged and therefore do not come under a number of the clauses of the bill, but which none the less tend to be sold with some sort of tag giving information about them. The purpose of clause 18(i)(h) was to make it possible to require on the labels that went with this kind of product the inclusion of certain information that seemed relevant to a consumer purchase. I am thinking particularly of the enumerations in clause 10 as to the nature, quality, size and material content and so on, of the item. To give an example, the tag on a piece of furniture should be required to specify what type of wood was used in its construction, or alternatively a tag on a carpet might specify whether it is hand-made or machine-made. We felt that to leave completely outside the ambit of this bill any consumer product that was not prepackaged really did leave a gap in the field of consumer protection.

Senator Flynn: When you say "subject to any other act of the Parliament of Canada", do you mean that if it is already covered by another act you would not use this power?

Mr. Seaborn: In this particular case this is so, senator. For example, there may be requirements passed under the Motor Vehicles Act unless they start to sell cars in cellophane.

The Chairman: They start off by dealing with prepackaged products. They make one sweep with the back of their hand and take the power to make regulations with respect to every kind of consumer product. The only limitation on it is that if it is dealt with in another act they are then of course, restricted from doing this.

Senator Flynn: We have already section 3, Mr. Chairman, which says:

(1) Subject to subsection (2) and any regulations made under section 18, the provisions of this Act that by the terms of this Act or the regulations are applicable to any product apply notwithstanding any other Act of the Parliament of Canada.

The Chairman: There are some words we have taken out of that subsection. You read the section as it appears in the bill. We have amended section 3 by taking out certain words.

Senator Flynn: You passed the amendment before I came in?

The Chairman: I am sorry.

Senator Flynn: That is all right, but my argument is still valid as far as the bill was drafted originally.

Mr. Seaborn: It is primarily for prepackaged goods but this is a packaging and labelling bill, of which I am sure you are aware.

The Chairman: I wonder what you call, for instance, a typewriter which is a consumer product. How would you say that is packaged?

Mr. Seaborn: I do not think it is packaged. Regulations as to giving relevant information about a typewriter, would have to be made under Section 18(1)(h), and that would be in the form of a label.

The Chairman: My purpose in raising this for discussion is to make the committee fully aware that under this regulation section we move into the area of consumer products other than prepackaged products, with only one restriction on the power of the minister. If there are other existing acts then this power to regulate does not apply.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I think probably there is something to be said for the manufacturer who is required under this act to state what is put into a package, and who then complains that another manufacturer who does not put his product into a package but who still labels it is not subject to the act. Just taking Mr. Seaborn's example, I think there should be a labelling requirement with respect to a piece of furniture. If you are getting birch when you should in fact be getting oak then you should have a protection—

The Chairman: You are talking about honesty in labelling. Of course, the Criminal Code has a provision which would deal with labelling of the kind you are talking about. It would be a fraudulent transaction.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): As a matter of fact, now that you raise it, you wonder sometimes why you need a specific act when you have in the Criminal Code so many provisions about this very kind of thing—misleading, confusing and deceptive advertising.

The Chairman: I think the answer to that, Senator Connolly, is that when you have these remedies in a particular act the administration seems to become easier. Many of the charges under the Criminal Code are generated by the police investigation.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It is done by administrative means rather than by means of a police investigation. It also multiplies the number of administrators.

The Chairman: Having called attention to this, are there any comments from the committee? These are the points that have been raised. We have amended this morning subsection (1) of section 3, and subsection (2) of section 11. No other amendments have been proposed.

Senator Molson: Mr. Chairman, in regard to section 18, there is nobody to consult in regard to making these regulations, is there?

The Chairman: Under section 19 the proposed regulations must be advertised in the Canada Gazette. The purpose of that is to give persons an opportunity to make submissions.

Are you ready for the question? Shall I report the bill as amended? This means that we are approving all sections other than subsection (1) of section 3 and subsection (2) of section 11.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Flynn: With some reluctance.

The Committee then proceeded to the next order of business.

---

Published under authority of the Senate by the Queen's Printer for Canada.

---

Available from Information Canada, Ottawa, Canada.

Copyright
1971

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

---

No. 27

---

WEDNESDAY, MAY 26, 1971

---

Third Proceedings on Bill S-9,
intituled:

"An Act to amend the Copyright Act"

---

(Witnesses:—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators:

Aird	Haig
Beaubien	Hayden
Benidickson	Hays
Blois	Isnor
Burchill	Kinley
Carter	Lang
Choquette	Macnaughton
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Molson
Cook	Sullivan
Croll	Walker
Desruisseaux	Welch
Everett	White
Gélinas	Willis—(28).
Giguère
Grosart

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, March 30, 1971:

«Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Urquhart, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cook, for the second reading of the Bill S-9, intituled: "An Act to amend the Copyright Act".

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Honourable Senator Urquhart moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Laird, that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Wednesday, May 26, 1971.

(30)

Pursuant to notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 10.30 a.m. to further consider the following bill:

Bill S-9, "An Act to amend the Copyright Act".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Beaubien, Benidickson, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Croll, Desruisseaux, Haig, Hays, Isnor, Lang, Molson, Welch and White. (16)

Present but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senators Lafond and Méthot. (2)

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel; Pierre Godbout, Assistant Law Clerk, Parliamentary Counsel and Director of Committees.

WITNESSES:

International Federation of the Phonograph Industry:

Mr. Stephen Stewart, Director General,
London, England.

Mr. J. A. L. Sterling, Deputy Director General,
London, England.

At 12.00 noon the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Wednesday, May 26, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill S-9, to amend the Copyright Act, met this day at 10.30 a.m. to give further consideration to the bill.

Senator Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman We have with us, this morning in connection with Bill S-9 some representatives of the International Federation of the Phonographic Industry. Mr. Stephen Stewart, the Director General, and Mr. J. A. L. Sterling, the Deputy Director General are here from London, England. I suggest that Mr. Stewart start off by telling us what the industry is, what it does, and what relevance it has to this bill.

Mr. Stephen Stewart, Director General, International Federation of the Phonographic Industry: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Honourable senators, first of all, may I thank you for the courtesy of hearing me, a non-Canadian and member of the English Bar, and my friend, Mr. Sterling, who is an Australian, from the English Bar. The International Federation, of which I am Director General, is an organization of record companies the world over, located in practically all countries where there is a record industry, and it deals predominantly with legal matters, such as copyrights and rights for records.

If I understand correctly, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, you have so kindly asked me to come here to deal with the position outside Canada, rather than that in Canada. I have read the record of the previous hearings with some care. I find that you asked many questions about what happens in other countries. You have the brief which has been presented and, if I may, Mr. Chairman, I think I can best repay your courtesy in calling me by sticking to what you, Mr. Chairman, called the main stream—the main stream being, whether there should or should not be a performing right given to the record producer.

There are several points I would like to make with regard to the history of this right. The first one is this. Although in some countries this right had an early origin—in Canada in 1921, yours being one of the first countries to grant that right—most of the legislation is much more recent and, in fact, most of it has been enacted over the last 15 years.

Clearly, the reason for that is that when the first body of copyright legislation was passed, in Europe, the United States and other countries, the so-called mass media were either not known or were in their infancy, before and immediately after the first world war; whereas when copyright legislation got under way after the second world war, broadcasting, television, records and films came to play the important role they play today. There has been an accelerating tempo of legislation over the last 15 years. If I may give you just a few examples: in the United Kingdom in 1956, in Mexico, India, Norway and Pakistan, in the same year, 1956; in the Scandinavian countries—Finland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark—in 1960 and 1961; then, New Zealand in 1962; Ireland in 1963; Germany in 1965; Czechoslovakia in 1966; Australia in 1968 and Japan in 1970.

So you will see that it is over the last 10 to 15 years that these pieces of legislation have been enacted. All those I have named, in the last 15 years, have given this right that you are debating here, the performing right in the record, to the record producer. Some of them also give it to the performer, or they say that the record producer has to pay some of the money he gets to the performer.

May I make a point here again, Mr. Chairman, taking into account what was said before the committee? The word “performer” has a strict meaning. It is defined in the various acts of Parliament and in the international convention which is known as the Rome Convention. It is defined as “a person who performs literary or artistic works”; that is to say, an actor or a singer or a musician. So you were not really accurately informed when there was talk at one of the hearings about, I believe it was a telephone operator or sound technician in the studio having a right. That is not so. A performer is an artist, an actor, a singer, and so on.

Senator Connolly: Is the assumption behind that restriction that a technician in the studio is paid for his services, and that should cover it; that he has no property right in the production?

Mr. Stewart: I think that is so.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): He has the right to his wage for the work he does, but he has no copyright?

Mr. Stewart: I think that is the sort of thing. This is why you will find that the unions which have appeared before you are artists' unions, musicians' unions, and so on.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I am not sure, but perhaps you can help us on that. It seemed to me that the union people who were here one afternoon some weeks ago were also speaking on behalf of the technician.

Senator Flynn: Do you mean, Mr. Dodge?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Mr. Dodge.

Senator Flynn: He was speaking only on behalf of the musicians, the artists, the singers.

Senator Haig: Mr. Wood.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It seems there was a discussion. Mr. Stewart has already referred to the telephone operator.

Senator Cook: They said "We are appearing on behalf of the Canadian Council of Performing Arts Unions".

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): But that did not include technicians?

The Chairman: No.

Mr. Stewart: That is exactly the point I had in mind.

There is one other point I would like to make. It is that this tendency to give the artist a share in this right was started by the record industry. It was in an agreement, which has been filed before you, with the International Federation of Musicians, in 1954. The agreement, which is purely contractual, simply states that where the record industry receives a remuneration for the performance of its records, it will pay a quarter, 25 per cent, to the musicians, to the artists, usually in the form of payment to the unions, but not necessarily so. I say that because, again, reading the transcript, I see that some of the witnesses have doubted the sincerity of the Canadian industry in saying that they will do just that, if they receive payments.

I think you will have the industry before you, and they will repeat this. All I am saying is that, if they say they will do it, they will do it because it is in line with the tradition of the industry in other countries, in fact, in most other countries.

There is one other trend to which I would like to draw your attention. Recent legislation very often appoints a tribunal to adjudicate between the right owner, in this case the record producer, and the user, the consumer. In other words, the idea is that if the right owner and the consumer cannot agree on the tariff, let a judicial body, usually presided over by a senior judge, adjudicate on how much it should be.

This, Mr. Chairman, was invented in Canada, in 1936, in the form of the Copyright Appeal Board, which existed long before anybody else had thought of it. If I may respectfully say so, it struck me as an eminently sensible idea. It has been adopted by others. You have not claimed the copyright, but you have been copied in the United Kingdom, Germany, Ireland, Australia and, last year, Japan. That has been done in different forms but with the same idea: Let an independent tribunal adjudicate between the right owner, in this case the record producer, and the radio station, the juke box owner, the cafe owner, whoever they are—the people who use the right.

The tribunal—in Canada's case, the Copyright Appeal Board—however, becomes the watchdog of the consumer; and this is the idea in all the legislation. And it works. Judging by the award a few weeks ago, honourable senators may agree that it works.

Mr. Chairman, next I should like to deal with the exceptions, the countries which have not yet given this right. It has been said before you, and wrongly—and I want to say that without any disrespect, but wrongly, factually wrongly—that it is in only a few countries that this right has been granted. Let me state the exceptions, the countries where it is not granted. First of all, in Western Europe there are France, Belgium and Holland. In each of those three countries the matter is under consideration by an interdepartmental committee. However, legislation takes a long time in this matter simply, I believe, because to the general public it is not a burning issue. It usually starts in the upper chamber—this again may interest you—such as the Senate in the United States, the House of Lords in the United Kingdom. This is perhaps because it is thought that more mature deliberation would be given in the upper chamber. Perhaps it is because the cynics say that it offers no votes for the lower, elected chamber.

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart, I would like to call to the attention of the committee that last week, when Mr. Goodman appeared representing Baton Broadcasting Limited, he stated in the course of his submission, and the statement appears in their brief, that—the United States does not recognize a copyright in the making of a record, nor does most of the rest of the world. It is fortunate that we have some knowledgeable people appearing also. Mr. Richard gave evidence on the first day that in most of the countries of the world this right is not recognized. I think someone was drawing a distinction between the developed and underdeveloped countries.

Senator Cook: I am glad you stopped after the word "record".

Mr. Stewart: I am grateful to you, Mr. Chairman, because I may now seek to defend a colleague at the Bar. I would point out that if numbers are counted his statement was justified. I suppose there are 120 members of the United Nations, and these rights are recognized in 25 or 30 countries. Therefore I suppose it can be said, counting heads, that the large majority does not recognize them.

With the exceptions I am about to give you, all the developed countries, those in a position, if I may say so, similar to Canada, having a culture...

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): OECD countries generally?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, and some that are not; India, for instance. With respect to the exceptions, France, Belgium and Holland, there are interdepartmental committees, but no legislation yet.

In those countries in Western Europe, such as France, Belgium and Holland, where the performing right to the record producer is not recognized in the law, the broadcasters do pay, if you wish to term it so, voluntarily. Why do they pay? I think they pay—in fact, some of them have gone on record as saying so—because they recognize that this is a right that exists, if not in law then morally. They feel that obligation, and in France, for instance, pay quite substantial sums.

One other point made before you which, with great respect, is not quite right, is that all the countries where this right exists and where the broadcasters pay remuneration are countries where the broadcasting is state-owned. I think the British or Australian Broadcasting Corporations would be rather cross if termed "state-owned." However, they are non-profitmaking corporations, public corporations, which I think is what the witness meant. It is not right either, because in Australia, New Zealand and Japan, the last three countries which have granted this right, only in the last three or four years, broadcasting is rather similar to that in Canada. It is in the hands of private, commercial companies. So it is not correct to say that only the non-commercial public corporations pay.

However, with regard to the public corporation, I would like to suggest to you that perhaps there is a moral here. What does "public corporation broadcasting" mean abroad? It means that the money for the broadcasting comes from the taxpayer, from the public, either by way of licences, because everyone with a television set or radio set pays an annual licence fee, or by way of Government subsidiary, if the licence fee does not cover it. In other words, the remuneration paid for this right comes out of the purse of the public. Now, would it not be right to say that if in many countries where the money for the broadcasters comes out of the purse of the public it is fair, right and proper to say, as we lawyers say, a fortiori, even more so it would be right if the broadcasting were done for profit—in other words, if the broadcasters use their records and make a profit in so using them by selling advertising?

Having dealt with the European exception, let me say at once that I would like to deal separately with the most often quoted exception, the United States of America. Why is this right not in the law of the United States of America? The answer is very simple: because the Copyright Act at present in force in the United States dates from 1911. Records in those times were few; broadcasting and television did not exist; the film was in its infancy. Therefore, all those rights were not necessary.

When the great upsurge of legislation started for the second world war, the United States had a difficulty in this field. It is not an unusual difficulty. It is because of the fact that they have a Constitution which gives a copyright that says that it is in writing. The question which the lawyers debated right through the length and breadth of the United States was whether a record could be a "writing". That was the legal problem. It was not until 1965 that a governmental commission pronounced for the first time, officially, that they considered a record to be a "writing" in the constitutional sense of the United States and, therefore, federal legislation could deal with copyrights in records.

May I make the point quite clear? There was a difficulty in giving a right, not only a performing right such as you are considering, but they could not even give, until this constitutional point was cleared up, an ordinary right against copy. In other words, if some one just pinched, if I may use the word, some one else's recording, and pressed it, they could only be proceeded against under state legislation. There was, and still is, no federal legislation.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Was that a decision of the Supreme Court, or a declaration by Congress?

Mr. Stewart: It was neither, really; it was the prevalent opinion of most lawyers, but was never tested. In other words, they said that Congress could not do it until certain cases were decided in other spheres. One case related to migratory birds which fly from one state to another. There the Supreme Court held that there could be legislation. That was one precedent.

There is in your brief the statement of the Registrar of the United States in 1965 which is, I think, the first authoritative pronouncement on the matter. I would like to draw your attention to it, because here is an official speaking who is not in any way a partisan. He says, on page 8 of the brief:

Let me say plainly, there is no doubt in my mind that recorded performances represent the 'writings' of an author in the Constitutional sense and are as fully creative and worthy of copyright protection as translations, arrangements or any other class of derivative works. I also believe that the contributions of the record producer to a great many sound recordings also represent true 'authorship' and are just as entitled to protection as motion pictures and photographs... It is hardly surprising that you have heard testimony from performers and record companies urging recognition of a performing right in sound recordings. There is much to be said for this point of view, and it is possible that this right will eventually be recognized in the copyright laws of the United States as it is now in other countries.

That was the first breakthrough.

Last year, five years later, the bill which was presented to the United States Senate included the performing right to the record producer and the performer. I do not want to weary you with the details. If you want to have detail, the copy of this relevant extract is in the brief, among the appendices. The gist of it is that every time a record is publicly performed or broadcast a performing right is given to the record producer and to the performing artists or performers. Then certain things are said about rates, and there is a separate clause dealing with the rate for juke boxes, and so on.

This, incidentally, is a matter on which legislation varies, but in some legislation there is a rate. However, they are very few; most pieces of legislation have accepted your principle of a tribunal, like a copyright appeal board.

I think the right to say about the United States is that they are late, that they still have a copyright law from 1911, which is 60 years out of date. I am reminded by Mr. Sterling that it was 1909, so it is 62 years out of date. It is miles out of date, and they are having great difficulty in getting through a bill which is at present before the Senate and the House of Representatives because of time difficulties, and controversial matters in the bill, nothing to do with the performing right in records, but things like CATV, for instance, which is an enormous problem in the United States, where interestingly enough the broadcasters are the ones who are asking for a right against the community antennae television on the ground that CATV could use their product.

Senator Desruisseaux: Could not the same thing happen here too?

Mr. Stewart: You are in a better position, sir, than I am to say that. I should have thought, quite possibly. You will then have the broadcasters before you in the position in which I believe I now am.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): What you are saying, Mr. Stewart, is that the broadcasters, in the example you gave, say they have a property right in the production of their program, and the CATV people who just pick them up and distribute them for profit are exploiting that property?

Mr. Stewart: That is so. I am grateful to you, because there is something I should have mentioned which I did not.

When I spoke about national legislation I should also have told you that there was in 1961 an international convention on the matter, known as the Rome Convention. Perhaps this acceleration of national legislation is something to do with the passing of the Rome Convention in 1961, because 40 countries signed that convention. Each one still has to ratify it, but they signed it. That, of course, gives an impetus to national legislation to conform.

This convention is for the protection of record producers, performers and broadcasters. Again, this is an aspect that I think has been put before you. In many contexts it is the broadcasters who are asking, quite rightly if I may say so, for some kind of copyright in the broadcasts. Satellite broadcasting, for instance, not today but in the next five or seven years, I am told will be a burning problem. When you broadcast by satellite, apparently anybody with a powerful transmitter can fish your broadcast out of the air and then transmit it. The broadcasters say, "You must protect us against that, because the broadcast is ours; it is a product which is worthy of copyright protection." Two months ago there was a meeting, which I had the honour to address, of governmental experts in Lausanne to consider this very matter, on the basis of an international convention. It was presided over, if I may say so, with great distinction by a Canadian, Mr. Finlay Simons, the Deputy Registrar of Patents of Canada. You will therefore see that there are problems, wherein the broadcasters, who so strongly oppose this right in Canada, are in a not too dissimilar position, asking for rights which, in my submission at any rate, are very similar, and, if I may say so, rightly asking for them.

The Chairman: With regard to the Rome Convention, you stated that the representatives of 39 or 40 countries appeared and adopted a convention for the protection of performers, producers of phonograms and broadcasting organizations. Is there a further step that would make that effective and binding on the countries who were present and adopted this convention?

Mr. Stewart: I am grateful to you, Mr. Chairman. This is so. In an international convention the first step is the negotiation of text and debate as to whether these rights should exist or not. When this is done and the convention is drafted, it is then signed by the representatives of states. That is only the first step, because every sovereign state having a legislature then has to ratify it. That means Parliament has to be consulted; in some cases the law has to be changed because it does not fit the framework, and then the country ratifies it. The Rome Convention has so far been ratified by 12 countries, which, as international conventions go, in ten years is not too bad a record.

For the reasons I have just given, in most countries it needs legislation, sometimes because the broadcast right is not in the law, sometimes because the record producers' protection is not in the law, and in a democracy that takes time.

The Chairman: Could you tell me what Canada has done?

Mr. Stewart: Canada participated, but has not yet, of course, ratified. Canada could ratify, as the law stands.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Canada is a signatory?

Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Mr. Chairman, this was the very question I was going to ask the witness, because the other day great play was made of the fact that Canada had not ratified. In the witness's opinion, does that make a material difference in the discussion that we are having here?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, there is something I would like looked up, because I would not like to be guilty of telling you something that is not correct. I am not absolutely certain that Canada did sign, but I am having it looked up. They were there, there was a Canadian representative but whether or not he signed, I cannot tell you. I will tell you in a moment.

Senator Cook: I think he signed, with reservations, because of the fact that we were a federal state. Is that not so?

The Chairman: What is that?

Senator Cook: Were we not told that he signed, with reservations, but would have difficulty in ratifying because of the fact we were a federal state and some of the rights might lie in the hands of the provinces and not in the hands of the federal Government?

Mr. Stewart: I did not know that. The United States, for instance, signed.

Senator Connolly: Has it been ratified by the United States?

Mr. Stewart: No, they cannot. They have to change the law, because, as I say, there is no copyright protection for the record producer at all on the federal level, only on the state level.

The other point I would like to make, if I may—again, because something was said before you on other occasions—is regarding the assertion that one can ratify the Rome Convention only if this right you are debating here, the performing right of the record producer, is given to both the record producer and the performer. Not so; not so. The Rome Convention gives each ratifying or member country the option to do either or both. In other words, the state ratifying the convention can give the performing right in records only to the record producer; it can give it only to the performing artist; or it can give it to both. The solution favoured by nearly all countries is to give it to the record producer and, in many cases, to put the record producer under a duty to share with the others.

Senator Carter: Who is “the record producer”? Is it the man who makes a master tape, or the one who presses the record after the master tape is made?

Mr. Stewart: The right originates in the man who makes the master.

Senator Carter: The master tape?

Mr. Stewart: That is right. He can, of course, assign his right, just as you can assign any other right, just as for instance the author of a book usually assigns his right to the publisher. It originates with the man who makes the recording, just as it originates with the man who composes a tune. I wanted to make this point because, as I say, it was said you must protect both, you must give the performing right to both, if you want to ratify that. This is not so.

May I say one word again about what you, Mr. Chairman, called the main stream of the argument, that is: Is this right justified; is it right and proper to give it? This is really the main argument, as I understand it, which has been presented to you.

I think the most succinct way of putting it is this. You can talk about this all day because it is a matter which borders on the philosophical. I think the realistic and the practical way of approaching it is the way in which Chief Justice Wendell Holmes in the United States approached it in the so-called “Sweetheart” case; and Mr. Justice Maugham in the United Kingdom approached it in the so-called Carradine case. It runs something like this. The record producer produces the record for playing in the home—that is, to a group of people, his family, a dozen people, perhaps. It is not a problem.

If, instead of being played to half a dozen people, this record, this product, is played to a million people over there, or to 500 people in a hall, then that is something beyond what the record was intended for, and, if it is done for profit—that is to say, the user makes money out of using the record for what it was not originally intended—then he ought to pay.

This is really the guts of the argument. There are many arguments of a moral and philosophical nature, but I think the purely materialistic and practical one is that. Look at other realms of the law, such as patents or copyrights or trade marks, or whatever it is: if somebody does something which is of value, and somebody else takes it and makes money out of it, he ought to pay. It is as simple as that.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You set your argument on a property right?

Mr. Stewart: Yes.

The Chairman: That was the essence of Mr. Justice Holmes’ judgment in the “Sweetheart” case.

Senator Connolly: In what case?

The Chairman: In the “Sweetheart” case.

Senator Connolly: I would not know about that.

The Chairman: Victor Herbert.

Senator Cook: There he was addressing himself to the composer. Victor Herbert was the composer.

The Chairman: But at the time he was the composer he did not have the right and he had to go to the Supreme Court of the United States in order to have the right recognized.

Senator Cook: The point was that the composition was something which would lend itself to copyright. The question is whether the mechanical act of a number of people lends itself to copyright.

The Chairman: This is the essential question here. Is a performing right something that is capable of being a copyright? This is what we are addressing ourselves to. Certainly, one element is that for the people who make use of it, they make money. That would appear to be an element in Mr. Justice Holmes’ decision.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It is an improper observation to make here, Mr. Chairman, but most people establish copyright in a sweetheart by marriage!

The Chairman: Well, so early in the morning, senator?

Senator Lang: I have a question for the witness. Throughout your remarks you use the term “record producer.” Is there such a thing as a “record maker,” as distinct from a record producer?

Mr. Stewart: In some legislation—for example, the United Kingdom—that is what he is called, a record maker. But I do not think it makes much difference. I think that what the honourable senator has in mind is the distinction between the man who makes the first recording—and this is where the artistic concept lies—and the subsequent processes which may be completely mechanical; in other words, the man who makes the 10,000 copies by a machine going up and down. There is a very clear distinction between those two.

Senator Lang: Or, even further, I can see a distinction between a recording that is produced, made by a record maker, to which there has been no creative input at all, and recording made by a record maker in which there is a productive or creative element.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, sooner or later, if you have the patience, you ought to be shown how a record is made, either by a film, which exists I believe, or in a studio, or something of the kind. I am only a lawyer, I am not a record man, but I am very interested in this and have been at many recording sessions. I would have thought that most recordings, and particularly the contemporary music recordings, have a great deal of creative element, because very often—may I say a word about pop music?—the work, that is to say the composition, does not exist when the musicians arrive at the studio. They go there to play; and they just play. Then there is the producer, who says “That was good. Take!” just as a film producer does. Then they spread back and he says, “The trombone does not sound very good; can you play it a little differently, fast, twiddle it around a bit. Take!” The record is produced in a similar way to a film, because the snippets of the tape are put together just as a cutter puts a film together. The end product, which takes hours and days to record, but only a few minutes to play, is the sum total of a great deal of artistic input.

This also applies in the classical field, because if it did not, why would it be that there are some recordings which are first-class and others that are not so good and, therefore, that are not bought or played by so many?

My submission, therefore, would be that the recording process has been much maligned in these hearings; that the artistic input has been very much underplayed; that and I wish you would find the time to go and have a look. I think the invitation would be extended to you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It would be wonderful to see one of these.

The Chairman: We can decide on that later; we are not closing our hearings today.

Senator Flynn: It is interesting to hear of this difference between the producer and the maker, when the bill before us relates strictly to copyright in records, to sell the rights to reproduce any such contrivance. Therefore it gives the right to the producer to prohibit others making records by copying. The distinction is that if the record maker is acting with a licence or under a contract from the producer, he is in the same position as the producer. There would be no such thing as a record maker who would not have a right from the producer, because the act protects the right of the producer to prevent copying.

The Chairman: I wonder what the principle was in providing protection but not going further?

Senator Flynn: I think it is interesting.

The Chairman: A tailor may make a custom suit, but suppose I may take it somewhere else and have it copied and the tailor would have no right to prosecute.

Senator Flynn: But here the producer would have a claim.

The Chairman: What provides protection for the producer against reproduction?

Senator Flynn: It implies recognition of the creativity of the producer of the record.

The Chairman: Have you any comment on that statement, Mr. Stewart?

Mr. Stewart: It should be accepted that they are both copyrights and rights of the record producer, maker, or whatever term you wish to apply. One right is to allow or forbid anyone else to copy his record. This is known as piracy, which incidentally is a great problem today in the United States. Industry spokesmen there say they lose $1 million a year by people doing just that, taking a record, copying it and selling it at half price. The reason they can do it is that there is no federal law; they have to be chased from state to state. It is now called thieving, because when intellectual property is recognized as property and taken by some one who does not own it, it is thieving.

The other right, the conglomerate, is the one you are considering, the performing right. If a record is performed in public, the producer and/or the performer have a right to be paid.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Earlier, Mr. Stewart, you referred to the artists's right to share in the proceeds of the sale of the record with the producer of the record, or the maker. However, now you have given an example of another element, the situation in which studio artists perform on musical instruments or sing, as the case may be. This involves a process of recording what they do.

You say another artistic element is then introduced, in that a producer will say to the performing artists: “We want this; we want that; we don't want this; we have too much trombone here, too much drum here, too much piano there”. You would liken him to the artist.

Are these people in your conception inventors, originators and artists? Do they share in the royalties from the record, and should they?

The Chairman: The test would be: Is it an artistic work?

Senator Cook: Every eye sees its own beauty. That is so, whether we discuss an artistic work or not.

The Chairman: You may not appreciate this musical quality either. That is why I used the expression: Is it an artistic work?

Mr. Stewart: "Beauty," Shakespeare said," is in the eye of the beholder." In this case it is in the ear of the listener. There are three inputs in the making of a recording: obviously, there is the work of the composer and/or the textwriter; there is the work of the performer, who shapes it and gives it life; and there is the work of the record producer, who gives it existence in the form of a record, who handles it, who also shapes and forms it.

This really comes from the statement of the Registrar of Copyrights in the United States with respect to translators and arrangers. No one has ever denied that a translator has a copyright and a performing right. What does he do? In the case of a French play to be performed in English, he will take the play as it is, a pre-existing work, and translate it into his own language. Sometimes, of course, he makes a considerable contribution because of his mastery of the language. It could not be said that it is a completely original work. However, I know of no legislature which has denied the translator the copyright.

Arrangement is a well-known process, as you know, in music. Suppose the Triumphal March from Aida or the Toreador Song from Carmen were rearranged for the 375th time, this time for a jazz band or a small band of five. There is some originality in doing it, obviously, because otherwise those who perform it would not use the adaptation. However, it is not to be compared to the strokes of genius of Verdi or Bizet when they wrote the music. I cannot think of a copyright law that denies the adapter of the copyright, although it has been said that if you want to weigh it in terms of quality or originality, his influence is less original, sometimes considerably less original, than that of the original composer.

The point I am trying to make, and I think it is worth thinking about, is that not all copyrights have the same degree of originality. Therefore, there is nothing derogatory in saying, of the right of a performer or a record producer, that his originality may not be, and in many cases is not, as high in degree of originality as that of the composer. All I am saying is that the weighing of originality is a matter for the Copyright Appeal Board, or those who negotiate these rights. In other words, as a lawyer would say: it is a matter of quantum, how much.

What should not be questioned is that there is sufficient artistic input, originality, in a record producer to amply justify the copyright. Incidentally, the Economic Council, which as you know was not very favourable to the record producer, did acknowledge this. They did speak of the artistic input.

The Chairman: I think they used the term "creative input."

Mr. Stewart: If I may draw these points together before I am asked questions, may I say there has been a great deal of copyright legislation in recent years. It has all been one way, apart from Africa and other developing countries. There is a very special reason for this. They have claimed, and in many instances rightly, special treatment. I do not think that is a point that I have to meet here.

Apart from Africa, it has all been one way. Either the right was confirmed in the legislation or it was granted for the first time where it did not previously exist, such as in Scandinavia or in Japan last year.

In Canada you have a situation which is different. You were one of the first to introduce the right fifty years ago. You have, as I said, invented the Copyright Appeal Board, a tribunal, which many countries have copied. You are now being asked to strike it out by way of a one-paragraph bill.

There are two points here, the first being that I cannot think of another example—I do not think there is one—where this has been treated by way of a one-paragraph bill. This has always been treated as part of a copyright revision where many rights are dealt with, rights of broadcasters among others. A big problem in modern copyright legislation is Xerox machines. How do you preserve the right of the author when anybody can take a book and stamp out a Xerox copy?

There are many complicated and important problems which have to be considered, and which, if I am right in my understanding, are being considered in Canada at the moment. Quite obviously the Copyright Act of 1921 or one that was revised in 1936 is due for revision.

What is singular, and what strikes me as odd, is this one-paragraph bill, which I think is unique. I ask myself the question: Why should a country, which has in many ways pioneered this, strike it out by a one-paragraph bill? I hope this is not unfair. I have asked myself this question seriously and I can give only one answer. It is because broadcasters do not want to pay what now appears to be something like $100,000. I honestly cannot think of another answer.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Is that an informed figure?

Mr. Stewart: It is about that.

The Chairman: Applying the tariff rates fixed by the Copyright Appeal Board, that would be the amount in dollars.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Per annum?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Mr. Stewart: I should point out that the award was for six months. It is approximately $200,000 per annum. The award was $100,000, but it was a six months' award.

The Chairman: If you recall, the minister left a letter the last time he appeared before us in which he translated into dollars the effect of the application of the tariff proposed by the Copyright Appeal Board. His letter says that television stations are to pay only a nominal fee of $1 for 1971. Radio stations have been cut from a requested tariff of 2.6 per cent of gross revenue to 0.15 of gross revenue, and this is applicable only to stations whose gross revenue is more than $100,000. In effect, this means that radio stations will pay approximately $90,000 in 1971, instead of the $3 million or more which would have been received, if SRL's claim for 2.6 per cent of gross revenue had been approved for the entire year. When they say $90,000 for 1971, since there is only half a year being considered, for a full year it would be $180,000.

The CBC will pay only $15,000 for the next six months, rather than the SRL request which would have amounted to almost $900,000 for the entire year. On this basis, for a full year the CBC would pay $30,000 under the tariff.

Is this a summary of what you have been saying in relation to this one-paragraph bill, that the field in which this industry operates is a progressive one that really has an unlimited horizon, and who knows in what areas it will push forward tomorrow?

Mr. Stewart: The Economic Council, in the parting shot of the paragraph devoted to this matter, said: Away with the performing right in records—and that the same should apply to video recordings. This is one of the things, Mr. Chairman that you probably have in mind, that in three years from now, or perhaps sooner, we will have on the market recordings which we will not only be able to hear but will also be able to see on our television screens, known as videograms videorecordings, audiovision material, or whatever you wish to call it. This is interesting, because if you do what the Economic Council suggested, in other words, you eliminate this right, and you eliminate it also for videorecordings or videograms, I would think that you would have within a very short time the broadcasters before you howling for protection, because it will be their products, because they will be making and are already making videograms that will be the subject of protection.

The proposition that a radio and television station should make a videogram or tape one of their performances over there, which should be taken by somebody else and produced, either in public, in a cinema or over the air by a competitor, would be hideous to them, and they would be quite right. In other words, you would have the broadcasters before you, as I sit before you today, asking for the right which at present, as I understand it, is a right in a record, and if you wipe that out and follow what the Economic Council seems to suggest—with respect, I do not think they have thought it out—you would wipe out the performing right in the videogram as well.

That is the only aspect of the future we can foresee, because it has been worked upon. As you, Mr. Chairman, said, in seven or ten years from now there may be many other things arising from this, which would come into the same category, and which you would have wiped out without even considering the consequences.

The Chairman: Are you ready for questions?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): May I ask you one, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Did you say "one", senator?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, just one. I know I ask a lot of you. As I understand it, this bill, while it was introduced in the name of the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Martin), is a bill that comes from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): The minister was here a week ago. Am I wrong when I say that a letter he left with us would seem to indicate, or at least partially indicate, in a practical way the purpose of this bill? Am I right about that?

The Chairman: Let me put it this way. The main thrust by all those who have appeared so far in their first argument, and the thread running through their whole presentation, was the cost and the exporting of this substantial amount of money to the United States each year, in view of their other commitments and payments. Secondly, they said there was no artistic effort in pressing out a record. It makes me pause a bit in trying to analyze that in the light of what Mr. Stewart has said, and makes me, for one—whether the committee wants to do it as a body or not, I do not know—want to see how these things are done. The dollars were really the basis of the presentation. Even at our last meeting, when the Baton Broadcasting people were here, they raised that question. They say that more than $17 million is paid annually in respect of these records to foreign parent companies, and should a tariff be approved for the broadcasting of these records, 50 per cent of the money received by Canadian subsidiaries of foreign parent companies will be paid out to the foreign parent companies. They were talking on the basis that if you calculate what it will cost the industry in Canada, under the tariff which the SRL people had requested it would be $4.5 million or $5 million more, some figure of that kind. We are now talking in terms of something which might be $250,000 or $350,000.

Senator Flynn: It was the main theme of the speech made by the sponsor of the bill.

The Chairman: I suppose it is difficult to analyze intention, in legislation, except that in the background that we have here it would appear that dollars are a very important consideration. Canada participated in the principle of performing right protection in records even in the Rome Convention, and we would be getting out of line with a very substantial number of developing countries, and out of the trend that appears to be developing in the United States, so I think maybe the conclusion on your question, Senator Connolly, is that we have to use our own judgment on what the minister had in mind, but we could draw some conclusions from the evidence we have had before us.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Along the lines I have suggested?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Cook: The minister was not asked.

The Chairman: The minister has not been invited yet. He will be.

Senator Cook: He is not acting off the top of his head. He is acting following the Ilsley Report and that of the Economic Council.

The Chairman: I would say that basically you would have to conclude he was acting on the basis of the Ilsley Commission Report, and also on that of the Economic Council.

Senator Flynn: Not the Economic Council, because their report had not been brought down when the bill was introduced. At a guess, he would have had advance information.

Senator Cook: That is because of the arrangement though; he was acting on the Economic Council report.

Senator Flynn: The Ilsley Commission Report.

Senator Cook: It was supposed to remain in a state of abeyance until the Economic Council report came, and then as one moved the other moved.

Senator Flynn: But the minister had moved even before the Economic Council started drafting its report, because we had a bill two years ago.

The Chairman: That is right. When there was an indication that SRL was going to apply for a tariff the minister sent a bill which was introduced in the Senate.

Senator Haig: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might help the committee. Mr. Basford wrote on October 29, 1968, to the president of Sound Recording Licences Limited and said:

I wish to express my serious concern about this application, and to inform you that I consider it not to be in the public interest...

I must therefore inform you that it is my intention immediately to recommend to the government the introduction of legislation to prevent the levy of fees, charges, and royalties pursuant to your application and any other application of this nature in respect of fees, charges and royalties claimed for the year 1969 and thereafter.

Senator Burchill: In spite of the letter he read to us, he said he was still back of this bill, did he not?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Flynn: There was another question I wanted to put to Mr. Stewart. You mentioned the Rome Convention and said that the signatories can provide for performing rights for the artists or for the record producers, or for both. I was wondering if any legislation exists that lumps these two rights together; in other words, the performing right of the artist and the record producers would be the same, and it would be a matter for all the interested parties to arrange for the split.

Mr. Stewart: May I ask Mr. Sterling to deal with this?

Mr. J. A. L. Sterling, Deputy Director General, International Federation of Phonographic Industry, London, England: Mr. Chairman, first may I say what a great privilege it is for me, as well as my colleague Mr. Stewart, to address your committee. The honourable senator's question underlines that this complex field admits of several solutions as to the way performing rights can be granted in respect of records. I do not think anybody could be blamed for finding the field somewhat confusing when it is first entered, because we have under the copyright acts of various countries two musical works in one record, and we have two Rome Conventions—the Rome Convention of 1928, to which Canada is a party, and the Rome Convention of 1961, that deals with performing rights. What we are trying to do is isolate these various problems as best we can for your committee.

Senator Flynn's question has helped us because, as I said, it underlines that if you accept the concept, as many countries have, that there should be a performing right in a record, as distinct from the composition, this principle is recognized now in international law in the Rome Convention, 1961. But countries have adopted various ways of putting this principle into practice.

There is legislation of the type similar to the United Kingdom, which is the legislation of Australia, New Zealand, Canada, India and various other countries which recognize the right to the record producer. There is legislation of other countries such as the Scandinavian—Sweden, Denmark and Finland—which approached it from another angle and recognized two rights in the record, apart from the composer's rights. So they recognize, in effect, three rights: the right of the composer to a royalty when making the record or when his work is played, the right of the record producer and the right performer to get separate royalties.

The legislation of the type that we find in the Commonwealth countries tends more towards granting the right to the record producer and leaving it to him to share, under voluntary arrangements, with the performers. This has been done in the United Kingdom for many years and it is also the subject of an international agreement.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Does it work?

Mr. Sterling: It works, sir. It has worked, I think we can say without exaggeration, extremely well. We have had it working in England for over 20 years, where the record producers, the English SRL, as it were, receives the royalties from the broadcasting corporation, and it pays 20 per cent of that royalty to the individual performer under contract with the record company, the man who has come into the studio and performed on his instrument.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Who negotiates that agreement?

Mr. Sterling: That agreement is negotiated between the British record industry and the musicians' union. I have only told of half the arrangement. There is, first of all, I think 20 per cent to the individual performer under contract with the record company, so he gets his share because, after all, it is his performance; and 12½ per cent to the British musicians' union, which they use for benevolent purposes, mainly, for training young musicians, and that kind of thing. So the United Kingdom system is that about 32½ per cent, goes to the performer.

The Government of the United Kingdom was well aware of this arrangement when they passed the United Kingdom Copyright Act in 1956. In fact, I think they would have required it of the industry, in any case.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): May I interrupt again?—and I apologize. Going back to Mr. Stewart's illustration in the case of this agreement about sharing of royalties, the producer does not participate?

Mr. Sterling: Yes. The royalties are due in respect of the playing, the performing in public, or the broadcasting of the record.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Mr. Sterling: The law says—I am speaking of the United Kingdom now and am limiting it to that—that it is the maker of the record—that is to say, the record producer, the company, the firm or person that has gathered the artists together—who has the right. When he has the royalty, he voluntarily gives this 32½ per cent to the performers and to the unions. So, in the United Kingdom example, he retains about 67½ per cent.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): But the producer in the studio is not sharing?

Mr. Sterling: The actual producer in the studio—that raises a very interesting point, which has given copyright lawyers all over the world many problems in the field of literary work. Where you get a person writing, for instance, an article in the course of his employment with a newspaper, it is the same type of legal problem. You get two types of situation. First of all, the record producer, as the honourable senator has rightly called him, may come to the record company with the tape already made. He has made it outside the company's premises. In that case, he is the copyright owner, under the U.K. law, and he makes his contract with the record company.

Senator Connolly: That is another classification.

Mr. Sterling: He may say, "When this record is played on the radio, I want that whole 67½ per cent myself, because I am the copyrighter." Some record producers—as we call them, freelance record producers—do say that.

On the other hand, the record company may make a contract according to which it shares these royalties. But the actual employee—which is the question the honourable senator has raised—as far as I know, is in the same position as the writer who works for a newspaper. It is up to him to make his contract with the company.

After all, you get the same problem, as you said, Mr. Chairman, in the vast field that this opens up. You get the same problem with the person working in a scientific laboratory. He makes an invention. He could not have made the invention without the research facilities which the company has put at his disposal. So there is quite a large field for contract there.

To answer your question, I would say that in most cases in the United Kingdom the copyright belongs to the record company which has issued the record, which has either acquired the copyright from the producer or has made its contract with its employees. So you have simplicity in the United Kingdom system. I am not saying that this is the best system, but it is one system.

Now I am coming, if I may, to the honourable senator's question. The honourable Senator Cook said—and if I may respectfully say, rightly—that there are constitutional questions involved in the ratification of the Rome Convention. As a member of the Australian as well as the English Bar, I am very conscious of the constitutional questions perhaps that our English friends are not always aware of, that a system built on a federal structure confronts, in many cases, a seemingly simple piece of legislation. In Australia they are very seriously considering ratifying the Rome Convention. Constitutionally, they have no problem with regard to the broadcasting organization which must be given the right under the convention or with the record producer or record maker who must be given a right under the convention. The problem they have constitutionally is with the performer, and that we find in several countries because the performer must be granted specific rights under the convention, to stop people copying his live performance. This does raise constitutional questions.

The Federal Republic of Germany has the same problem under its constitution, but if felt that this came under the contract power.

In the United Kingdom, although they have not the same kind of constitution, they did have a problem but they solved it by giving the performer a penal right. In other words, they stated that the unauthorized copying of his record went to the criminal law.

Finally—and I apologize for taking so long in getting to the other system—there is a system where the individual record producer has the right, either under the contract or under what he does himself, that he shares voluntarily.

In the Scandinavian-type legislation, which is also influential, you get this approach to where the right is a different type of right. The honourable senator mentioned a property right. I think this is the concept of the common law approach, that this right is a property right. But the Scandinavian legislation, I would say, has a more sociological aspect than a purely property aspect. It says that the performer has contributed and he should have a share, and it provides that in the law. The law does not provide the shares. This is subject to the tribunal's decision, because following the Canadian pattern there are tribunals.

The main countries that follow the system of giving the right to the performer and the record producer are the Federal Republic of Germany, Sweden, Denmark, Finland and, most recently, Japan.

If you would permit me, I would mention one thing here. Perhaps, in the ultimate, this is a very fine, indeed a noble solution to the problem, this second way of dealing with it, but it does have problems because you are dealing with individual performers who may come from many different countries. So you do have to grapple with the problem of how you are going to make a foreign performer. For instance, he may be in a performance of Aida and you have to decide how you are going to allow them to participate. But that is by the way. The official report of the Rome Convention, in which I have been attempting to check Canada's signature, contains a rather cryptic phrase. It states that the convention at the Rome Conference was signed by almost all the countries present. We believe that Canada signed on the basis referred to by the honourable senator, under reserve of the constitutional points. This is clarified by article 24 of the Convention. Canada's position is quite clear; it either signed the convention in Rome, in which event it has the right to ratify it if it so desires...

The Chairman: It has the right to ratify or not to ratify.

Mr. Sterling: That is correct. Under article 24 of the Convention a nonsignatory can ratify, provided it is a member of one of the universal copyright Conventions or the Berne Convention. Canada, of course, is a member of both, so Canada's position is the option, as you say, Mr. Chairman.

With respect to the very interesting suggestion of the honourable senator with respect to the necessity of seeing what happens when a sound recording is made, I respectfully suggest it is one of the magic things of our time when the sound comes out of instruments and a few minutes later from a material object. It is always a wonder to me.

I would conclude by saying that this wonder can be put to the test very easily. Consider a performance by the finest symphony orchestra in your wonderful National Arts Centre, which I have visited, in which a microphone is set up and the finest performers play a recording. It will sound awful because the art and technique necessary to translate it on to the tape, for translation on to the record which will recreate it, takes, with respect, Mr. Chairman, some doing and some skill.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Would you say the same thing with respect to our speeches in the Senate?

Mr. Sterling: They have a copyright.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I was thinking of the quality of reproduction.

The Chairman: There is no tariff, though, applicable to the speeches in the Senate.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): One point, which was pushed very strongly, arose at one of our earlier sittings. It is that the record makers, and this was stated by one of them, really make their profit by the sale of records, not on the performance of the records over the radio or television station, as the case may be. They offer their records to these outlets free; at times they actually pay them to use them. The purpose is advertisement, so that the sale of individual records will increase. In fact, I think it is fair to say that this is the great value to the record maker, not the right to a royalty which he might receive, but the sale of his records to the general public. Would you comment on that, Mr. Stewart?

Mr. Stewart: Again, I am very grateful to the senator, because I did not deal with this problem; I tried to deal with what you, Mr. Chairman, termed the mainstream of the argument: Should there or should there not be a right?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You are quite right in saying that, because that is the basic proposition. However, this other question was raised and pushed very strongly.

Mr. Stewart: I would very much like to deal with it, Mr. Chairman, if I may. It was my fault for not doing so before. It is not the first time, I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I have heard this argument. It is advanced in every country where legislation is under consideration. It simply says, in a nutshell: "We are advertising your records by playing them on the air. We are doing you a good turn; one good turn deserves another. Therefore, you should not charge for them". It is an argument of quantity and I would not be surprised to hear, if ever we do hear the reasoning of the Copyright Appeal Board, that that argument had something to do with the reduction of the tariff.

What is the argument worth? First of all, let me say that everywhere in the world record producers have acknowledged that in certain circumstances broadcasting is beneficial and does help sales. No one has ever denied that. However, two of the witnesses who appeared before your committee are quoted in the transcript as stating that if there were not broadcasting of records, the record producers would go bankrupt. In other words, they could not sell their records if there were no broadcasting. I do not think that is right; in fact, I am sure it is not. The record industry as a whole—this is speculative, and I will tell you in a moment what little proof there is of it—thinks that if all broadcasting of records ceased tomorrow, it would sell as many records, if not more.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Really?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, the industry does.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I find that difficult to understand.

Mr. Stewart: May I illustrate my meaning, because I see that you are not with me? I was speaking of the industry as a whole; in fact, there is of course no such thing. It is a highly competitive industry, probably one of the most competitive. No single record producer would tell you that he could compete if his competitor's records were broadcast and his not. That is the trick. If the industry as a whole were not broadcast, they think that not only would they sell as many but then might sell more. I will tell you why.

I am now completely leaving the field of classical music, because it does not apply there. It applies to pop which, after all, accounts for the bulk of sales. A pop record has a very short life. It is thought that broadcasting has a great deal to do with this. The opinion is logical, because if the latest hit is broadcast on the radio twenty times a day, those listening may not be so willing to buy a copy. Furthermore, I do not know whether your children are the same as mine, but teen-agers have little machines which copy the record from the radio and then plays back something which is not quite as good as the record but is something, and which may be used. The argument that in that case the industry would go bankrupt is not true. An individual might encounter great difficulty if his competitors were constantly broadcast and he were not.

The little proof that there is has emerged in one or two countries where broadcasting of records was, for a variety of reasons, drastically reduced. Five or six years ago in Germany the record content of musical programs was reduced to one-tenth. This continued for three and a half months, during which time record sales increased. It is not conclusive proof, of course, but there is some evidence that there is a saturation point.

I think it was one of the artists who made this statement before you, who said that he—or I think it was a she—feels that the artist's working life or the life of her performance is shortened by broadcasting.

The Chairman: I think it is shortened by over-exposure.

Mr. Stewart: What I say is that when you have this argument before you, you have to weigh two things: the admitted fact that the record producer as an individual, as one producer, wants his records broadcast—evidence, he sends them, as you say, the records he wants them to play; but against that you have to weigh the fact that most broadcasting stations—and I note there are a few in Canada that might be an exception, but the bulk of them just could not survive one day without records. They just could not master the live music content. Why not? This is just not in Canada, because you have a dearth of talent. This is so everywhere. Why is this so? Because the live performance in the studio is far too costly, it is just economically not possible, whereas record playing is cheap.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You can run a program all day and all night on records, but you cannot expect an artist to be there all the time.

The Chairman: With all due respect to the point you are making, Mr. Stewart, the real issue is not whether the record companies or the broadcasting companies would survive if the records were not played the way they are, or whether record producers would make or lose money, or whether broadcasting companies, if they did not buy records, would survive. I do not think that is the main issue, although I did get a statement from the Standard Radio people, I think, when they were appearing here with CAB, that they are, in one of their companies, making records. I asked them why they were interested in this bill. Well, they could not make enough records. Although they did not develop it, I take it that regarding the records they do make, they have some kind of arrangement where by they hand out to other broadcasting stations. I would be very interested in knowing—and I hope we will find out before we are finished—what is the basis on which other broadcasting companies pay one broadcasting company that is in the business of producing records as well. I would suspect that is not entirely gratuitous.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, your suspicion is well founded, but I would like a Canadian to deal with it. I think I know the answer, and it is what you suggest.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Thank you very much, Mr. Stewart and Mr. Sterling. This has been very informative.

Today we had the agenda organized so that SRL would appear. I have read their brief, it is quite lengthy, and we would not really do more than get going between now and the time we have to adjourn. While I tried to get permission from the Government Leader to sit this afternoon while the Senate is sitting, he did not see fit to agree to introduce that motion.

Therefore, next Wednesday we have Mr. Estey appearing as counsel for the Musical Protective Society and for the Canadian Cable Television Association. Perhaps this would be the time, since SRL is really in the position of being the respondent, when they should have an opportunity to defend their position, after everything has been said on the other side.

I have consulted Mr. Fortier, and he said that he will not complain if we do not hear him today. So, having cleared that, I think this is the way we should deal with it. I was going to suggest too that perhaps the meeting next Wednesday should start at 10 o'clock because the Chairman is obliged to attend quite an event the day before that is entirely personal.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Many happy returns!

Senator Haig: We will agree.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

The committee adjourned.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

---

No. 28

---

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1971

---

Fourth Proceedings on Bill S-9,
intituled:

“An Act to amend the Copyright Act”

---

(Witnesses:—See Minutes of Proceedings)

A diamond-shaped library stamp from the University of Toronto, dated JUN 10 1971, is located in the bottom right corner of the page.

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators:

Aird	Haig
Beaubien	Hayden
Benidickson	Hays
Blois	Isnor
Burchill	Kinley
Carter	Lang
Choquette	Macnaughton
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Molson
Cook	Sullivan
Croll	Walker
Desruisseaux	Welch
Everett	White
Gélinas	Willis—(28)
Giguère
Grosart

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate,
March 30, 1971:

"Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed the debate on the Motion of the Honourable Senator Urquhart, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cook, for the second reading of the Bill S-9, intituled: "An Act to amend the Copyright Act".

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Honourable Senator Urquhart moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Laird, that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Wednesday, June 2, 1971.

(31)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 10.00 a.m. to further consider the following Bill:

Bill S-9, "An Act to amend the Copyright Act".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Blois, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Desruisseaux, Flynn, Grosart, Haig, Isnor, Molson, Welch and White. (13)

Present but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senators Lafond, McGrand and Methot. (3)

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel; Pierre Godbout, Assistant Law Clerk, Parliamentary Counsel and Director of Committees.

WITNESSES:

(Musical Protective Society:

Canadian Cable Television Association:

Mr. W. Z. Estey, Q.C., Counsel;

Mr. C. David Macdonald, Counsel;

Mr. Stanley G. Simpson, Managing Secretary (M.P.S.);

Mr. Robert Short, President (C.C.T.A.);

Mr. J. Lyman Potts, President, Standard Broadcast Productions Ltd.

Radio-Québec:

Mr. Yves Labonté, President.

At 12.25 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Wednesday, June 2, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill S-9, to amend the Copyright Act, met this day at 10 a.m. to give further consideration to the bill.

Senator Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I call the meeting to order.

We continue our consideration of Bill S-9. Our first appearance this morning is the Musical Protective Society and the Canadian Cable Television Association. Mr. W.Z. Estey, Q.C., is appearing as counsel, and Mr. C. David Macdonald is with him. I take it that you, Mr. Estey, will introduce the other panel members. You may start as soon as you wish, and I take it that you are going to make an opening statement rather than read the brief. You can assume we have read the brief, but you can be copious in your references or anything else; you are the general.

Mr. W.Z. Estey, Q.C., Counsel, Musical Protective Society; Canadian Cable Television Association: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman and honourable members of the Senate committee, I have with me this morning Mr. Robert C. Short, President of the Canadian Cable Television Association, the second from the right; Mr. Stanley G. Simpson, Executive Director and Secretary of the Musical Protective Society of Canada; and Mr. J. Lyman Potts, President of Standard Broadcast Productions Limited—all of whom appear with me on behalf of the Canadian Cable Television Association and the Musical Protective Society of Canada.

I should now say a word, Mr. Chairman, as to what those two organizations are and as to what they comprise. The Canadian Cable Television Association may be known to some of you as the National Community Antenna Television Association. It changed to CCTA, and it represents almost all the cable and televisual systems operating today in Canada and serving many hundreds of thousands of Canadian homes. Of course, the number of people served by and dependent upon cable television increases virtually hourly.

The Musical Protective Society of Canada is a federal incorporation without share capital. It was incorporated in 1927. It embraces all of the music-using components of the Canadian scene, including the Canadian Fair Association, the Ontario and National Arenas Association, the so-called wire music or background music services such as Muzak, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the CTV television network, the motel associations, the two large theatre chains, the four independent theatre associations across Canada, and smaller but no less important users of music throughout Canada.

MPS has appeared in all the significant copyright hearings held in this country since 1927, including the 1935 royal commission presided over by His Honour Judge Parker, which resulted in the establishment of the Copyright Appeal Board and the passage of those parts of the act with which we are primarily concerned today.

MPS also participated in the Massey Commission hearings when they went into the use of music in Canada by our many state- and private-owned institutions; and also in the Ilsley Commission proceedings starting in 1954, and throughout that period until the report came down in 1957.

The interest of the people we are speaking for this morning, honourable senators, is vital in the application of the Copyright Act in this country, for this reason: the broadcasting components of the people we represent comprise a rather brittle industry in our spectrum of commercial activity in Canada. That goes without debate by reason of the fact that the Government of this country is now, and has since 1932, been spending a very large proportion of the Gross National Product, collected by the Government, in the maintenance of a national broadcasting service. In this year, 1971, this industry is subsidized by the federal Government in the amount of one-quarter of a billion dollars. Therefore, we submit to this honourable committee that any measure which is introduced in the legislatures of Canada which is going to be a burden on the economic well-being and health of the broadcasting industry, should be very carefully scrutinized.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, of course, can speak for itself, and has spoken; and we support everything they have said with reference to this bill.

The private broadcasting organization has spoken. Again, we support them in that regard, and will add something to that as we proceed this morning.

As the Chairman has said, I do not propose to follow the brief. I am appreciative of the fact that this committee does its homework and has read the brief.

Turning to cable television—and then I am going to deal with theatres and then SRL—cable television is not at the moment in the line of fire. SRL did file a tariff which was published in the Canada Gazette. The Cable Association did respond to that by filing objections in the Copyright Appeal Board, and then a letter was received from SRL withdrawing, for the moment, their demand for the payment of licence fees by the Cable Television Association membership.

We do not believe in living on the edge of a Munich-like situation. If this organization, which I will come to in a moment, has aimed the gun at us only briefly, we are realists enough to assume the gun will again be pointed at us. Therefore, let me tell you in a brief word or two what cable television is and why we bitterly oppose the introduction of any burdensome right for the use of phonograph recordings.

First of all, cable antenna services are simply an improvement on the rooftop or rabbit ears antenna attached to your television sets.

The cable service is now not a luxury but a necessity in many areas, for a multitude of reasons, the two most important of which are: firstly, natural topographic interferences such as electronic shadows cast by hills, mountains and created in valleys; and secondly, man-made shadows created by highrise buildings and by what the engineers refer to as radio noise.

To overcome those two difficulties and to give high-quality television reception in the home, over one million Canadian homes are dependent on cable television for that signal. Cable television is not a method of originating broadcasting and competing with the broadcast industry: it is first and foremost an antenna service for the improvement of the operation of television and FM sets, particularly in the age of colour TV with the high demand for accurate reproduction in the colour set.

The Canadian Radio Television Commission, when it assumed jurisdiction over cable television on April 1, 1968, took a somewhat different stance, at least in the opening phase of its history, than did the prior administration under the Department of Transport; and CRTC have said, for reasons I need not burden this committee with, that on occasion and in some areas and for some purposes, cable television should serve the neighbourhood by originating a specific type of television service—I do not use the word “program”—and that that should be relayed to the areas served by this antenna system. That kind of local production is not the Ed Sullivan type of performance, but is the weather eye, time, local news, local organizations, local music groups and that sort of thing, where on an unoccupied channel of the receiver you can tune in and receive this local service.

It varies widely in parts of Canada as to who does this. In the larger cities, where the licences for the antenna systems divide the city geographically, you get area services. For example, in the City of Montreal you have National Cablevision serving one area of the city, giving one type of program, you have Cable TV Limited serving another part of the city giving its own type of domestic programming, and so on across the country.

In the City of Winnipeg it is divided down the Red River and the programming on one side of the river by Metro Videon carries a local program designed to meet the communication and information needs of the people on that side of the river, and there is Selkirk Broadcasting and a local system on the other side of the river.

In conjunction with those services, the systems do on occasion and now frequently provide either a background music service or use recordings in connection with some programming. It varies. It will vary on one system from week to week, and you may go a month or two with no recordings. It is not of primary importance, but it would be a loss of service to the community if those systems were unable to use those recordings except by payment of a fee. We know where that fee would come from. It would come from the people who pay to get this antenna signal connected to their antenna and their FM sets.

The Chairman: There is nothing new in people paying.

Mr. Estey: No, and it will not end with this committee either. I suppose there is nothing new in people dying, but we should try to avoid it.

The Chairman: You are talking about this cable system. Did I understand you to say they originate some programs?

Mr. Estey: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: How would that interfere with my reception of a program that I wanted to get on a particular station?

Mr. Estey: I should explain that. Let us take Ottawa Cablevision or Skyline Cablevision, the two systems here. One is for the east and the other is for the west, and the Laurentians and Hull. Those systems carry a variety of signals. For example, Skyline carries the two CBC transmitters CBO on channel 4 and CBOF-TV on channel 8. They carry CJOH-TV, the CTV affiliate on channel 13, and CFTM in Montreal, the independent. They transferred that to another channel, I think.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Where do you live?

Mr. Estey: In Toronto.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa-West): How do you know about all this in Ottawa?

Mr. Estey: I have the fortune or misfortune to come down here once a week; and I incorporated the Skyline Cablevision system, and unhappily sold the idea to Ottawa Cablevision.

When they started out they also carried Plattsburg, New York, and Burlington, Vermont, two Syracuse stations, and WWNH, which is a CBS affiliate on channel 7.

Due to electronic difficulties, distance, phase and local noise, some of those US signals have been dropped and they do not have that full complement. On each system they have one dark, vacant channel, and it is on that channel that they carry the local signal. The way it works is very simple. At the antenna head where they receive the signals, at the bottom of the mast, there is a little house that amplifies the signal and puts it on the coaxial cable, that eventually splits into the distribution cables and connects to the house. At that little house they also feed in a synthesized television program which will come out on that vacant channel and look as though it came down the antenna as an antenna signal.

The antenna service has a studio, which has in it the equipment of a television station. It has a camera, a microphone, an announcer, a producer and a recording turntable, and they build up a program of local interest. They do not set out to compete with “This Week Has Seven Days” or some Hollywood spectacular, but they carry the local church groups, council meetings, where the municipality permits it, travelogues from people in the community who have been away, and travel promotions of the community, as they do in the city of Montreal; also local sporting events. There is a system serving a piece of southern Ontario that carries organized baseball in summer and junior hockey in winter, and they do it just like a television station.

That is an alternative to the three major US networks, the three major Canadian networks, and the educational TV stations which are carried in the southern parts of Canada, which does not quite include Ottawa. There is no US educational TV here.

Senator Molson: What are the three Canadian networks?

Mr. Estey: CBC English, CBC French and CTV.

Senator Molson: What about Canadian French?

Mr. Estey: That is not a network. It is CFT in Montreal which is a single station. Now they are starting to formulate a combination of CFT in Montreal, CFT in Quebec City, one in Jonquiere and one other. They are being tied into what will be the equivalent in the French language areas of the CTV English language service.

There is a fourth network in Canada that is claimed to be operated by the Government of Ontario, although that is a bad word in the politics of this country at the moment. They operate channel 10. The station is owned physically by the Government of Canada and operated by the Province of Ontario on channel 19. That is becoming the flag station of an educational group. They shy away from the word "network". Cable television carries that in Toronto on channel 13. They do that by taking off the redundant CTV coverage on channel 13. They also carry other educational signals, but at the moment they are all coming from the United States.

That is cable TV. All of us appearing today take the view that this alleged rate does not exist in law; that if it does it should not; and that it does not exist in the country which substantially sends into our country this recorded music.

Let me turn from the passive side of broadcasting, which is cable TV, to the active side of broadcasting, which is the transmission side. It divides itself into three categories. There is radio AM, which we are all accustomed to, there is radio FM, which is short-range and high quality broadcasting on the high frequency spectrum, and there is television broadcasting. I have named them in the order in which they were discussed in Ontario's recent famous Copyright Appeal Board hearing. AM radio was the target of most of the evidence as to what they did with recordings—not so much with FM radio and in television hardly at all.

I have already hinted at the view expressed by saying that this industry in Canada is one that has been the subject of more royal commissions than any other single phase of our Canadian activity, including the railways. The broadcasters are now ahead on royal commissions by one over the railways and they are much newer. Ever since the Aird Commission of 1929, broadcasting in Canada has been found to be, first, a national necessity if we are going to keep the country together and develop its own cultural community, and secondly, that broadcasting, because of our geography, has to be assisted. It would not naturally survive against the vast American area of broadcasting.

When you consider broadcasting in this country there are some factors that are essentially carried foremost in one's mind. The first is that in AM broadcasting we are up against 3,700 United States stations. They have clear channels on three times as many frequencies as we have in Canada. It means that their 50-kilowatt transmitters come rolling in here by day and by night. I say that neither with alarm nor fear, nor dislike. It is a fact of life. 70 per cent of our population can receive United States AM radio in the day time and 100 per cent at night.

Senator Isnor: Does that apply to all parts of Canada?

Mr. Estey: Yes, clear up to Inuvik. It is much easier to get American signals than Canadian in the day time because of the nature of the radio navigational waves. For example, in the city of Saskatoon you can hear WGN Chicago much easier at night than you can hear Regina 150 miles away. In the city of Toronto we can hear WCBS New York in the winter time throughout the day. You have high level broadcasting which our people have come to like for one purpose.

In FM broadcasting the penetration is very great, but not as great because of the nature of the wave jump. Edmonton, for example, one of Canada's leading cities, cannot get United States FM. Calgary cannot get American FM, but in Winnipeg you can and certainly all across southern Quebec, southern Ontario, the maritimes, and southern British Columbia, where most of the population of B.C. receive the high-power output of the American radio industry. There is an historical reason for that. One reason, unfortunately, is that—for reasons that I need not go into here—for a long time government policy was to hold the power of our broadcasting stations down to the power they held in 1940. It was a so-called power freeze. The Americans have no such philosophy. They treat radio frequencies like mineral resources; they are no good unless you develop them. So everybody gets the maximum power in the United States. You have Buffalo, for example, compared to Toronto. I was going to say that Buffalo is a second-rate city, which might start up the war of 1812 again. It is certainly a long way down from the metropolitan level of Toronto, but it has eleven FM stations. Eleven! They all roll into Toronto. We have in Toronto three or four commercial stations, one Province-of-Ontario-operated station and a CBC station on the Beethoven-kind of wave length, battling against 11 good United States FM stations.

Now we come to television. Over half the country is within roof-top range of American television broadcasting stations. All that means is that you can put up an antenna on your roof-top without needing any cable system. Rabbit ears would not get a U.S. station in many areas, but with normal roof-top antenna which you see in southern Canada, and really south of this city, you can bring in, without reference to sunlight or darkness, from up to 120 direct miles, a good American station signal.

I do not say this with any animosity or ulterior motive at all, but the United States government and citizenry are dedicated to the view that if you are going to use a frequency then really use it. So they put up 1,000-foot and 2,000-foot masts—heights which are unheard of in Canada. We think the airplanes may hit them so we do not allow them, but height is the thing in propagation for television. They also go to the maximum power—100 kilowatts below channel 6 and 300 kilowatts below channel 8—and they almost always operate at that peak. So they roll into our big population centres.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You are not suggesting, Mr. Estey, that these are being especially beamed towards Canada? Perhaps in some cases they are, because of the market, but it just happens that they do, I take it, use these frequencies and they can, in fact, reach Canadians. But surely their prime target is the American market.

Mr. Estey: That is correct, Senator Connolly, with four major exceptions. The four exceptions, from west to east, are KVLS, Bellingham, Washington, built for and advertising in the Vancouver market. In fact, it does not even bother to say it has a Vancouver telephone number when they announce it or show it on the screen. Then there is the Pembina-Minnesota-Manitoba station on channel 13, a big 300-kilowatt transmitter, whose masts and guywires are 50 feet from the Canadian boundary. Of course, they serve only gophers in that immediate area; there is nothing there. I hate to say that about the Prairies, but there is nothing around Pembina. They go into Winnipeg and they have a sales office in Winnipeg; that is the Winnipeg station. Then there is the Burlington, Vermont, area, carrying Montreal advertising in a big way. It does not roll in with the impact that the Winnipeg one does, because of the prairie characteristics for disseminating those signals, but it is big in Montreal. Then there is WWNY in Watertown, New York. That cannot be justified on its level of operation by what is in Watertown. They reach Kingston and up into Ottawa and, of course, on occasion you will hear Canada's national anthem when they sign off. Quite frequently they play the Canadian national anthem at the end of the day.

Senator Molson: That is very courteous of them.

Mr. Estey: You can imagine what would happen if we reciprocated. There would be pickets.

The Chairman: I do not like to interrupt, Mr. Estey, but I was just wondering, when we are hearing about all these intrusions, deliberate or otherwise, into our air space by American stations, how does that touch on this bill?

Mr. Estey: I was just going to come to that when I answer Senator Connolly's (Ottawa West) last question, sir. In our respectful submission, it is a vital connection and it is the second key connection. The last area which is of some importance is that the three major Buffalo stations are all maximum-power, maximum-height stations, and at least one of them has located its antenna up to the edge of what they call the Niagara frontier, with a view to getting to the metropolitan Toronto market, and they advertise in their station rate-card, which is what they send out to the advertisers, that they reach 824,000 Canadian homes. That is a lot of homes. That exceeds what any Canadian television station reaches, including channel 9. That is WGR-TV, an NBC affiliate in Buffalo. It exceeds the reach because it is on the highest propagation channel there is in the television dial. As the numbers go up, the reach goes down. They are on a very strong base.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the point of my submission with respect to broadcasting is simply that on those Burlington, Bellingham and Buffalo turntables are spun the records broadcast into the Canadian communities. Those records, of course, come from two major sources. They come from their own talent sources, RCA, Columbia, Warner Brothers, MCA, Capital; and they come from Deutsche Gramofon by way of Polydor, or from Decca, U.K.—the London record group. Those records are turning on those turntables, the signals are broadcast into Canada, and the big radio stations of the United States do, indeed, make music hits in Canada. We have many examples where those U.S. radio stations' disc jockeys are talking about Canada and requests from Canada. They are big in southern Ontario through WKVW. With 50,000 kilowatts in Buffalo they are broadcasting to the youth of Ontario with these records. I do not want to take time to point out that Detroit has a dozen AM transmitters within four or five miles of southern Ontario, but at the same time that they are competing for the audience you have the Canadian stations in Windsor, Montreal, Vancouver and Winnipeg playing exactly the same records and competing for that audience. Oddly enough, on those Canadian turntables are spinning the Columbia records, the RCA records, the MCA records, the Decca-U.K. records and the Polydor Deutsche Gramofon records. They are precisely the same records. I will come back to the superficial distinction of "Made in Canada," but let me say that they are precisely the same records.

It is an anomaly beyond human understanding that a little country like Canada, with one-tenth of the population and one-twentieth the entertainment budget of the U.S., should say to the Montreal radio station, "You pay that foreign recording company 50 cents to play that record, but the American station, playing the same record, does not have to pay the American recording company." That is an anomaly which is really difficult to understand in a country of this size.

If there were something immoral about it then that would be another thing; that is if Canada could not afford nationally to be a big trading nation, as we are, and at the same time defeat other countries' legitimate rights. But that is not what is happening. In the United States, which is clearly the greatest entertainment market known on the face of the earth, there is no such right in a gramophone record. It has been well litigated. Mr. Paul Whiteman went all through the courts against RCA trying to get such a right in the recordings, but the United States courts have always said that there is no such right, and the reason they give for that is that they go back into English history where copyright originates, back to Edward the Confessor's day, and tracing it down it is apparent that what you are doing in copyright is protecting an intellectual function. You are not protecting a tangible commodity. You are protecting an intellectual property or works, and it has to be a musical work, an artistic work or a dramatic work.

When you make that work into a piece of sheet music, for example, you have not created anything intellectual at all; you have just created a device by which the intellectual process can be repeated for some one else's benefit. When you make a trombone with the slide device all you have done is created a mechanical device which will reproduce the intellectual property for the experience of the listener. Or you do it by a recording where you have a pianist sit down in front of a microphone and the vibrations are translated onto the surface of the disc or the record. But that can be used like the trombone and like the sheet music and like the pianola to reproduce by acoustic representation that intellectual work.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Do you restrict the intellectual work to the work of the originator—for example, the author of the piece of music?

Mr. Estey: Yes.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Is that the rationale for the American decision?

Mr. Estey: The same rationale.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): In the Whiteman case and in others, did they argue in the courts that their contribution to that original intellectual work was another intellectual effort on their part, namely in the way they interpreted the work and the kind of results they got from it?

Mr. Estey: Yes, that argument has been made and made repeatedly, and some day that argument may find itself in a statute in the United States. The performer by the way he plays it or by the way he performs it undoubtedly adds something, because I am sure that if you or I were to render a piece of music and then Mr. Whiteman were to render it, there would be a noticeable difference although the work would be the same. The Americans have argued that and have done so very aggressively. But before Paul Whiteman's time, another great orchestral leader, Fred Waring, launched litigation to stop somebody from playing his Pennsylvania records.

He made that argument, but he was faced with the fact that that argument is unknown under copyright law. That is not to say that is not a good law, but it is unknown to that philosophy.

The Chairman: You mean copyright generally or in the United States?

Mr. Estey: Generally. The Waring and Whiteman discussions are not in the United States statutes because the parties admitted at the outset that the Copyright Act could not help them, but they argued the English common law of copyright. Now the United States statute still does not help the recording companies and the RCA company have no rights in the United States.

The Chairman: I am just wondering about the relevance of your reference to common law in this regard because in England now they do have a statute. So if another country is looking for some persuasion or leadership, they might make use of common law decisions in another country, but actually those common law decisions do not reflect the state of the law in England.

Mr. Estey: I suppose the last thing the Americans would do would be to follow an English statute, but they were arguing the philosophy was against that recognition, so it would have to be pure statute if you wanted to create a performer's right.

I think this creates a very important right. The performer here is sort of riding jockey-like on the back of SRL to get something out of the broadcasting industry. Mr. Wood who appeared before you was first to say that. They would like to get something from people who play their artists' records, and it is a convenience to them to get the money now from SRL if that is the best they can do, but really what we are deciding and talking about in this legislative arena is whether section 4.(3) of our act should protect not a performer's right, but a recording company's right, not just to prevent piracy of the record but to prevent the use of that record in broadcasting. For example, I have a Polydor record, a 45 rpm record which is the kind the radio stations play, and the evidence is that this is the kind of thing that the radio stations sell in a big way to the youth of this country by the playing of that record on the air. Now this record represents and focuses the anomaly of the situation with which you gentlemen are faced. This record is thrust into the hands of the broadcaster by the recording company with the request to play it, so much so that CFRB, which is a large broadcasting station in Toronto with a vast audience, has a chair reserved in their music director's office for the representative of Mr. Wilmot's company, Columbia Records (Canada) Limited, because he is there almost every day to push these records. Yet on the face of this Polydor record it says "Unauthorized copying, public performance, broadcasting of this record are prohibited."

Copying the record is treated in a strange way in various countries. There is a great conference going on now in Europe—and it will resume in November—at which Canada is represented, trying to ascertain the extent to which pure copying is going on and how it should be stopped. Piracy of the record, is, of course, prohibited by our statute. You cannot copy this record. Now ironically enough in the United States there is no prohibition against straight copying of a record and "piracy" is not the word to use there because it is not unlawful. Piracy is a big industry in the United States. Some states have acted to stop it but we do not have it here. Then broadcasting is prohibited, but broadcasting is not prohibited by Polydor; in fact they go a long way out of their way to make sure it is broadcast. So that is an anomalous duality of position which has been assumed by the recording industry.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Where is that company located?

Mr. Estey: Polydor Limited is located in Hamburg, Germany, and I think it is a truly international company because it is in Holland to start with, I think. It is partly owned by Philips and partly by Deutsche Gramofon of Hamburg, and I think Deutsche Gramofon is owned by Siemens A.G., the large German company.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Would you assume that that prohibition is put on the record to suit the legal situation in various countries in the world? I assume from what you say that they operate in various countries.

Mr. Estey: It might be possible that that is the case, senator, except that this one says "Made in Canada," and that printing is put on in Canada.

Let me now deal with the point as to how the industry operates here and as to what SRL is.

Senator Cook: Do I gather that if there is any extension of the copyright at all, as you see it, you would rather an extension in favour of the artist rather than the extension in favour of the manufacturer of the record?

Mr. Estey: You are putting me to an evil choice as I speak for people who have a thin time of it in using these records. We would not believe that either one should have a right to any payment for the use of this record. If I had to put them in scale of order, I would give it to the performer because he brings something to the record. The recording company brings nothing to it except tangible hardware just as though they manufactured the keys on an organ.

Senator Grosart: I take it, Mr. Estey, you are making a case for limitation of the performing right to the original composer and author?

Mr. Estey: Yes, sir.

Senator Grosart: Would it be correct to suggest that perhaps you are thinking of the possible effects of the proliferation of the performing right to the record manufacturer, the performer, the producer, the artistic director, the sound man—all of whom can contribute greatly to the success or failure?

I am suggesting that in speaking of the dangers of that proliferation you are looking for a point of cut-off—the point at which the performing right should subsist in only one legal person, that is, the original composer. Is what is in your mind is that all the rest are users of the other man's property?

Mr. Estey: That is right, sir.

Senator Grosart: That is the cut-off point. Everybody else is taking somebody else's property, voluntarily obtaining permission, which you must, to license the use of somebody else's property, and knowing that under present circumstances, and as they have existed up until this point and still exist, to make money using that man's property. Is that it?

Mr. Estey: That is precisely the position, and I would not like to change one word of it.

You can document that as you, sir, may well know. First of all, the Gregory Committee in the United Kingdom said that this proliferation of right gives rise to great difficulties. The Ilsley Commission in Canada, the late Chief Justice Ilsley said, "We do not want to import that into Canada, but if it is in the act it should be out." You find many examples. For example, it has been discussed in other forums what would happen at a football game of the Ottawa Rough Riders if we had this proliferation of rights. Could the public ever hear or see that game by electronic means if we proliferate the rights?

First of all, in order to get the thing on the air, if the performers had a right, because of the dramatic performance alleged by the football players, I suppose, you get the fellow who owns the team to give the right to put that representation on the air, video.

If you play any kind of music at all, live or recorded, you get the rights licensed by the owner of the works. If you use recorded music you get another licence from the recording company. Then, if you wish to use it in a bar-room or any place where there is public access to the set, you have to get a licence from the broadcasting station, and maybe the station would have to get a special licence from the network, as sometimes has been argued in the United States. So you would have five rights before the public could ever enjoy an Ottawa Roughrider football game.

Senator Grosart: And the quarterback might assert a performing right in his signals, which are an essential contribution to the success of broadcasts.

The Chairman: That may be creative too.

Senator Grosart: Yes.

Mr. Estey: Yes. As Joe Capp said, that is worth half a million dollars.

Senator Grosart: And the fullback might claim that he had an educated toe and, therefore, it was an intellectual contribution.

Senator Carter: Why not take hockey? Then you have all kinds of performers.

The Chairman: Mr. Estey, could I summarize? Is the point—it seems to me it is—that you are putting forward at this moment, that to maintain this performing right in records would add a cost to the users who make use of the records, and they have a thin operation? I think that was the expression you used.

Mr. Estey: That is right, sir.

The Chairman: So, is this the measure that we should look at, the dollars?

Mr. Estey: I think that national self-interest is always a strong emotion, and I think that it is an enlightened self-interest in Canada because the community needs the broadcast industry. I do not need to argue that; the Government of Canada has argued that for 40 years for me. Sometimes I have argued against it. Also we should not do anything which is intellectually dishonest which impedes the growth of that industry and allows it to serve the community of this country.

The Chairman: Which industry are you talking about?

Mr. Estey: Broadcasting. And, of course, it employs many Canadians. It is the open door to the construction of a Canadian cultural community, according to the CRTC, the Massey Commission, the Fowler Commission, and any number of others.

Mr. Chairman, I know the committee has heard a great deal of this before, but I would like to deal with it briefly.

The Chairman: Just before you jump to that, you are talking about national self-interest. I just wonder if you could develop that. I do not quite understand it; I do not follow you.

Mr. Estey: It has been the history of our broadcasting industry, and now our press industry, as the Davey committee has indicated, that we exist in face of enormous intellectual pressure from the United States. It is a good pressure, in that it excites our demand for progress and brings us know-how which otherwise we would have laboriously to put together, but it has its disadvantage—or its price, which is perhaps a better way to put it.

One of the prices is that to find spectrum space for our industry we have to have an economic base for that industry, to buy the transmitters and to buy the talent, and to combine the two and put signals on the air and into the living rooms of this country.

We cannot operate a network economically. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation loses $45 million a year running its radio operation because it runs a network. We cannot economically run a television network in Canada. The microwave circuit is 4,300 miles long. The United States network is 2,400 miles long. We have 21½ million people supporting it. They have 215 million people supporting it. They have a vast advertising industry. We are a very small advertising industry.

We have to maintain some kind of east-west communications in this country; that is Government policy. Political parties to the contrary, it is always Government policy.

Here we are asking ourselves to impose upon this great and vital industry a tariff which some day will rise, as all tariffs do, to a tariff of considerable importance. I am asking you what are the value priorities? Is there something here which we are robbing from foreign owners for which we should compensate them; or are we inflicting on one of our main industries a burden which the competing United States industries do not have? I say it is not in our national interest to do it.

I can go on at great length on variations of that theme, but that is the bedrock proposition, and it is as true on Vancouver Island as it is in the City of Montreal or in Bonavista-Twillingate.

Senator Cook: They are two different towns.

Mr. Estey: I put them together.

The Chairman: Senator Cook, I do not know how you came to be named. Is Twillingate your territory?

Mr. Estey: I thought that if I put them together they would equal Montreal, but I guess that is not right.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps if you went to Bonavista-Twillingate, you would see how important it was.

Senator Flynn: It was in the days of Mr. Pickersgill!

Senator Cook: Then we heard all about it.

Mr. Estey: The recording industry itself deserves close attention in these deliberations because it is our respectful view that this legislative body, before it considers its statute, should be very keenly and completely aware of the industry that is being affected.

The industry we are talking about is the recording industry of Canada. The evidence before the Copyright Appeal Board is that more than 90 per cent, and I think 95 per cent, of all records are imported, one way or another, into Canada, and 5 per cent are produced, in the sense that the recording session is here, in Canada.

90 per cent of all records sold in the stores of this country are like this little fellow that I am holding up, the Polydor record. They are produced by eight main enterprises, which includes five from the United States, Polydor from Europe, London or Decca (UK) from England, Capitol which is EMI, split US and UK, Quality, which is MGM, Selkirk Broadcasting, and some others. I understand the casting vote for control is MGM Records.

Those companies produce very few original recordings in Canada. I say that as being neither good nor bad, but factual. They import into Canada a tape of which I have a copy here. It is a master tape or mother tape which is the result of a recording session with some organization, pianist, organist, Paul Whiteman, or somebody else, and this very valuable creation is then duplicated.

Let us take one made in West Germany. They make a basic tape which they put in their vault. They make copies or replicas of that tape of the kind I have here, and they send one to each of their affiliates around the world. It could come from RCA in the United States.

The Canadian company or subsidiary, under its licence agreement with the parent, brings this type across the boundary. It pays very little duty on it. Actually it is 20 per cent of $15, which is $3 to bring this in.

You do not need an orchestra in Canada once you have this in your possession, because this is an orchestra. They play this through their machinery and they produce a stamper, which is what I am holding up now. They lock this thing into a press, as though you had type in your press, and it jumps up and down and punches out these little records. They then stick on the label which indicates that it is made in Canada. The record is made in Canada, but the vital part, the performance right, is not made here. We do not use Canadian musicians or Canadian engineers. That is not made here at all.

In an emergency, where it was a big hit in the United States, they would bring in this little record. Then by a slightly different procedure they would make a master from that and stamp it out; but in the main it is through this tape.

Those records so made are distributed across Canada through wholesalers and other people, sometimes know as rack jobbers. They are like pocketbook distributors. They are the fellows who put these out on the shelves in the music stores. The evidence was that some of the rack jobbers are owned by the recording companies, and some of the retail outlets are also owned by the recording companies. That is a fact of life.

Those recording companies then banded together—they are all non-Canadian, except Quality, which is half Canadian—and they formed SRL. SRL is a private company owned by eight stockholders. They have no definitive arrangement as to what they do with the money they get, if any. They say they are going to give it to Canadian talent, musicians and so on. But I ask the committee to remember one very illuminating fact, which is that when the Canadian radio and television Commission held extensive hearings “on how” we get Canadians on to the air in Canada, how to build a recording industry, and how to nurture this entertainment group so that they are nationally capable and internationally known, and so on, no recording company came to those hearings. There was not any great gesture that “we are going to put this or that into it.”

There are some Canadian recordings made. I am not saying there is none, but these people did not do it. We have broadcasting stations making them. For eight years the Standard Broadcasting group have been making recordings in Canada. They spent over $1 million on Canadian talent.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Over what period?

Mr. Estey: Since 1963. They have a service which they first introduced for radio stations and they sell them to the public. That is a charitable operation. That loses money. The group, I understand, make records in the sense that they pay for recording sessions, they make the tape and the master, and they give it to CTL, Canadian Talent Library, the standard organization.

I understand the royalties would not fill the petty cash fund. It costs $12,000 to make that LP and they would not get $100 back. I am not damning the record companies for not doing this. I am pointing out that the economic facts of life in our country make it very difficult to nurture a Canadian original recording industry, and they make it very difficult for the broadcasting industry in Canada to do likewise. But they are required to do it by the Canadian Radio and Television Commission and they should be because they are part of the Canadian radio and television industry.

To say that SRL needs the money for this is to say that they need it more than broadcasters need it. Let us examine the next stage of SRL. What rights do they get in this process? Let us go back to the beginning. The first thing that happens is, they press this record from a tape they did not produce. So they have the profit from the sale of the record, whether they sell the LP for $5, $4, or $6, or they sell the little 45 for $1 or $2. There is a profit in the operation. According to the 1970 statistics, Canada they sold 45 million records. So the industry is not bad, and Mr. Chislett of MCA told the Copyright Appeal Board that it is a $100 million a year industry.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): In Canada?

Mr. Estey: In Canada. That is a pressing and distribution industry really. In addition to that profit—

Senator Cook: What do you mean exactly by profit?

Mr. Estey: Profit on that operation.

Senator Cook: Turnover.

Mr. Estey: But they do not do it at a loss. I am not saying profit. I am saying that Canada Statistics say 45 million records, and Mr. Chislett said it is a $100 million business. It is a big business.

Senator Flynn: CBC is a big business, but it is losing money.

Mr. Estey: Well, let us not get into that.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): We can assume that this is a profit-making industry.

The Chairman: We can assume that it was intended to be. The $100 million is the volume of business.

Mr. Estey: Gross volume. These recording companies, in addition to that stage of operations, are getting more and more into what is called the publishing business. You see on the face of these records the name of the publisher. The evidence before the board was that almost all of the recording companies have two publishing houses, one of which is a member of CAPAC, the Composers, Authors and Publishers Association of Canada, or one is a member of BMI (Canada) Limited. That means that when they first make their contract with a composer he assigns his rights to them and they assign the performing rights to one of these societies. The record company will now get a royalty from the tariff approved by our Copyright Appeal Board for the use of that music on the air in Canada, whether it is by recording or sheet music or whether somebody whistles it. It does not matter. So you get that second return—the performing right of the work itself. That is significant.

Senator Grosart: Your brief seems to suggest that this is 50 percent of the original performing right now being collected on behalf of the original author and composer. That 50 per cent would go to the recording company which was the publisher of the composition involved.

Mr. Estey: That is the CAPAC maximum. CAPAC has a by-law which assures that its composer must get half of the performing right, and the record company gets half. I do not know if BMI has a by-law like that which would protect the composers.

Senator Grosart: Or protect the publishers.

Mr. Estey: The publisher would otherwise get it all.

Senator Grosart: Surely, the composer as a member of his own society.

Mr. Estey: I was thinking in terms of his assignment of his rights. If he assigned them all to the publisher, then the CAPAC by-law would cause the 50-50 split to occur. It could be by contract, of course.

Senator Grosart: Surely, his first assignment as a member of that society is his assignment of the performing right to his own society.

Mr. Estey: If he does it that way, then, of course, he is protected.

Senator Grosart: I am told that that is a condition of membership.

Mr. Estey: In any event, the recording company gets part, up to half, of the performing right with respect to that music, whether it is by the record company or not. That is its second return.

The recording company has a third source of return. Under section 19 of the Copyright Act anyone who wishes to make a record of a copyrighted work may do so by paying the publisher of that work or the owner of the work, whoever he is, two cents per side which is, in fact, two cents per selection. So the publisher, which is the recording company where it owns that right, gets that third return.

The fourth return would come under the recently-approved SRL tariff by the Copyright Appeal Board so that when a person buys a record, pays the $5 for the record, that is just the beginning. Somebody then pays the performing right, the recording right, and then a performing right to SRL. What is really before this house, the Senate of Canada, is whether or not these record stamping companies are entitled, either intellectually or economically, to those additional augmented earnings over and above what they are getting from their conduct of their normal business, which they have done for years and which they do in the United States without any such tariff. If the answer to that is in the affirmative, is it still in the interests of this country, knowing that the impact is going to fall substantially upon the broadcasting industry, to allow the act to be interpreted in that fashion to cause that drain?

I know that for the first half of this year there is no fee, and it is $1 a year for the small stations in the last half. But those figures I find very illusory because of my fortunate, or unfortunate, experience of participating in every Copyright Appeal Board hearing since 1948. During the last few years we have seen some remarkable changes in the compensation paid to performing rights societies. In the case of BMI, since 1952, when they started, they received $76,808 that first year. They filed a tariff of only one item, broadcasting. By 1969 BMI had risen from $76,000 to $1,415,898, which is a 1,700 per cent increase over a period of 17 years.

The Chairman: But, surely, the volume went up.

Mr. Estey: Everything went up. There has been inflation and communities have become more prosperous. Everything has contributed to that rise, but the tariff has been increased, Mr. Chairman, by percentages—

The Chairman: Well, what would be the increase in percentage of the tariff?

Mr. Estey: First, it changed its base. It went from a yardstick tariff to a percentage tariff. The broadcasting tariff went up about seven or eight times and then the CBC tariff went up as well.

The Chairman: Mr. Estey, when you give us these figures of $76,000 for BMI for the first year and $1,415,000 for 1969, surely you must have a purpose in doing so. The particular purpose that would appear to me to be pertinent so far as I am concerned, considering this, is what part of that is represented by the increase in the tariff?

Senator Flynn: And we have had the volume of business of the broadcasting corporation increasing.

The Chairman: And, of course, all costs have gone up.

Mr. Estey: I would be glad to file a documented, authoritative analysis of that rather than guess at it, Mr. Chairman.

Just continuing with these figures, the total performing right fees under the Copyright Appeal Board authorized tariffs in 1952 were $589,307. The figure for 1969 is $5,640,280.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa-West): It went up ten times. By whom is that paid?

Mr. Estey: That is paid by the music-using industry of Canada to BMI and CAPAC.

The Chairman: That is for a licence?

Mr. Estey: For a licence to use on the air, in theatres, everything, all the repertoire.

The Chairman: The whole portfolio of music or musical works that they have.

Mr. Estey: I do not mean to speak in a derogatory way about the performing right societies. In the case of CAPAC we are talking of the repertoire of over three-and-a-half million works. BMI's repertoire is much smaller, but it is still very substantial and it is very useful, apparently.

Senator Grosart: Would those great increases also be a reflection of the very greatly increased use and value of music?

Mr. Estey: I think that is a factor, sir.

The Chairman: And the increase in volume in the production of music; the increase in the number of writers.

Senator Grosart: Yes, the increase in population. Would it also be that part of that would be the fact that in the earlier tariffs of some of these performing right societies they did not ask for a tariff over the whole spectrum of use?

Mr. Estey: BMI was one tariff in 1952 and 12 tariffs in 1969-70.

To get back to the use, sir, the number of composers would not affect it because you can only use so much music. You can only have so much water through a pipeline and that is the same with the broadcasting industry. The number of transmitters since 1952 has not increased particularly or anything like the royalties have. The number of hours of broadcasting, which is the yardstick, has really not increased substantially since 1952.

Senator Grosart: Has the revenue of the broadcasters increased substantially?

Mr. Estey: The revenue of some broadcasters has increased substantially. You have new broadcasters such as CFTO TV, which were not on the air in 1952. You have some broadcasters whose revenue has gone down, but the industry has gone up.

Senator Flynn: You have much wider coverage now than in 1952.

Mr. Estey: Not in radio, sir, where the big use of music is. There is no wider coverage than radio now. The number of watts going on the air, the horsepower, since 1952 is not substantially greater.

Senator Flynn: I am not interested in the strength of a particular station.

Mr. Estey: Well, the watts give you the reach.

Senator Flynn: The coverage of the whole territory of Canada is much improved since 1952, surely. It must have improved in those 17 years.

Mr. Estey: With regret, sir, I must say that that is not so in the case of radio. It has not improved the slightest bit. The coverage of Canada, the population reach since 1952, has not substantially increased.

Senator Flynn: But there have been new stations since then?

Mr. Estey: Not in radio, sir.

Senator Flynn: I know of at least two in Quebec City.

Mr. Estey: Yes, and I can tell you of one in Melford, Saskatchewan, one in Rosetown, Saskatchewan, and one in Weyburn, Saskatchewan, but those are 100-watt stations. There are two in Toronto. But the population percentage reached by radio in 1952 would be 97 or 98 per cent. That has not changed.

The Chairman: Is not the real test the increase in the use of broadcasting?

Mr. Estey: Yes, that is right.

Senator Grosart: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is right. But is not the real test the decision of the Copyright Appeal Board which is a Government body, a quasi-official body set up to determine the fairness of these rights. Is not that the real test of the validity?

Mr. Estey: I do not think so, senator. I was going to come to that, so I might as well deal with it now.

Senator Haig: Mr. Chairman, it might help the committee if I put on record a summary of the payments made by music users in Canada to BMI and CAPAC. In the year 1969 the BMI total from radio and TV was $1,175,898 while the CAPAC total from radio and TV in the same year was $3,382,382. Now in connection with CBC, they paid BMI $240,000 and in CAPAC radio and TV $842,000. That is also for the year 1969.

Senator Grosart: What I was suggesting, Mr. Estey, is that these increases were the result of the publication of a suggested tariff on behalf of the composer and author, an opportunity for all users, that is all those who would pay, and you appear year after year to object, and as I understand the rates have decreased.

Mr. Estey: They have.

Senator Grosart: And the decisions over the years were the judgment of the Copyright Appeal Board as to what was a fair rate of compensation to the composer and author. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. Estey: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: Senator Grosart, I do not understand that Mr. Estey is contesting the rates paid to the authors and composers.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Chairman, he has referred to the very great increase and there have been a number of questions on it. I have already indicated before the committee that I have a long-standing interest in the position of the composer and author, not a fiduciary interest, but it is an interest I have had over the years.

The Chairman: All I am saying is that they are not challenging that amount. What you are seeking to establish here gratuitously is that the rate is a fair rate.

Senator Grosart: Gratuitously perhaps, but I am not aware, Mr. Chairman, that there is a definition that would regard certain questions asked in committee as being gratuitous.

The Chairman: I mean gratuitous in the sense that it does not go to the core of the problem in this bill.

Senator Grosart: In my opinion, it does, but in yours, it does not. But I am just a member of the committee.

The Chairman: That is right.

Mr. Estey: There is another subject I would like to touch on here, and I will be brief. You have heard all this before, I think. If this were other than a legislative tribunal, Mr. Chairman, it would be necessary to talk at length and ad nauseam about what is the legal basis for all this. All I would like to say is that Mr. Justice Thurlow and his colleagues on the Copyright Appeal Board made it very clear when they resumed their hearings in April that they were not indicating that the Board had reached any decision as to whether the people who opposed this tariff were right or wrong in saying that the Act created a right in these records. I have the transcript in front of me of what Mr. Justice Thurlow said on that occasion so that we are not coming here by way of appeal from the Copyright Appeal Board in a kind of a sour-grapes approach that if we cannot get it through one avenue, we will try through another avenue. What we are doing here is asking the legislative fountainhead of Canada to look at section 4 (3) and at the Ilsley Report, and to consider the impact of this argument on the Copyright Appeal Board and then decide whether or not section 4 (3) should be clarified—and I put it no higher than that—by doing that which Chief Justice Ilsley thought should be done.

Senator Cook: I am glad you came back to the legal argument because I want to ask a question. I understand your argument to be this; that the proposed subsection (4) in the bill merely sets out the true and correct definition of the copyright which does in fact exist and which is created by subsection (3) in records.

Mr. Estey: Yes.

Senator Cook: Even if this act were not passed, you would still maintain that subsection (4) is the correct and true definition?

Mr. Estey: Yes, sir.

Senator Cook: And all the financial and economic consequences are just by the way to substantiate that that should be the true situation?

Mr. Estey: Yes, sir.

Senator Flynn: You suggest that the Copyright Appeal Board had no competence to deal with this particular problem and to interpret the act as you think it should have been?

Mr. Estey: No, sir. I am not saying that at all. I am saying that the Board took the view and historically, senator, the Board has always taken the view, even in Mr. Justice Thorson's era, that they were not a court. Let me give you a precise example which has happened. Several years ago one of the societies brought in a tariff applicable to the CTV Television Network only, and the Network appealed before Mr. Justice Thorson and the other two members of the Board then said that that tariff could not be approved because the act does not recognize the right of the Performing Rights Society to license a network since they do not broadcast. Mr. Justice Thorson listened to the argument and reserved his decision, and then he decided that he could not determine and did not have the position to determine whether or not it was a good or bad argument, and he said, "I am going to approve the tariff, and if you do not like it or if you think I am wrong, don't pay it, and then they will take you to the Exchequer Court and I will sit and I will tell you whether you are right or wrong." That is what we did.

Senator Flynn: What was the outcome?

Mr. Estey: Unfortunately, Justice Thorson did not sit and we won.

Senator Flynn: You mean you won in what was a conclusion.

Mr. Estey: It went to the Supreme Court of Canada finally, and the Supreme Court said that the Copyright Act did not authorize the performing rights society to licence a network because they did not broadcast.

Senator Flynn: But what you are suggesting now is that if we did not have this bill you probably could go to the Exchequer Court or the Supreme Court if necessary to determine that what we are doing now is simply clarifying the proper interpretation of this section of the Copyright Act.

Mr. Estey: That is correct.

Senator Flynn: Why do you not do that?

Mr. Estey: Well, my clients say that money does not grow on trees and they would rather have it settled this way than take a very expensive and long route through the courts.

Senator Flynn: That does not sound too convincing to me, when one considers all the counsel who have been hired and whom we have heard here.

The Chairman: If you look at the explanatory note to see what the Government thinks it is doing in presenting this bill, it says, "The purpose of this amendment is to combine copyright . . ."

Senator Flynn: I know what you are going to say. We have to take for granted that the right exists since the bill wants to take it out.

The Chairman: The bill says it is for the purpose of taking that right away.

Senator Flynn: I agree with that, but that is why I wanted to question the witness as to why he did not go to the court to have the interpretation confirmed, and I have grave doubts that he was confident that he could succeed.

Mr. Estey: Well, may I answer the question this way, senator? I acted for the CTV network. I was not foolhardy enough to write a letter to them saying, "Don't worry, we will win this hands down!" And I am not foolhardy enough now to say, "You will win this hands down," but I can say this, that in the whole array of copyright decisions around the world, on statutes which are similar, if not identical, to ours, there is no case against me, and I have one squarely for me. There is an Australian case on it squarely for me, a judgment of Mr. Justice Low.

Senator Cook: Is that in the brief?

Mr. Estey: I do not think so. It is Australasian Performing Rights Society.

Senator Flynn: I was merely following the argument of Senator Cook.

Mr. Estey: I must say that Senator Cook, with great respect, was correct, in my opinion, but I may be all wet. Obviously, it makes more sense, Senator Flynn, for this great country to have the thing clarified for all parts of the community at once than to have the several industries mark time while some pioneer litigates this thing out.

Senator Flynn: Indeed, but if you really want to cure the situation entirely you should not do it piecemeal that way, but you should consider the whole spectrum. When I see that you are paying $5½ million to CAPAC and BMI, and you are worried about paying $200,000 to SRL . . .

Mr. Estey: I am not really worried about paying $200,000. I introduced those figures to show—and I have experienced this personally—what happens to a board that is fixing rates, and it is always that way, whether it is a public utility board or anything else.

Senator Flynn: But this has not been established, whether the increase is the result of the increase in your own business volume or in the tariff. The way the bill was presented to us was simply on the basis of the financial burden that was to result to CBC and CTV from the tariff filed by SRL. That was the basis, plus the additional argument which you put forward that the greater proportion of this money would go outside the country. But this problem is the same with BMI and CAPAC, and it is even worse now that we know what is the decision of the Appeal Board. You say here you do not complain about what you are paying CAPAC and BMI, so there is really a problem there of sending money outside the country. Why are we dealing with only $200,000 when we have a problem of close to $6 million involved?

Mr. Estey: I have four reasons for that. One of them is the intellectual property of the composer and author has been recognized by our community since the days of Edward the Confessor, and we do not challenge that right. The composer, the author has created something without which none of us would be here.

Senator Flynn: The performing rights of the musician.

Mr. Estey: The brains of the musician have brought into being the recording companies and all of us.

Senator Grosart: The brains of the composer and author.

Mr. Estey: Yes, the composer and author. What did I say?

Senator Grosart: "The brains of the musician".

Mr. Estey: No, the composer and author. That is one reason.

The second reason is that we have to look after ourselves in this international, competitive world. I do not think we should try to outrun the United States, and we would be outrunning the United States if we did not clarify our legal position here.

My third reason is that the broadcasting industry is a dam which we have built up laboriously like beavers up here, to hold back a little of that American wave so that we can build our own.

The fourth reason is that I do not think it is in our interests to turn over this large sum of money to companies which have no track record.

Senator Flynn: When you say "large sum," do you mean the new tariff approved by the Appeal Board?

Mr. Estey: The new tariff, and the tariffs which will march behind it like an army, year after year. This is an annual tariff.

Senator Flynn: That is it; that is my point: why do you not complain about what you are bound to pay to CAPAC and BMI? This is a large sum of money. All your arguments are more valid, I would say, as far as CAPAC and BMI are concerned. If the economic argument is valid, it is valid against the two others. That is my point.

Mr. Estey: Senator, may I tell you that the industries which we have represented through the years have spent in executive time, legal fees and studies by economists and statisticians, hundreds of thousands of dollars in the courts and in the Copyright Appeal Board, fighting those two tariffs—not challenging the basis for their compensation, because historically that has been recognized and honoured, but the quantum we have always challenged.

Senator Flynn: It is quite clear with regard to the composer, but when you come to the performing rights of the musician you come very close to the performing rights of the publisher of the record.

Mr. Estey: We oppose the musicians.

Senator Flynn: There is a joint venture there. Maybe there should be only one right for the musician, the performing right, and the record producer. I use "producer" in the sense that you understand. Maybe it should be only one, but if you really want to make an argument out of the exporting of funds from the country, I think you should go further than oppose only this right.

Mr. Estey: Senator, for one month I lived in Ottawa, during the Ilsey Commission hearings, and we opposed everything which you have catalogued now. We very nearly persuaded Chief Justice Ilsey to abolish performing rights, but we fell short. Since that time, on sober reflection, I do not think we should abolish them; but if you do, you threaten the origination of these intellectual works. England has recognized that since then. We have had lots of learning on this subject since then.

However, let me come back to something else which you have triggered off by your questions, and that is this. Apart from the fact I represent these people this morning, there is another funny little fact that bothers me as a citizen of the country. These copyright fees and the collection thereof is the only activity in this country, including the Boy Scouts of Canada, that makes no contribution under the Income Tax Act. They pay no income tax, and there is no withholding tax paid on the licence fees exported from the country.

Senator Flynn: Why?

Mr. Estey: I do not know. I asked Chief Justice Ilsey that and he said, "I do not know. Who passed it?" I said, "You did, sir; you were the Minister of Finance," and there has never been an explanation.

Senator Grosart: May the explanation not be the reciprocal obligation of Canada under the Berne and other international conventions?

Mr. Estey: Under the Tax Act, senator, I do not think so. There is probably an explanation on that, but I do not know what it is. It is in the treaty between Canada and the United States so you could not change it unilaterally.

Senator Grosart: I suggest to you that if you are looking for an explanation you might consider the fact, as I mention, that it is an obligation Canada undertook in order to have exactly the same reciprocal arrangement with the other countries of the Berne Convention. This is just a suggestion.

Mr. Estey: I think not—and this is also just a suggestion—because the United States is not a party to the Berne Convention.

Senator Grosart: I said "the Berne and other international conventions," and we are a party to the Universal Copyright convention.

Mr. Estey: But the treaty with respect to taxation is twenty years older than the UNESCO Treaty.

Senator Grosart: But is not the essence of this exemption from the withholding tax the fact that when this is given to foreign composers and others it becomes available in all other countries?

Mr. Estey: I think that may be right.

Senator Flynn: If the records were produced in Canada, would you take the same attitude, or could you use the same arguments?

Mr. Estey: Yes. This is like the afternoon speaker who goes another hour by saying, "I am glad you asked that question." The records produced in Canada, and may there be hundreds or thousands of them, because it is in our interests, in our broadcast music-using industry in this country, to see the record company here grow. If they were produced in Canada they would be sold in an economic way to our public only if they were performed by these broadcasting stations. I put it to you as a matter of grass root equity, why should the radio stations, who are begged by the recording companies to play these records, turn around and be hit with a licence fee for playing them? There is no demonstration of an economic need for that. The Economic Council of Canada stated that in the last two months.

Senator Flynn: Suppose you had very strict rules as to the Canadian content? You would need more Canadian records.

Mr. Estey: Yes. We do now.

Senator Flynn: You could not do without these records. They need to be played over the radio stations to become popular. That is obvious. But you are selling the music that you are using to your customers too.

Mr. Estey: Yes.

Senator Flynn: If you add more Canadian records, it would be much easier for you to produce programs with more Canadian content, and there would be less money going to the United States or elsewhere. The mainstream of your argument in favour of this bill could not stand if the records were 90 per cent produced in Canada. The fee would be paid to Canadian performers or producers and would remain in Canada.

Mr. Estey: Unhappily that is not so.

Senator Flynn: I know it is not so, but I am suggesting what would be your attitude.

Mr. Estey: Even your hypothesis would not be so, because, firstly, it is a blanket licence fee. If we play one MCA record we have to pay the whole fee. Secondly, you have to do more than just have all these records produced in Canada. You would have to make them popular in Canada, and after that you would have to sell that proposition.

Mr. J. Lyman Potts, President, Standard Broadcast Productions Ltd.: It would certainly help the sale of Canadian records. We cannot get Canadian records in the stores. I produced about 60 records, but you will not find one. You can go into the National Arts Centre and ask for an Anne Murray record and the clerk will tell you that she has never heard of Anne Murray.

Senator Flynn: Would you suggest that we should ban the importation of foreign records in Canada?

Mr. Estey: No.

The Chairman: Do you think we can come back to the central point of the bill?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You seem to be complaining primarily about the fact that broadcasters should not have to pay a licence fee, a royalty fee, because the impact would be very great. It is beginning to be great now, and it will be greater in the future and will add to the cost of broadcasting.

What you say in the second place is that most of this money will go outside of Canada because the records are 95 per cent made outside of Canada and brought in. The master tapes are made outside of Canada and are brought in and records are pressed from them in Canada by foreign-owned companies, presumably. If a fee is payable to them, that money will go outside of Canada.

Suppose, for the sake of argument, that you prohibit the introduction of this foreign material in any way and confine the Canadian radio industry to the use of Canadian-made records. You would then presumably have to pay a fee. Is your argument not materially downgraded, because you will not have the point that the money is going outside of Canada? All you will be left with is the point that you are going to have to pay too much.

The Chairman: No, Senator Connolly. The point would be that this is not something that you can perpetuate in a performing right. But, by statute, in a country you can create any kind of a right within the power of Parliament. In discussing it on a philosophical basis, the question is, is the concept of a performing right on a record the kind of concept that you would normally think should exist?

Senator Flynn: Agreed, but the bill was not presented in that aspect.

Mr. Estey: I have three comments to make. My first is on the philosophic point made by the chairman. The second is, even in Senator Flynn's theoretical situation we have to remember that the Davey Report said 75 per cent of the country is within the umbrella of American television broadcasting and 100 per cent in radio. If we ban the importation of US records and confine the industry to Canadian records, we would just deliver our audiences to US stations, with disastrous results.

As far back as 1923 the Department of Canals and Railways was predicting that our country would fall apart because American radio station signals were coming into the country. I think that would just revive the situation 1,000 times.

I would like to make sure that I leave the impression on this subject that I am most anxious to leave, which is that exporting the money from Canada is an argument. It is of vital consideration from the point of view of our national well-being, but it is not the crowning argument. It is one of those things that we have to take into account when we are talking about any industry in Canada, the growing of wheat or anything else, how you are going to survive with that industry. The crowning argument is the one Senator Cook has made. The act seems to say that there is no such right and let us clarify it. The second point is, why do we race ahead of the United States? Australia does not and they are not even up against the problem of American signals. Australia says, "We will not give a right to a record which it does not enjoy at home." Immediately, all American records are without fee in Australia. My third point is, that when we are looking around the world we should not waste much time on saying what they do in Bulgaria or some other country. We should look at people who are like ourselves. We are, with the United States and to some extent with Australia, the only countries with this great commercial booming radio voice that seems so much a part of our community, and in those areas this record right is not known.

There was even an illustration in the British House of Commons in just the last few weeks where this very thing came up in debate. A member of Parliament, who was very knowledgeable on broadcasting, pointed out that with the suppression of the United Kingdom pirate radio stations, they killed off the origination of British popular music, both in England and abroad. They lost their position in the United States. It is an odd thing that commercial broadcasting seems so closely tied to what we call community or native culture.

If we saddle our broadcasters with something that our great competitors—and that is what they are in the United States—do not do, then I put it to this legislative body that we are threatening one of our institutions which we think is vital—which the nation thinks is vital. I really introduced that taxation matter as a sort of national lunacy that we have that hole in our tax act.

Senator Flynn: I would feel much happier if we had a bill which would really try to achieve what you are suggesting, namely, clarifying the copyright of the composer, the performing rights of the musicians and, possibly, the performing rights of the producers. But this is not what this act is doing. It is simply plugging what you have considered to be a sort of loophole, through which you would have to pay a little more now. The minister says that because this would mean that CBC would pay $840,000 a year more and because it would mean that CTV would pay about $4 million a year more, therefore we are just doing this now instead of having them come to us to present arguments on the basis of the principle involved.

That is why it is so difficult. But really, you are not doing anything more than plugging this loophole.

Mr. Estey: We are putting a patch on the tyre, so to speak. I agree.

Senator Flynn: It is entirely unsatisfactory from our standpoint to have to deal with a bill like this, because it is only because of the application of SRL that the minister has introduced it. He withdrew the bill in the first place and then he brought it back again because SRL presented a new application to the Copyright Appeal Board.

Merely on the figures that I have just mentioned, the minister says to Parliament, "Pass this bill. We will deal with the rest later on." And I say, "Why not?"

Mr. Estey: May I direct myself to that, Senator Flynn? I cannot disagree with the words you have said, but I would like to convey to you in the short time that we have been involved in copyright, which is not very long when you consider copyright itself, we, in Canada, have had two royal commissions devote a great deal of energy to trying to get a new act; the Under Secretary of State drafted a new act in 1948; we had a new act drafted after the 1957 commission; and we had the honourable Judy LaMarsh draft an act. Moreover, we have seen that in the United States they have had an act in the legislative mill for at least seven years that I am aware of. I have that act here and it has so many revisions that you cannot read it.

To change the Copyright Act is a monumental task, involving changing treaties and re-negotiating with 57 communities in the Berne Convention, looking at the UNESCO obligations and looking at the bilateral deals we have with the United States and elsewhere. It is a very difficult thing to do and in the immediate foreground is the problem of the possible crescendo of tariffs for the recording companies, and that is why we take this position. Certainly, you are quite right in saying that we are merely patching the tire instead of renewing it. Nevertheless, in circumstances such as this, when the boat is sinking, you swim to shore. You do not stand there and say, "Let us repair the boat." And that is what we are doing now, we are swimming to shore. It is too big a task to ask this house to rewrite the Copyright Act on this occasion.

Senator Flynn: On this occasion, I agree. We have nothing before us. But what you are suggesting comes to this: the efforts that have been made by royal commissions, successive governments and departments being followed by this bill amount to, to translate a French expression, a mountain of labour producing a molehill. If you are satisfied with that, then you have very limited objectives.

Mr. Estey: In this life we are lucky to obtain limited objectives, and that is what we have here.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Chairman, you have spoken of the "philosophy" of this and Senator Flynn spoke of the "principle" involved here. Just speaking to what Senator Flynn had to say, it seems to me that the normal way to deal with an emergency situation is to bring in legislation.

The Chairman: Senator Grosart, you used one word there which I do not think you will find unanimous support for—the word "emergency". That point has not been made yet.

Senator Grosart: The minister makes that point.

The Chairman: The minister has not been here yet.

Senator Grosart: The very fact that he has brought in a bill such as this indicates that, in his view at least, this is an emergency situation which must be dealt with in an extraordinary way.

The Chairman: He does not say that in the explanatory note, senator, and if it were an emergency situation I think he would say so right there.

Senator Grosart: Not necessarily, Mr. Chairman, and in any event the explanatory note is the draftsman's, not the minister's.

The Chairman: You cannot dismiss it that quickly, senator. The minister is responsible for all of this bill.

Senator Grosart: I am sure he is, Mr. Chairman, but, as a matter of fact, it is the draftsman's note and it would be so regarded in law, as I understand it. However, I will not argue that.

Mr. Estey, from the point of view of the composer and author only—the original owner is not one of the considerations here that the Copyright Act—the statute here and elsewhere in the world—has taken away his common law right in that property? I suggest that this is a very important aspect, because the Copyright Act is not something that grants composers, authors and others any great privilege. The Copyright Act limits their basic common law rights. If the composer and author, that is, the original owner, were in a position to exercise that right, he could immediately withdraw the performing right from the record manufacturer.

Now, the Copyright Act limits him in many ways. It takes him out of the ordinary, normal market right of price negotiation that anybody has for a product. The Copyright Act says that he cannot negotiate his fee. The Copyright Appeal Board says: "You may negotiate it, but you must come to us for approval". We will tell you what you can charge for your property." That is one limitation.

In the record field there is also the limitation of the compulsory licence. The composer-author does not even have the right to say that he will limit his license to record manufacturer "A" to make the record. Once he does that a section of the act provides that he will be required by law to let anybody else make a record. So these are limitations, I suggest to you, of a basic common law right.

Therefore, I say that to the extent that this bill is dealing with a limitation, a possible limitation or a possible extension in the act, it is quite a proper way to do it, because the composer's right is entirely a statutory right, and the way to deal with it is by statute.

The Chairman: Nobody has argued that the subject matter cannot be dealt with by legislation.

Senator Flynn: Certainly not.

Senator Grosart: My friend Senator Flynn seemed to suggest that.

Senator Flynn: Not at all. I said that this is piecemeal legislation because Mr. Estey has explained that the problem is much wider than what is being attempted by this bill. This bill deals only with a very small problem and does not deal with the main problem.

Senator Grosart: If we turned down every bill that came before us on the basis that it was piecemeal legislation, we would not let many of them through this committee.

Mr. Estey: Senator Grosart, you raised one point which I did not but should have touched on. That is that the recording industry in Canada is not only based on 95 per cent importation of tapes and records, but it is 100 per cent, so far as that group is concerned, based on the invocation of the compulsory licence. Not only does the composer lose his right to say, "I don't want that record made", but he loses the right to prevent somebody recording his works in a way that he does not like. Let us take Gershwin music for example and having it played rock and roll. He cannot stop that. This is a very serious invasion.

This section is part of that creative or limitative, whichever way you wish to look at it, provision of the statute, so that it is not really piecemeal to clarify that bedrock piece of the statute because it is fundamental, and I do not wish to leave the impression that we do not regard this as an emergency. In the annals of broadcasting history through which many of you have lived, as have we, this is as earth-shaking as anything we have ever encountered. It is that vital.

The Chairman: You mean even at $200,000?

Mr. Estey: Even at $200,000.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You feel that the figure is alarming because you think it is inevitable?

Mr. Estey: Yes.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I find some difficulty in understanding why the Copyright Appeal Board should be setting tariffs for what I take to be the reproduction of contrivances and the use of contrivances to be produced when we are only legislating that now. There is some confusion in my mind, and that is why I ask the question.

Mr. Estey: We argued that, senator, and this is further confused by the strange coincidence that the day the Copyright Appeal Board's decision came down was the first day of the existence of the Federal Court to which we have an appeal to raise this very question. It seems odd in our community that we would have in the legislative process to raise this issue and we should have a quasi-judicial body which does not have to report to the litigants—and have it reach a decision—but that is an anomaly which I suppose comes from the 1930s when section 48 was passed. In our respectful view, and we urged this on Mr. Justice Thurlow, they really should have sat back and waited and said, "Until the air clears, we don't believe we should fix a tariff." That is what SRL did with respect to CATV.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Do you think the Copyright Appeal Board would have had something more to go on if this bill had been passed?

The Chairman: They would have had nothing.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Nothing to go on?

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Grosart: Nothing except law.

Mr. Estey: They would not have had any right to that.

Senator Cook: There would have been no application?

The Chairman: They would have had no authority to conduct a hearing.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): So if this passes, will the tariff they have set out have no foundation?

Mr. Estey: No foundation.

Senator Flynn: You probably heard that the Canadian Labour Congress came to us and they were worried about this because if this bill passes, it will eradicate any right for the record producers.

The Chairman: Where section 2 of the bill said that this is retroactive to January 1.

Senator Flynn: But the Canadian Labour Congress was worried because they considered that the performing rights of the artist are, to some extent, linked to the rights of the record producers—and again I say "producers"—and that is why I say to Senator Grosart that this bill is dealing with only one aspect of the whole problem. That is why it is not satisfactory, as far as I am concerned. We are not exploring the whole spectrum of the situation.

Senator Grosart: Since my name has been mentioned, could I suggest that probably the reason it does not deal with what Senator Flynn calls performers' rights—that is, the right of the creative people, the musicians, the singers and so on—is that those rights do not exist.

Senator Flynn: That is right, but they are recognized in fact.

The Chairman: You mean they do not exist as a matter of law.

Senator Grosart: That is the only way they can exist.

The Chairman: Oh, I do not think so.

Senator Flynn: There are contractual rights.

The Chairman: And there is custom.

Mr. Estey: I have thought a lot about that. There is an anomaly in the Canadian Labour Congress appearance here, and I think it comes more from fear or a hunch than it does from logic. In Europe the trade unions and the recording companies have sort of formed an interlocked alliance very critically commented upon by the Gregory Report in Britain, and it is probably that which has led you to believe the words "somehow linked" in connection with those rights. Whereas in political and legal fact, the Labour Congress would be much stronger to pull away from the recording companies and come in on their own feet and say, "We should have a performer's right because there is an intellectual input in performance and there is no intellectual input in making a piano or making a record."

Senator Flynn: You mean by amending the act to provide for this right?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): They were here some weeks back and they voiced this view on behalf of the artists, the singers, the actors and the people who perform on musical instruments.

Mr. Potts: Senator Connolly, if they got that, 75 per cent of the money so collected would go out of the country to The Beatles and Frank Sinatra, and it would have to be distributed in much the same way. They would possibly only get 25 per cent.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I was just telling Mr. Estey that the point has been raised.

Mr. Estey: I have read their brief and I say it is somewhat anomalous to me that they would allow themselves to be linked in their rights and equities to a recording right because they are as unlike as day and night.

Senator Flynn: But they feel that the record manufacturer constitutes a protective wall because they are located in between the composer and the record producer and if the wall falls on one side, they may be carried away.

Mr. Estey: That may be right too, but it does not strike me as being logical.

The Chairman: Do you have anything further to add, Mr. Estey?

Mr. Estey: No, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to say, but to thank your committee for the opportunity to come down and make our presentation.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we now have Mr. Yves Labonté, Président of Radio-Québec, and perhaps we should hear him at this time.

MR. YVES LABONTÉ, PRESIDENT AND GENERAL DIRECTOR OF THE RADIO-TELEVISION BROADCASTING BOARD OF QUEBEC:

Mr. Chairman, honourable senators, gentlemen, I would like to introduce to you Mr. Bernard Benoit, who is with me today, and who is the legal adviser to the Radio and Television Broadcasting Board of Quebec, of which I am President. You were kind enough to postpone for several days my appearance before your committee, and I would like to thank you for this kind gesture. Besides, you will find this postponement to your benefit, also, as it has allowed me time to better structure my thought and to condense it so much the better for oral presentation!

The Radio-Television Broadcasting Board of Quebec is particularly well placed to clearly consider the questions raised by Bill S-9, since it is both a production company as well as a broadcasting center, indirectly for the time being, but no doubt directly someday, and since it feels the effects of some of the difficulties presented by the different attitudes shown towards this project.

I dare hope, it would not be showing disrespect to our institutions to say, as so many others, that the Law on Royalties is out-of-date. There has been a complete evolution since 1911 in the method of intellectual creation, along with the equivalent right of ownership of works produced, that only a complete rewriting of the legislation concerning it can prevent the multiplicity of legal amendments similar to the project we are discussing today.

A better distinction could, therefore, be made between three aspects that are at this time covered by the same law, -- I'm on page 2, -- and I continue. A better distinction could be made between three aspects that are at this time covered by the same law, these are:

First, the creation: its continual protection is essential for sustaining intellectual life.

Secondly, the adaptation: in several countries including Great Britain, this is the subject of distinct and specific legislation.

Thirdly, the ownership of the material object often produced by combining the creation and the adaptation: this ownership usually belongs to the producer who put the work together.

Bill S-9, like its forerunner, Bill S-20, is meant to answer a specific problem, the entry into the field of Sound Recording Licenses, on the parts of CAPAC and of MBI, in the request for copyrights to the Commission of Appeal for Royalties. At least, this is the interpretation given to it by the honourable senator, Earl W. Urquhart, who proposed the second reading.

I dare say that the business of Sound Recording Licenses provides a suitable juncture, but it is not the reason for the proposed bill. In this respect it could act as a catalyst bringing a revision of the Law of Royalties, giving the impetus for distinguishing the three aspects mentioned previously, - the creation, the adaptation and the ownership, - in the two situations in which they are met: the material reproduction and the public performance.

Only by taking things in their context and by considering the present project as part of a larger revision than that concerning Royalties, is it possible to take a stand on the recommendations of Bill S-9.

Let us consider first, the material reproduction. It is reasonable to expect the originator of an intellectual work to have some sort of right, called precisely, royalties, when this work is made public and reproduced many times, - books, records, cassettes, films. In the English fashion, it is the copyright on his work.

He can if he wishes, "sell" this right to the editor or to the producer, who publishes or broadcasts his work. However, this purchase, giving money to the author which is his due, does not, therefore make of the editor the originator.

Let's pass now to the public performance. The author, who has already obtained copyrights for the material reproduction of his work, can also claim royalties for its public performance.

But other people contribute also to the originality of the public performance, notably interpreters but also from its very nature, the stage director and the other creative craftsmen, can in their turn claim rights if the performance they produce is used later, either before a given audience, -- cinema, juke-box, -- or for a wide-spread audience, by radio and television.

One or another of the contributors has to give the management or even the ownership of his rights to the producer in some way, for he manages the business of providing the authors and interpreters with the tools necessary for a public performance; this does not give the producer the right to claim royalties, since:

first, his own talent as originator is not involved here;

secondly, his contribution to culture is not intellectual;

thirdly, his personal living is not provided for by the creation or the adaptation of intellectual works.

No doubt, the producer can administer the royalties for his authors and interpreters. He can even "buy" universal rights from all the contributors. But that does not give him an intellectual right over the works he produces. Therefore, it does not come directly under the Law of Royalties.

Please don't think I am scornful of the part played by the producer in the distribution of culture. But if you'll allow a classical comparison, I would identify him with the industrious ant before the innocent grasshopper who is the artist, the intellectual, the author.

A class of men are protected by royalties who, by the very nature of their work, are inclined often to a rash detachment from material goods, totally involved as they are with intellectual creativity. As to the ants, they have long since learnt how to manage their affairs.

Does this mean that producers do not risk being exploited themselves? Certainly not. I am mindful of the well-founded comments of Mr. Stephen Stewart, at the International Conference of the Music Industry:

If the radio ceased to broadcast records, tomorrow, record companies would still sell them in large quantities. Some claim that their sales would increase, others that they would diminish: but if records were withdrawn from transmission, there would be no question of increase or reduction of volume of radio broadcasting, for they would be obliged purely and simply to close down, since their programmes consist of records for 80 per cent of the time.

Producers, therefore, have to be protected. But that does not seem to me to be under the jurisdiction of Royalties, but rather covered by the civil code, -- right of ownership, -- since they create not an intellectual work but a material product, all of which is within provincial jurisdiction.

It appears to me that Sound Recording Licences could be a valuable instrument in the hands of producers. It's certainly necessary to considerably redraft contracts for sales and for the distribution of records and cassettes, and, probably, to prepare special impressions for public usage. However, it is premature to work out the details for accomplishing this: it is enough for the moment to emphasize that all this is outside of the scope of royalties.

Consequently, it remains for me only to signify my agreement with Bill S-9 in as much as it attempts an in-depth revision of the Law of Royalties, and in as much as it tries to distinguish royalty to the author from the material ownership.

These last two paragraphs that I have just read sum up in the main our idea. We, at Radio-Quebec, think that the right under discussion here, is not in the last analysis, a right to be protected by the Law of Royalties, precisely because it is not a question of royalties. Secondly, I agree with what the honourable Senator Flynn said before, that what we need, is evidently, a complete and total redrafting of The Law of Royalties.

SENATOR FLYNN: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the witness to clarify what he means on page 6 when he says: "Producers, therefore, have to be protected". Producers have to be protected but, let's say, by means of the civil code, of a provincial law, since they create not an intellectual work but a material product. Would you say the same thing in respect to patents and trade marks, because, in fact, there is a question there, -- a material product is produced with a patent? Surely there is a kind of royalty for a patent.

MR. LABONTÉ: I believe the main reason for the rights of royalty and even trademarks being under federal jurisdiction, is evidently, that under the Constitution there are consequences outside of the country and international agreements are involved here. In fact the patent that is granted and that could, if you wish, be compared to and considered as a royalty is for a plan, and not for the machine itself, not for the instrument. We are speaking here of records, this is a material object, and it's that that we want to protect.

SENATOR FLYNN: By reproduction, you are not referring to the actual manufacturing of the records, but rather to their being played in public; it is what the record represents that is to be protected. Yet, you seem to say that the interpreter has himself, a right to royalty. Is this the gist of your idea?

MR. LABONTÉ: I believe the interpreter brings a certain creativity to the work.

SENATOR FLYNN: As you define it, this is not really a royalty?

MR. LABONTÉ: There is a right to royalty because first and foremost it's a work of the intellect.

SENATOR FLYNN: Excuse me if I draw from your memorandum the conclusion that it seems to me to imply. Not only should every right not belonging to the author, the very originator, be removed from the Law of Royalties, but even all the rights of those who spread his work such as interpreters. I know that there is no law as such covering this at the moment, however, the rights of the so called author and of the producer are nevertheless upheld in practice. This is where I see a conclusion in your memorandum. While wishing to defend the interpreters you exclude them from the law and by so doing you remove them from the implicit protection that the law gives to them and to the producers of records

MR. LABONTÉ: What I propose, in fact, what I would like to contribute here, is to make you aware, -- I am going to point out, if you'll allow, the gaps in the present law, and to try to make you grasp the necessity for a complete rewritting of the law which will take account of the three aspects of this right.

Concerning the second, that of the interpreter, perhaps in practice it is protected by that of the record producer. It's a hyperthetical case, but there are really two rights completely different.

SENATOR FLYNN: This is why I had some doubts when you said: I signify my agreement with Bill S-9 in as much as it attempts an in-depth revision of the Law of Royalties.

Do you really believe that it is the aim of Bill S-9, as it is drawn up, as it has been explained by its sponsor, Senator Urquhart, for example, whose address you have read out? Do you really believe that this is intended, or is it simple and purely to obstruct the request for Sound Recording Licences, which, as you said at the beginning, provides in truth simply a suitable juncture, and not the reason for the Bill?

MR. LABONTÉ: Perhaps it sounds a little "holy", senator, but I would like to bring the attention of the law maker to the fact that the whole question has to be considered and decided immediately,-- always supposing that there is some urgency to correct the law. I say that you should not limite yourselves to just one aspect, and then wait another 50 years, because one should have full knowledge before tampering with the law, it should not stop at that for 50 years before the law is completely rewritten which really needs to be done now.

SENATOR FLYNN: Would you be really disappointed if Bill S-9 proved to be only the prelude which eventually was to absolutely limit the rights of interpreters?

MR. LABONTÉ: I would be really disappointed.

SENATOR CONNOLLY: (Ottawa-West): What is Radio-Quebec?

MR. LABONTÉ: Radio-Quebec is a, -- I think a more direct answer would be to say that it's the ETVO of Quebec, "Educational TV of Ontario". It's an organization in the province of Quebec whose job is also to produce educational documentaries.

SENATOR CONNOLLY (Ottawa-West): and the owner is the ---?

MR. LABONTÉ: It's a Crown agency, if you want.

SENATOR CONNOLLY (Ottawa-West): It's the Crown?

MR. LABONTÉ: The funds are supplied by the government of Quebec, if you must.

[English]

The Chairman: Are there any other questions? Thank you very much, Mr. Labonté. We have gone through the subject pretty thoroughly so far, and we will pay attention to what you have said.

Honourable senators, we have the following position to consider. SRL is here with a delegation, and we also have representatives of the Canadian Recording Manufacturers' Association. I expect that it will take some time to hear those gentlemen. If it is satisfactory to you, Mr. Fortier, I would suggest that we adjourn until 4 o'clock. The Senate is sitting at 2 o'clock. I have explored the possibility of obtaining permission for the Committee to sit while the Senate is sitting, but we find that it is not practicable. If the Senate has not completed its business by 4 o'clock we will be able to sit, starting at that time. My suggestion is that we adjourn and continue our hearing at 4 o'clock.

Mr. Yves Fortier, Counsel, Sound Recording Licences (SRL) Limited; Canadian Recording Manufacturers' Association: We are here at the convenience of the committee, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is that satisfactory? Does the committee agree with that?

Senator Flynn: I would agree, Mr. Chairman, but I am rather inclined to suggest that SRL might get a better hearing if they were to come back next Wednesday at 9.30.

The Chairman: It seems unfortunate since they are here now and were here last week.

Senator Flynn: It is only a short trip from Montreal.

Mr. Fortier: We are at the convenience of the committee, Mr. Chairman. Moreover, I am sure that, be it four o'clock this afternoon or 9.30 next Wednesday morning, we will at all times get a good hearing. But, if by "good hearing" Senator Flynn means a larger representation of senators of the committee being in attendance, then I would certainly rather have a full house than an empty one.

The Chairman: If you wish to go ahead this afternoon we will certainly have a quorum.

Senator Flynn: We do not know exactly what is going to happen in the house this afternoon. We have quite a heavy agenda today.

Senator Carter: The Finance Committee is also sitting at four o'clock.

Mr. Fortier: We leave it entirely to the committee, but I have noted Senator Flynn's comment.

The Chairman: The one advantage of starting on Wednesday morning next is that there would be no one ahead of you. So far as the attendance of the minister is concerned, he is out of the country and is not available.

Senator Flynn: Is that an advantage?

The Chairman: It might be. We have indicated June 23 to the minister, and he has accepted that date.

Mr. Fortier: I might say, Mr. Chairman, that we certainly do not think we have wasted our mornings, either last week or this week. Far from it: we have benefitted greatly from hearing the presentations.

The Chairman: If I might smile a little while I say this, I except, too, that you have learned the course and direction of the questioning and the thinking on different points and maybe we will not get too far afield.

Mr. Fortier: Since we represent the one party which this legislation aims at, another week's delay, in view of Mr. Estey's very eloquent presentation this morning, may give us a chance to further synthesize our presentation.

The Chairman: You mean that we might come out from underneath the influence of his eloquence this morning.

Mr. Fortier: In so far as Mr. Estey is concerned, I find that time has cured everything.

The Chairman: If it is satisfactory to your group, then, we will meet next Wednesday morning at 9.30.

Mr. Fortier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: There will be no interferences with your right to proceed.

The committee adjourned.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable JOHN J. CONNOLLY, Acting Chairman

THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1971

Complete Proceedings on the Following Bills:

- C-242, "An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and An Act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate".
- C-207, "An Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto".

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE

(Witnesses:—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators:

Aird	Grosart
Beaubien	Haig
Benidickson	Hayden
Blois	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Kinley
Choquette	Lang
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Macnaughton
Cook	Molson
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28)

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Orders of Reference

Extracts from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, Wednesday, June 9th, 1971:

Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Martin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator McDonald, for the second reading of the Bill C-242, intituled: "An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and An Act to make provision for retirement of members of the Senate".

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Honourable Senator Martin, P.C., moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator McDonald, that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Connolly, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Lefrançois, for the second reading of the Bill C-207, intituled: "An Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto".

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Honourable Senator Connolly, P.C., moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lefrançois, that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Thursday, June 10, 1971.

(32)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 10:00 a.m.

Present: The Honourable Senators Blois, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Flynn, Hays, Isnor, Macnaughton, Martin, Sullivan, Walker and White—(13).

The following Senators, not Members of the Committee, were also present: The Honourable Senators Forsey, McDonald, Michaud and Smith—(4).

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel and Pierre Godbout, Assistant Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, Director of Committees.

On motion of the Honourable Senator Walker, the Honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) was elected Acting Chairman.

The Committee proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-242 intituled:

"An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and An Act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate".

The following witnesses were heard in explanation of the Bill:

The Honourable Allan J. MacEachen,
President of the Privy Council;

Mr. H.D. Clark, Director,
Pensions and Insurance Division,
Treasury Board.

The Committee then proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-207, intituled:

"An Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto".

The following witnesses were heard in explanation of the Bill:

The Honourable C. M. Drury,
President, Treasury Board;

Mr. H. D. Clark, Director,
Pensions and Insurance Division,
Treasury Board.

Miss E. I. MacDonald of the Legislation Section of the Department of Justice was also present but was not heard.

The Honourable Senator Flynn moved that the said Bill be amended as follows:

Page 6, Clause 18: Strike out Subsection (1) and substitute therefor the following:

"18. (1) An Order in Council authorizing the issuance of a proclamation under section 14 or 16 shall not be made until the proposed text of the Order in Council has been laid before the Senate and the House of Commons by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and the making of the Order in Council has been approved by a resolution of both Houses."

The question being put, the Committee divided as follows:

Yeas—3      Nays—4

The Motion was declared lost.

It was Resolved to report the said Bill without amendment.

At 12:40 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Denis Bouffard,
Clerk of the Committee.

Reports of the Committee

Thursday, June 10, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill C-242, intituled: "An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and An Act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate", has in obedience to the order of reference of June 9, 1971, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted.

John J. Connolly,

Acting Chairman.

Thursday, June 10, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill C-207, intituled: "An Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto", has in obedience to the order of reference of June 9, 1971, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted.

John J. Connolly,

Acting Chairman.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Thursday, June 10, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill C-242, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and An Act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate, met this day at 10 a.m. to give consideration to the bill.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Acting Chairman) in the Chair.

The Acting Chairman: Honourable senators, to help us in our consideration of Bill C-242, we have with us the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen, President of the Privy Council and the House Leader on the other side; and Mr. H. D. Clark, Director, Pensions and Insurance Division, Treasury Board.

Is it your wish that we have Mr. MacEachen speak to the bill first?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Acting Chairman: Mr. Minister, it is customary when we have the privilege of having a member of the ministry with us, to ask him to make a general statement. Perhaps you would like to do that.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, President of the Privy Council: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

This is a bill that was certainly well understood by members of the House of Commons when it was before that place. Probably it is also well understood by members of the Senate, so it may not be necessary for me to go into much detail.

We had opened the question of pay and allowances for Members of Parliament through the appointment of the Beaupré Committee some time ago. As you know, that committee made a valuable contribution to our understanding of the problems facing Members of Parliament. This included specific recommendations as to what ought to be done to improve the position of members of Parliament. We generally agreed with the analysis of the committee as to the role of the members of Parliament, their changing responsibilities, and increasing functions; but we did not implement all the recommendations of the committee, and differed from those recommendations in a number of critical respects.

The Acting Chairman: Particularly on the question of parity as between the houses.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Yes. As you know, the Beaupré Committee recommended that the members of the Senate be treated differently from members of the other place; that the parity which had existed up to the present be altered, and that the members of the Senate be compensated—if that is the right word—at a lower rate than members of the other place. That is one recommendation that we did not accept. We recommended to the other place, and recommend in this bill, that the members of the Senate and the members of the other place be, so far as their pay or compensation is concerned, treated in exactly the same way as they have been in the past. That is one important departure from the recommendations of the Beaupré Committee.

Another departure is that we are proposing that the so-called expense account of members of Parliament be treated in the future in exactly the same way as it has been in the past. As you know, the Beaupré Committee recommended that the so-called non-accountable tax-free expense account of members of Parliament be abolished altogether, and that in its place a new system be developed by which members of Parliament would submit vouchers for certain specified expenses in certain categories, in most cases up to a definite maximum. This was a quite difficult problem for us, and ultimately we decided to retain the present system, and to propose an increase in the total amount of the present expense allowance. We did that because we thought the present system was more in keeping with the status of a member of Parliament than putting him on an itemized expense account system.

The Acting Chairman: I understand you had a good many discussions with members of the various parties on this very problem, and that this was generally the conclusion believed to be the appropriate one by a wide consensus of members. Is that so?

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

The Acting Chairman: I should think it is primarily more a problem for members of the other place than it is for members of the Senate, although it does affect senators. Certainly, very heavy expenses are incurred by senators in coming to Ottawa as much as they do and living here, but perhaps the problem is greatly accentuated for the member of Parliament. Do you find that to be the fact?

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I think it is a greater problem for members of Parliament. We did have consultations with all parties in the other place as we were developing the proposals. I do not claim that we, in any sense, got unanimous support for the proposals we made, as I think the votes in the other place indicate. We did have consultations, and I think there was relatively wide support for the concept of the present non-accountable tax-free system.

We had to balance the status of the member of Parliament against the argument, which has a certain amount of force, that members of Parliament should for tax purposes be treated in exactly the same way as other citizens. It is clear that members of Parliament are not treated as other citizens in some other important respects, because of their special responsibilities. It has certainly been a tradition to attempt to support the independence of members of Parliament, and for that reason they have certain immunities as members of Parliament that no other person has. That is not because of a desire to create privileges for individual members; it is because of a desire to maintain the independence of members so that they can speak in the other place and act there, and elsewhere, without fear or favour. That has been well embedded.

Whether you agree with our reasoning or not, that is why we maintained that system, because we thought it was rather invidious to have members of Parliament totally submissive for the reimbursement of expenses to the examination of their accounts by bureaucrats, which I believe is the term.

The Acting Chairman: That is the word.

Senator Smith: I do not want to interrupt unduly, but is it not also the same system that we have had and are now proposing to continue?

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Right.

Senator Smith: And is it not in existence in every one of the other provincial jurisdictions?

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Senator Smith: Is there any exception to that? I do not know of any.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: I do not know of any exception. I think what is important, too, is that it has worked rather well, and it has been endorsed by, I think, three preceding Parliaments. Anyway, that is an important way in which we differed from the Beaupré Committee, and it was the most difficult problem we had in our consultations within our own group, with other parties, and within the Government. Finally, we decided on the basis of principle that we would go in this direction, and probably it is the best system for Parliament itself.

The Acting Chairman: In the Income Tax Act there is an exemption for these allowances paid to members of provincial legislatures. I suppose there would be a certain amount of invidiousness about not having it for federal members of both houses, but having it in the Income Tax Act available to members of the provincial legislatures.

Senator Flynn: You also find that at the municipal level.

The Acting Chairman: At the municipal level too.

Senator Macnaughton: There is a long historical precedent for that. All you have to do is go through your parliamentary history and you can see that the reasons given by the minister are up to date.

The Acting Chairman: I can remember the former Senator Power talking so well about this matter, and not when a bill was before the house either. His view, which he inherited from parliamentarians who were much senior to him, was that the parliamentary indemnity was not income. We have changed our direction in thinking about this. Perhaps the reason is that we have not thought about preserving the independence of the members, as the minister points out, to the same extent that they used to in days long gone by. We have to move. It is income and is treated as such now, but there was a case, and a very strong one, made at that time.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: I think that is a major point of difference. I do not know if you wish to spend any time on this, but I think it is worth pointing out that the Beaupré Committee, although it was asked, did not come up with a method of determining the changes in pay and allowances in future. They said, "Well, we have not been able to grapple with this at the moment. We suggest that there be another committee or commission appointed in the future to deal with this."

I tried valiantly to come up with an agreed solution, so that I could put an amendment on this question in the House of Commons. I failed because I could not get any wide consensus as to the appropriate method of future escalation in the pay, especially, and allowances of members of Parliament. So that is an unsolved problem, regrettably, for all of us, or for those of us who will be grappling with the problem in the future.

Mr. Chairman, the amount of the change in the salary or pay portion . . .

The Acting Chairman: The indemnity.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Yes, the indemnity. For simplicity, I refer to this bill as the "pay bill," but that is because of my working-class background.

The amount of the increase is less than was recommended by Beaupré, in comparison with movements in average weekly wages and salaries. It is well justified in comparison with movements in other professional groups, so I do not believe that a solid case can be made out that this is in any way excessive. It is a reasonable and justifiable increase at the present time. That is our view.

In fact, it is considerably less than the total recommendation of Beaupré.

In so far as the expense account portion is concerned, we have increased that from $6,000 to $8,000, and we have maintained the relative position of members of the House of Commons and senators. Why did we end up with $8,000 instead of $9,000 or $10,000 or $7,500? We did attempt to take a look at the increase of expenses that the Beaupré committee said ought to be reimbursable, in their scheme, by vouchers. We took these categories, put a figure opposite each of them and reached rough totals. So, taking the rough total, if a member were going to look at Beaupré and say, "Well, is my $8,000 sufficient to do for me what Beaupré recommended for us?" then I think that he could say, "Yes." If he wants to operate under the Beaupré method or proposal, then he is getting about as much under the $8,000 proposal as he would if we adopted the categories and the method proposed by Beaupré.

We think that this is more in accordance with the independence of a member, because he can take his $8,000, in the case of a member of the House of Commons, and deploy it in the way that he thinks will best and most effectively serve his constituency. That is his responsibility: to determine the way in which he will use that money to carry out his duties as a member of Parliament.

He is not accountable, in the strict sense that he must submit vouchers to anybody, but he is accountable certainly in a wider sense, to his fellow members, to the press, to public opinion and ultimately to his constituents. That accountability seems to me to be very valid in the circumstances.

We have also proposed an amendment to a section of the bill that will widen the authority of the houses of Parliament to determine transportation expenses and telecommunication expenses for reimbursement. At present, the limitations are such that a member of Parliament, for example, could be reimbursed for taking a cab from his local airport to his home in his constituency, or vice versa, but not from Ottawa airport to his office here, or vice versa. One is possible and the other is not possible. It is because of the wording. We will be able, if it is desired, under this new wording, by both houses, to provide more adequately for the transportation of parliamentarians within their constituency, from their constituency to Ottawa, within any part of Canada; and the same will apply to telecommunication expenses.

You know that members of Parliament at the moment are allowed a free return air trip a week to their riding. Only the member himself is eligible, and he cannot go to any other part of the country. Beaupré suggested that these 52 units of travel be available in the future, but that a certain portion could be available, for example, to the member's wife, or that a certain number could be used for travel on public business to other parts of Canada. I think that was a sensible proposal and this amendment will enable the houses to make those changes, as they wish, to improve the ability of members of Parliament to serve their constituents and their country.

The Acting Chairman: The former one was much too restrictive.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: It was much too restrictive. Anyway, the Commissioners of Internal Economy were prohibited from acting, because of the limitations of that section.

The Acting Chairman: What section is that?

Senator Macnaughton: Section 44, is it not?

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Yes, section 44.

The Acting Chairman: It leaves it to the houses to prescribe the way in which this can be done.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Yes. If the houses so wish, they can implement a certain number of these recommendations which were made by Beaupré, to give greater flexibility.

The Acting Chairman: That would be the Internal Economy Committee of this house.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I believe that is almost all I have to say about the bill. Members of Parliament will now contribute on the basis of their indemnity for pension purposes, rather than on the present basis of their indemnity and their expense allowance. You may recall that, when we established the present pension provisions, they were based upon recommendations of Professor Curtis who said or recommended, in order to develop a more adequate pension for members, that the contributions be based not only upon the indemnity but also the expense account. That was not a normal situation—at least, so it was pointed out frequently in the house and elsewhere. Now, by basing the pension solely on the salary or indemnity of $18,000 it will be possible to remove that criticism and to maintain in the future the present contribution rate and the present eligibility for pension. Nothing changes there. There is a change with respect to the $15,000, however.

Senator Flynn: So far as the members of the house are concerned it is more rational, but it does not change any figure because they used to calculate the contribution on the $18,000. It was $12,000 plus $6,000. Now they calculate it only on the indemnity, which is $18,000. In other words, it is the same amount and the benefits are exactly the same as before.

Mr. H. D. Clark, Director, Pensions and Insurance Division, Treasury Board: Senator Flynn, senators have been contributing under the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and have been contributing on the $15,000—the combined $12,000 and $3,000. In order that there would be no change in the overall pension effect, this bill provides that they would contribute on five-sixths of the $18,000, or the $15,000 as before.

Senator Smith: Mr. Clark, has anything been changed with regard to those members of the Senate who were members in 1965, before the act was changed?

Mr. Clark: No, there is no change in so far as they are concerned either, senator. In their case the contributions and the benefits were related to the $12,000 indemnity, and the amendment to the 1965 act which is contained in this bill simply continues that provision of contributions and benefits being based on the $12,000.

Senator Smith: In other words, there is no change in this bill?

Mr. Clark: The only amendment is to continue things as they have been.

The Acting Chairman: Despite the increase of the indemnity?

Mr. Clark: That is right.

Senator Smith: For the record, what is the effect on those who were appointed before 1965 and who have not made the election to resign at the age of 75? The general complaint is that we pay quite a large premium but we get nothing back. Can you clarify that?

Mr. Clark: Last year the act made it possible for those senators who were then under the age of 75 to indicate that they would relinquish their seats on attaining the age of 75. If they so elected, there was an automatic protection for their widows in the event of death before the age of 75. A number of senators made such an election. For those who did not make such an election, there is no change in the situation.

Senator Flynn: I think there is one change, if I am not mistaken, Mr. Clark. Previously, there was no refund to the estate of the contributions, whereas now, for those who have not made the election to resign at the age of 75, their estates will be entitled to a refund of the contributions.

Mr. Clark: But that is not accomplished by this particular measure, Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: No, but I think that has to be pointed out, because it would make a difference between those who elected to resign at the age of 75 and those who did not so elect. Before that, if you died in office, no refund was made to your estate; nor was any payment made to your widow.

Senator Smith: That is what I had in mind and what I wanted to get on the record, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Cook: Those of us who have made the election pay on the total of $15,000 now, do we not?

Mr. Clark: That is correct.

Senator Flynn: And we will continue to pay on the same basis.

Mr. Clark: Just to be clear, those who made the election in this last year, indicating that they intend to retire at the age of 75, will still be contributing and will be pensioned in relation to the $12,000. There is no change on that. The $15,000 only applies to those senators who have been summoned to the Senate since June 2, 1970.

Senator Flynn: No, that is not the case. We all pay on the $15,000 now.

Mr. Clark: Well, not all of you should be.

Senator Flynn: This was the consideration paid for obtaining the possibility of a pension to a widow of a senator who died in office before attaining the age of 75.

Senator Cook: We are paying on the $15,000.

Mr. Clark: I will have to have a word with your accounting people.

Senator Cook: Those who made the election, I mean.

Senator Flynn: Everybody is paying on the $15,000, Senator Cook.

The Acting Chairman: We all pay the same thing.

Senator Flynn: We all pay 6 per cent on $15,000. We all pay the same amount.

Senator Blois: Even those of us who are not eligible for pensions, as is the case with myself. I still pay, but my estate will get it back when I have left this world. I think that is the way it works. I will never get a pension, but I pay just the same.

Senator Smith: But you will get it back.

Senator Blois: My estate will. It will not be much good to me where I am going.

The Acting Chairman: You never can tell.

Senator Walker: It will be too hot to spend!

The Acting Chairman: They may change those rules, too.

Senator Walker: I do not mean the money will be too hot; I mean the place will be.

The Acting Chairman: I am glad that the Leader of the Opposition and Mr. Clark are both confused about this.

Senator Flynn: I am not confused at all. We have to remember, Mr. Chairman, that when the 1965 legislation was passed those senators appointed before June 2, 1965 then had the choice of going under the House of Commons pension scheme. However, only one senator elected to go under that system.

The Acting Chairman: Because he was young.

Senator Flynn: And because he had already gained a pension in the other place.

The Acting Chairman: That is right.

Senator Flynn: It was generally agreed that the choice was impracticable for those appointed before 1965. Subsequently, there was the amendment of last year. That amendment was made because we were paying in the order of $600 a year and, if you happened to die in office, not even having had the chance of resigning at the age of 75 or resigning because of ill health, there was no refund to your estate of the contributions you had made, which would have amounted to something in the order of $20,000. Nor was any payment or pension made to your widow in that event. The legislation of last year tried to correct that, but in compensation for the added benefit of a refund or a pension we have been paying that 6 per cent on the $3,000 expense allowance.

Mr. Clark: I am sorry, but that cannot be.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: It may be that you are in for a bonanza, senators. You may be getting a refund, if Mr. Clark is right.

The Acting Chairman: We will certainly hire Mr. Clark to be our spokesman, if that is going to be the result.

Senator Smith: Mr. Chairman, all I have seen Mr. Clark do so far is to shake his head and grin. What does he mean by that? Let us have something on the record.

Senator Walker: Let us have him on the record. What is the law of the Medes and the Persians?

Mr. Clark: I have before me the amendments of last year, and those amendments, while they made it possible to protect the widow in the case of death before attaining the age of 75, did not amend the definition of sessional indemnity. In fact there was no definition of sessional indemnity which meant that you looked at the terminology as it was in the Senate and the House of Commons Act, namely $12,000, and while the definition of sessional indemnity for the separate act, that is the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, was changed last year to include the expense allowance, that amendment was not made in the act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate. The amendment in the bill now before us simply continues the present provision, as it is in the law, for the contributions and benefits being based on $12,000, in keeping with the policy that these amendments should not change either the contribution basis or the benefit entitlement.

The Acting Chairman: What you are saying is that the contributions that have been paid by senators, or the contributions that have been deducted from the indemnity of senators, have been deducted on the wrong basis; it has been deducted from $15,000 instead of $12,000.

Mr. Clark: For those senators who are subject to the 1965 Act, yes. But for those who are contributing on the basis of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, a separate act, it is a $15,000 base which was applicable.

The Acting Chairman: Well, we have been making this contribution now for six years.

Senator Cook: No, on the $12,000 for six years, but on the $3,000 for only a short period.

The Acting Chairman: For how long?

Mr. Clark: Since April last year.

The Acting Chairman: I would not want us to go beyond this point without getting it clarified and without getting an arrangement made whereby this situation will be rectified. Would you speak to Mr. Dean and clarify this position? We may have had a profitable morning for a few senators.

Senator Flynn: I was going to suggest a bargain to the Minister, that they change the provisions as far as pensions to the widows of senators appointed before 1965 are concerned. However, I wanted Mr. Clark to put on the record what is the proportion of the member's pension which goes to his widow under the Members of the House of Commons and Dependents Pension Act. I think it is 60 per cent.

Mr. Clark: Under that act it is 60 per cent, related, of course, to the amount of pension based on the length of his service.

Senator Flynn: Presently the pension payable to the widow of a senator appointed before 1965, in the case where it is payable, is $2,667.

Mr. Clark: That is right.

Senator Flynn: The pension payable to the widow of a member of the judiciary of, let us say, a supreme or a superior court of a province?

Mr. Clark: I would not want to put a figure in dollars, but it is one-third of the judge's pension, which is the formula in the act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate. In both cases it is one-third.

The Acting Chairman: The percentage is the same?

Senator Flynn: I just wanted to put the figure in. The new act would provide for a salary of $39,000, if I am not mistaken, to a judge of a supreme or superior court of a province.

Mr. Clark: Well, I cannot speak on that.

Senator Flynn: If it is so, then his pension will be two-thirds of that?

Mr. Clark: Yes, that would be so.

Senator Flynn: Then the pension payable to his widow would be one-third of his own, and that is about $8,000.

Mr. Clark: Yes.

Senator Flynn: And if I am not mistaken, under the Members of the House of Commons Act, concerning their pensions, the maximum pension is $13,500 to a former member.

Mr. Clark: The maximum after up to 25 years of service, yes.

Senator Flynn: And the pension to the widow would be 60 per cent of that?

Mr. Clark: That is correct.

Senator Flynn: That is also close to $8,000.

Mr. Clark: Yes, at the maximum.

Senator Flynn: And in the case of members of the judiciary and members of the House of Commons there are provisions for the children?

Mr. Clark: Well, at the moment there is no provision for the children in the case of members of the judiciary.

Senator Flynn: But I understand there is some provision in the act presently before Parliament.

Mr. Clark: Yes, in the bill presently before the House of Commons there is an amendment to that effect.

Senator Flynn: So that by comparison the pension payable to a senator appointed before 1965, especially if he has been here over ten or fifteen years, is very much below that which is payable in the other case.

Mr. Clark: I would not want to say where the dividing line is, but certainly after 20 years there would be a difference in any case.

The Acting Chairman: The difference would be below the poverty line, almost—$2,600.

Senator Flynn: I know of several widows of former senators who have only that pension to live on and they are in a very difficult situation.

The Acting Chairman: I think it is very valuable to have this information on the record.

Senator Flynn: I know it cannot be corrected at this time, but I wanted to put that on the record for future amendments.

The Acting Chairman: And for the edification of the minister.

Senator Flynn: Before the amendment of last year the situation was also very difficult. I know of a case of a widow of someone who had been in the department for half a century and who did not receive a cent in the way of pension.

The Acting Chairman: Are there any more questions?

Senator Carter: I do not understand your difficulty in putting in an escalator clause for future adjustments, because the main argument that has been advanced for this one is that the cost of living has gone up since the last increase in 1963, and that we are now compensating for that. In effect, the rationalization of this increase has been based on the rise in the cost of living. That is the main argument we used in connection with the former increase. If we can use that argument twice, why is it not good for the future?

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: When the increase was proposed in 1963, it was never suggested that the increase was to look after many future years. It concerned the past. This was a confusion that developed in the press and elsewhere, that it had been stated in 1963 that the size of the increase was large because we were looking after the future. That was never stated by anyone who was a member of Parliament. What the Prime Minister of the day said, I believe, was that it was looking after what had happened in the past, since the former increase. That is what we have done again. We are picking up the fact that there has been no increase since 1963.

I suppose it is not, strictly speaking, the best way of putting it, to talk about the cost of living. We are talking basically about movements in wages and professional compensation, to which I think members of Parliament can legitimately draw comparisons.

Senator Carter: Even taking that argument, why could you not base your formula on that?

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Why not?

Senator Carter: I cannot understand the difficulty.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: I produced what I thought was a very good formula. I thought it was splendid. However, it did not go with members of Parliament. There were objections on differing grounds. Nevertheless, I thought it was very good and I firmly believe that whoever does this job on the next occasion will appreciate what a mistake it is that we are not doing something now to provide for future escalation. However, we just could not get general agreement on what would be a good basis.

I had developed a formula whereby we would hook future escalation of the pay of members of Parliament to the mid-point of the executive category in the Public Service. The executive category of the Public Service is normally based upon an examination of the movements of the private sector. There would therefore be an objective examination leading to an adjustment in the executive category, and the pay of members of Parliament would be adjusted to that.

I thought that would be one feature of the formula and that the first pay increase would take place on the day of the election of the thirtieth Parliament, and thereafter on an annual basis.

It had some good features and, I suppose, some disadvantages. It had one feature, if accepted, that members of Parliament would be establishing a formula that would not necessarily benefit themselves because there would be the intrusion of two elections before it would come into play.

The Acting Chairman: Plus an outside forum of reference.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Yes. There would be a definite method and it would take place annually, on an objective basis. I still think it is pretty good. However, in this business many people have to think it is pretty good before it goes, and it did not go.

Senator Walker: I suppose that you have made provision for the contingency that if salaries for the top brass go down, the salaries of members of Parliament will also go down. Is that in the formula or is that one of the things that held up the adoption of it?

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: That did not hold up the adoption of it. It was not in there.

Senator Hays: If you relate these increases to those that the press get each year, rather than to senior public servants, that might be a better way of handling it. The press received increases totalling 58 per cent over the same period, and in some industries the figure has been 90 per cent. This might be politically more acceptable.

The Acting Chairman: That might take the cursing out of the editorials!

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: In saying that it did not go, I do not blame anyone. I am not critical, because it is a very difficult subject, politically and otherwise. People really do not like to deal with these matters. However, we did consider it, and I have that formula in my file for future generations of members who might wish to have it.

The Acting Chairman: We have it on the record here, and it might be a guide.

Senator Flynn: Is my understanding correct that occasionally there is an adjustment in pensions pair to retired civil servants or their widows to take into account the increased cost of living or the decrease in the dollar value?

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Yes, senator. This applies to former members of the Senate and the House of Commons on pension, and their widows.

Senator Flynn: I think that before the last changes, the maximum pension payable to former members of the House was $3,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Senator Flynn: Has it been adjusted?

Mr. Clark: Former members and their widows.

Senator Flynn: But there was no payment to the widow of a former member.

Mr. Clark: They obtained the benefit of this legislation which was passed last year, and have been receiving escalation in their pensions since April 1 last year.

Senator Flynn: That would not apply to the pension payable to a widow of a senator appointed before 1965.

Mr. Clark: It did not provide a pension where none was payable. However, where a pension was in pay it would provide escalation in her pension.

Senator Flynn: Even on this $2,667?

Mr. Clark: Yes, that would be subject to the escalation.

Senator Flynn: I did not know this; this is probably good news for many widows.

The Acting Chairman: The amount is minimal.

Senator Flynn: Yes, but sometimes it is 10 or 15 per cent.

Mr. Clark: In the case of a senator who retired in 1965 it would have been a little more than a 10 per cent increase. Then there was another 2 per cent increase from January 1 this year, and potentially there will be another 2 per cent increase on January 1 next year. There is provision in last year's legislation.

Senator Flynn: What is this legislation?

Mr. Clark: The Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. In Schedule A, item 3 of that act is included: "An Act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate".

Senator Flynn: Would it be under this act that we pay 6 per cent on the difference?

Mr. Clark: No, this is the occasion of the half of one per cent. You may remember that as of April last year there was an extra half of one per cent contributed.

Senator Flynn: Only one-half of one per cent?

Mr. Clark: Yes. This was to help provide for the cost of escalating these pensions in pay.

Senator Carter: I know that you cannot give actual figures for individuals, because there are different family sizes. However, what is the net value of this increase? How much of it will go to income tax and how much will be an actual increase, on average? A person receives an indemnity. Let us take a member with a family of two children.

The Acting Chairman: Has he no other income?

Senator Carter: Yes, with no other income.

The Acting Chairman: I think, Senator Carter, it would be almost impossible for Mr. Clark to answer that. It is a matter of the Income Tax Act and regulations.

Senator Carter: The general impression is that this is $6,000 spending money; it is not.

The Acting Minister: Of course it is subject to tax, but not in the isolated case of this amount of money being transferred. It will be subject to tax at the rate applicable to the individual taxpayer.

Senator Carter: That is right, but we know what the marginal rate is for $18,000.

The Acting Chairman: Yes, but Mr. Clark does not, unfortunately. This is the point. It probably would reduce the increase by 25 per cent, or perhaps more. It is all taxable. It is a good point to raise, but unfortunately we do not have the figures.

Gentlemen, if there are no other questions, I know the minister has to be in the house for 11 o'clock. Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Acting Chairman: Mr. Minister, thank you for coming here this morning and not only discussing this particular bill but really dealing with the whole area. It has been very helpful and everyone is most gratified, first, with your presence and, secondly, the able manner in which you have conducted the discussions.

Hon. Mr. MacEachen: Thank you very much.

The committee then proceeded to the next order of business.

Ottawa, Thursday, June 10, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill C-207, an act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, met this day at 11 a.m. to give consideration to the bill.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Acting Chairman) in the Chair.

The Acting Chairman: Honourable senators, we now have for consideration Bill C-207.

As you know, the burden of the criticism in the house was that included in an omnibus bill are a great many different types of food which you are asked to digest together. However, perhaps we can use the fact that this bill is segregated. While awaiting the minister's arrival, as we have Mr. Clark here, would it be your wish to have him deal with Part VII of the bill, which contains the superannuation provisions on which he is the expert? It is not a controversial section, but it is probably one with which the minister would prefer to have Mr. Clark deal.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Acting Chairman: We will proceed with Part VII and then deal with the other parts of the bill with the minister.

Perhaps I could help the committee by telling Mr. Clark that in the explanation which I gave in the house I used seven examples or classes which were touched by the proposals in the bill in respect of the superannuation of public servants. I do not ask Mr. Clark to confine himself to those cases. However, perhaps he would explain in a general way the proposals of Part VII. Would you, Mr. Clark, in particular deal with the situation arising out of the Pension Benefits Standards Act, with reference to which Senator J. M. Macdonald asked me a question which I was reluctant to answer in the Senate? The implications of that act only arise in one of the areas covered by Part VII of the bill, but I would ask Mr. Clark to keep the application of that particular act in mind.

Mr. H. D. Clark, Director, Pensions and Insurance Division, Treasury Board: Mr. Chairman, honourable senators: I think I can confine my remarks to a very short space of time in view of the explanation given by Senator Connolly when the bill was debated earlier.

The Acting Chairman: Were there any mistakes made in the explanation?

Mr. Clark: There were none of which I am aware.

The Acting Chairman: So there was no misleading as far as I am concerned. You have to be sure, because when discussing superannuation it is very easy to stray.

Mr. Clark: These amendments reflect the results of a review we have been making for some time with the objective of improving benefits in the event of early retirement from the Public Service, whether at the initiative of the employer or the employee.

In brief, the amendments provide that if an employee retires, either at the initiative of his employer or voluntarily, after he has attained 55 years of age, and has 30 or more years of pensionable service to his credit, an immediate annuity shall be paid to him without actuarial reduction. At the moment, if a person goes out before 60 years of age, say at 55, his pension would be reduced by something like 30 per cent, because of the early retirement.

The Acting Chairman: His immediate pension.

Mr. Clark: His immediate pension, or he could have had a deferred annuity commencing at age 60. The effect of this is, if he has 30 years service to his credit at that time, to eliminate this reduction.

In the case of a person who goes out at the age of 50 and has 25 or more years of pensionable service to his credit, the immediate annuity, if he desires to have one, is related to the deferred annuity but is reduced by five per cent for each year that his age is less than 55 or the number of years his service is less than 30, whichever is the greater.

The Acting Chairman: If I might interrupt, perhaps I could welcome the minister who has now arrived.

Honourable C. M. Drury, President of the Treasury Board: I apologize for my late arrival.

The Acting Chairman: I think it is desirable to finish with the part we are on, as I think you will agree, Mr. Minister. What we are doing is going on with Part VII, which has to do with the Public Service Superannuation Act. Mr. Clark has indicated that he will not be very long, and perhaps we can get that out of the way.

Mr. Clark: That is the situation in the case of either voluntary or involuntary retirement for employees of 50 or more years of age with 25 or more years' service to their credit.

In the third area, we have a situation where a person cannot qualify under either of these two provisions to which I have just referred, but has attained the age of 55, has 10 years of service to his credit, and is retired involuntarily. In such a case the Treasury Board is given authority to waive the actuarial reduction that presently takes effect in those cases. Roughly speaking, the actuarial reduction is on the basis of 5 per cent for each year that the man is short of 60, so if he were aged 55 and with ten years of service, at 5 per cent a year, he would then receive a pension of at least 75 per cent of the full deferred annuity commencing at age 60, but the Treasury Board would have authority to waive this reduction, depending on the criteria the board adopted.

Those are the three features of the early retirement legislation, which Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) explained in the Senate chamber earlier.

The Acting Chairman: Would you put something on the record with reference to the Pension Benefits Standards Act and its application? That is subsection (E), I think.

Mr. Clark: That has to do with one of the options an employee has on retiring before the age of 60. He has the choice between a deferred annuity which is payable immediately, the amount of which can depend on the length of service and the conditions of retirement that I have just described, or a return of contributions, with the one proviso which Senator Connolly mentioned in respect of what we call the locking-in contributions. If he is over the age of 45, the Pension Benefits Standards Act sets forth the principle that a person who retires after 45, with 10 or more years of service, cannot receive a return of his contributions in relation to service performed after September 30, 1967. This locking-in provision, as we call it, is described on page 11. The closing lines of subsection (E), lines 9 to 16, merely continue the locking-in provisions of the Pension Benefits Standards Act.

The Acting Chairman: I understood there was some correlation here with the Pension Benefits Standards Act in its application to provincial public servants too. Is that so?

Mr. Clark: This is right. This is similar to provisions contained in the pension benefits acts of Ontario, Quebec, Alberta and Saskatchewan. Some of them have slightly different dates. The Ontario date went back to 1965. The effective date in the federal legislation was October 1, 1967. This is why we have reference here to the locking-in of contributions after September 30, 1967.

Senator Isnor: When you mention these provinces, you are referring to government retirement pensions, are you?

Mr. Clark: The provinces I just mentioned?

Senator Isnor: Yes.

Mr. Clark: Ontario, Quebec, Alberta and Saskatchewan are provinces that have legislation providing for the locking-in of the contributions of employees who leave employment after the age of 45 with 10 or more years of service.

The Acting Chairman: In the public service of those provinces?

Mr. Clark: Applying to private plans primarily. This is designed, of course, to ensure some retention of pension rights for older employees whose employment is terminated or who are transferred to another employer.

Senator Isnor: That is all right as far as the Government and the provinces are concerned. Was there ever a comparison made between private enterprise for commercial life pensions as compared to the governments?

Mr. Clark: We have made comparisons; and the Government pensions, those under the Public Service Superannuation Act, compare favourably with the better private pensions. There are some that are much better, but more that are not quite as favourable.

Senator Isnor: I would say that the majority were not as favourable.

Mr. Clark: The majority would not be as favourable. On the other hand, there are many plans of which we are aware that are better.

Senator Burchill: Do private pensions have that locking-in feature?

Mr. Clark: The provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Saskatchewan and Alberta which I mentioned.

Senator Burchill: They would all have it?

Mr. Clark: Yes. In Saskatchewan there is a little variation. In the case of married women, there was some pressure exerted in the passage of that bill, and there is an exempting provision in the case of women. But across the country, insofar as the men are concerned, in those provinces it is applicable.

Senator Burchill: Thank you.

Senator Isnor: I have one more question. It appears to me that the Government pension scheme is very generous in regard to age retirement, as compared to other schemes.

Mr. Clark: Well, yes and no. What we call the normal compulsory retirement age is 65, beyond which special authority for extension of employment has to be given. Under the present act and regulations, a person can go out at the age of 60 and receive a full pension based on his life category.

Senator Isnor: Are you speaking of the federal Government?

Mr. Clark: In the federal Government.

Senator Isnor: Not 60, but 55, is that right?

Mr. Clark: This bill would make it possible for a person to go out at the age of 55, provided he had the 30 years of service, and receive an immediate pension based on his length of service, without any other reduction. But this applies in a number of other plans of which we are aware, too. We are not unique in making this proposal.

Senator Isnor: But you say that you are very generous in regard to these people?

Mr. Clark: Certainly we are among the better plans; there is no doubt about that.

Senator Isnor: I think I have made my point as far as I want to go.

Senator Flynn: Mr. Chairman, my attention has been drawn to the case of former employees of the Canadian Arsenal in Valcartier, who were forced to retire before reaching the age of 60, some years ago, when the Government disposed of the plant. Some have not reached 60 for a deferred pension, but they have 30 years of service. My understanding is that the provisions of this act, or the amending provisions, do not apply to them, that they cannot start drawing a pension at 55, but they still have to wait until they reach the age of 60.

Mr. Clark: They have the option, as they have had from the time they retired, of requesting that what we call an actuarially adjusted pension be payable, at any time after the age of 50. That has always been their privilege.

Senator Flynn: But the provisions of this act would allow the option to be taken at 55?

Mr. Clark: That is so in relation to retirements after the effective date of this legislation.

The Acting Chairman: This legislation does not apply to past retirements, is that what you say?

Mr. Clark: It does not extend these early retirement provisions to people who retired, who ceased to be employed, before the beginning of the year.

Senator Flynn: They did not have that option, and it is not given to them by this act?

Mr. Clark: This act does not have retroactive effect to the Canadian Arsenal employees, or to any other group that retired.

Senator Flynn: This was forced retirement I am speaking of, in most cases.

The Acting Chairman: Are there any other questions on Part VII? If not, can we take it that Part VII is satisfactory to us?

Senator Flynn: Well, we understand what it means.

The Acting Chairman: There are no amendments? May I put the question? Are there any amendments to Part VII? Senator Flynn? If not, thank you, Mr. Clark, for your assistance.

Mr. Drury: would you like to make a general statement about the provisions of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I have read the introductory speech you made in the Senate and nearly all of the other speeches made. I am not sure that there is much I can add to the outline you have given. Perhaps it would be a little presumptuous on my part to comment on other remarks made by senators during the debate. However, I would be glad to try to answer any questions, or even any challenges.

Senator Flynn: Mr. Minister, you are at a disadvantage, because the only one in the Senate who spoke in favour of the bill was the present chairman of the committee. All the other speeches were against, and no one came to the rescue of Senator Connolly.

The Acting Chairman: Nobody spoke about all parts of the bill.

Senator Burchill: If we had done that, it would never have gone through.

Senator Flynn: That is the only thing that worries the Leader of the Government; "Pass the bill!"

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is an occupational hazard for the Leader of the Government.

Senator Walker: I think the point that worried us most was the necessity for this bill. What is the necessity for the creation of these ministers of state? There must be some particular department you have in mind at the present time. Otherwise, this bill would not have been brought to our attention. Also, once it gets under way, having in mind the fact that these ministers seem to be called on to formulate and develop policy in connection with matters, once those policies are formulated, do you expect to bring to an end the ministry set up? In other words, are these ministries temporary matters? If you read the speeches you will realize that these are the questions we are interested in. It is not in any critical way that we are asking now for some explanation as to the necessity for the bill at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Drury: I think the question is related to the bill. I do not need to argue the necessity or desirability of having a Department of the Environment, nor the part of the bill, Part VII, to which Mr. Clark has been talking, the desirability of a greater degree of flexibility than we have had in the past in the matter of retirement.

In so far as the ministries of state and ministers of state are concerned, there has existed, as part of the prerogative, the right of the Crown to create ministers without portfolio in unlimited numbers with unspecified duties and responsibilities, subject only to the provision by Parliament of the necessary funds to pay the salary. This can be obtained either in advance or, as is most usual because the creation of ministers without portfolio is not foreseen enough in advance, by way of supplementary estimates.

One thing that has become quite apparent is that the pace of change of both social and economic conditions in all western countries has accelerated quite considerably. Most governments tend to be structured in relation to historic trends. Perhaps we are somewhat like the universities in that we have come into this post-war period with a series of departments which are related to ancient disciplines. As an example I might cite the Ministry of Agriculture, which is a traditional occupation in Canada. The ministry of Fisheries is perhaps another. If I may make reference to Senator Forsey, we have experienced the same kind of phenomenon that occurs in relation to the structure of a university, namely, that the old, narrow disciplines and the concentration on them does not fit the current circumstances, so that it has become necessary to create interdisciplinary, combining functions in order adequately to get at our fundamental problems.

This has led to the kind of proposal found in this bill, namely, the creation of a Department of the Environment which cuts across a whole lot of old, particular, departmental functions. When you are creating new departments, obviously, if you are going to avoid unnecessary expense and confusion—and the confusion is probably more deleterious than the expense—you should try to abolish some of the old, traditional departments or meld them into a new structure.

The ministry of state concept will allow this process to be carried on. It will perform two functions. In effect, it will be either a pilot project for a continuing full-fledged department, in which case the ministry of state will be converted by an act of Parliament into a regular department of government, or it will allow the establishment of a coherent apparatus to focus on a particular problem and propound solutions. If these solutions are able to be carried out adequately by perhaps one or more existing departments, then the necessity for the ministry will disappear and so will the ministry. If not, then we will need a regular department of government—perhaps another one—and the ministry of state to provide an instrument for restructuring the Government in a less permanent but more rapid way than by the creation of a full-fledged department of government such as the Department of the Environment.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It would also be less rigid.

Hon. Mr. Drury: We have had considerable experience over the past few years in that there has been a Government Organization Act each year doing just this. There has also been quite extensive use made of the Transfer of Duties Act to bring about this kind of restructuring or reorganization of the Government, as new problems develop or as existing problems change their relative priority and become important while other existing problems appear either to be solved or to recede in importance.

Senator Walker: Then the ministries of state are, initially in any event, temporary creations, unless it is indicated that they should be permanent, in which event the ministers will change from ministers of state to regular ministers of the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Drury: I think one should look rather more at the ministry than at the minister. The ministry starts out as a secretariat. We are indicating quite clearly that there will be a ministry of state established for urban affairs. It is not quite clear at this point what the role of the federal Government should be in urban affairs. This is going to evolve. Before we try to set up a department with clearly defined and, one hopes, relatively permanent functions in this particular field of urban affairs, some evolution both in thinking and in experience is needed. But perhaps at this juncture it would be unwise to try to establish a department of urban affairs, because it is not too clear what kind of role the federal Government should play in assaulting this particular problem.

The Acting Chairman: Because of provincial and municipal interests?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Because of the provincial and municipal interests and, indeed, jurisdiction.

Senator Walker: Are there any other prospective ministries that would necessitate this bill, which seems quite ample to deal with the creation of ministries of state? It occurs to me that there could be some conflict between housing and urban affairs since they are so interrelated.

Hon. Mr. Drury: They are interrelated and quite clearly the housing function of the federal Government will be part of the responsibility of this particular minister of state. That is the permanent plan.

Senator Forsey: It will be "housing and urban affairs," then?

Senator Flynn: It is a question of semantics.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Put it this way: housing will be included in urban affairs.

Senator Walker: Mr. Andras is a minister without portfolio, is he?

Hon. Mr. Drury: He is a minister without portfolio, yes, "in charge of housing," which means that CMHC reports to him.

Senator Walker: I see.

Hon. Mr. Drury: As a minister without portfolio responsible for housing he also answers to the Government in respect of housing questions.

Senator Walker: Yes. Have you any other indication, Mr. Minister, as to other ministries that might be created that you might care to name?

Hon. Mr. Drury: There appears to be emerging a clear desirability for a minister of state and a ministry of state for science. These are the two to which a considerable amount of thought has already been given, and I would forecast as being likely.

Senator Carter: Is that for science or for science policy?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Well, I am not quite sure how one distinguishes between science and science policy.

Senator Flynn: Science is more inclusive, perhaps.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Science is perhaps more inclusive than science policy.

Senator Carter: Well, straight science would be more or less dictating projects which should be left to scientists themselves, whereas the overall policy would be concerned with the determining of goals and priorities and the allocation of resources. A science minister should be responsible for policy without the actual responsibility of saying, "This will be done there, and that will be done somewhere else."

Hon. Mr. Drury: I would agree with you that the function of such a ministry would be co-ordinating and dealing with questions of policy rather than trying to operate as manager or controller of large scientific or research establishments. I might add the further qualification that the desirability or the pressure for this is much greater in the field of the natural sciences than in the social sciences, and when one talks about this prospective ministry of state for science policy, there is a possibility that this will be related to the natural sciences or the physical sciences rather than the social sciences.

The Acting Chairman: But the minister would not be responsible for the day-to-day operations of whatever establishments come within the purview of his department.

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is one view. I think the general consensus at the moment is that such a minister should not be in charge of, or have put under his jurisdiction, all the scientific establishments under the control of the federal Government.

Senator Forsey: He should not?

Hon. Mr. Drury: He should not. This does not mean that under his jurisdiction there may not be one fairly large operating establishment such as the National Research Council, which is a big operating establishment. On the other hand, it would be clearly undesirable that he should have the functional control, for instance, of the Defence Research Board, or the Communications Research Laboratory of the Department of Communications, or the Experimental Farms of the Department of Agriculture. I do not want to say he would have none, because the National Research Council has to come under somebody, and I do not want to say he is going to have them all.

Senator Walker: Mr. Minister, there are a great many Crown corporations formulating policy, and once such policies are formulated you do not have to go back on them very often because policy is policy and is not changed from day to day. Have you in mind creating ministries of state and attaching to them the various Crown agencies? NSTANCE, THE CBC is one that I can think of, and Polymer, and keeping in mind that the purpose of the function of the minister is to formulate policy, have you something like this in mind, or is it going to be a very narrow field where only a few ministers are going to be appointed?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Well, my guess would be that the number of ministries of state or ministers of state created would not be large. At the present time each of these Crown corporations, and there is quite a variety of them, is the responsibility—insofar as the Parliament of Canada has a direct responsibility for them—of a named minister. By way of example, the Canadian National Railways reports to Parliament through the Minister of Transport. This is part of his load of responsibility, and because the railway operation is so intimately linked with the general operations of the Ministry of Transport, as long as this is not too great a load on the particular minister this would seem to be a satisfactory continuing arrangement. Polymer Corporation reports to Parliament through the Minister of Supply and Services, which again appears to be the appropriate one. I cannot remember all the list, but there are a number in the financial field who report through to the Minister of Finance. The Canadian Export Development Corporation reports through the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and this is closely linked to his departmental functions and responsibilities.

The Acting Chairman: CIDA?

Hon. Mr. Drury: CIDA reports through the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The Acting Chairman: Of course, that is not strictly a Crown corporation.

Senator Walker: It would be a pity, would it not, to bring in ministers to interfere with functions of the Crown corporations unless there was some new project where you were going to enunciate new policy and change the Crown corporation radically, and even then it would be a temporary measure? In other words, what I am getting at is that you do not contemplate the creation of these ministries for the purpose of supervising or checking or controlling or running the Crown corporations.

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is not the plan. Mr. Chairman. I will not say it will never occur because, in fact, we are contemplating doing this in relation to Central Mortgage and Housing which is a Crown corporation. The reason for this is that the activities of the Crown corporation are such that it is too much of a load to attach this additional responsibility to a minister who already has heavy departmental responsibilities. As you remember at one time Central Mortgage and Housing reported to Parliament through the Minister of Transport.

Senator Martin: Senator Walker—or Mr. Walker as he then was—had this responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Drury: I am looking at more recent history.

Senator Martin: He is familiar with having several departments, including this one.

Senator Walker: I had three. I had the National Capital Commission, Public Works, and Housing. We got along well. We had a huge expansion in housing at that time. We got along well and we had a huge expansion of housing at that time in the National Capital Commission. I do not see why, if you have departments competently led, you need to have a Minister for Housing to run the present outfit. It is doing pretty well. Why would you need a minister?

Hon. Mr. Drury: In the current year we are likely to have what is termed a record in housing starts. This is partly due to having an energetic minister who is devoting full time to this and nothing else.

One of the important ingredients in the success of CMHC is the availability of loan funds for placement in the private sector. That particular Crown corporation has to bid for these funds, the sole source of which is the fisk, against other ministers. It helps a great deal to have a minister engaged in this process of making the case rather than merely the president of the corporation.

Senator Walker: Is not this the beginning of proliferation? You will have a minister of state for urban affairs. I am not criticizing it. I know you are feeling your way on this, as you must. A great part of the housing department is going to be transferred to the department of urban affairs. Surely, having another Minister of State for CMHC, which deals almost exclusively with housing and apartments, would mean a proliferation. In other words, you are splitting the great housing problem into two parts and having two new ministers. This thing could grow like Topsy. This is what we are worried about.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Perhaps I did not make myself clear. There will be only one minister for urban affairs, including housing.

Senator Walker: And a separate one for CMHC?

Hon. Mr. Drury: No. CMHC includes housing.

Senator Walker: When you say that we are going to have a minister of state to take care of CMHC, you mean that it would be the minister of urban affairs.

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is correct.

The Acting Chairman: The only additional one is the possibility of a minister in connection with science or science policy.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Some argument has been put forward in the House of Commons for naming a Minister of State to deal with the Report on the Status of Women.

Senator Flynn: That is a full-time job.

Hon. Mr. Drury: The problem concerning that report is that it does not fit into any particular of our departmental structure. This is the kind of phenomenon which, if it is of sufficient importance and is going to be dealt with in a focused way, might best be handled by one of these inter-departmental disciplinary ministers of state.

Senator Walker: All 28 ministers will keep their eye on that problem. They are, anyway—particularly the first minister.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Clearly there is a danger or possibility of a proliferation. However, the experience of the present Government indicates that there is a desire, when a new department or agency is created, to at least co-ordinate, consolidate, meld or abolish some of the older ones that do not quite seem to fit. The process of organization development does not lead to increases with no corresponding offsetting decreases.

The Acting Chairman: We have had an example of that in connection with the proposed establishment of the Department of the Environment to which, as I remember the figures, some 10,000 employees of various departments will be transferred.

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is correct. The Department of Fisheries and Forestry will no longer continue as a department.

Senator Forsey: It will disappear?

Hon. Mr. Drury: As a department.

Senator Walker: Have any disappeared yet?

Hon. Mr. Drury: I am not sure how you measure disappearance. If one looks at the salaries one will find that there is no longer a salary required for a Minister of Industry. Under this bill a salary for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry will no longer be provided.

Senator Isnor: What is the argument for doing away with that?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Well, the term "doing away with" means having the function of these particular departmental arrangements conducted by someone else.

Senator Burchill: Will the name be dropped?

Hon. Mr. Drury: The name will not be dropped. In response to an expressed desire, the name "Minister of Fisheries" will be continued. I think there is a specific amendment in the bill which allows for that.

Senator Forsey: There will be someone who will be minister of something or other and also Minister of Fisheries. He will have two portfolios?

Hon. Mr. Drury: It would be difficult to say that he would have two portfolios, because there is no portfolio of Fisheries.

Senator Forsey: I should have said that he would have two departments under him, which used to happen with the Department of Mines and the Interior, and that sort of thing. There was no provision for a separate minister in some instances.

Hon. Mr. Drury: In this case there is provision for two ministers but only one department.

Senator Flynn: Section 3(3) says:

The Minister of the Environment is the Minister of Fisheries for Canada

That means only one. I suggest also that it means that he will always be called the Minister of the Environment. The Minister of the Environment discharges the responsibilities of the Minister of Fisheries, but that is not his title.

Hon. Mr. Drury: It is quite clear. The Minister of the Environment is also the Minister of Fisheries for Canada. He is the Minister of Fisheries and people are entitled to address him as such.

Senator Isnor: How would they address him in future?

Hon. Mr. Drury: I am not sure what you mean by "they". It is quite clear that some of the members of the House of Commons who represent Newfoundland will address questions in the house of Commons to the Minister of Fisheries, and the Minister of Fisheries, otherwise known as the Minister of the Environment, will rise in reply.

Senator Walker: Have you in contemplation the creation of a minister of state responsible for the CBC?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Not at the present time.

Senator Walker: You surely would not create one for the National Capital Commission?

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is not in contemplation either at the present time.

Senator Walker: But that does not mean, of course, particularly with reference to the CBC, that you have not been thinking of it?

Hon. Mr. Drury: We have been thinking in both fields.

Senator Flynn: It is an obsession with every government.

Hon. Mr. Drury: It is really a determination or judgment as to whether the activities of a particular agency or Crown corporation are such as to warrant virtually the full time attention of a senator.

Senator Walker: Did you ever consider one minister, a member of the cabinet, not just a minister of state . . .

The Acting Chairman: A minister with portfolio.

Senator Walker: A minister with portfolio, for Crown corporations?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Yes, that has been considered and rejected, I think for the reasons you indicated, that a minister of state for Crown corporations would find himself with responsibilities for widely differing functions. The only common denominator of the whole field is that they are corporate in their structure.

Senator Walker: Quite so; thank you very much.

Senator Flynn: With regard to the principle contained in clause 14, does the minister not agree that under its powers the Governor in Council would in effect legislate and create new departments of which we would be unaware? It could be any department that the Governor in Council decided should be organized immediately.

Hon. Mr. Drury: It is difficult to get at the motivation, if you like, for the decision-making process. Someone decides, but the effective implementation of this decision or desire is subject to certain restrictions.

In the case of clause 14 . . .

Senator Flynn: And clause 16.

Hon. Mr. Drury: The Governor in Council may decide, put it that way. However, all he can do under the provisions of clause 14 and subsequent clauses is submit a proposal to the House of Commons, which has the right to reject it.

Senator Flynn: It is legislation; that is why I wonder why only the House of Commons would pass on this?

Hon. Mr. Drury: There has been, I am told, a number of instances involving delegation of functions between the two chambers.

Senator Flynn: Delegation, yes, by one house to the other. That happened in connection with divorce. The other place was quite satisfied to delegate the power. However, the Senate has not been asked to delegate its powers in the present case.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Perhaps not expressly, but it has certainly been asked implicitly.

Senator Forsey: It is being asked here.

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is right, as I say, implicitly. The question asked is why? The rationale is that the executive is controlled by and directly responsible to the House of Commons, rather than to the Senate.

Senator Flynn: As far as a vote of confidence is concerned, I agree; the Senate cannot vote non-confidence in the Government.

The Acting Chairman: And have it stick.

Senator Flynn: I suggest that if we never have any amendment to the organization legislation, it would mean legislation by order in council approved only by the House of Commons. A permanent department could be created by this means.

Hon. Mr. Drury: I will put it another way: it will be legislation approved only by the House of Commons, that is correct; not Parliament as a whole.

Senator Flynn: Do you see any advantage in keeping the Senate out of this?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Not really any significant advantage. It does appear to be organizationally rather more tidy to acknowledge the prime responsibility of the House of Commons for control of the executive. It is the body which effectively can put them out of office. The other effective control, of course, is the supply procedure, which also is essentially a House of Commons device.

Senator Flynn: Would you say that if the house refused to approve such an order in council it would be the equivalent of a vote of non-confidence in the Government?

Hon. Mr. Drury: I would think it would, yes, although this is a question of judgment. We have no constitutional rules with respect to this.

Senator Flynn: We have a precedent under which the house can reconsider its decision.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Yes, that has happened.

Senator Flynn: Would you not agree that in such a case, if it were not considered as a vote of non-confidence, resource could be made to clause 23 in order to accomplish the same end without having the approval of the house? It seems to me that under clause 23, in practice, a minister of state may be appointed for exactly the same purposes as a minister for specified purposes.

Hon. Mr. Drury: The essential and significant difference between clause 14 is contained in the words "ministry" and "minister". Under clause 23 a minister of state can be named, but he cannot be provided with any apparatus with which to be effective.

Senator Flynn: He can be provided with employees.

Hon. Mr. Drury: He cannot.

Senator Flynn: At the present time for instance, the minister without portfolio responsible for Information Canada has staff. He may not have a deputy minister, but he has a large number of staff.

Hon. Mr. Drury: No; the staff is that of the Secretary of State.

Senator Flynn: I know, but in practice this staff is under the authority of this minister without portfolio.

Hon. Mr. Drury: When you say "in practice," it is by agreement with the Secretary of State.

Senator Flynn: Yes, that is what is provided also in section 23.

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is correct, but I suggest that this is not quite the same as providing him with staff for whom he is responsible.

Senator Flynn: Especially when he would not have the same authority in principle. Also, in practice, his salary would only be half; he would receive $7,500 instead of $15,000.

Hon. Mr. Drury: That also makes a difference; if his responsibilities are less, that seems to be appropriate.

The Acting Chairman: The legislative authority provided by the bill is legislation by order in council in respect of the appointment of these men. Clause 18 is simply a provision to confirm the proposed action of the Governor in Council, but the authority to legislate is an authority that is to be exercised by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. Drury: The authority to name, I would not quite call it legislation, is in the Governor in Council. However, I was indicating the restrictions contained in the bill. The proposed order in council must be approved by the House of Commons. Secondly, the provision of supply moneys to pay his staff and put this ministry or secretariat in being must also be approved by legislation of the House of Commons through the Estimates and supply procedure. The Governor in Council is not free to act in any way he wants without scrutiny, and indeed legislative approval, as perhaps just a reading of the words themselves would indicate.

Senator Flynn: The Auditor General is not entirely in agreement with your last statement.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Well, the Auditor General has some views. I hope we are going to debate these.

Senator Martin: Not today.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Not today?

Senator Walker: Mr. Minister, in any questions I have asked, when I have said "Do you contemplate", you were referring in your replies, I presume, to the Government; you were not just giving your personal point of view?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Insofar as I can discern or engage the views of the Government.

Senator Walker: Is there any thought, that you know of, of creating a ministry of unemployment, which is the greatest problem in Canada today? I am reminded of this because we have here the Leader of the Senate (Hon. Mr. Martin) who was the chief critic of another government at the time of the recession. It is a serious question I am asking.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Obviously consideration has been given to this. There are perhaps two problems in connection with it. First, we have not got the right to do it yet.

Senator Walker: You mean until this bill is passed?

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is correct.

Senator Walker: Well, we will accomodate you in that way in half an hour.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Secondly, there is the efficacy or desirability of doing it. I would be very glad to hear your views. Do you think we could have them?

Senator Walker: You should do something, God knows.

Hon. Mr. Drury: We are doing something.

Senator Walker: I suggest it would be a good idea, so that you could have somebody focus his particular attention on unemployment and call on all the different departments of the Government to assist, because one person could then formulate policy and think of nothing else except that. He would be given, I would think, co-operation from all the other departments in carrying out any plans he might enunciate which found favour with the Cabinet. I think that is one place where you could do a lot of good, and one hopes it would be only a temporary ministry, that some day you would get this solved.

Senator Forsey: The Labour Government in England did that in 1929. It put two ministers in charge, Jimmy Thomas and Sir Oswald Moseley, and the thing was a complete frost.

Hon. Mr. Drury: In response to Senator Walker, I might say that we regard this problem of unemployment as of such importance that it is the first priority of all ministers. It might well be that the appointment of a single minister, especially a minister of state, who is likely to be relatively junior, would be downgrading this problem rather than improving it.

Senator Walker: At the present time, though, there is no particular minister concentrating on it. If we could loan you the honourable Senator Martin, who was the greatest authority on unemployment when he was in opposition—and had a lot of bright ideas, it would not downgrade any department to put him in charge of it.

Senator Flynn: He was served by a special bureau of statistics too.

Hon. Mr. Drury: While we have not got the body, at least we have a large part of the mind of Senator Martin already, who is worried about this and providing ideas, and useful ideas I am glad to say.

Senator Walker: I do not care about the Labour Government in England in 1929; that was at the beginning of the great depression, and in any event many of those fellows think from the ears down, particularly in those days they did. Right now, with all the bright people around, with 155 members on your side, all of them looking for an extra job, surely this must be a wonderful opportunity for originality, forcefulness and administrative ability to really solve this over-riding problem, which depresses everybody, including the Government. Would you give it some thought and perhaps let the matter go back to the Cabinet for a word there?

Hon. Mr. Drury: I will certainly convey those views to the Cabinet.

Senator Forsey: I would like the minister to give us some idea why there is a possibility of such a considerable increase in the Cabinet. This worries me. I recall when the first cabinet was formed, it had 13 members, and Mr. Mackenzie, the leader of the opposition, said this was too many. It was held at that number until about 1896; it ran up a little sometimes; then it began to grow and grow. It seems to me from the look of this thing that we might very soon have not merely a cabinet of 30, which we had a year or so ago, before the resignation of Mr. Kierans and the disappearance of somebody else—I cannot remember who now—but a much larger cabinet. I am doubtful about the efficiency of a decision-making body of that size. I notice that the minister spoke of the possibility of abolishing old departments. The only one that seems to be going now is the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, unless I am mistaken.

Senator Flynn: It is to be replaced by a department of environment.

Senator Forsey: Quite, but even so there is only one going. The minister seemed to paint a picture of a new broom sweeping very clean and getting rid of these superannuated passé departments and putting new ones temporarily or permanently in their place, but I do not see any sign of any of the old departments going.

I cannot understand quite why the maximum number of ministers of state is put at five. We have had mention of a couple of things that might be put under ministers of state, but five seems a more than ample number.

The Acting Chairman: I do not think that remains in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Drury: No.

The Acting Chairman: That does not remain.

Senator Forsey: What does it say now? Nothing?

The Acting Chairman: It is open ended.

Hon. Mr. Drury: It says nothing.

Senator Forsey: Oh! This is worse still.

Hon. Mr. Drury: There is no limitation. The trade, if you like, was a maximum of five ministries of state to be set up by proclamation. Now provision has been made for scrutiny by the other place of each individual creation, so the number five has been taken out. This is the control rather than the ceiling.

Senator Forsey: I am sorry, but I left my glasses behind this morning and I had not looked at the amended version.

The Acting Chairman: This was not in the original print of the bill. It came only after the amendment in the other place on third reading.

Senator Forsey: I know that, but it was five in the original print?

The Acting Chairman: Yes, it was.

Senator Forsey: That is how I came to make the mistake. I had not had an opportunity to look at it again. I am throwing out a number of ideas. The other thing that occurs to me is why there was not perhaps considered to be some opportunity here to reduce the size of the Cabinet as such, and set up something like a two-tier ministry and cabinet à la English practice of long standing. We did have the germ of that here in the creation of the solicitor generalship and the controllerships of customs and inland revenue, I think it was, under the acts of 1888, if I remember correctly. From 1892 to 1895 we had a ministry which included the solicitor general and the controller of customs and inland revenue, and a cabinet that excluded those ministers. Then, right from 1892 to 1915, the solicitor general was never in the cabinet. After that, until about—I have forgotten just when—1930 or 1935 he had a sort of “in again out again, on again off again, gone again Finnegan” existence. Sometimes he was in the cabinet and sometimes he was not. He was still a subordinate personage in the Department of Justice, but when he was in the cabinet he was a fully-fledged cabinet minister.

I remember that the front page of Hansard in 1915, when Meighen was Solicitor General and was put into the cabinet, described him as minister without portfolio with “Solicitor General” in brackets.

But we had the germ then of this two-tier system. It seems to me that the cabinet is getting so very large now, some consideration might have been given to the possibility of placing, for example, a department like National Revenue under the authority of the Minister of Finance, and having a sub minister for National Revenue outside the cabinet. Similarly, the Post Office could be put in the same kind of relationship to the Department of Communications. Perhaps that was considered, I do not know; but I am really rather frightened by the growing size of the cabinet and I am not by any means certain that it is a case of the larger the cabinet the more efficient the process of decision-making. It seems to me that quite possibly it might be the reverse.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the senator has raised quite a broad issue and it is one of, I suppose, a value judgment, as to what works best. Ideally, in theory, the most efficient in the decision-making process would be to have one minister only, call him the prime minister, and there would not be much of a problem then of co-ordinating ministers.

Senator Forsey: That is a reductio ad absurdum. Nobody proposes that.

Hon. Mr. Drury: I agree that that is so, but there are these two extremes. The other is to have every elected representative as a minister, a decision-maker, a part of the cabinet. Somewhere in between these two extremes lies the right answer.

If the cabinet, the number of decision-makers at the political level, is very small, this means that most of the decision-making in fact is done by people other than cabinet. They only have so much time, they can only absorb so much and understand so many questions. If the number of ministers is few, the multiplicity of decisions required to be made must be taken by somebody else, which means bureaucracy.

Senator Forsey: Does the minister think that is the state of affairs in the United Kingdom now, for example? Their cabinet is somewhat smaller than ours, if I recall correctly; and their ministry is vastly larger and takes in all kinds of parliamentary under-secretaries and I do not know what-all.

Hon. Mr. Drury: This is correct. One gets into a bit of a semantic problem. What is the difference between a minister in the cabinet and a minister of state not in the cabinet, in the United Kingdom? How does this affect the decision-making process? Is there any value to having a minister of state not of the cabinet, and presiding over a department? Why not just have a deputy minister? He is not in the cabinet, either. Why insert this fellow?

Senator Forsey: Do you mean a deputy minister in the sense of a parliamentary under-secretary?

Hon. Mr. Drury: No. Our kind of deputy minister, or a permanent secretary.

Senator Forsey: That is really quite a different thing.

Hon. Mr. Drury: What is the difference between a minister of state not of the cabinet, with no powers to make decisions, presumably, and a permanent secretary who also is not of the cabinet?

Senator Forsey: One is a civil servant and the other is a political personage. I should have thought that was the simple answer to that. It seems to me that what the minister is overlooking is the difference between policy formation, broad policy formation by the cabinet, and a relatively detailed decision-making by junior ministers. Surely there is some possibility of devolution and delegation there, so that the people in the cabinet are concerned rather with large policy formation and do not have their minds cluttered up with a great mass of detail.

Hon. Mr. Drury: I agree with this. The Canadian solution to this dilemma of, in effect, decentralization is, rather than have a formal structure of a cabinet, quite small, and a much larger ministry which has to be co-ordinated, we have a larger cabinet than the United Kingdom and a larger cabinet than the United States, which does not really function as a cabinet, anyhow.

The Acting Chairman: It is not parliamentary.

Senator Flynn: It is not like ours.

Hon. Mr. Drury: It is not parliamentary at all. Our solution is to establish functional cabinet committees.

Senator Forsey: Yes, I know that.

Hon. Mr. Drury: This performs the same kind of function which the two-level ministry does in the United Kingdom. The time of the cabinet, on what you have described as minor subpolicy matters, is not taken up, in the case of the cabinet as a whole. These things are performed in the cabinet committees. The larger policy issues, which do come to cabinet, do come to a larger body, but they have already been refined to a limited number of issues.

Senator Walker: And that is what you are doing at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is what we are doing at the present time.

Senator Burchill: Do all those committees report to the cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Drury: They do, sir.

Senator Burchill: When the report is presented, does that not arouse a long discussion with a large group in cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Drury: No, because the reports and decisions, I suggest, are so sufficiently coherent and well-reasoned that they do not give rise to discussion.

Senator Carter: Could I ask, taking the average week, how many hours a week are spent in cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Are spent in cabinet as a whole?

Senator Carter: Cabinet meetings, yes.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Let me see. Roughly, three.

Senator Carter: Three hours a week?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Thursday morning, from 10 to 1.

Senator Carter: Is that all?

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is the schedule. Now, there are a number of occasions when we have a special cabinet meeting, and there are others when we enjoy a sandwich lunch beyond one o'clock.

Senator Carter: Does that three hours take in your cabinet committees as well?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Reports from cabinet committees.

The Acting Chairman: But not the sessions of the cabinet committees?

Hon. Mr. Drury: Oh, no, no.

Senator Carter: It is cabinet sessions I am talking about.

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is the full formal cabinet?

Senator Carter: Let me put it in another way. Perhaps I am not phrasing it right. Out of the average working day, the average working week, how much of that work week does the minister spend in his department, getting to know his department, to know the problems of his department; and how much of that time is spent talking about his department in cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Drury: I hope he is doing more than talking about his department in cabinet. This varies quite a bit between ministers. We have provision made for the meeting of a functional cabinet committee, every morning and every afternoon of the work week.

The Acting Chairman: But all ministers do not have to attend all those meetings?

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is correct.

Senator Carter: My question is based on personal experience, that when a minister spent much time in cabinet, he hardly knew his department at all. That applied to practically all ministers a few years ago. They could hardly discuss the problems in Parliament or in cabinet intelligently because they did not spend enough time in their departments to know what it was all about.

Senator Smith: I did not know you were formerly a member of the cabinet.

Senator Walker: He was a good member, too. I remember.

Hon. Mr. Drury: I have been around Ottawa for some time, in one guise or another, and despite Senator Forsey's worries I must say that the present cabinet is better instructed, both in its own departmental affairs and in the general policies of government, than any previous cabinet.

Senator Walker: It does not show it, does it?

Senator Forsey: Order.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Perhaps I laid myself open to that.

Senator Forsey: That is a matter of judgment.

Hon. Mr. Drury: I would remind those present, Mr. Chairman, that the problems are rather more difficult today than they were in the halcyon days of the past.

Senator Macnaughton: Much can be said in favour of a system of super and junior ministers. For example, the Minister of Agriculture has roughly 25 subsidiary acts to operate, one of them involving the Research Institute in the Department of Agriculture. That in itself is a huge affair, involving much money, time and detail. Surely, it would be a tremendous help to the Minister of Agriculture were he able to delegate just that section on research to some junior minister who could then do his own homework and advise the minister. That would be better than having the minister rely solely on the deputy minister. It seems to me that much can be said in favour of delegating this to a junior ministry.

Hon. Mr. Drury: We have what Senator Forsey calls the germ of this in the Department of the Secretary of State, where there is a junior minister sharing the duties, whereas in terms of the statute the responsibility continues to vest in the Secretary of State, although he has someone to help him. This is perhaps a refinement of the system of parliamentary secretaries. Generally, it would be an improvement on the operations of the parliamentary secretary system.

The Acting Chairman: There is no doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. Drury: Under the prerogative there is no limit to the number of ministers without portfolio who could be appointed to do just that, as, indeed, the present minister assisting the Secretary of State is. He will be given rather a more precise designation and a series of duties. Under this act he will be called instead a minister of state.

Senator Macnaughton: The idea is to give authority to a man who has the judgment and the power to make decisions.

Hon. Mr. Drury: That is correct.

Senator Macnaughton: Hence he would assist a super-minister.

The Acting Chairman: Are there any other questions, honourable senators?

Senator Flynn: Mr. Chairman, the minister has said that he is going to ask the Senate to relinquish its responsibilities somewhat. I do not want the Senate to relinquish its responsibilities in any way. Therefore, I would move an amendment to clause 18 of the bill. I have a formal amendment which you can read, if you wish, Mr. Chairman. The effect of the amendment is to add the words "the Senate" wherever they are needed, and it means simply that the Order in Council will have to be approved by a resolution of the Senate and the House of Commons.

The Acting Chairman: I assume honourable senators have before them a copy of Bill C-207, and will bear in mind the wording of clause 18, subclauses (1) and (2). Senator Flynn's amendment reads as follows:

18. (1) An Order in Council authorizing the issuance of a proclamation under section 14 or 16 shall not be made until the proposed text of the Order in Council has been laid before the Senate and the House of Commons by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and the making of the Order in Council has been approved by a resolution of both Houses.

(2) Where the proposed text of an Order in Council has been laid before the Senate and House of Commons pursuant to subsection (1), a motion in the Senate and House of Commons proposed by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada in accordance with the rules of that House, praying that the making of the Order in Council be approved, shall be debated in each House for not more than seven hours, after which time the question shall be decided in accordance with the rules of each House.

Senator Flynn: Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, I hardly think the Senate would require seven hours time for debate, but I did not alter that because I did not wish to complicate the text any more than it is.

The Acting Chairman: This will be the first time we have had a time limit fixed for the Senate. There is another problem, however, in that the Queen's Privy Council for Canada would have to submit the resolution to the Senate.

Senator Flynn: The Leader of the Government in the Senate is a member of the Privy Council.

The Acting Chairman: There are times when the Leader of the Government in the Senate is not a member of the Privy Council. That does present a problem. There are at all times in the Senate other members of the Privy Council who are not members of the Government.

Senator Flynn: It does not mention "of the Government". It is curious. It says, "member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada". That could mean any Privy Councillor.

Senator Forsey: Surely there is a personage who is called the Leader of the Government in the Senate who is a member of the ministry, is there not?

The Acting Chairman: There is no question about the present situation.

Senator Forsey: But is it not necessary now? Formerly you could have a situation where the Leader of the Senate was not a member of the cabinet, as was the case with Senator Aseltine; but I thought that now the Leader of the Senate had to be a member of the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Drury: If I may interject, Mr. Chairman, under the Rules of the House of Commons the particular phrase "a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada" means a member of the ministry. Resolutions, amendments and so on can be moved only by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada. That does not include members of the Queen's Privy Council on the opposition side or ex-members of the ministry.

Senator Flynn: If this were the only objection, Mr. Minister, I would be willing to move an amendment to change the text to meet that situation. However, I think we could vote on the principle and, if need be, we could amend this amendment.

The Acting Chairman: Is there any further discussion on Senator Flynn's amendment?

Senator Carter: I should like to ask Senator Flynn if the principle involved in his amendment applies only to clause 18(1)?

Senator Flynn: No, Senator Carter, it applies to both of the subclauses in clause 18.

Senator Carter: Once you have approved the principle there, it follows.

Senator Flynn: The idea of section 2 is to limit the debate. A question could be raised, but I do not mind. It is the question of principle only that I am concerned with.

Senator Carter: Well, I do not see the principle that because the house wants to debate it for seven hours, the Senate should want to debate it at all.

Senator Flynn: I would be satisfied to amend only section 1.

Senator Burchill: Well this is a matter of the organization of the house of Commons, and it is their business.

Senator Flynn: Well, as I say, I do not mind. We could put only "by resolution of the Senate and the House of Commons," in section 1 and leave section 2 as it is, because it concerns the House.

Senator Forsey: We would still have the opportunity to debate it under our own rules.

Senator Martin: I would like to point out in regard to this matter, and this is not my only reason for the intervention, but there is a practical consideration, and that is that an amendment to the bill at this time would, of course, mean its going back to the House of Commons. I agree that that is certainly our right and our privilege. But as Leader of the Government in the Senate, I have to think of our time-table. We have to think of some of the other difficulties that attend this matter, for example the long delay in having this measure passed in the other place which of course was not our fault, but that is nevertheless a very pertinent fact. Nevertheless, I put my argument on the basis of principle. As Senator Burchill has just observed, this is a matter which essentially concerns the organization of the ministry and it involves a possible vote of confidence in the ministry. While both houses may express a vote of confidence, only one house by its vote can affect the tenure of the executive, and I think that this provision is in consequence quite a proper one and surely in keeping with our concept and our practice of responsible government. Moreover, there is ample precedent for one house giving to another house powers that it is prepared in particular situations not to exercise. The delegation by one house of Parliament to another is not new in our system.

Senator Flynn: It happened only once, I guess.

Senator Martin: There are at least two cases that I know of. In 1963 we had the Divorce Act, when the House of Commons gave to the Senate exclusive authority to legislate in divorce matters. The important point is that we should not be precluded from passing an enactment in which that delegation is provided, and that is now, of course, provided for in this bill. For these reasons I would be opposed to this amendment.

Senator Flynn: In reply let me say this; the delegation of the powers from the House of Commons to the Senate in matters of divorce was to rid the House of Commons of a very burdensome job, whereas here it would not be difficult to pass a simple resolution. My second point is that if we approve of the creation of a Department of the Environment, I do not see why we should not be called upon to approve the creation of a ministry of state for specified purposes.

The Acting Chairman: Are there any other observations on this, honourable senators?

Senator Carter: Question!

The Acting Chairman: Will those who are in favour of the amendment, please raise their hands?

Three in favour.

Will those opposed to the amendment, please raise their hands?

Four opposed.

I declare the amendment lost.

Are there any other questions arising out of this bill which any senator cares to raise while the Minister is still with us?

Senator Flynn: No. We hope for the best.

The Acting Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Some hon. Senators: Agreed.

The committee adjourned.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1971

Fifth Proceedings on Bill S-9,

intituled:

"An Act to amend the Copyright Act"

(Witnesses:—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird,	Haig
Beaubien	Hayden
Benidickson	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Kinley
Choquette	Lang
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Macnaughton
Cook	Molson
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28)
Grosart

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, March 30, 1971:

"Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed the debate on the Motion of the Honourable Senator Urquhart, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cook, for the second reading of the Bill S-9, intituled: "An Act to amend the Copyright Act".

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Honourable Senator Urquhart moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Laird, that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Wednesday, June 16, 1971

(33)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9.30 a.m. to further consider the following Bill:

Bill S-9, "An Act to amend the Copyright Act".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Benidickson, Blois, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Desruisseaux, Grosart, Haig, Isnor, Lang, Macnaughton, Molson and Sullivan. (15)

Present but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senator Lafond. (1)

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel; Pierre Godbout, Assistant Law Clerk, Parliamentary Counsel and Director of Committees.

WITNESSES:

(Sound Recording Licences (SRL) Limited):

(Canadian Recording Manufacturers' Association):

Mr. Yves Fortier, Counsel;

Mr. Paul Amos, Counsel;

Mr. Fraser C. Jamieson, President (SRL);

Mr. F. T. Wilmot, President (CRMA).

At 12.15 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Wednesday, June 16, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill S-9, to amend the Copyright Act, met this day at 9.30 a.m. to give further consideration to the bill.

Senator Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we continue our hearings on Bill S-9. We have before us this morning the representatives of Sound Recording Licences (SRL) Limited, represented by Mr. Yves Fortier, their counsel. He will now present the other members of his panel.

Mr. Yves Fortier, Counsel, Sound Recording Licences (SRL) Limited; Canadian Recording Manufacturers' Association: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I have on my right my partner and colleague, Mr. Paul Amos. To his immediate right is the president of Sound Recording Licences (SRL) Limited, Mr. Fraser C. Jamieson; and to his right is the president of the Canadian Record Manufacturers' Association, Mr. Fred. Wilmot. As I look around me, this could well be a joint meeting of the Senate and the Canadian Recording Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. Chairman, I have had the privilege of hearing presentations to your committee on Bill S-9 in the course of the last month; and I have also read the transcript of those hearings which I did not attend. It appeared to me, on listening to presentations and upon reading others, that you had been fed a great deal of irrelevant material. I say this with the greatest of respect for my learned friends who preceded me here, but I still say it.

I will attempt to stay in what you have called the main stream of this hearing, which is Bill S-9, as presently before you; and I will be very brief.

It appears to me, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, that there are only four main points that need to be dealt with, and I will take them one by one. I certainly will not be reading from the brief, which has been in your hands for the last four weeks, I believe. I know that you have read through it. We have tried to make it as succinct as possible. We have tried to summarize the issues as we see them, and we are not going to go through the process of summarizing it again.

The four main points which I think you need to concern yourselves with, as you deal with Bill S-9, are, in my humble opinion, the following:

1. What are we dealing with? I am addressing myself now, I know, to honourable members of the Senate, some of whom are lawyers and businessmen, and I am sure that on none of you will be lost the fact that what we are dealing with is in fact an element of property. The Copyright Act deals with what has been referred to by the authors, over the years, as intellectual property, but property, nevertheless. It is property of the same kind as patent; it is property of the same kind as trade marks.

The Copyright Act is a very complex piece of legislation, even on the admission of those who have spoken before me, Mr. Chairman, on Bill S-9. I think it may be useful if, very briefly and very slowly, you and I looked at the Copyright Act. I do not know if you have been provided with copies. If not, since there are only some two or three sections I wish to deal with, I will summarize them for you.

I think it is useful, before we look at Bill S-9, to see what the Copyright Act says about copyright. Section 3(1) of the Canadian Copyright Act, which has been in existence since 1921, says that copyright means the sole right to produce or reproduce the work, or any substantial part thereof, in any material form whatsoever and to perform the work or any substantial part thereof. If I may stop there, this is what the definition of copyright is—one, the sole right to produce or reproduce work; and, two, the sole right to perform.

Now, what are we dealing with here? What is Bill S-9? Contrary to what has been suggested by some people, Bill S-9 is not legislation which is going to remove or going to do away with copyright in records. It is legislation which preserves the copyright in records but which, if I may use the word, dismembers the copyright because it removes the performing right.

What does the legislator say at the moment about the copyright which exists in records? Well, he says in section 4, subsection (3) of the act—and he said this in 1921:

(3) Copyright shall subsist for the term hereinafter mentioned.

And I will deal with that later.

(3) Copyright shall subsist... in records... in like manner as if such contrivances were musical, literary or dramatic works.

This was inserted in the original Copyright Act in 1921. At the same time as it was said for the purposes of the Canadian legislation in section 3(1) that copyright meant the sole right to produce or reproduce a work and the sole right to perform that work in public it also said that copyright "shall subsist... in records... in like manner as if such... were musical... works."

Bill S-9, as you are aware, honourable senators, deals with section 4, subsection (3), and it consecrates, if I may put it that way, or it recognizes that copyright shall continue to subsist in records. That is what the minister through whom the bill has been introduced is saying.

The minister is saying that copyright shall continue to subsist in records, but—and this is the nature of the amendment before you—he says in the new subsection (4) of section 4:

(4) Notwithstanding subsection (1) of section 3, for the purposes of this Act "copyright" means, in respect of any record, . . . the sole right to reproduce any such contrivance or any substantial part thereof in any material form.

I hope I have made my point clear. The legislator does not say we were wrong in 1921 to introduce protection in the Copyright Act for records. He says we were wrong in 1921 to introduce full protection as understood within the meaning of the Copyright Act of this and other countries. He says we were wrong to tie to the copyright the right of public performance. He is recognizing, honourable senators, that a record is worthy of some protection because he says that copyright shall subsist in records in like manner as if they were musical works. He recognizes that copyright will continue to subsist in records. He recognizes creativity. The copying right is not removed but, as I said earlier, the legislator is dismembering the copyright. In presenting this bill to you he says, "Let copyright in records subsist, but let there not be attached to this copyright the performing right."

At the risk of repeating myself, I would remind you of section 3(1) of the act: "For the purposes of this Act, 'copyright' means the sole right to produce or reproduce"—that is, to preserve, and "the sole right to . . . perform". That is what is being removed here.

I submit that the legislator, or the minister here, in introducing Bill S-9 in the form in which he has introduced it is being illogical. You cannot dismember copyright. Either you wipe it out altogether or you do not. If, by his own admission, there is an element of creativity in a record, which is worthy of protection under the Copyright Act, then I say that that element of creativity should also entitle the author—the author of the contrivance or author of the record, which is a term well-known to those who deal in copyright—the element of creativity should entitle the author to full protection; not only to protection from reproduction; not only to protection from piracy; but also to protection from use of his work by others for profit.

I will be returning to this very shortly, but this is essentially what we are dealing with here. Under the Copyright Act as presently existing, and as would exist if Bill S-9 becomes law, we are dealing with the author of a record, and we are dealing with that element of copyright by which the legislator is saying the author of that record is entitled only to some but not complete protection.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortier, are you saying that Parliament cannot or should not dismember?

Mr. Fortier: I am saying, Mr. Chairman, that Parliament should not. I am saying that it is illogical for Parliament to say on the one hand that it recognizes that there is creativity here which is worthy of protection but, on the other hand, that this protection will not carry with it the protection which all other copyright has under the law. I realize full well that Parliament is supreme and that Parliament can dismember copyright, if it wishes. But I say that it should not.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Fortier says that the act should not dismember copyright. Is the original author's or composer's performing right not already dismembered by the compulsory licence section?

Mr. Fortier: Quite the opposite, with respect, senator. Under the compulsory licence section of the act, section 19, there are, as you know, compulsory royalties which must be paid to the author or composer.

Senator Grosart: But it is a dismembering, because he ceases to have control of that right.

The Chairman: Dismembering does not involve losing control, does it?

Senator Grosart: That is the very point Mr. Fortier is making. The loss of control is the dismembering.

Mr. Fortier: I am afraid not.

Senator Grosart: If you cease to have the right to exercise control, that is a dismembering.

The Chairman: I did not take that as the point Mr. Fortier was trying to make.

Senator Grosart: I did.

Mr. Fortier: Perhaps I can attempt to answer the question, Senator Grosart. By dismemberment of the right I am saying that there are two elements to the copyright. On the one hand there is the element of protection from reproduction and on the other hand there is the element of compensation for public performance. The author or composer either under the terms of section 19 of the Copyright Act or under the terms of a non-compulsory licence still retains both elements of the copyright. He is still protected and compensated when there is a public performance of his work and he is still entitled to prevent others from producing or reproducing, except under the conditions set forth in the act.

Senator Grosart: But you say he ceases to have the right . . .

Mr. Fortier: He continues to have the right, but he is compensated for it.

Senator Grosart: What does "compulsory" mean? He is compelled by the statute to allow anybody to make a record.

Mr. Fortier: That is correct.

Senator Grosart: Once an original record has been made. If that is not dismembering of a right, I do not know what dismembering is. He is compelled. In other words, his right is completely taken away from him. He loses the right to say that record manufacturer "B" may or may not use his property.

Senator Cook: That is only limiting the right. It is not dismembering.

Mr. Fortier: For good and valuable consideration.

Senator Grosart: It depends how far you take the arm off.

The Chairman: Let us say the little finger.

Senator Grosart: You are introducing a new concept, that the record manufacturer now becomes the author. I suggest there is nothing in the Copyright Act that gives him that right. I suggest to you it does not make him the author.

Mr. Fortier: It may not be too, too important, but I wonder if I could direct your attention to section 10 of the Copyright Act with which you must be very familiar and which says:

10. The term for which copyright shall subsist in records, perforated rolls and other contrivances by means of which sounds may be mechanically reproduced shall be fifty years from the making of the original plate from which the contrivance was directly or indirectly derived, and the person who was the owner of such original plate at the time when such plate was made shall be deemed to be the author of such contrivance . . .

I did not invent the word; the legislators recognized in 1921 that the maker of a record was to be deemed to be the author of that record.

Senator Grosart: For the purpose of duration of copyright.

Mr. Fortier: Ditto with the author and composer.

Senator Grosart: The position of the author in the original author-composer sense has many other facets within the terms of copyright. That is my point, but it is not that important.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): This may not get us anywhere, but I wonder whether we could deal further with this point. You said that the author of a work because of copyright had the right to prevent performance by others for profit. Would you agree that he has even a further right and that is to prevent performance by others under any circumstances? For example, if the author of a musical work were to decide that a certain artist would probably perform the work very badly, I would assume that because of copyright the owner of that copyright or the author of the work could refuse to allow that artist to perform that work.

Mr. Fortier: It is a very pertinent question indeed, and I think there is an answer, Senator Connolly. Under the act as it exists today, unless, to use your words, "bad performance", is equivalent to infringement of copyright, then there is no discretion on the part of the author or composer to prevent that particular performer from recording or performing his work under the terms of section 19. This is what the Canadian statute says at the moment. But if that performance is tantamount to an infringement, because it is so bad—and that is a question of degree—then there could be an action for infringement and injunction.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Is infringement the only remedy the author has?

Mr. Fortier: Under the terms of section 19 and the compulsory licence provisions, senator, once the work has been recorded—and to be recorded for the first time the consent of the author-composer is required—but afterwards under the terms of section 19 there is what Senator Grosart referred to as a compulsory licence provision and there is no discretion on the part of the author.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): But the action is for infringement. It is not in some other area. I suppose damages could arise in an action of this kind.

Mr. Fortier: Right.

The Chairman: Well, senator, you know the opening words in section 19 are:

19. (1) It shall not be deemed to be an infringement of copyright in any musical, literary or dramatic work for any person to make within Canada records, perforated rolls, or other contrivances . . .

So it would appear to take the ground away from any recourse the author might have in wanting to exercise a right of selection.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Selection of performers?

The Chairman: Yes, of a performer.

Mr. Fortier: He could not select a performer because, as I said earlier, it is well settled, and I know Senator Grosart is familiar with this, that if the performer is performing the work so badly there could be an action for infringement since he could argue that this was not the rendition of his work.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It might derogate from his property rights.

Mr. Fortier: That is right. The point I was trying to make is that even under the terms of section 19 where the control has been removed, the right to compensation is recognized and it flows from the public performance, that if a record manufacturer and/or producer has made a record from an author's or composer's work and if he has applied for and has been granted a compulsory licence, then he must pay royalty to the author or composer under the terms of section 19. Consequently although control has been removed, compensation is recognized. That is the point on which I ended this first element of my presentation. The right is recognized, as it should be, indeed, in favour of the author or composer—that if his work is performed in public, he should be paid for it and he is being paid for it. The point I am making here is that S-9 is not only saying the record manufacturer cannot control but it is also saying that we are removing his right to be compensated where his work is used in public or performed in public.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You are removing the record manufacturer's rights here?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, senator.

Senator Grosart: Would you say, Mr. Fortier, that section 19 takes away the special status given to the recordmaker in terms of its performing rights where the record is made under compulsory licence?

Mr. Fortier: We have argued that point, senator, before the Copyright Appeal Board, and although, as you know, the Board does not publish the reasons for its decisions, I think it is implicit in the decision that such is not the case.

Senator Grosart: That is going very far in interpreting the effect of the Copyright Appeal Board's decision, particularly when the Copyright Appeal Board makes it very clear that it is not making a decision on that basis.

The Chairman: I do not think we need to make a decision on that basis either.

Senator Grosart: Would you read section 19, Mr. Fortier.

Mr. Fortier: Well, it is a very long section, senator.

Senator Grosart: The particular part that would appear to take away the special position respecting performing rights given to a record made under compulsory licence.

Mr. Fortier: With respect, senator, you will have to orient my eyes again, because I do not know where in the Copyright Act, whether in section 19 or in other sections, there is to be found such a provision.

Senator Grosart: It is the one that is generally referred to as possibly having that effect. You are well aware of it. You have argued it. You are aware of what I am speaking of. Would you read it?

Mr. Fortier: Respectfully, senator, no, I am not. This was my point before the Copyright Appeal Board, that there was no such subsection in section 19 which purported to remove the performing right in records.

Senator Grosart: Did someone suggest before the Copyright Appeal Board that there was?

Mr. Fortier: There were many things said before the Copyright Appeal Board.

Senator Grosart: I was not at the hearings of the Copyright Appeal Board. I am asking the question for information. Was there a particular wording in section 19 or elsewhere brought before the Copyright Appeal Board as possibly taking away the performing right from a record made under compulsory licence?

Mr. Fortier: Yes. Mr. John Mills, Q.C., counsel to CAPAC argued profusely and very eloquently that the whole of section 19 should be read as removing the performing right. However, if the board so found, it would not have granted an award. It was admitted that 99 per cent of the work before the Copyright Appeal Board were works produced under section 19. The only possible explanation of the decision of the board was that it did not retain that argument.

The Chairman: It seems to me that we are getting into an area which is not relevant. While a little is all right in order that anyone may have an opportunity to show his wide scope of reading and understanding, I think we should stay with the subject. Whatever the Copyright Appeal Board may have decided or did not decide is not an issue here, except that it has established a certain tariff.

Senator Grosart: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, it probably goes to the heart of the discussion. If by any chance that interpretation, as given to the Copyright Appeal Board, was correct, this bill would not be necessary.

The Chairman: If any person feels that he has rights under the Copyright Act, in the form of the presentation that you suggest was made, he can go to the courts and assert them. They are not relevant to this discussion here.

Senator Grosart: I do not know what could be more relevant than an argument which might presume to make this bill unnecessary.

Mr. Fortier: If that were the submission, senator, as indeed was the point made by you and Senator Flynn two weeks ago, that the bill was unnecessary, I would agree with you.

Senator Grosart: I am not asking that. I am merely saying that surely we are talking about something that is the heart of this whole discussion.

The Chairman: You are suggesting that we should interpret these sections of the bill, come to a conclusion and act on that conclusion. I thought the courts were there to do the interpretation.

Senator Grosart: Yes, they are; but we are here to decide whether Bill S-9 is necessary.

The Chairman: No; we are here to decide whether or not it should be enacted.

Senator Grosart: Which is the same thing. The question of the compulsory licence is very much the heart of the whole discussion of the bill, and in other respects too, because the compulsory licence takes away from the composer-author, who is the one I am interested in, the right to control his performing right by usage. The composer-author wants to assert that right. If there was no compulsory licensing section he would be able to assert that right.

The Chairman: We are not dealing with the composer here.

Senator Grosart: But we are dealing with the effect on the composer and on other people.

The Chairman: I do not think we are.

Senator Grosart: Of course we are.

The Chairman: Of course, the fact that you say so does not make it so.

Senator Grosart: I am talking about the effect of the bill on a certain section of the public. Surely you cannot say to me that we are not dealing with the interests of a particular group.

The Chairman: All I am saying is that because you say that, it does not make it so.

Senator Grosart: I am asserting it. I do not need to make it so. If I want to speak for the interests of any particular group affected by a bill before the Senate, I am perfectly entitled to do so.

The Chairman: As long as it is relevant.

Senator Grosart: It is relevant, because they are affected.

The Chairman: I suggest that it is not relevant. If the committee thinks it is relevant, then we can go ahead with it.

Senator Cook: I do not think it is.

The Chairman: Do you want to vote on this matter?

Senator Grosart: No. If you want to rule that way, I will have to accept your rule. I hope you will take a look at it and decide why a member of the committee is not entitled to say that the effect of a bill on a certain group is relevant to the discussion.

The Chairman: That is not what I have said.

Senator Grosart: All right; I will let it go. I am prepared to leave the record as it stands.

The Chairman: So am I.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): For the purpose of the record, I would like you to correct a statement that I propose to make. I direct my attention to the bill itself, which says:

copyright shall subsist... in records... and other contrivances... as if such contrivances were musical... works.

Subsection 4, which is a new section, says:

for the purposes of this act "copyright" means, in respect of any record... or other contrivance... the sole right to reproduce any such contrivance.

It does not seem to me that we are talking about performance. We are talking about the reproduction of a contrivance.

Mr. Fortier: You have read the two sections well, senator, but you have forgotten the first words of subsection 4:

Notwithstanding subsection (1) of section 3.

That is the one that I read at the outset of my presentation.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): For the purposes of this subsection, would you mind reading section 3(1)? I hope I am not taking too much time on this, but it seems to me to be the key point.

Mr. Fortier: With respect, I would agree that this is the key point. It is the one that I attempted to make. Section 3(1) reads as follows:

For the purposes of this Act, "copyright" means the sole right to produce or reproduce the work or any substantial part thereof in any material form whatever, to perform, or in the case of a lecture to deliver, the work or any substantial part thereof in public;

Those are the relevant lines of subsection 1 which I wish to bring to your attention.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): To summarize section 1, copyright exists for the author in the right to produce or reproduce, and in the right to perform.

Mr. Fortier: Correct, senator.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): And by the bill before us it is stated that copyright shall subsist in records as if they were musical works. "Copyright" means, in respect to any record, the sole right to reproduce any such contrivance or record.

Mr. Fortier: This is what I referred to earlier as recognition by the legislator of an element of creativity in a record.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): By the record maker?

Mr. Fortier: Yes. This is for his protection. This is what copyright is all about. Copyright is recognition of creativity and protection of creativity. Copyright includes not only the right to prevent others from copying your work, but the right to prevent others from using your work for profit.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): This is the point that was made before. You were not here at the meeting, when we heard from the CLC?

Mr. Fortier: No, I was not, but I have read the transcript.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): They said there was a copyright in the record manufacturer, and in addition they said the artists he employed to perform also had a right, not in the work but in the performance.

Mr. Fortier: This is a theory to which we subscribe, while we make the following two points. First...

The Chairman: Just one minute, Mr. Fortier. We are now wandering, are we not, in another direction.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I hope not.

Mr. Fortier: I will be dealing with that.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): If we are wandering, then let us not pursue it.

The Chairman: Our narrow point is the taking away of the right to produce, because the word "produce" is not reproduced in subsection (4) of the bill.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): No, that is right.

The Chairman: You do find it in section 3(1) of the act in the definition of copyright. I understood the point Mr. Fortier was making was that this amounts to a dismemberment of the copyright, but the amendment is preceded by the language "notwithstanding subsection (1) of section 3", so whatever appears in subsection 3(1), which Mr. Fortier read, that is what copyright is intended to mean as and when and if this bill becomes law, and it relates only to "reproduced" not to "produced".

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Not to "produced", to "reproduced"; that is right.

Mr. Fortier: And not to "perform".

The Chairman: And not to "perform".

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): In other words, it is copying a production.

Mr. Fortier: What is called the performing right, which flows from copyright under all legislations where copyright in records is recognized. I will be coming to your point about the performer's right; should I say, in the performance embodied in the record.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I am not really interested in that, because I think have made their case. I think we should direct ourselves to your problem, which has to do with the making of the record.

Mr. Fortier: That is correct. I think you have opened the door very naturally to my second point, having attempted to make the first one. My second point is: why should there be copyright in a record? The question has been put by honourable senators. It has been suggested to you by people who have preceded me here that the record manufacturer was nothing but a presser. I have seen hands used in this way, denoting pressing, a number of times.

You referred to the presentation by Mr. Dodge of the CLC and his associates. Let me start developing this point by telling you that I am not aware of anything that has happened since 1921, when the Copyright Act was enacted in Canada, which would justify the legislator today saying: "That creativity, which we recognized in 1921 was worthy of protection under the terms of the Copyright Act, no longer exists. Consequently the copyright in the record should not include the performing right. Records were made in 1921; records are made 50 years later in 1971. However"...

The Chairman: Mr. Fortier, just stop there. You say nothing has been said. We have had evidence before us when the people making statements have been singing in a high key as to the cost, and putting that forward as a factor supporting this legislation.

Mr. Fortier: The cost to whom?

The Chairman: The cost to them of having to pay a tariff to SRL.

Mr. Fortier: You mean the poor broadcasters?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: I was going to end the sentence by saying nothing has happened with respect to the record itself.

except of course that the mechanics have developed and they are now more refined and more sophisticated, but there is a new element that has been introduced since 1921, which is broadcasting; that has happened since 1921. The only purpose, the only possible purpose, of Bill S-9 is to allow the broadcasters, commercial and public—and I will have something to say about the CBC very briefly—to use the record, to sell time before a record is played and after a record is played; to sell it, to make profit from the use they make of our records. You have asked the question, "Can they afford?" I know that Mr. Estey last week said—and I took his words down—that it was an earthshaking emergency for broadcasters. He was referring to the tariff of 0.15 per cent of their income.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): With deference, Mr. Chairman, when we get into the question of cost are we not getting into the problem of irrelevancy here? Should we not direct our attention to whether or not there is property? Is that not our main purpose, and is that not the purpose of this bill?

The Chairman: All I was saying when Mr. Fortier was developing his argument was that a further point has been developed before us, and it has to do with the question of the tariff that has to be paid.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It has great weight.

The Chairman: We have to give some regard to it, even if it is to dismiss the point. We may say the cost is negligible for the benefit obtained, or we may say it is not relevant to the issue, that we should resolve the issue quite apart from the question of cost and let the cost fall into its proper place. We were told last time about all the money and increasing funds made from fees that have been paid. Mr. Fortier, have you any figures to show how much the broadcasting business has improved dollarwise over the same period of time?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, I do. I would like to submit, though, that I am in full agreement with Senator Connolly's point, that this is completely irrelevant to the consideration of Bill S-9. I submit that it should not influence your consideration in one way or another.

Since that argument has been used against our clients, may I quote very briefly from an authority no other than your colleagues on the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media, which was chaired by Senator Davey. In Volume I of the report, at page 57, under the heading "Economics of Broadcasting", this committee of the Senate said:

These revenues . . .
of Canada's television and radio stations . . .

have increased enormously in the past decade or so. Net advertising revenues in the TV industry have grown from $8.6 million in 1954 to about $118 million in 1968—an increase of 1,272 per cent!

The Chairman: We have to give some regard to it, even if it is to dismiss the point. We may say the cost is negligible for the benefit obtained, or we may say it is not relevant to the issue, that we should resolve the issue quite apart from the question of cost and let the cost fall into its proper place. We were told last time about all the money and increasing funds made from fees that have been paid. Mr. Fortier, have you any figures to show how much the broadcasting business has improved dollarwise over the same period of time?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, I do. I would like to submit, though, that I am in full agreement with Senator Connolly's point, that this is completely irrelevant to the consideration of Bill S-9. I submit that it should not influence your consideration in one way or another.

Senator Haig: Not all from the use of records though.

The Chairman: Not just from playing records.

Mr. Fortier: No. That is not my submission.

Radio revenues almost tripled between 1954 and 1968.

At page 62 Senator Davey's committee said:

The other thing to note is how wondrously profitable some broadcasting operations can be. The largest revenue-group of TV stations, for instance, earned a before-tax profit (one quity) of 98.5 per cent in 1964. At that rate, even after taxes, shareholders would recover their entire investment in two years!

Senator Moslon: Is he including the CBC there?

Mr. Fortier: I am afraid he is not, Senator Molson. I think that was a loss of $45 million last year.

Senator Molson: Not the real loss. It was much greater than that. That was the book loss.

Mr. Fortier: He goes on to say:

In most other industries, that kind of margin would be considered fabulous.

Finally, in Volume II of the Davey Report there is, Mr. Chairman, the last table, on pages 571 and 572. It is a table showing the total operating revenue, the total operating expenses and the net operating profit, of the privately owned radio and television stations in the broadcasting industry for the years 1965 to 1969. We see that in radio the net operating profit between those two years has gone from $7 million in 1965 to $14 million in 1969.

Senator Burchill: The small radio stations afford a very meagre profit.

Mr. Fortier: That is an excellent point, senator. This is why you will have noticed that, in the award of the Copyright Appeal Board, there is a provision made for those radio stations with gross income of less than $100,000, being charged a licence fee of $1 a year. This was not the decision of the board. This was a submission by my clients before the board, that in respect of the tariff which they had filed, it should not apply to those stations with a gross income of less than $100,000. So we recognized your point, senator.

Senator Cook: Would it be fair to say that both the major contenders before the committee are doing all right, both the record industry and the others.

Mr. Fortier: I think you would be most fair, senator.

The Chairman: There is no risk of insolvency in either.

Mr. Fortier: I think it would be most fair. We are most fortunate in Canada in having a quasi judicial tribunal such as the Copyright Appeal Board to protect the public interest and decide, as it has since 1935 whether the argument of "biting the hand that feeds you" is a valid one.

Senator Cook: They decide as to quantum—if the right should exist.

Mr. Fortier: That is correct.

Senator Haig: I would ask Mr. Fortier to compare the rate of profits made by radio and television companies. Can he say that the record companies have made further progress than that?

Mr. Fortier: I can say that record companies have made progress. The figures were referred to, as I recall, by Mr. Estey two weeks ago, senator, and which we are not disputing.

So, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, why is a record worthy of protection? As I have indicated, it appears to me that nothing has happened since 1921 which would make a record today less worthy of protection than it was in 1921. Why protection under the terms of the Copyright Act? Mr. Estey, my learned friend and very good friend, I may add, said to you, two weeks ago, that there were no judicial authorities for the proposition that a performing right in record was justified from the "protection" point of view.

My friend Mr. Estey was in error. May I please direct you to page 2 of our brief, wherein we quote a very short passage from the leading case, the Gramophone Company Limited vs. Stephen Cawardine, which was decided in England in 1934. Mr. Justice Maugham in that case, after finding, under the terms of legislation similar to that which we have in Canada, that the copyright which existed in a record was one which carried with it a performing right, said this, obviously because of arguments made to him by the respondent:

... I see no injustice or unfairness which is likely to arise from my construction of the section. On the other hand, I can see considerable objection, from that standpoint, to the view that persons may obtain, without doing anything more than buying a record, the advantage of the work, skill and labour expended by the makers of gramophone records for the purposes of a public performance.

It has been suggested to me that it is unfair that the user of a record should pay because he is really not using someone else's property. So, after finding in this case that there was public performance which accompanied the copyright in a record, this is what he found, that there was work, there was skill and there was labour expended by the makers of gramophone records, and that this work, this skill and this labour made the maker of the record entitled to compensation when his work was used for profit.

These, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, are the three elements which we find in any work which is given protection under the Copyright Act. We find skill, we find labour, which combined together, give that property, intellectual in kind, a protection recognized by the legislator.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Fortier, before you go on, is that not a case involving a composition which was in the public domain, so there was no question whatsoever of prior ownership of the performing right?

Mr. Fortier: Of course, as indeed I am well aware, it was a work which was in the public domain but, with respect, senator, there is no distinction which is made in the judgment, as to whether the work is in the public domain or not, and I do not see that it makes any difference.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): What is the year?

Mr. Fortier: 1934.

Senator Grosart: It makes a great deal of difference. I just call it to your attention because you had not mentioned it was a work in the public domain.

Mr. Fortier: We were dealing with the record, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators. Mr. Justice Maugham was going on and was dealing with the record and he said, with respect to that record, that it was a performing right and it was fair that there should be a performing right.

It is very difficult, it seems to me, to come before this august body and attempt to convince you that the producer of a record is infusing an input of creativity whenever he makes a contrivance.

You will recall, honourable senators, the evidence adduced before you by Mr. Stephen Stewart, Director General of the International Federation of the Phonographic Industry. He said, on this very point, that the copyright legislation the world over recognized different kinds of creativity. All creativity is not necessarily a stroke of genius. He brought to the attention of the committee, for example, the fact that the translator of a work was given protection under the terms of the Copyright Act and that there had never been any suggestion that the translator of a work should not continue to be protected under the terms of the Copyright Act. He drew a parallel between the producer of a record and the translator of a work, whose creativity certainly is not as great as the creativity of the author of the work but who is entitled to protection.

I make the same submission to you today. I submit that the producer of a record, the man who brings the artist into the studio, the man who provides the arrangements in a musical sense for the recording of a particular piece of music, the man who uses, with his own experience, the 16 sound tracks which he has to adjust and on which he has to work for days and days before he can produce a record which can be pressed in a final and definite fashion—I say that with respect to that man the element of creativity that man brings to the end product is just as great as that of the author or composer and just as great as that of the performer, Senator Connolly, because we subscribe to the "trinity theory", as it has been referred to.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It is theologically sound.

Mr. Fortier: Theologically and, I suggest, also "fairly" sound. It is sound that it should be recognized that for a record to be made there must be an author and/or composer; there must be a performer; there must be a record producer. Without any one of those three elements you will not have a record.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You say that each one of these three has a property right?

Mr. Fortier: I say, senator, that under our law as it exists today only two of them have property rights. The author or composer and the record producers. The performer does not under our Canadian Copyright Act have a property right recognized by the act. We say, and there is evidence before you to this effect, that the performer should be entitled to share in the royalties which will be paid to us by the users of our records.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): That is a matter outside this bill.

Mr. Fortier: With respect, senator, I think it has relevance because it has been said here that there has been no deal between the record producers and the performers, and that is true. There has been no deal. But three months ago there was a firm offer made to the Canadian Union of Performing Artists. It was a voluntary offer on our part, and with respect to division of the royalties it was identical to that which obtains in England. It was a 50-50 proposition which we were making to the performers, and I have it on good authority that the only reason why the deal has not been finalized at the moment is that as between the different unions who are members of the Canadian Union of Performing Artists there was no agreement as to how it should be divided. That is the only reason there has been no agreement yet. But there will be.

So I say that, without the record producer, the author or composer would not derive any royalties, obviously, from the sale of records.

The Chairman: Obviously, Mr. Fortier, if you did not have the vehicle of records, there would be a limit to the number of live performances as compared with the number of performances by the use of records. Therefore, with respect to the composer, artist and author of musical works, there is a greatly increased potential range of revenue for him.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, indeed, Mr. Chairman. I agree with you. It would be unthinkable today in 1971 that broadcasters could dream of bringing into the studio live performers and pay them the way live performers would expect to be paid. Broadcasters admittedly—and it is in evidence before the Copyright Appeal Board—use records to an extent as high as 70 per cent of the time. Those stations referred to as the top 40 stations you listen to on your car radio or in your home on occasion, not always by choice, use records for profit up to 70 per cent of the air time, but, as I have said, they could not dream of bringing live performers into their studios and pay them the way they would expect to be paid. So your point is indeed well taken.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Fortier, you have made the point that there is an element of creativity in the making of a record and that that element should be protected. That is a very good point. Have you not also made the point that it is already protected, regardless of any change in the Copyright Act and regardless of this bill? That creativity is in the making of a record and, regardless of this bill or anything else, that remains fully protected. The creativity is in the record and that right is still recognized, notwithstanding this bill or anything else. So you are really arguing against yourself. The right is already there in the creativity, in the making of the record, in the thing, and the copyright in the thing is undisturbed in any way by anything we are discussing here. Is that not right?

Mr. Fortier: With respect, Senator Grosart, that is wrong indeed.

Senator Grosart: Why is it wrong?

Mr. Fortier: Because copyright in the record is not respected in any way, as you say. Quite the contrary. Copyright in the record is now defined as meaning only the right to prevent reproduction and it excludes the right to control public performance of the record.

Senator Grosart: I agree, but the right to prevent reproduction of the thing created is still there, and that is one aspect of copyright, surely.

Mr. Fortier: What we are dealing with here, senator, is the right to use for profit. That is what we are dealing with. The minister is saying that he is removing from the Copyright Act the obligation which now exists under the act that anyone who uses in public for profit the work of a record producer—in other words, a record—must compensate fairly and equitably the maker of that record. But the legislator is saying, “no”. He says, “No matter if there is any compensation which should be paid; what I am saying now is that in future it will be used for profit by broadcasters. They will not have to pay for it”.

I say that that is unfair. That is a dismemberment of the copyright as we know it, as they know it in England, as they know it in the jurisdictions of most major countries today and as they are going to know it in the United States, because there is a bill, as in evidence before you, before Congress in the United States which was introduced in February of this year which recognizes the copyright in records with the right of the public performance attached to it.

Senator Cook: Mr. Chairman, we all recognize that if this bill is passed it will result in a grave interference with what Mr. Fortier and SRL consider are their rights. I think we need hardly go any further on that point.

The Chairman: I think you are right, Senator Cook.

Senator Grosart: I agree that if this bill is passed it will take away from the record companies a source of revenue which they claim to have under the act as it exists. I am not arguing that. The point that seems to be lost in this discussion, however, is that the record companies live by and profit by the statutory compulsory access to the performing right. The author has no control over that. The record companies have the compulsory right to it. That is why the composer or author says, “If I am going to be forced to give that to you, then take out section 19 altogether.” Would you be happy, Mr. Fortier, if section 19 were to come out altogether and you had to deal directly with the author or composer?

Senator Cook: Surely that is another point altogether.

Senator Grosart: It is very much to the point.

The Chairman: Senator Grosart, have you given thought to the possibility that a substitute for what now exists in statutory form might be that you would have to go to the Copyright Appeal Board to fix what the tariff would be?

Senator Grosart: Yes, of course, and no composer or author would ever object to going before the Copyright Appeal Board.

The Chairman: This again is a parallel line of argument. Because the rights of composers might be said to be affected adversely by the compulsory licensing, then this bill should pass or should not pass, either one. But I do not think that is the argument. The argument may be that this bill does not go far enough. That may be your point. But it is not an answer to say, “Don't permit these people to retain a right which they have because the authors and composers or unfairly dealt with under the section of the Copyright Act itself.” There would be some affirmative action by them if that is their point.

Senator Grosart: It is true, and I think every one agrees, that the whole Copyright Act is in need of revision. It goes back to 1921, as Mr. Fortier has said, and it is out of date in many ways.

The Chairman: That may be a good reason for not dealing piecemeal with this. At the moment, while I have not finalized my feeling on this, I feel that the Copyright Act as it stands has certainly reached the stage where there should be wholesale revision.

Senator Grosart: I would agree with that, but I would not agree that this is an argument for not dealing piecemeal. We have scores of bills before us each session which deal piecemeal with revisions of existing acts. It is a necessary way of doing it.

The Chairman: But we are always told the great urgency which makes it necessary to deal piecemeal with such acts, but here we are told that the great urgency is the tremendous increase in cost, and that has been dissipated by the decision of the Copyright Appeal Board.

Senator Grosart: But there is a principle involved here and it is that principle I am speaking to. We must always remember that the composer author, the original owner of the property which is being dealt with, has had his rights to negotiate the use of that taken away by statute.

The Chairman: I thought we had decided a few moments ago that this was getting beyond the stage of relevancy and that you accepted that.

Senator Grosart: Well, if you want to rule again . . .

The Chairman: I am not ruling again.

Senator Grosart: Well, if you want to invoke that ruling in connection with this which I agree is another aspect of it, but is one which I think is vital because the record companies are asking that this bill be not passed so that they can exercise certain rights which they have not exercised for many years. That in itself is not a point. The composer author says they should not have this right as long as it does not derive by contractual negotiations from the original owner, and that is the whole point, and that is why the composer authors would support this bill. They say the record companies are taking advantage, and quite properly so, of the compulsory licence. I asked Mr. Fortier would he be happy to have section 19 taken out of the Copyright Act and be in a position where you negotiate the right to make that record with the original author-composer.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortier can protect himself. I do not regard the question as being relevant. If he wants to volunteer an answer, I am not going to shut him off. But I do respect him as being a very good lawyer.

Senator Cook: It may confuse some other members of the committee too, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fortier: As Senator Grosart knows, we already negotiate with the author composer in respect of the first record.

Senator Grosart: Not "we". What percentage of the records we are dealing with are under compulsory licence? What proportion of the records distributed by SRL members in Canada come under compulsory licensing?

Mr. Fortier: More than 90 per cent.

Senator Grosart: This is what we are dealing with, Mr. Chairman, and that is why I say it is highly relevant. The records we are dealing with are under compulsory licence.

The Chairman: Well, you have made your point now for the second time as to the relevancy, and I have said that I do not think it is relevant. I offered to have the view of the committee canvassed and you said it was not necessary. I repeat the offer.

Senator Grosart: You may have to rule against me again.

The Chairman: Not "again". I am just calling your attention to the fact that a ruling was made.

Senator Grosart: Well, you may have to call my attention to it again because I intend to assert my right to ask questions if I think they are relevant, and I expect you will assert your right to rule whether they are relevant or not.

The Chairman: Not my right, my duty.

Senator Grosart: Both.

Senator Molson: I would like to ask Mr. Fortier why this matter has taken 50 years to come to a head. Why have not the record companies exercised this right that they claim that they have? I don't think in fact that they claim they have the right; I think it is there. But why have they delayed 50 years before worrying about the royalties which might accrue in the course of performing records?

Mr. Fortier: Well, Senator Molson, I think there are possibly three answers to your question. The first is that the performance in public of records—and I think by "public" here you have to understand it is almost exclusively radio stations, so let us say we are dealing with radio stations—has only reached the intensity which you and I know exists today since the end of the second world war. This is one of the reasons. Up to that time there was not the extensive public use in Canada for profit made of records. You and I will recall that bands were performing live much more often until 15 or 20 years ago than they do today, and when you say they were performing live, that means not only on stage but also on radio. That is one answer. Senator Molson. Another answer stems from the fact that I will have to admit that amongst the eight major record manufacturers in Canada, there are six which are subsidiaries of American companies and until a few years ago there was very little furor in the United States for the inclusion in the copyright legislation of a copyright in records. It is only in recent years that there has been clamour for the recognition by Congress in the United States of this right, and it is only very recently that there has been an indication from one of the committees of the United States Senate that this right would be recognized in the very near future. Consequently I have to admit that the fact that it did not exist in the United States had some bearing on the fact it was not exercised in Canada.

Senator Cook: Did you say that it would be recognized or it might be recognized?

Mr. Fortier: That it would be recognized. It is presently in a bill before a United States Senate committee. There is a recommendation by a Senate committee, and recommendations by a Senate committee there are as weighty as they are here.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Flattery will get you nowhere.

Mr. Fortier: This point should be recognized.

Senator Grosart: In fairness, perhaps you would agree that there was a bill approved by the committee of the House of Representatives which did not include the right, and that bill was not passed. This occurred a couple of years ago.

Mr. Fortier: That is correct.

Senator Grosart: Would you say, in connection with the bill that is coming from the Senate committee, that it might not become law?

Mr. Fortier: All I can say is that it has come out of a Senate committee with the exact wording in the proposed legislation, that the copyright in records shall include the performing right.

Senator Molson: Getting back to the question of frequent or common performances, what are the reasons for the 50-year delay?

Mr. Fortier: There is another answer also, senator, which may be of immediate concern to your colleague on your right. In Newfoundland that right was recognized as recently as 1941. One of the few things that Newfoundland lost when it joined Confederation in 1948 was this performing right in records.

Senator Cook: They became more sophisticated.

Senator Molson: There must have been many records made there prior to 1941. I wonder what the dollar loss to Newfoundland has been.

Mr. Fortier: I will not venture a guess. However, it is interesting to note that it did exist in Newfoundland. It also existed to a certain extent in Canada in respect of transcription programs, with which you must be familiar. We refer to it in our brief. At the bottom of page 14 we say:

It is often stated that record producers have never exercised their performing rights in Canada. This is not true. Prior to the introduction of tapes, transcription services provided 16" 33 rpm discs which were only permitted to be used by subscribing broadcasters.

These transcription services were in fact an exercise by record manufacturers of the performing right in records. This was done until we did away with transcription services about 15 years ago. In the meantime, SRL has been formed.

This may not be a complete answer, Senator Molson, but as you are well aware there has never been any attempt by record manufacturers to collect public performance fees in respect of past public performance.

The Chairman: The next sentence seems to be pertinent to Senator Molson's question.

Mr. Fortier: Yes. The Canadian Talent Library is a division of Standard Broadcasting Corporation, which was represented by Mr. Estey, has exercised its performing right, as we say in our brief, in a very active manner for the last six or seven years. Is that approximately the period, Senator Grosart?

Senator Grosart: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: The Canadian Talent Library is a division of one of the largest broadcasting companies in Canada, and, I might say, one of the very good ones.

The Chairman: And it produces records.

Mr. Fortier: And it produces records. It leases its records to radio stations across Canada for a fee. On its records is written, "No right to broadcast this record unless public performance fees have been paid," or words to that effect. So the very people today, who with author-composers, are in favour of Bill S-9 have in fact been enforcing the performing right in records for some years.

Senator Grosart: They have really been enforcing the basic copyright in supplying the record. If my information is correct, they have not been collecting performing right fees.

Mr. Fortier: They are charged for the broadcasting.

Senator Grosart: They are not performing right fees. They cannot collect performing right fees unless they have a tariff before the Copyright Appeal Board.

Mr. Fortier: They are being compensated for the use made of their record. That is the way I understand it.

The Chairman: For the use in public of their record.

Senator Grosart: But that is a very different thing from collecting a performing right fee.

The Chairman: However you slice it, Senator Grosart, the fact still remains that in order to be able to use for broadcasting purposes records produced by the Canadian Talent Library, you have to pay money.

Senator Grosart: Any radio station can go out and buy a record for $2. The $2 payment gives them the right to publicly perform. Any radio station can buy a record for $1 or 59 cents and play it. Is that not so, Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: Yes. We even give away some of our records.

Senator Grosart: Was it 6,000 records that you gave away last year to CBC alone?

Mr. Fortier: There are many records given away.

Senator Grosart: I think somewhere I saw that figure. You are so anxious to get public performance, that you gave away 6,000 to the CBC.

The Chairman: That has been said so often that we do not need the weight of your statement to add to the strength of the evidence.

Senator Grosart: I do not know whether we need it, but I suggest that I have the right to make a comment.

Mr. Fortier: I was speaking about the Canadian Talent Library. I said it was owned by Standard Broadcasting. It is also pertinent to note that the Canadian Association of Broadcasters have recently formed a recording company called Astra Records Ltd. In their publicity material they say that the reason why Astra Records Ltd. has been formed is to provide insurance against SRL. Astra Records has produced to our knowledge one record to date. The label on the record also indicates that performing right royalties have to be paid if that record is to be used in public.

Again, broadcasters are acknowledging that there is such a thing as a performing right. If their property is being used in public for profit, they should be paid for it.

Senator Molson: That is an extension of the answer to my question. I was asking about time. In a great deal of what we are allowed to do by law there are prescriptive times; there are times after which we cannot do things. If I do not put a fence across my field and it is used consistently by you in driving your car, it then becomes a public right-of-way after, I think, seven years. What about the time element in a right such as this? We are talking about a term of 50 years. Is this without any term of prescription as to the type of right?

Mr. Fortier: The tariffs are annual. Under the terms of the Copyright Act a performing right society, CAPAC, BMI, and now SRL, must apply every year to the Copyright Appeal Board for the approval of their tariff. Perhaps another element in your question would go to the term of the copyright. As you said, it is 50 years from the making of the original contrivance. The meaning of this is that after 50 years the work in question becomes, as Senator Grosart said earlier, part of the public domain. There can be no royalties owing to the producer of a record which is in the public domain. Therefore these works are not submitted to the Copyright Appeal Board in yearly presentations made by the Performing Rights Society.

Clearly, as I said earlier, there could be no question of retroactivity. We are not claiming for the use which may have been made in previous years. We are only claiming at the moment, for example, with respect to 1971. We will make an application at the end of this year, in conformity with the act, for 1972. We will have to appear again before the Copyright Appeal Board, which will deal once again with quantum.

Senator Molson: Yes, but you are claiming a right which was granted 50 years ago and has not been exercised.

Mr. Fortier: No, there is no element of prescription in the picture today. I would defer to my senior colleague, the Chairman, if he feels differently.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): In effect you are saying that the copyright, by law, is given a life of 50 years.

The Chairman: It is the life of the author plus 50 years.

Mr. Fortier: No, not in the case of a record. We have to look at section 10.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): A record is 50 years, since it is a thing that does not die.

The Chairman: The life is 50 years from the making of the original plate.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): That is what I understood.

Mr. Fortier: This is really all we are dealing with when we speak of creativity. I told you I would come back to section 10. It provides that the owner of the original plate, that means the first record producer who cuts the record, as they say in the trade, who has the recording studio, hires the performers, makes the arrangement in the studio, brings in this input of creativity which we submit, as the legislator has recognized, is worthy of protection.

To my knowledge this has never been argued anywhere, even before this committee, that at this juncture, that is the time when the first record is made, there is not a high element of creativity introduced. Under the terms of section 10 this is when the author happens. It is of the essence of copyright that there must be an author. La loi sur les droits d'auteurs. There must be an "auteur"; there must be an author. However, section 10 provides that with respect to records the first man is the author. All the others who press records from a tape made by the author have no more rights than the original one. All the rights flow from the author, in the same way that the author of a book assigns his rights to a publisher and the creator of the patent assigns his rights to users of the patent. The producer who made the record in the studio originally, wherever that may be in the world—music, as you know, is international—the United States, England, France or Canada, is the author of the record and he assigns to others the right to make records from that tape.

The records which are made from that original tape are entitled to protection under the terms of the act. The records made from that tape are entitled to protection in the same way that an assignee of a patent is entitled to protection under the terms of the Patent Act.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): This bill provides that protection, though.

The Chairman: No, this bill would remove it.

Mr. Fortier: It removes an integral element of the copyright. Copyright means not only the right to prevent reproduction, as you and I...

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Let us get it straight; perhaps I am horribly confused. As I understand it, this bill protects your right to prevent the record being copied.

Mr. Fortier: That is correct. That right can only be given to a copyrighted work.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I assume that you have a copyright in that originally pressed record and no one can produce that contrivance.

Mr. Fortier: No one can reproduce it.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Reproduce it; all right, no one can reproduce it or copy it.

Mr. Fortier: That is correct.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Without infringing on your rights. However, you complain that you should also have the right to control the performance of whatever copies of the original are made.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, senator. Copyright means, and this is provided by section 3(1), not only the right to reproduce, but the right to perform.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): That is right; you say that the performing right given you by section 3 should also flow through.

Mr. Fortier: Should continue to flow through, as it does in respect of all other copyrighted work.

Senator Cook: The performing right has now become much more valuable than the right of reproduction.

Mr. Fortier: That is a very important point. Last year in the United States in excess of $100 million was lost by record manufacturers because of piracy, dubbing, illegal reproduction of records.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): In whole or in part.

Mr. Fortier: In whole or in part.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): That is what you mean by dubbing.

Mr. Fortier: Yes. This supplied the impetus to the United States Congress to bring in legislation earlier this year. Senator Grosart knows that that legislation has now granted a limited copyright to the record producer, the right to prevent reproduction.

Senator Cook: We already have that here.

The Chairman: We even have the performing right here.

Mr. Fortier: It is a moot point as to which is more important. They are equally important; this is why both the right to reproduction and the right to public performance flow at the bottom of the pyramid from the copyright in any work. Whether it be by author, composer or translator, all copyrighted work comprises the sole right to reproduction and the sole right to perform in public.

Now the minister is suggesting to you in respect of records that we close our eyes to what copyright really means and write into our law that copyright in respect of records only means the sole right to reproduce, not the sole right to perform.

Senator Cook: That is an interesting figure, $100 million estimated loss as a result of piracy in the United States.

Mr. Fortier: In the United States in 1970.

Senator Cook: Which means that some well-known records, such as . . .

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): "Hello Dolly!"

Senator Cook: Yes, "Hello Dolly!" is recorded by a very well-known company, then taken by another record manufacturer.

Mr. Fortier: These are fly-by-night operators.

Senator Cook: This is where you obtain the figure of $100 million?

Mr. Fortier: That is correct; they dub the music by using a small recording machine. They press this new record and put on a label.

Senator Cook: There was no protection against that?

Mr. Fortier: There was no protection. There now is in the United States.

Senator Grosart: As there is here.

Mr. Fortier: As there is here, and always has been since 1921.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Are you saying that you want to live by the present act, and more particularly section 3, which gives you a performing right?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, I am saying that.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): In other words, this bill takes the performing right away, and therefore deprives you of a property right which your client has in the contrivance he makes?

Mr. Fortier: I could not have put it any better. That is correct.

The Chairman: Have you another point, Mr. Fortier? I think we have shaken this one to pieces.

Mr. Fortier: I do. Perhaps I might end that point by reminding you that we have extended an invitation to members of this committee to attend in a recording studio. I do not know whether that letter has been communicated to you.

The Chairman: It has been distributed.

Mr. Fortier: It has been distributed to the members of the committee?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: I am reiterating this offer. It seems to me that the only way you can convincingly have demonstrated to you the input of creativity, work, skill and labour—to use the words of Mr. Justice Maugham in the Cawardine case—which is expended by the record producer, is if you came into a recording studio and saw what the record producer does in producing a record.

A few years ago, in 1967, there was a book published entitled Ring Resounding. It is the history of the English Decca company's mammoth venture in recording Wagner's "Ring" complete for the first time. It took the producer of that record eight years to produce the record. I know Senator Grosart is very familiar with it.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Was it a single record?

Mr. Fortier: It was 14 L.P.s in all.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Two-side L.P.s?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, two-side L.P.s.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Twenty-eight sides?

Mr. Fortier: Twenty-eight sides, yes. You could argue that it does not take eight years to produce, say, "Hello Dolly".

Senator Cook: Or "Itsie-Bitsie-Witsie".

Mr. Fortier: No, it does not. I suggest to you, however, that it takes an element of creativity. I said earlier there was a whole range to creativity. There can be a good book and a bad book. There can be a useful patent and a less useful patent. I think this is what we are dealing with here. The moment there is an element of creativity there is intellectual property, and it should be protected. Whether it is a record that is eight years in the making, spending millions and millions of dollars in producing it, or one made in eight hours in a recording studio, there is still an element of creativity; it should be protected, there should be copyright, and copyright includes public performing right.

Senator Carter: Extending this line of argument, would you not eventually get down to the technician who controls the knob having a part in the creativity, and someone who puts something here instead of someone else having a part in the creativity? Where would you stop?

Mr. Fortier: Not any more than I would recognize, for example, that the person to whom the author of a book may have dictated it was entitled to a copyright. If I, the record producer, employ a technician, he is working for me, but his input is part of the total input that goes to constitute the copyright vested in me, the producer. I think with respect, I would not carry it that far.

Senator Cook: Really, are not the producers the shareholders of the company, and in the final analysis they own the record?

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Senator Cook: What do they have to do with it being creative? They get their dividends, smoke cigars and so on.

Mr. Fortier: I am sorry that I lost this point on you, Senator Cook.

Senator Grosart: They create capital.

Senator Cook: In the final analysis, the shareholders of the company own the record.

Mr. Fortier: Whether we are dealing with a company which is a producer or whether we are dealing with an individual, with respect it does not make any difference, because the law of the Copyright Act, no more than the Companies Act, does not make that sort of distinction; the corporate veil is respected.

Senator Cook: But it is the person who creates the originality who is entitled to the copyright.

Mr. Fortier: That is what the producer of a record does, whether he is employed by a company or whether he is an independent producer.

Senator Cook: He does not get it. The shareholders of the company get the royalty.

The Chairman: But you have a statutory author under section 10.

Mr. Fortier: If you look at section 10 you have the complete answer, I suggest, to your query.

The Chairman: You have to use imagination and some creativity to understand this.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Fortier, when we discuss the question that has just been raised, as to how far you proliferate the exercise of the performing right, would you say the situation at the moment in practice in Canada is that the exercise of the performing right in respect to receipt of royalties is limited to the original creator, and that you and others, performers, who may wish to share in the performing right are all users?

Mr. Fortier: No, I would strongly disagree with that. Your statement is doing away with the following very pertinent proposition. You are dealing with two different types of property. You are dealing with two different works. There is embodied in a record the work of the author composer, but there is also in the end product the work of the record producer, which includes the work of the author composer. Those are two different works, both protected equally under the Copyright Act.

Senator Grosart: Would you not agree that the performing right, which is what I am talking about, as asserted in the record, is secondary to and derivative from the original author composer?

Mr. Fortier: If you are making the proposition that without the author composer there would be no record, I agree with you. But I draw your attention to the fact that no distinction is made in the Canadian Copyright Act as to a primary performing right or a secondary performing right. There is no distinction found anywhere in the act, which to me is authority for the proposition I make that, since the legislators recognized that both were worthy of protection, they should both continue to be worthy of protection.

In the same way that the record producer has never said, and never will say, that the author composer should not be indemnified for the work he has created, I would hope that the author composer would realize that without the record producer his property rights would not be compensated, because there would be no public performance of his work on radio stations, on television stations, in dance halls, juke boxes and so on.

The Chairman: Let us say it would be limited.

Mr. Fortier: It would be very much limited.

Senator Grosart: What you say would be correct unless section 19(3) is read the way some people read it. Perhaps I should put it on the record, because it deals specifically with the performing right that may or may not subsist. Subsection (3) reads:

For the purposes of subsection (1) . . .

. . . which is the one that grants the compulsory statutory licence . . .

a musical, literary or dramatic work shall not be deemed to include a contrivance by means of which sounds may be mechanically reproduced.

I am not going to argue this point, but merely point out that it may well be that subsection (3) takes the record completely out of the category in which you want to put it, as having, in a compulsory record, an inherent right.

The Chairman: In what category do you say Mr. Fortier wants to put it?

Senator Grosart: He wants to put it in the category of a musical, literary or dramatic work.

The Chairman: The statute says that.

Senator Grosart: Of course it does; that is exactly what I said. In section 19 (1) the statute says this; in 19(3) it appears to take it away.

The Chairman: You misunderstood the importance . . .

Senator Grosart: Let me finish my sentence, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I know, but I have to deal with this. You are making a statement as to the effect of subsection (3) of section 19. What I say is that you have to go back and look at what the copyright is that is given. As to the record maker, it is as if it were a musical performance.

Senator Grosart: Perhaps Mr. Fortier might argue that. I am surprised that the chairman is arguing it. I am merely saying . . .

Mr. Fortier: I think he is only repeating what I said earlier.

Senator Grosart: It may be he is, but I say I am surprised to find the chairman arguing on that point.

The Chairman: It is unusual to find you surprised.

Senator Grosart: I say that section 19(3) may take it out of the category of a musical work as defined in section 19(1) which is the compulsory licensing section which, as I say, is the heart of the whole argument.

Mr. Fortier: Senator Grosart, it is . . .

Senator Grosart: I am not going to argue.

Mr. Fortier: May I be allowed a brief right of reply, Mr. Chairman?

All that section 19(3) says is that you cannot make a record from a record. That is all it says.

Senator Grosart: I do not agree that that is what it says, and others do not.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Chairman, we dealt very briefly—and it was said that it was totally irrelevant—with the matter of money. I would very much appreciate an opportunity of saying a few words about money, since the main impetus of the presentation of Bill S-9 in the Senate has been that there was going to be a great sum of money which was going to flow out of Canada. I repeat that this is totally irrelevant, but since the point has been made, may I deal very briefly with Annex M? You have had distributed to you this morning a revision of Annex M which, in the top right-hand corner bears the words "Annex M (Revised)". Originally, in preparing this brief, we had failed to make a distinction between the records made in Canada—that is, Canadian recordings—and records made in other countries. If you look at Annex M you will see that the flowing, the ebbing away of large sums of money, mainly to the United States, is nothing but a red herring and it is not—I repeat, it is not—based on facts.

May I ask you to follow me through the first column of this Annex M? It refers to that portion of the revenue dollar of SRL which will be retained in Canada because it is in respect of Canadian recordings. May I remind honourable senators that since January, 1970, because of a decision of the Canadian Radio Television Commission, there need be, by law now, 30 per cent Canadian content over broadcasting stations in Canada? So, when we are dealing with recordings as a whole, we should bear in mind the fact that, included in those recordings which are used by broadcasters in Canada, will be a minimum of 30 per cent of the total use made by radio stations of records; and that in respect of this 30 per cent the whole of the revenue dollar accruing to SRL, in virtue of the decision of the Copyright Appeal Board, will remain in Canada. This is what the first column indicates.

In respect of foreign recordings . . .

Senator Grosart: Excuse me, Mr. Fortier, before you go on. At the present time, what percentage of the recordings of the SRL group is Canadian?

Mr. Fortier: What we are dealing with, senator, is what is played on the air, because that is the basis on which the royalties are paid.

Senator Grosart: I am asking you what percentage . . .

Mr. Fortier: 30 per cent—at least 30 per cent.

Senator Grosart: 30 per cent of the records now produced by the SRL group? That is what I am asking you.

Mr. Fortier: I am sorry, senator. The answer is less than 10 per cent.

Senator Grosart: So we are dealing with less than 10 per cent.

Mr. Fortier: No, we are not, senator. We are dealing with at least 30 per cent, because that is the use, the minimum use which must be made today, in virtue of that decision of the CRTC which came into effect on January 18, 1971—that in broadcasting, radio stations in Canada must now, for a minimum of 30 per cent of the time, offer Canadian recordings.

Senator Grosart: Yes, but this does not mean that 30 per cent of the SRL group recording will be Canadian.

Mr. Fortier: I think we are arguing at cross-purposes. I am saying that the tariff is based on use made by radio stations and I am saying that now, by law, radio stations have to use Canadian content recordings for at least 30 per cent of the time. So that column represents a minimum of 30 per cent of all the dollars which will accrue to SRL under the tariff approved by the Board, and it has to be, by law.

Senator Grosart: Oh yes, I agree.

Mr. Fortier: May I open a parenthesis, senator? 30 per cent is an absolute minimum. It is going to be a great deal more, because you and I know that there are two native recording industries—I almost said "two nations," but I do not want to get into a political or constitutional argument here. There are two recording industries in Canada. There is the Quebec, the French recording industry, and there is the English-Canadian recording industry.

In Quebec, the evidence before the Copyright Appeal Board in April was that in excess of 75 per cent of the recordings made in Quebec, the French recordings, are actually produced in studios in the Province of Quebec, by French-Canadian producers; and over the air, on the broadcasting stations in the Province of Quebec, there is thus a minimum of 75 per cent of records, which are records made in Canada, to wit, in Quebec. So that 30 per cent total picture, absolute picture, is a bare minimum. I think in reality we are dealing with—no, I am not going even to venture a percentage, because I think it would be quite misleading and I can err. I am saying that we are dealing in fact with more than 30 per cent.

The Chairman: It may well be 50 per cent?

Mr. Fortier: I would not wish to hazard a guess.

The Chairman: Very well.

Senator Grosart: Whatever it may be, the SRL has not contributed very much to it, in the past.

Mr. Fortier: The SRL was not in existence in the past.

Senator Grosart: I say the SRL group of companies has not been conspicuous in their promotion of Canadian content recordings.

Mr. Fortier: You have heard some grumblings from some Canadian producers, which I think are eloquent in themselves. May I make one point, though, Senator Grosart? I certainly do not wish to enter into an argument. The evidence before the Copyright Appeal Board is itself very eloquent. There is, as you know now, an obligation on the part of broadcasters to use Canadian records. Prior to this obligation being decreed by the CRTC, Canadian records, senator, were produced, but they were not played by the stations. They were not played by the stations because the radio stations were more interested in competing with the American music which flowed over the border, than they were in themselves promoting Canadian records. So the Gordon Lightfoots, the Anne Murrays, the Ginette Renods and the Jean-Pierre Ferlands, and so on, were being recorded yesterday, but they were not being given any air play because the radio stations were not obliged to give them air play. Now that they are obliged to give them air play, the radio stations are screaming for Canadian records.

Senator Grosart: I am very glad that is so. But you say that 70 per cent of the records played on the air in Quebec are Canadian-produced.

Mr. Fortier: That is correct.

Senator Grosart: So it is not quite true to say that these Canadian-produced records, or Canadian-content records, have not been performed. As a matter of fact, they have been performed in Quebec. What you are saying is correct for the rest of Canada, but it is not a correct statement for Quebec over the last five to ten years.

Mr. Fortier: Now, honourable senators, with respect to foreign recordings—that is, recordings by the big American or English ogres—will you please follow me through the last column of Annex M? You see that the effect of the distribution pattern of $1 is as follows. There is a 12½ per cent administration charge. That is self-evident. There is included 10 per cent of the royalties which will be earmarked for music bursaries and scholarships. This and the other items which are recited following this form the basis of the offer, Mr. Chairman, which has been made to the Canadian Union of Performing Artists.

Twenty-five per cent of the remaining amount, that is, 25 per cent of the net, will then be turned over to this union voluntarily by the record producer, because the record producer recognizes the input of the performer and recognizes that the performer contributes to the actual production of a record. So 25 per cent will be paid over to those unions.

Fifteen per cent will then be paid to the performers who are under contract with SRL members. These can only be Canadian performers. Fifteen per cent of the net will then go into a fund for additional Canadian recordings to meet the increased needs of the Canadian broadcasting stations.

So that, Mr. Chairman, leaves then 35 per cent of the original dollar to be shared by members of SRL. That 35 per cent of the net represents 30.62 cents. As I said earlier in respect of Canadian recordings, all of this money remains in Canada and in respect of foreign recordings there is no more than 50 per cent of this 30 cents, in other words, approximately 15 cents, which will be shared with foreign copyright owners. And again this is in evidence before the Copyright Appeal Board.

This is the first time that I have had occasion to say so, but may I say that even in respect of the 15 cents, because of the purport or the intent of the impetus of the presentation of Bill S-9 before the Senate, we advised our clients that they should contact their parent companies in the United States, England and Holland and obtain from them a waiver of this remittance of 50 per cent of the remaining 30 cents. Whether or not this is relevant, I should like to put on record the fact that our clients have obtained from their parent companies a waiver along those lines. Thus, we are assured that the revenue dollar, which will accrue to SRL in respect of performance in public by broadcasting stations and other users of our work, will remain in Canada and will be shared equally between the performers and the record producers in the way in which it is recited here in Annex M.

Senator Grosart: Incidentally, Mr. Fortier, I must congratulate you on this because obviously it means a complete change in your existing contracts.

Mr. Fortier: It means an amendment to the existing contracts, yes.

Senator Grosart: Your existing contracts would call for a remittance of 50 per cent of gross.

Mr. Fortier: With respect, senator, no. It was 50 per cent of net. The contracts filed before the Copyright Appeal Board indicate 50 per cent of net.

Senator Grosart: But not this kind of net. I am talking about the old existing contracts.

Mr. Fortier: The old contracts filed before the Copyright Appeal Board indicate that 50 per cent of net is to be shared between the parent company and the subsidiary.

Senator Grosart: How was that net defined?

Mr. Fortier: Net is not defined.

Senator Grosart: What proportion would have gone under the existing contracts?

Mr. Fortier: Fifty per cent.

Senator Grosart: I mean of gross. What per cent of gross would that 50 per cent of net have been? I am just interested. That is all. I am not being critical.

Mr. Fortier: Clearly that was not evidence allowed before the Copyright Appeal Board, because Mr. Justice Thurlow said, I think rightly, that this was not relevant to the matter which was being considered before the Board. I would answer that the contracts were quite clear. They spoke to 50 per cent which had to be remitted to the foreign copyright owner, being the parent company in most instances. That is, 50 per cent of the net amount which was received by the Canadian subsidiary. Now, if you look at Annex M, senator, you will see that any sum of money which a member of SRL will receive cannot exceed 30 cents. So we are talking of 15 cents today just as we were at the time of the hearing before the Copyright Appeal Senator Grosart: I do not want to get too involved in this, but actually, you would have been receiving more than the 30 cents.

Mr. Fortier: Not the members, senator.

Senator Grosart: But your receipt—the moneys paid for the exercise of the right.

Mr. Fortier: But it is not SRL which is paying for the foreign copyright owners. It is the members of SRL—the same way as it is not the authors and the composers in the United States who receive the money from the publishers over here. They receive the money from the performing rights societies, from CAPAC and BMI.

Senator Grosart: I was just interested to see how generous you had been. I should have liked to compare the 15 cents with what it was previously just to congratulate you on your surge of generosity.

Mr. Fortier: For which I thank you.

Senator Grosart: In connection with the Canadian recordings you will make, will there be any inflow into Canada from foreign performing rights royalties?

Mr. Fortier: Definitely. As you know, these are reciprocal arrangements under the terms of international conventions, with which I am sure you are just as familiar as I.

Senator Grosart: Is there a mechanism by which there will be an automatic inflow to Canada?

Mr. Fortier: There is reciprocity between those countries where the performing rights are recognized by law.

Senator Grosart: But not necessarily reciprocity between parent companies and their subsidiaries.

Mr. Fortier: I see what you mean. No, not necessarily.

Senator Grosart: At the moment there is no mechanism by which there will be an inflow to Canadians from the use of the performing rights of Canadian records abroad.

Mr. Fortier: I had missed your point. I see.

Senator Grosart: It is a very important point.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, it is indeed. I would not want to err here, but I think that mechanism exists in most of the contracts, if not all of the contracts which were filed before the Board by the eight major companies. It is a reciprocal arrangement. If, for example, a Canadian recording of a Deutsche Grammophon work is played in Holland, then there is mechanism for division between the parent company and the subsidiary of the performing right royalties which accrue in Holland. Absolutely.

Senator Grosart: So this reciprocity would continue, would it, in spite of this very generous decision of the foreign owners in your group not to receive any part of the money from Canada?

Mr. Fortier: These are the indications which have been given by the parent companies, yes.

Senator Grosart: You say, then, that, percentagewise, there would be an adequate flow back into Canada of performing right royalties from the use of a Canadian-made record by your group of companies abroad.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, I would say that, senator.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Mr. Fortier, you said, I believe, that all the profits from the performing right royalties from radio stations are going to be held in Canada by this group of companies. I suppose this does open up quite an area for questioning, but what other source of revenue have these companies in addition to the performing rights of these records on the air?

Mr. Fortier: The obvious one is from the sale of records for private use.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Is that fairly substantial?

Mr. Fortier: I am not going to venture an opinion that it is substantial, or more substantial or less substantial. There are figures which have been produced before this committee by one of my predecessors which indicate that the income from the sale of records at the retail level is approximately $100 million. Now what percentage of this is retained by the retailer I am not sure.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You have to work the mark-up off.

Mr. Fortier: My instructions are that we are dealing with a $50 million a year business approximately.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): In other words, it is profitable for a foreign company to operate here. If it were not possible for foreign companies to get a reasonable return on their investment in Canada we would lose a record industry which would be to the disadvantage of Canada.

Mr. Fortier: Again, many of the artists who are popular—as I said earlier music is international and I do not think I would get any argument on that—"The Rolling Stones," and if I may mention in the same breath—

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): The only ones I know are "The Irish Rovers".

Mr. Fortier: "The Irish Rovers," "Mozart," "Beethoven"—if I may use them in the same sentence. These are all just as much part of our music as they are of the music of England and Germany.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I hope they get "The Irish Rovers" in England.

Senator Haig: Mr. Fortier, as part of your brief you include a letter from Mr. Basford, dated October 29, 1968, to Mr. Harrison, President, Sound Recording Licences Limited. In the fourth paragraph of that letter, Mr. Basford says:

I wish to express my serious concern about this application, and to inform you that I consider it not to be in the public interest.

What is your answer to that? What is the reasoning behind it?

Mr. Fortier: The reasoning is provided in the next sentence. He says: (1) that that section has never been used in Canada and (2) the Royal Commission on Patents, Copyright, Trademarks and Industrial Designs concluded that the manufacturer's performing right in broadcasting and records, etcetera, should be abolished. I think it was in this context that the Honourable Mr. Basford was telling us that it was not in the public interest. This is the Ilsley Commission report which I am sure you are familiar with which in four sentences reproduced on page 17 of our brief which you have in your hands at the moment dealt with the performing right in records. You will see those four sentences at the bottom of page 17 and top of page 18. It is of interest to note that they referred to the United Kingdom experience because in the United Kingdom there had been published prior to the Ilsley Commission report a report of a Royal Commission chaired by Mr. Justice Gregory—it was called the Gregory Committee Report—and that report concluded that the performing right in records should be retained, but that report preliminarily stated, and it is the preliminaries that the Ilsley Commission dealt with, that there had been problems encountered in England with the exercise of the performing right. But these problems were encountered prior to the setting up in England of a performing rights tribunal such as we have in Canada, because the performers' unions and the musicians' unions were influencing the record manufacturers and record producers in preventing radio stations from giving an unlimited air-play to their records. You are familiar with the concept of needle-time? In England not only does the performing right in a record mean equitable compensation to the owner of the work, it also means the right vested in the owner or the copyright to restrict unlimited use of the records over the air. And this is one of the elements which is submitted to the Performing Right Tribunal. For example, in the Isle of Man case in England it was ruled that copyright in a record meant not only the right to prevent reproduction, and the right to enforce public performance royalties, but also the right to restrict needle-time, because one of the main complaints of record producers and record manufacturers with respect to air-play which is given to their records is that too much uncontrolled air-play can kill a record and kill the sale of a record. In England this was recognized.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): A case of overexposure.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, overexposure. What they call "turn-table hits". These records "don't move", if I may use the colloquial expression, in the stores, but they fill up two, three or four minutes every hour on the radio station. The radio station uses it for profit but it does not mean sales so far as the record producer is concerned.

Senator Haig: Well, we have already heard that this is the only way in which a record company can sell its records, that is by the public hearing it on the air.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, you have heard evidence to the contrary also.

Senator Haig: When I used to buy records, I went into the little booth and put the record on the turn-table and listened. But now you hear a record from a radio station, and you get the "Top Ten" each week. Does that not greatly improve the sales of the records?

Mr. Fortier: Do you know what percentage of records produced in Canada are played over the air? Less than 10 per cent of all the records which SRL produce will be played on the air. This is a discussion which I would love to continue with you which goes to quantum, because I discussed this for four weeks before the Copyright Appeal Board. I am not disputing that there is an advantage derived by members of SRL from the air-play that is given to some of their records.

Senator Haig: There must be if you give the records to the radio stations.

Mr. Fortier: I am not disputing that; but surely you will agree with me, senator, that this is a question of quantum. This is why we have the Copyright Appeal Board which every year is called upon to decide who derives the most advantage. Is it the radio station by having access to our complete repertoire? Is it the radio station from having access for a pittance to what occupies in some instances up to 70 per cent of their air time? Or is it the record company which is definitely selling some records as a result of the promotion given to those records over the radio?

There is here an argument which was made ad nauseum before the Copyright Appeal Board. The board obviously found that radio stations derived more of an advantage than record producers because it said there should be a tariff.

My friends on the other side argued until they were blue in the face, after I had become blue arguing the opposite picture, that there was a trade-off. The board did not say there was a trade-off. The Copyright Appeal Board said there should be payments, there should be just compensation.

Are record sales affected by the air-play given to records? The answer is, "Yes". Some records are quite definitely affected by the air play given to records. However, it is not the sole means of promotion.

Senator Haig: The record companies, including SRL, do not lose by the playing of your record on the air.

Mr. Fortier: In some circumstances, yes, we do lose.

Senator Haig: Then the record cannot be very good.

Mr. Fortier: I am satisfied that some record companies can definitely lose money because of overexposure given to some of their records by radio stations. Allow me to quote a statement made by the President of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters in April, 1971. The statement came right in the middle of the hearing before the board. The Canadian Association of Broadcasters argued against the tariff. Their lawyer put the argument which you are putting now, that record producers were biting the hand that fed them, that there was a trade-off. They even argued that in effect record producers should be paying broadcasting stations because they were deriving more of a monetary advantage. Mr. McGregor, the immediate past President of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, said in the middle of the hearing and I am quoting from a clipping in the Ottawa Journal—that:

Canadian performers are suffering from overexposure because of the recent increase in Canadian content on radio and television, W. D. McGregor, President of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters said Sunday night.

There is another element which you have to bear in mind, senator, which is that once Decca, Warner Brothers or Deutsche Grammophon are given a record, they are not assured that it will be played. There was evidence before the board of thousands of records which remained in the vaults or libraries of radio stations and were never played.

Senator Haig: How would you sell them to the public?

Mr. Fortier: That is exactly my point. We have other means of promotion. We have promotion in record shops, in newspapers, in magazines. We have promotion in a number of other outlets which are available to us.

My submission before the board was that not one radio station in Canada—and I make that statement without any reservation at all—could live today without records. Not one radio station could live without records.

Senator Haig: Could your record companies live without radio stations?

Mr. Fortier: Definitely. Absolutely; because there are two instances of countries where it happened. It happened in Australia and in Germany. This evidence was given to you by the members of the International Federation of the Phonographic Industry. I was sitting behind either you or Senator Connolly when either you or he expressed surprise when Mr. Stewart said before this committee that if there was no air play given to records, record sales would increase.

I stand by that proposition. Speaking for myself, if I could not hear my favourite music by flicking a dial, I would run to the record shop so that I could have access to that music in my home whenever I wanted it, or access to that music on the beach whenever I inserted a cassette in my little machine.

The argument could be made that sales of records would increase if there were no use made of records by radio stations, for the simple reason that music is a commodity with which you and I cannot do without.

Senator Haig: I can do without it.

Mr. Fortier: All types of music?

Senator Haig: No; I withdraw that statement.

Mr. Fortier: please remember that Bill S-9 does not make any distinction between different types of music.

Senator Grosart: Is there any intention on the part of SRL to restrict needle time?

Mr. Fortier: No, there is not.

Senator Grosart: Have you ever attempted to restrict it?

Mr. Fortier: We never have.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Is there not a questionable kind of policy? I do not know much about the television and radio business, but it seems to me that one of the major problems with American television, is that stars become overexposed. As a result, they have less and less air time and appear on shows periodically. Do you not kill your product or maim it?

Mr. Fortier: For some records, yes. The evidence before the board on that point was that a new artist, or new record air played will promote sales, but in the case of an established artist or an old record, air play will not promote sales.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): From the point of view of the Canadian performer, it seems to me to be a pretty important decision, because relatively speaking we have not that many Canadian performers.

Mr. Fortier: At the moment, no, we do not.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): If you overexpose a record by a Canadian performer, you may in time do damage to that performer, apart from the value of the property to the company from that record. Conceivably you might get the public to the point where they are fed up.

The Chairman: That is, of course, an observation. It may or may not be relative to the question that we have to decide. I think it was put forward by Mr. Fortier as an answer to a question of Senator Haig as to what was the relative contribution by the broadcasting and records industry when records were supplied to broadcasters. We had evidence which suggested that broadcasting companies were doing a great favour to the record industry. At one time Senator Cook was prompted to make the remark, which I think perhaps he would now regard as being not the greatest remark he ever made, that record companies were biting the hand that fed them. We have had a lot more evidence since then.

Senator Carter: Regarding the revenue dollar, how much of it would be profit from sales? Is it from sales?

Mr. Fortier: No. This revenue dollar is exclusively from public performance rights.

Senator Carter: Not including sales?

Mr. Fortier: No. Finally, on the matter of dollars and cents may I remind the committee that we originally asked from the commercial broadcasters 2.6 per cent of their gross income. The award of the Copyright Appeal Board, after a four weeks hearing which included a series of witnesses, adduced I should add, by the applicant, SRL, with no broadcaster appearing to testify and assist the board in reaching its decision, was 0.15 per cent. Translated into dollars over a year this means approximately $200,000.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Two hundred thousand spread over all the radio stations of Canada?

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): And the television stations of Canada?

Mr. Fortier: yes.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I suppose it is pretty hard to say how much it would cost each station, but how many such stations used it?

The Chairman: All stations with earnings of less than $100,000 are eliminated.

Mr. Fortier: There are 339 radio stations in Canada. Since no broadcaster appeared before the board to adduce evidence as to the extent of use, we had to monitor a sample of radio stations throughout Canada. The figures obtained from this monitoring experience were filed with the board. They showed that the 16 representative stations in our submission used our music to an extent varying from 14 per cent to approximately 72 per cent. The CBC was low: one of their stations had 14 per cent or 12 per cent. One top 40 station, I think it was CHUM in Toronto, used our products for more than 70 per cent of the time they were on the air.

The answer to your question, how is it divided, would be found by making a calculation, Senator Connolly, of figures contained in a booklet issued each year by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. One such publication, showing by categories the revenues of Canadian radio stations, was filed with the board. I would be happy to provide you with a copy so that you could make the calculation.

Included in the $200,000 is a $30,000 payment by the CBC. Therefore, the figure is $170,000 per year as far as the commercial broadcasters are concerned.

Senator Desruisseaux: All this gives me concern; are you fighting only for principles?

Mr. Fortier: No, senator; we are not fighting only for principles.

Senator Desruisseaux: Would you be ready to use that $200,000 as a basis for the years to come?

Mr. Fortier: If there were approaches made by broadcasters to SRL, such as are made, as you probably know, senator, in European countries, in order that, one, the right be recognized once and for all; two, that they would indicate to the minister that Bill S-9, which favours them and them alone, should be withdrawn; and, three, that we could see an indication of a reasonable sum of money being offered, then quite definitely.

Senator Desruisseaux: What do you term a reasonable sum of money?

Mr. Fortier: This would be a subject for negotiation, senator, surely. We have taken the attitude from the start and have even approached some broadcasters and lawyers representing them, seeking to effect a settlement. We never expected to receive 2.6 per cent, any more than when Senator Macnaughton or any other lawyer takes a damage action for $100,000 they expect to be awarded $100,000. A little bargaining room must be left.

Senator Macnaughton: Oh, yes, I do.

Mr. Fortier: We have never had one of those cases together, senator.

Senator Molson: That is what you tell the client.

Mr. Fortier: Exactly, but with negotiations; the door is open. I will go even further than that, Senator Desruisseaux. In so far as the CBC is concerned, we are cognizant of the fact that it is a drain on the Canadian taxpayer. They were subsidized to the extent of some $45 million last year, I believe, by you, me and others. The door has been open for many months. You asked me what I considered to be reasonable. In so far as the CBC is concerned, we would entertain a nominal fee.

Senator Desruisseaux: How could you justify that when the others would be treated differently?

Mr. Fortier: Commercial broadcasters are in business to make money. If they are making money with my product, they should compensate me. The CBC, as we all know, is not in business to make money.

Senator Desruisseaux: May I ask you what percentage of the stations make money?

Senator Haig: Over $100,000.

Senator Desruisseaux: Yes, over $100,000.

Mr. Fortier: We have the figures here.

Senator Desruisseaux: Yes, and there are more recent figures.

Mr. Fortier: I have here the DBS figures, Senator Connolly, if you are interested. The operating revenues of privately-owned radio stations in 1969 varied from $100,000 to over $1-12 million. There were 14 stations in Canada which had total operating revenue in excess of $1-12 million in 1969; 15 were between $1 million and $1-12 million; 15 were between $750,000 and $1 million.

Senator Desruisseaux: What is the percentage? I thought it was approximately 25 per cent?

Mr. Fortier: I find it difficult to arrive at a percentage from these figures.

Last week my friend Mr. Estey was asked what had happened to the CAPAC tariff in the course of the last 20 years since they were awarded a percentage of the gross income of radio stations. He did not have the answer at his fingertips. In 1952 CAPAC's rate as approved by the board in respect of commercial radio stations was 1.75 per cent. Today it is 1.85 per cent, representing an increase of only .1 per cent awarded by the board over a period of almost 20 years. May we translate this into dollars now?

Senator Desruisseaux: It does not matter.

Mr. Fortier: I would like to put it on the record for the benefit of you and Senator Grosart. In 1952 the revenues which CAPAC derived from commercial broadcasting amounted to $317,000. In 1969, the radio revenue amounted to $2 million. Why that increase?

Senator Desruisseaux: We all know it is the same as in the record companies. You are telling the story of the world when you say that.

Mr. Fortier: I am glad to note you would like to see record companies treated in the same way as radio companies. They should be paid for the use made of their property.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): What is CAPAC?

Mr. Fortier: CAPAC is the performing rights society, which comprises the authors and composers in Canada.

Senator Haig: Who assign this right to CAPAC?

Mr. Fortier: To this society.

Senator Haig: And also BMI.

Mr. Fortier: That is right. BMI and CAPAC share between themselves the authors and composers in Canada. Again on this point—I would not raise it if my opponents had not done so before this committee as well as before the Copyright Appeal Board—it has been said that all these dollars are flowing into the United States. May I bring to your attention the fact that by the assessment of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, in a document they filed before the Copyright Appeal Board, they estimated that of the $5 million which the commercial broadcasters today pay to CAPAC and BMI, in excess of 80 per cent is channelled through CAPAC and BMI to the United States. What is the expression? What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. This is the Canadian Association of Broadcasters saying that already . . .

Senator Desruisseaux: Maybe they should be looked at too

Mr. Fortier: That is certainly not the essence of my plea.

Let me end on this note, because I have already taken much to much time, honourable senators. I think that Bill S-9 is a bad bill. It proposes legislation that should never be introduced by any government. You will have noticed that clause 2 of the bill makes the effect of the bill retroactive to January 1, 1971. In effect, the Bill S-9 becomes law, the award that the Copyright Appeal Board has rendered, after a hearing which lasted, as I said earlier, in excess of four weeks, after all parties were given their day in court, so to speak, would be wiped out altogether. This would be an intrusion, in my humble submission, by the legislative arm of the Canadian Parliament into what by law since 1935 has been entrusted to this quasi judicial body which is called the Copyright Appeal Board.

There is another element that I think should be brought to your attention. It has happened only in the course of the last 10 days. There is a new court now in existence in Canada, as you are all well aware, called the Federal Court. It came into being on June 1, 1971. Section 28 of the Federal Court Act provides now for an appeal to the appellate division of the Federal Court from a decision of an administrative tribunal such as the Copyright Appeal Board. May I put on record and bring to the attention of honourable senators, that 10 days ago counsel for the Canadian Association of Broadcasters filed an application before the Federal Court, under section 28, in order to obtain an extension of the delay for appealing the decision of the Copyright Appeal Board. In effect, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the CAB, has put this matter—I do not want to strain the meaning of the word, but I will use it in the way in which I mean it, which is very loosely—sub judice; they have sought to refer the award of the Copyright Appeal Board to the Federal Court.

The Chairman: What you are suggesting is that they have selected their forum.

Mr. Fortier: They have made their bed, yes. I should be totally and completely fair to the Canadian Association of Broadcasters. One of the reasons for making this application, which is recited in the motion, is that Bill S-9 is presently pending, and they say they should not be called upon to pay SRL the tariff, which as you certainly know comes into effect on July 1 only; it is a six-month tariff which was approved by the Copyright Appeal Board. Again a submission we made to the board at the conclusion of the hearing was that, since this was a new performing rights society, any award should not be retroactive to January 1, and radio stations in Canada should have the discretion of deciding whether they wish to use our records or not.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Bill S-9 would, in effect, wash out the decision of the Copyright Appeal Board.

Mr. Fortier: Completely for this year, and it would prevent us from going before the Copyright Appeal Board in the future.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): On performing rights.

Mr. Fortier: That is right. I think from a purely legal point of view this is bad law. It is retroactive legislation. It is taking away a right that has existed since 1935 to go to a body which has been set up to protect the public interest. As was said by Mr. Stephen Stewart from London, England, three weeks ago, Canada was the first country in the world to set up a performing right tribunal and many other countries followed suit, and Canada would be the first country in the world to do away, in respect of records, with the performing right tribunal.

Senator Desruisseaux: Would this reasoning that we have had on this bill reasonably extend to performing rights in sports and other fields, such as football, hockey and baseball performers?

Mr. Fortier: No. The amending legislation deals only with records.

Senator Desruisseaux: They do have sound.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, but it has to be a record or other mechanical contrivance by means of which sound may be reproduced.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Suppose they have a record made of a live performance.

Mr. Fortier: That could be interpreted as being a literary or dramatic performance.

Senator Desruisseaux: It is any contrivance by means of which sound may be mechanically reproduced. A film is that.

The Chairman: That is right. What you ordinarily have is a live performance.

Mr. Fortier: A film is protected under another section.

The Chairman: You have a live performance when there is a broadcast or television showing of a hockey, baseball or football game, so there is no record involved.

Senator Haig: The baseball and hockey performance is protected by the owner of the NFL and so on, so it does not appear in this at all.

The Chairman: No.

Senator Grosart: There is no compulsory licensing.

Mr. Fortier: No, you cannot force a professional player to play for free.

The Chairman: Is there anything further?

Mr. Fortier: No, Mr. Chairman. May I thank you on my own behalf and on behalf of our clients who are here today for your patience. I am very sorry I have taken up so much of your time.

The Chairman: Well, we asked a lot of questions.

Mr. Fortier: I have enjoyed it, and I hope I have been able to answer all your questions.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring one matter to the attention of the committee and ask Mr. Fortier to comment on it. I sometimes read a trade publication called Variety, which is said to be the bible of show business. In the issue of June 9, 1971, I read the following, which I think is relevant, subject to your ruling, Mr. Chairman. It is dated Toronto, June 8, and says:

With permission recently granted them to charge broadcasters across the country a performance fee, Canadian-based disk manufacturers are moving full swing ahead to hike album prices.

Companies withheld a price increase in line with that which took place recently in the U.S. pending federal government approval of their demands. Latter originally were made 32 months ago. They took the position among themselves at that time that increased prices might offend and prejudice their case for a performance fee.

I skip two paragraphs, in which they detail some of the increases. The last paragraph reads, in part:

Of the disk manufacturers, 95 per cent are foreign owned and are under orders from head office to release a certain number of records over a certain length of time whether the market can bear it or not.

That is a quotation. I am not saying that that is a fact, but I would appreciate your comment. Have you seen it?

Mr. Fortier: What is the source?

Senator Grosart: "Variety".

Mr. Fortier: Who wrote it?

Senator Grosart: I do not know.

Mr. Fortier: I am informed of this for the first time, senator, so I have no comment.

Senator Grosart: So am I. I just happened to see it. Perhaps some of your principals might wish to see it.

The Chairman: Let us put it this way. If Mr. Fortier, after investigating and studying it, decides that there is anything he wishes to submit, he could write in to us.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, this concludes the hearing today.

Senator Macnaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take the opportunity of congratulating this very able attorney. Whether he is right or wrong, his presentation was extremely good.

Senator Grosart: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: That is what we expect from Mr. Fortier.

Senator Macnaughton: Yes, but we do not always get it from others.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we have given an appointment to the minister for next Wednesday morning, the date being the date that was suggested by him. I mentioned that so that it could not be concluded that we had delayed hearing him until that date. We were offered his appointments, that he would not be available between June 2 and June 22. We had commitments for two of our weeks, so we said we would offer him June 23, and asked him to tell us, in any event, whether that was acceptable or not. The answer was that it was acceptable. So the minister will appear next week. If Mr. Fortier wishes to attend, he is perfectly entitled to, and if he wishes to make any reply to any of the submissions he would have an opportunity to do so. You can use your own judgment, Mr. Fortier.

Mr. Fortier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I should bring to the attention of the committee that on Wednesday next the Canadian Association of Broadcasters is going to be responsible for my attendance before the appellate division of the federal court on this very matter. Possibly you will be sitting at 9.30?

The Chairman: Yes. You will have until a quarter to eleven.

Senator Burchill: Did we not have the minister here one day on this bill?

The Chairman: No, senator.

The committee adjourned.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

---

No. 31

---

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23, 1971

---

Sixth and Final Proceedings on Bill S-9,

intituled:

"An Act to amend the Copyright Act"

---

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE

---

(Witnesses—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Haig
Beaubien	Hayden
Benidickson	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Kinley
Choquette	Lang
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Macnaughton
Cook	Molson
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28).
Grosart

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, March 30, 1971:

"Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed the debate on the Motion of the Honourable Senator Urquhart, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cook, for the second reading of the Bill S-9, intituled: "An Act to amend the Copyright Act".

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Honourable Senator Urquhart moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Laird, that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Wednesday, June 23, 1971

(34)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9.30 a.m. to further consider the following Bill:

Bill S-9, "An Act to amend the Copyright Act".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Beaubien, Benidickson, Blois, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Croll, Flynn, Gelin, Giguère, Grosart, Haig, Hays, Isnor, Lang, Macnaughton, Martin, Sullivan and Walker.—(21)

Present but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senators Lafond and McDonald. (2)

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel.

WITNESSES:

Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs:

The Honourable Ron Basford, Minister;

Mr. A.M. Laidlaw, Q.C., Commissioner of Patents.

Sound Recording Licences (SRL) Limited:

Mr. L. Yves Fortier, Counsel.

At 10.30 a.m. the Minister withdrew.

The Honourable Senator Beaubien moved that the Bill be reported now without amendment. The question being put, the Committee divided as follows:

YEAS—7

NAYS—3

The Motion was declared Carried.

At 11.50 a.m. the Committee proceeded to the next order of business.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

Report of the Committee

Wednesday, June 23, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill S-9, intituled: "An Act to amend the Copyright Act", has in obedience to the order of reference of March 30, 1971, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted.

Salter A. Hayden,
Chairman.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Wednesday, June 23, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill S-9, to amend the Copyright Act, met this day at 9.30 a.m. to give further consideration to the bill.

Senator Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I call the meeting to order.

We propose to consider first this morning Bill S-9, and we fixed this date so that we might hear the Minister, Mr. Basford, who is here. Mr. Laidlaw, Commissioner of Patents is with him.

The floor is yours, Mr. Minister.

The Honourable Ron Basford, Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, thank you for allowing me the opportunity to appear before you as a member of the Government on this bill, which is a Government bill, and thank you for arranging this meeting. Your schedule and mine for the month of June is very full, and I appreciate your courtesy in arranging a mutually convenient time for my appearance.

I and the officials in the Department, and particularly in the Copyright Branch, have been following the deliberations of this committee with considerable interest.

As I have mentioned and as you already know, this is a Government sponsored bill, the purpose of which is to remove from the Copyright Act any doubts as to the meaning of the "rights" or the alleged rights that record manufacturers might have to royalties from the public performance of their records.

The Government's position which I wish to reiterate this morning was clearly stated by Senator Urquhart when he introduced and sponsored the bill in the Senate, and I should like to take this opportunity of thanking him for explaining so ably the necessity and the purpose of this enactment. It is not my intention this morning to repeat what he has already said in his opening statement, or what has already been said in detail by some of the witnesses before you. However, I should like, if I may, to refer to some of the presentations to this committee on behalf of SRL Limited in which it was argued that the principal ground for this type of copyright was covered by the question "What are we dealing with?" and, "Why should there be copyright in a record?"

With respect to the first question asked by SRL it was claimed that since the right of performance in a record had been embedded in our legislation since 1921, that right should not now be dismembered. The Government and I, do not accept this argument. The present legislation was copied from the English statute of 1919, and no one at that time realized what was being provided. The manufacture of records was then only in its infancy; broadcasting stations were just on the verge of development; tapes did not even exist. It was the age of the player piano, and no one could foresee the tremendous technological changes that lay ahead and that have since occurred.

Mr. Fortier's comments regarding dismemberment of copyright should, I suggest, be read in the light of conditions existing in 1921. Any Canadian legislature in those days that could have foreseen the future would not, I am certain, have permitted a performing right in sound recordings to exist. As you know, that right was never even claimed until two years ago in Canada.

With respect to the question as to why should there be copyright in records, I quite agree that there is some degree of creativity in assembling groups of performers and musicians to produce a sound recording. But I do not agree that this type of creativity is entitled to copyright in the public performance of that sound recording. The record manufacturers are, of course, entitled to protection against copying or piracy of their recordings, but they have this protection under the act and this protection is maintained even after the enactment of Bill S-9. That, in the Government's view, is all to which they are entitled, and I shall come back to this point later.

More importantly, the Government has not in any way—and this is something I want to make clear this morning because I understand that certain suggestions have been made informally to the committee—withdrawn its views with respect to the passage of this bill. As minister responsible for Bill S-9, I do not treat lightly the judgment, for example, of the Economic Council of Canada which was received subsequently to the introduction of Bill S-9, or the findings of the Ilsley Commission, both of which urged this withdrawal of "rights" provided in the old Copyright Act of 1924, and still extant, for record manufacturers to claim fees for the performance of their recordings in public.

The point I wish to make is that in spite of the suggestion that has been made to the committee, in spite of the findings of the Copyright Appeal Board, it is still the view of the Government that Bill S-9 now before the committee should be passed.

May I be permitted, Mr. Chairman, to draw your attention and that of honourable senators to what I view as certain important considerations. I shall be very brief and will then subject myself to whatever questioning that honourable senators have. As has been made clear in evidence before you, 95 per cent of the record manufacturers, through this performing right society known as Sound Recording Licences (SRL) Limited, are subsidiaries of, or associated with, foreign firms, in very large measure American firms. The American principals of the SRL group do not have the right in the United States that their Canadian subsidiaries are now demanding and trying to exercise in Canada. Through the tariff that was accorded to them in the recent decision of the Copyright Appeal Board.

What is not available to the record manufacturers in the United States is apparently regarded as necessary in Canada. What is not available to the foreign parents is claimed in Canada. Surely this is an anomalous position for us in Canada to find ourselves in, and surely it is an inequitable one from the point of view of Canadian users of records.

Another point I would like to make is that Bill S-9 has nothing to do with performers in the usual sense of the word. Argument before you, I suggest, has been somewhat confusing, in my opinion, and has served to confuse this issue about performers and the rights of performers. "Rights" of artists, of performers and musicians to royalties for their performance is entirely a separate matter, entirely separate from the considerations of Bill S-9 and the "right" of the record manufacturer.

The planning group which I established within the department to study the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada on copyright is even now considering the "rights" of performers and what "rights" should be accorded to them under a revised Copyright Act. Performers' "rights" have no part in the bill before you.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, the appearance before you of Mr. William Dodge, Secretary Treasurer of the CLC, who was spokesman for the various performers', actors', and musicians' groups for which he spoke. He was against the enactment of this bill. He was relying on arrangements between SRL—and I underline and put in quotation marks the word "arrangements"—and the performers whereby SRL would share its royalties from performing rights' fees with the performers. To quote his words "A bird in the hand is better than one in the bush." But counsel for SRL, in the presentation before you on Wednesday two weeks ago on behalf of SRL, made it perfectly clear that no legal contract—and I emphasize this—exists between SRL and the performers' union. Counsel stated that SRL "made a voluntary offer three months ago to the Canadian Union of Performing Artists to divide royalties received 50 per cent with the performers".

It was further admitted there was non-consummation of this proposal, as there was no agreement as to how the royalties were to be divided amongst the various performing unions and performers. If performers need or deserve—and I emphasize this, Mr. Chairman—a performing right, as may well be the case, the provision of it indirectly, through the grace and favour of the record manufacturers, is a most uncertain and inefficient way to achieve it.

Bill S-9 does not deal with performers. It deals with record manufacturers and their claims to "rights" additional to those already available to them through the sale of their records. If we as legislators, or as a Government or as a Parliament, are to write into the law some performing right for performers, artists, and musicians other than that for the authors and composers, I think we should do it in a straightforward way when the Copyright Act is before the Senate by way of a general revision of that Act rather than this roundabout and indirect and almost back door method of some private arrangement or agreement between the artists, performers and the record manufacturers.

The next point that I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that there has been, I submit, another element of confusion introduced into these hearings. It amounts to this: if CAPAC and BMI, the two Canadian performing right societies, are entitled to royalties for performances, why should not the record manufacturers be entitled to enjoy the same right? The answer to that is very simple, it seems to me. CAPAC and BMI represent the true creators of music: the composer and the author. Further, the composer and the author have no other means available to them to obtain rewards for their creative activities. Their rewards can only come through public performance of their works.

Let us, then, not be confused with what properly belongs to creators, and the rights of the record manufacturers whose whole business depends upon the original creativity of authors and composers.

Again, I think I should mention, merely for you to keep in mind, that in so far as the vast majority of SRL shareholders are concerned, master records are not manufactured in Canada. The masters of original tapes are imported. Our record manufacturers make the copies. There is, I am sure you will agree, a difference in that situation. If creative activity is embodied in a recording, that creative activity is carried out in large measure outside this country, and we should not provide fees for the "creations" of foreign record manufacturers.

Lastly, I have heard remarks to the effect that the Copyright Appeal Board awarded only a minimum tariff to SRL—and this is the point I opened with—and therefore there is nothing to be concerned about; there is no urgent need for this legislation. I can only disagree with that suggestion.

As you are aware, I received a report from the Copyright Appeal Board setting out the tariff and I would like to read into the record a statement from that report. It is as follows:

A large part of the time of the hearing was devoted to the question raised in item 6 respecting the quantum of the fees to be set and a number of important aspects of the matter were raised and discussed. The board is of the view that rates of the levels demanded by the tariffs as filed would present an undue increase in a single year in the operating costs of the users of records and that if the fees were ever to reach such levels they should do so slowly enough to enable the users to adjust to them over a period years.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, there is a clear inference here that if this bill is not enacted, the fees demanded by SRL, and probably awarded, will rise increasingly. If steps are not now taken it is unlikely that appropriate steps will ever be taken.

It has been said to me that this matter could be allowed to stand until the entire Copyright Act is revised. That, of course, I would very much like to do, and this is what I endeavoured to do two years ago by having the SRL group agree not to try to claim a tariff until we had before Parliament a complete revision of the Copyright Act. But this is a complex subject and a complete revision may well be two years or more away. The "rights" enjoyed by the record manufacturers would by that time, if they rare enforced now, be firmly entrenched; and I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the time to act on this matter, if there is any time to act, is now.

I think in that sense there is urgency that the Parliament of Canada deal with Bill S-9 and pass it.

I now refer briefly to the point raised by Senator Grosart. Most of the record manufacturers are associated with music publishing houses, and through these publishing companies those that are in that position now enjoy a share in the CAPAC and BMI distribution of royalties to other composers and publishers.

Finally, I raise a further point which causes me concern. If the right of public performance in recordings is not disallowed, some of the foreign principals of Canadian subsidiaries will, through these subsidiaries gain access to the books of Canadian broadcasting firms. This will come about through their auditing of royalties which would be due to them through the SRL tariff. This, I submit, Mr. Chairman, could be a matter for very serious concern, as some of those same foreign principals are in the broadcasting business in Canada. You would be, through this mechanism, running the risk of allowing the principals of the recording manufacturers, in auditing the books of their radio broadcasting competitors, to see what their competitors in the broadcasting business are doing. That seems to me to be a rather serious matter.

I am, of course, open to any examination or cross-examination that you or honourable members may wish. However, my purpose here this morning, in spite of the ruling of the Copyright Appeal Board and the evidence that you have had, is to wage you on behalf of the Government to send back to your colleagues a recommendation that this bill be enacted.

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, when do you expect the new Copyright Act to be available?

Hon. Mr. Basford: Of course, when I was first sworn in as a minister I asked when would we receive the report of the Economic Council. I was assured it would be presented within a matter of months. It was two years before I received it, early last spring.

I had set up an interdepartmental committee within the Government to consider various copyright matters. I have a review committee working in the department considering the recommendations of the Council. They have not yet made recommendations to me, nor I to the Government.

It may be at least a year before any legislation sees the light of day. It could even be longer, because it is a complex problem. Even the Council could not find answers to many of the problems. I also know that many of those who have made representations have difficulty finding answers. This relates not only to this question but to the whole field of photocopying and the technological changes that have taken place.

A revision of the Copyright Act, in frankness, does not enjoy the highest priority with Members of Parliament. This is often the difficulty in passing legislation through Parliament, and usually the reason why some of these acts are so out of date.

The Chairman: We have heard evidence that at least 23 or 24 developed countries in the world, including England, have a performing right. Have you any comment?

I bring this to your attention because you said if any country in the world was faced with a situation such as we have in Canada now they would vote to eliminate any performing right. I notice that these countries do have this performing right. Most of them have had it for some time; England since 1911.

Do you wish to comment or to revise your statement in any way?

Hon. Mr. Basford: No, I do not. In spite of the fact that England has had a performing right in the hands of the record manufacturer for those years you have mentioned, the Ilsley Commission, which examined the law and the practice in this country and many others, recommended that Canada should not copy it. The Gregory Report in England recommended that the right be continued but only because it had been in existence and they would not remove it. They recommended procedures to deal with the right where there had been problems. The Economic Council of Canada, again considering both the United Kingdom and foreign jurisdictions and trying to work out what should be the law in Canada, came to the same conclusion as the Ilsley Commission, that the path taken by England in 1911 as you suggest, or 1919 when the legislation was enacted, is not one we should follow.

If we wish to consider foreign examples we should possibly look south of the border. I am no expert in entertainment nor in copyright, but I would think that here is the biggest entertainment market in the world, the United States, where no such right exists. Although I was assured over two years ago that the United States intended to grant this right, it still has not been given. There is a bill before the Senate, but I suspect there are more bills not passed by the Senate than are passed. This has been a suggestion in the United States for many years, but they still have not accorded this right in Congress.

The biggest entertainment market in the world does not grant this right to the manufacturers, who have developed into very healthy companies and profitable enterprises without it. Why then should we, a small country with a much smaller entertainment budget and with basically foreign manufacturers, accord a right that their parent country has not yet given them?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Do I understand that in the United States Senate there is a bill which will give a performing right?

Hon. Mr. Basford: There is a bill before the Senate, but I think some of your other witnesses would be more expert in this than I. The purpose of the bill is to accord a performing right to the manufacturer. There is no such right at the moment in the United States and I do not believe that we should precede them in this area. This is one area in which we should not endeavour to lead the United States.

The Chairman: The evidence before us is that a bill was referred to a committee of the Senate of the United States. That committee has reported favourably to the Senate, which has not yet dealt with the bill.

Hon. Mr. Basford: My point is that the committee was given this information and senators were almost invited to draw the inference that it was imminent that there would be such a right in the United States. I wish to make it clear that I was assured two and one-half years ago that the Americans would very soon accord this right. However, two and one-half years later the bill has not been dealt with by the Senate. It has been reported to the Senate, but I do not think we can take it for granted that the Americans will accord a performing right to record manufacturers.

Senator Walker: How many years has it been in the hopper? How long ago was it reported by the committee?

Mr. A. M. Laidlaw, Q.C., Commissioner of Patents: The latest information, which we received from officials in the United States Copyright Office, is that there is little hope for a long time that this bill will be enacted in the United States Congress.

Senator Cook: Your point is that the creative effort takes place in the United States and why should this country, where it does not take place, take that step.

Senator Walker: Perhaps you could answer my question: How long has it been since the bill was reported to the Senate by the committee?

Mr. Laidlaw: I believe two years, and then that bill was dropped and another presented to a Senate committee. That committee presented this bill, I believe, last January. However, I may be wrong in that.

Senator Walker: Did they again report favourably?

Mr. Laidlaw: The committee did, sir, yes.

Senator Walker: In the current session of Congress?

Mr. Laidlaw: Yes. However, as I say, the officials I spoke with are pessimistic as to its chances of passing.

Senator Macnaughton: You mean that there are several other bills which have priority; it does not necessarily indicate opposition to this bill.

Mr. Laidlaw: Yes, but they are in difficulties in the United States. They want a performing right in the record, but that involves the juke box industry.

Senator Hays: What would it cost the Canadian listener in dollars?

The Chairman: This year?

Senator Hays: Well, in any one year.

The Chairman: The fees are only established for a year.

Senator Hays: What would be the cost? What are these people going to receive, these four firms?

Hon. Mr. Basford: It is set out in the decision I have read. Approximately $200,000.

The Chairman: We have had evidence to show it would amount to about $200,000.

Hon. Mr. Basford: Yes.

Senator Beaubien: That would go to the American firms.

The Chairman: Any person in Canada who qualified.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): On the question of quantum, I take it the $200,000 is not the quantum that would disturb you, Mr. Minister. I take it what you are anticipating here is a great inflation in that amount over the years?

Hon. Mr. Basford: I think we are dealing first with a question of principle that is totally divorced from quantum. Reading the record, I take it that is really the view of this committee.

Senator Flynn: That is not the way the sponsor introduced the bill. Quantum was the only reason. I agree that Senator Connolly may have given you a good explanation, but that is what the sponsor of the bill said when he introduced the bill; it was a question of quantum.

Hon. Mr. Basford: It is also a question of principle. I think Senator Urquhart made that clear. We, along with the Ilsley Commission and the Economic Council, do not think this is a kind of right that should be recognized in copyright. The other principle is this: if there is to be assistance to performers, to musicians and artists, this is an indirect way of doing it and the wrong way of doing it. If we want to put in the Copyright Act the right to the performer, the musician, that is something that would be before this Parliament in a year or two in the revision of the Copyright Act. It should not be done via this sort of ex gratia system by which the record manufacturers out of their great generosity slice in the musicians for a little voluntary payment.

One has to look at quantum. Certainly when this first came up quantum was considerably higher than the Copyright Appeal Board awarded, and could have gone to $5 million. I should not comment on the decision of the Copyright Appeal Board. They reduced that considerably, as is obvious. One can always see that these fees are increased year by year, and they could be considerably more than $200,000. One is concerned with the principle of who has a performing right and who has not. It is my position that manufacturer, while he is entitled to protection against copying, which he obviously should have and which right he only recently obtained in the United States, should not have a performing right.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Mr. Minister, I do not say this because I have any interest. I never heard about this problem before it came before the committee, so I want you to understand that. One of the things that has been pressed upon us here, although perhaps not in these words, is that the people who make these records have a property right under the present law, and the effect of this law is to deprive them of that property right. It is a valuable property right, I would think, because they have fought very hard for it. I think it would be helpful to the committee if you could address yourself to that point. It would certainly help me. Could you address yourself to the point why this property right should be taken away from them?

Hon. Mr. Basford: I think this discussion of property right somewhat confuses us, because we talk in language that is often not really very applicable. I think the better approach to use is that adopted by the Economic Council, that surely you embody these kinds of rights in legislation, not from a point of view of a property right but from a point of view of incentive. Do you want invention, do you want initiative, in terms of patents, for example? Do you want performance in Canada? You use your intellectual property law as a means of intellectual incentives, and you do not speak of them as property rights. I do not know whether the committee has heard from the Economic Council or its staff. It might be useful to do so, and have them expound a good deal more clearly and ably than I.

The Chairman: Who would you suggest, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Basford: The chairman.

The Chairman: Mr. Laidlaw?

Hon. Mr. Basford: Or Mr. McQueen, who is no longer with the council but who was when they published their report. Parliament accords certain rights through a patent act or a copyright act or a trademarks act, but it does so for the purposes of incentives, to generate a certain kind of activity. I do not think that this will generate that kind of activity. If we want an incentive to performers, let us put into the act a performing right society for performers, not for manufacturers, who surely are producing articles for sale.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I am the devil's advocate here when I say this. I am saying it for the purpose of finding out what is in your mind. I wonder if that argument does not rebound against you, because if you protect the position of the record manufacturer—and the way they have put it is that they have a property right here—are you not also encouraging innovation, incentive to produce better things, improvements in the quality of the article they produce, by giving them a performing right? I do not say I am in favour of the performing right. I want to find out what side I should be on.

Hon. Mr. Basford: I do not think you are doing that, with respect. There is argument that no such right exists. I am not making this argument this morning. This is not a court of law, but there are those that allege that there is no such right. The purpose of Bill S-9 is to make that very clear, that there is no performing right. If there is a right, it certainly had not been exercised up until two years ago.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): If it is a right, it is one that is created by statute. It is not perhaps an inherent right. At least, it is recognized by statute now.

Hon. Mr. Basford: The point I wanted to make was that it had not heretofore been exercised in this country up until two years ago. Therefore, if it were such a valuable right it might well have been exercised a good deal earlier.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I suppose it has become more valuable over a period of time because of the use to which these articles have been put, namely the development of television and radio, and other song distributing devices such as public address systems and the like.

Senator Lang: Mr. Minister, we have heard arguments here emanating largely from two competing private interests. How would you interpret the effect of this bill on the public interest as opposed to those private interests, and to what extent does it affect the public interest?

Hon. Mr. Basford: I think the public interest is such that this is a charge on the broadcasting business which has to be passed on to the ultimate consumer, either in advertising costs or in some other way.

There is that public interest. There is the public interest in maintaining a viable broadcasting system, a viable private broadcasting system. One should avoid putting a cost to them, if one can; a cost which one does not think is justified. There is the public interest of the taxpayer, in terms of the levy against the CBC, of course, which is almost a conflicting interest. The taxpayers have to pay that levy, and that to me is a public interest.

I think it confuses the issue, in terms of support for the artistic community in Canada and support for musicians and performers, because I do not think that is the issue in this bill. It is not the issue here, although it is alleged it is. It is put forward by the manufacturers that this is almost a philanthropic effort on their part to assist performers in this country; and I think that is not right, and I think it confuses the issue to have such a "right" and such an arrangement.

The Chairman: Mr. Minister . . .

Hon. Mr. Basford: You asked about the public interest, senator. In terms of legislation, this whole issue of copyright in intellectual property will be before Parliament within a year or two. It seems to me that that will be the time to make that decision, and that up until that time the status quo should be maintained. That really is the position of the Government.

The Chairman: Now are you ready for a question, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Basford: Yes.

The Chairman: Do you think that it should be part of Government policy, in order to reduce the costs of broadcasters, that you take away an existing right which has been written and entrenched in a statute of Canada for as many years as this right has been entrenched.

Hon. Mr. Basford: About which there is some argument as to whether the "right" exists and which "right" has never been exercised.

The Chairman: I assume, for purposes of my question to you, and I assume by reason of the fact that the Government is before us with a bill to take away that right, that the assumption is that it is a right that exists at the present time by statute. I am making those assumptions.

I am trying to confine this thing, as you will see I tried during the course of the hearing here if you read the record, and to get away from the question of quantum. If you are saying we must keep down or reduce the costs of the broadcasters, then we are incorporating that as a principle in the legislation and, even if you take away existing rights, you justify it on the basis of quantum. I would rather go to the other side of the question. I tried to get the broadcasters, when they were here, to address themselves to the question: Is there anything inherent in a copyright or a performing right in a record; is there an element there, that carries with it, or could be said to carry with it, the right to be recognized as copyright?

How you present that, I do not know; but, after all, the Economic Council faced up to it and made a report and surely they should be able to tell us how they distinguished those elements. Were they influenced only by quantum; were they influenced by the notion that inherently there is no element in the nature of a performing right in a record which should be recognized under copyright legislation?

Hon. Mr. Basford: It was the law, surely. These are statutory rights that exist only by reason of a statute. Surely that was the position of the Council, and surely that was the position of the Ilsley Commission.

The Chairman: I am not sure it was, Mr. Minister, but we are entitled to disagree on that question. They sort of disqualified themselves, in my reading of the report, by indicating that they really did not pose as being experts on the question of copyright law. It was quite an intricate subject. You referred to Chief Justice Ilsley's report, which also supported the idea that there should not be a performing right in records. But Chief Justice Ilsley based his report on the Gregory Commission.

The Gregory Commission was a commission headed by Mr. Justice Gregory, in England, which sat around 1952. They ended their hearings by recommending that the performance right be continued, in a different form. In other words, it was continued in itself rather than being treated as though it were a musical work.

Hon. Mr. Basford: I am not Mr. Justice Gregory, but I understand the surmise is, and it is made clear in the report, that this was because there was a right that was already being exercised, and they made recommendations by which the exercise of that right should be very rigidly controlled.

The Chairman: Wait a minute now; let us stop there.

Hon. Mr. Basford: I do not think we can accept the Gregory Report and ignore the Ilsley Report. I do not quite see the logic of that. The Ilsley Report is the Canadian one.

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, sometimes you see what you want to see.

Hon. Mr. Basford: This is general, and it may be true of both of us, I think.

The Chairman: It may be true about me, too. It may be a principle on which I operate—and I would expect certainly that you would double that in spades.

So far as the Ilsley Report is concerned, it was based on the Gregory Report. The Gregory Report came to a different conclusion, but when we were hearing evidence here we were told that they put great restrictions in the Gregory Report. The restrictions they put on the performing rights were these . . .

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Mr. Chairman, are you quoting Chief Justice Ilsley now?

The Chairman: No, I am quoting from a well-recognized textbook, Copinger and Skone James on Copyright, published by Sweet and Maxwell, London, 1965. I think that Mr. Laidlaw is thoroughly familiar with this; it is a recognized textbook.

This is what it says on restrictions on performing rights:
(816) Restriction on performing rights.

As already mentioned representations were made before the 1952 Copyright Committee that the performing right in sound recordings should be restricted. Accordingly it is provided in subsection (7) of section 12 of the Copyright Act of 1956 that the copyright in a sound recording is not infringed by its performance at any premises where persons reside or sleep, as part of the amenities provided exclusively or mainly for residents or inmates, or if it is performed as part of the activities of, or for the benefit of, a club, society or other organization, which is not established or conducted for profit and whose main objects are charitable or are otherwise concerned with the advancement of religion, education or social welfare. It is, however, provided that the exemption of premises where persons reside or sleep shall not apply, if a special charge is made for admission to the part of the premises where the recording is to be heard. It is also provided that the exemption shall not apply in the case of an organization, if a charge is made for admission to the place where the recording is to be heard and any of the proceeds of the charge are applied otherwise than for the purposes of the organization.

All I am saying is that while you may in a general way talk about restrictions, these are the kinds of restrictions that were imposed. That is all I am pointing out, so it is idle to put forward is a sound argument that, yes, in England, they continued the copyright in records, with restrictions. We have to know the nature of those restrictions. I do not think those restrictions put any restriction on the merit of a copyright as such, but it is the use of it and where they may collect fees for it.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): The inference from that, I take it, is that in a performance on radio or television or over a PA system, where there is a charge for admission to the premises where it is used, there is a performing right.

Hon. Mr. Basford: Yes.

Senator Cook: Is it not so that in England the performers themselves get a large portion of this performing fee?

The Chairman: I think that is by agreement.

Senator Cook: It was recognized by the Gregory Commission that that was the existing state of affairs when they made their report, that they still get a large portion of the fees which the record manufacturers collect from the players.

The Chairman: Yes. It was also stated before the commission that the musicians' unions were exercising pressures to cut down on the playing of records so as to have more live performances. All these things came out, but when all the evidence was sifted this was the result.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): The practical effect of what you have read, Mr. Chairman, seems to be that for all practical purposes what has been contended for here by the record manufacturers is what they already have in England. However, they have not got it in the United States, and at the moment there does not seem to be much prospect of their getting it there.

The Chairman: What they may or may not do in the United States could not be used by us as any basis to say we should either continue or discontinue copyright.

Senator Cook: The point is, Mr. Chairman, that if they are not doing it themselves, then why should we do it. If what they are trying to protect is United States manufacturers, then I think that is substantial.

Senator Hays: Mr. Chairman, we have been dealing with this bill for months. Although I have not been at all the meetings I have read the evidence. It seems to me that laws are made to work for people. In 1911 you could have ridden a horse and buggy on the 401; today you would not be allowed to do so. I do not think that the manufacturers are going to give one nickel back to the performers, if I know business people. Business people keep what they get. It is then reflected in what the shareholders get.

I wish to go on record now as supporting this bill. We have dealt with it for a long time and we are now merely delaying it. It is time we reported the bill. In my opinion, the Government is correct. It is not going to make music any better by not having Bill S-9. Just as a farm boy, I think we should report the bill. I think it is common sense.

The Chairman: What was that additional qualification? You are just a simple farm boy?

Senator Hays: I think we should dispose of this matter.

Senator Beaubien: Perhaps we could have a motion, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Flynn: Mr. Chairman, there is still one point with respect to the statement made by the minister that I wish to have clarified. I am sorry if this delay bothers my good friend Senator Beaubien, but he can wait another few minutes.

The minister seemed to indicate that he intended to amend the Copyright Act eventually in order to give recognition to performers' rights which at the present time are not recognized in the act. The amounts of money paid to CAPAC and BMI are paid under agreements, but not because of any rights contained in the act. Did I understand the minister to say that when the Copyright Act is reviewed this aspect will be considered?

Hon. Mr. Basford: It will be considered. I want to be very careful in not making a commitment at this point. What I said was this, and I will read it again, senator, just so we are clear:

The planning group which I have set up to study the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada on Copyright is even now considering "rights" of performers. Performers' "rights" have no part in the Bill before you.

The Economic Council of Canada recommended against both the public performing right of the manufacturer and the right of the musician, but we are not bound by the Economic Council's recommendation. We can accept it or reject it. We are examining it.

Undoubtedly, when the legislation is before Parliament, the artistic community will be coming to Parliament and saying, "If the bill says there is no right, we are here to say there should be a right given to the performer." What I am saying is that I think the legislature should deal with incentive or lack of incentive to performers in a straightforward and direct way in the Copyright Act, and not in this indirect way by allowing the copyright fee to the manufacturer who, out of the generosity of his heart, may give something to the performers with no legal obligation whatever to do so.

The arrangement between the manufacturers and the artists is not consummated. It could be torn up one week after this bill is given royal assent, so far as I read the situation. This committee has made certain representations to the effect that the manufacturers want to help the performers, but there is no obligation upon them to do so. There is no contract or anything of that sort.

Senator Flynn: But what you said, I think, implies support for the recognition of the rights of the musician or performer, eventually.

Hon. Mr. Basford: I wish to be very careful on this point. I am indicating neither support for nor rejection of such recognition. I simply have not formed a view on this matter. I am not being coy with you either when I say so. I just do not have a view.

Senator Flynn: I accept that. Do you not agree, then, that the whole problem of performers' rights or musicians' rights, is tied to the problem of producers' rights? I am not speaking merely of manufacturers of records but of producers of records. It is all tied together.

Senator Beaubien: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Basford: No, I do not think it is. I think they are quite different.

Senator Flynn: You think they are different?

Hon. Mr. Basford: Yes.

Senator Beaubien: Sure.

Senator Flynn: In some countries they have tied those rights together. The law has considered this as a package.

Senator Beaubien: No, they are different.

Senator Flynn: Senator Beaubien says no, but I have other information.

Senator Beaubien: I do not know what other countries you mean, but they are totally different things.

Senator Flynn: If you do not know the countries, then why say no when I say they exist in other countries?

Senator Beaubien: You said they were tied together, and I am saying no to that; afterwards you mentioned the other countries.

Senator Flynn: I suggest to you, Mr. Minister, that there is a relationship between the performers' rights, or musicians' rights, and the producers' rights. I insist on the word "producers" because the preparation of a record involves much more than simply the stamping of the record. I was wondering why the Government had not brought the whole problem before Parliament rather than simply dealing with only one aspect of it and promising that it would deal with the rest in a few years.

Hon. Mr. Basford: The reason for that is that we had asked the Economic Council to consider the whole question of property rights in intellectual property and to report on that to the Government. While that report was in the course of preparation, before it had been submitted to the Government, SRL endeavoured to exercise an alleged right under the copyright that it had never exercised before. I suggested to SRL that they wait until the report of the Economic Council was published and we knew what their recommendations were. They accepted my suggestion and waited for two years. Then they stopped waiting. We had introduced this bill two years ago and had then withdrawn it, because we did not want this right established immediately before a revision of the Copyright Act.

Senator Flynn: Well, whether you take it away in principle or take it away in practice, it amounts to the same thing.

The Chairman: May I make this comment, Mr. Minister? As I understand what we are doing here, it is not that we are establishing a right. If we support the bill we will be taking away a right. If we do not support the bill we will be maintaining a right.

Hon. Mr. Basford: I am not sure that that is entirely correct. What we are trying to do is define what copyright means in respect of records.

The Chairman: But it is already defined in the statute at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Basford: Well, there has been a good deal of argument on both sides, and this committee has heard both sides.

The Chairman: Yes, the committee has heard both sides.

Hon. Mr. Basford: I take it the Chairman, having heard both sides, has made up his mind on the legal argument.

The Chairman: You are wrong in your taking.

Senator Benidickson: Mr. Minister, in your basic statement which you read and in the context of reference to the SRL representations, and I think in the context of references to the report of the Economic Council, I think you twice used the words "tariff" and "low tariff". What kind of tariffs were you talking about? Customs tariffs?

Hon. Mr. Basford: No, the tariff under the Copyright Act. The Fee that is approved by the Copyright Act is called a tariff. It could well be called a fee or a tariff.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): A royalty.

Hon. Mr. Basford: A royalty, yes.

Senator Cook: Mr. Chairman, speaking on behalf of the fishing interests I am prepared to go along with this bill.

Senator Hays: I move that we report the bill.

Senator Beaubien: I second that.

The Chairman: In view of what the committee approved of in procedures at the last meeting, and you can overrule me if you wish, but I did offer Mr. Fortier when he was here at the last meeting a right of reply. I told him that the minister was coming to the next meeting and I invited him to attend if he wished. I said that since he was in the position of being the only one on one side, and everybody else with the exception of one or two being on the other side, if he had anything further we would give him an opportunity to reply. I did make that offer to Mr. Fortier. Senator Hays, who was not at that meeting, is now proposing a resolution which would withdraw that offer.

Senator Hays: I will withdraw my motion.

Senator Benidickson: I heard the offer. I remember that.

Senator Hays: I certainly think we should hear him.

The Chairman: When we get to that stage we can have a discussion if there is a motion, or we can have a discussion without a motion.

Before we do that, Mr. Minister, is there anything more that you would like to add at this time?

Hon. Mr. Basford: No. Mr. Laidlaw may want to go back to your question about the Gregory report or the IIsley report.

The Chairman: He has the floor if he wishes it.

Mr. Laidlaw: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I happened to be the secretary to the IIsley Commission under the late Chief Justice IIsley and the late Guy Favreau the third member being Mr. William Buchanan, who was then Chairman of the Tariff Board, and when the subject of the right of performance in recordings came up, the Gregory report was carefully studied. Mr. Fortier was perfectly correct in his testimony—

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Would you speak a little louder?

Mr. Laidlaw: I am sorry. Mr. Fortier in his testimony before this committee mentioned that there were various reasons. There were difficulties in England between the various performers' unions and the record manufacturers, and Chief Justice IIsley did not want this type of thing to be repeated in Canada. However, that was only one of the reasons why Chief Justice IIsley advised in his report that this right, if it existed, should be removed. During the discussion—and in this regard I am afraid you will just have to believe me—the members of that commission were very reluctant to add what they called neighbouring rights or secondary rights to the original concept of copyright. They considered that there were enough rights in the Copyright Act already, and the prime purpose of the Copyright Act was to protect the original composer and author, and no-one else should be added along the line. That was the basis for the recommendations of the IIsley Commission.

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, if you wish to remain while Mr. Fortier is making his reply that is all right, but should you have other appointments I am sure the committee will see that you are well protected even though you are not physically present.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Chairman, the minister might like the right of reply to Mr. Fortier's remarks.

The Chairman: Well, we could go on.

Senator Grosart: I thought you might offer it to him.

The Chairman: Knowing the views you have expressed so far, Senator Grosart, and how close they are to the minister's, I am sure his rights would be well protected by you in his absence.

Senator Grosart: I, do not intend to give evidence, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Or express opinions?

Senator Grosart: Express opinions, yes, but not give evidence.

Hon. Mr. Basford: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators.

The Chairman: Thank you. Mr. Fortier, have you anything you would like to add?

Mr. Yves Fortier, Counsel, Sound Recording Licences (SRL) Limited: Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: You understand, Mr. Fortier, that what you are doing now is exercising a right of reply, and you should not repeat except where it is incidental to the reply.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, I understand, Mr. Chairman, and I wish to thank you and the members of the committee for allowing me to reply to the minister's brief. I will attempt to be brief. I took some notes as the minister was speaking and I think I can address myself succinctly to the points which he has put forth. I think the first point he put forth was that the fact that this is a Government bill and he was urging that the Government sponsored legislation be adopted as is. The second point which I think the honourable minister put forth was no one realized in 1921 what was being introduced in section 4(3) of the Copyright Act. I took this note: "Any legislature which could have foreseen what did happen would not have passed such legislation."

With this I respectfully disagree. I think the evidence before this committee, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, is that the trend in the world is not to do away with this right, but rather to recognize this right. I respectfully submit that the minister is in error when he stated that today, given the development of radio and given the development of record manufacturers, no legislature in its right mind would recognize a performing right in a record. There is evidence before you that in Australia and in Japan in the last five years this performing right in recordings has been recognized.

May I also remind the honourable senators that in so far as the United States is concerned—and here I bow to the superior knowledge of Mr. Laidlaw, but I think that it is worth correcting a statement which was made—what has happened there in recent months is the following: in February of this year there was enacted a bill which recognized a copyright in records to the extent of preventing reproduction of records. In other words, it protected the record manufacturers against piracy. If we look to the most recent development in the field of copyright with respect to records in the United States we see that as recently as February of this year both the House of Representatives and the Senate passed a bill affording a limited protection to record manufacturers. So the trend, even in the United States, the "mother country" in the case of many members of SRL, is not negative as the minister stated. The trend is in favour of protecting a performer's right in records.

Senator Benidickson: Would you just describe what the United States has done? What is the extent of this protection you talk about?

Mr. Fortier: The extent of this protection I am speaking of, senator, is exactly what we find now in Bill S-9. In other words, section 4(3) of the Canadian Copyright Act as amended would give protection to record manufacturers against dubbing or piracy of their records.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Or use of their records.

Mr. Fortier: No, against dubbing or . . .

The Chairman:—copying.

Mr. Fortier: That is right. That is one point. The second point, and this one was mentioned by the minister, is the fact that again as recently as early this year—Mr. Laidlaw said January, and I am sure he is correct—a Senate Committee in the United States has reported that not only the right against copying be granted to record producers, but also that the performing right in records be recognized in the United States. Two years ago the honourable Mr. Basford was given an indication that in the United States there would be such legislation, but at that time there was no Senate committee which had reported to the Senate. Today there is. It is a recent development, and it is one which should be appreciated and which should be looked at also in the light of what has happened with respect to protection against copying.

If you look, gentlemen, to the United States—and much weight seems to be given to the fact that of the eight member companies of SRL, six are subsidiaries of the United States corporations—in the United States this right is not being removed; this right is on its way to being recognized. The Minister did not forecast and I am not going to forecast when the performing right is going to be enshrined in the United States copyright laws, but I can say that the trend seems to indicate that there is a growing movement in the United States in favour of the recognition of a performing right in records, and that a competent and habilitated body of the United States Senate aided and abetted by members of the Copyright Office of the United States—and I think this is very important—has published this unanimous report that there should be a copyright in records, a performing right in records.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You say this report supported the establishment of a performing right in the United States; that this has been contained in a report from the United States Copyright Office?

Mr. Fortier: No. I say the United States Copyright Office has assisted a Senate committee which is deliberating, and I can produce and file before this committee statements from members of the United States Copyright Office and employees of the United States Copyright Office where they have gone on record as favouring the recognition of a performing right in records.

Senator Benidickson: Surely that is the opposite to what Mr. Laidlaw has said.

Mr. Fortier: Well, I do not think Mr. Laidlaw took any position.

Senator Benidickson: He said that his information from the copyright people in the United States was that this recommendation of the United States Senate Committee was not likely to carry.

Mr. Fortier: That was Mr. Laidlaw's testimony. My information is to the contrary.

Senator Walker: It is all obiter dicta. Neither one of you really knows.

Mr. Fortier: Very much so. It is rather like when a lawyer tells a client that he cannot lose.

The Chairman: You except lawyers from that category, Senator Walker?

Senator Walker: I except you.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Fortier, would you not agree that over the last 20 years the subject of revision of the Copyright Act has been almost continuously before Congress, that there have been bills actually passed by one house which did not recommend the recognition of a performing right in records, and which did not become law, and that this process of attempting to revise the Copyright Act has been going on for 20 years? Would you not agree that bills supported and sponsored by the Registrar of Copyright, to give him his correct title, have not passed Congress? Is not that pretty well the picture?

Mr. Fortier: I cannot just say yes or no to your statement, senator, with respect.

Senator Grosart: I was so sure that you would have studied the history of copyright in the United States.

Mr. Fortier: That is why I cannot agree fully with you. Let me say this: there has indeed been continuous study over the course of many years in the field of copyright particularly with respect to records in the United States. I think that this shows that this is not a matter which should be treated lightly with a seemingly innocuous piece of legislation which at one stroke of the pen removes in Canada a right which has been recognized for 50 years. I agree with that part of your statement. I think that Canada should give as much consideration to the matter of copyright in records as has been given in the United States, and I think this is not given a complete and full consideration in the enactment of Bill S-9. This right is so important that for many years in the United States it has been studied and examined and reported upon.

However, may I also say this: there has never to my knowledge been a bill which has originated in the Senate and which has gone through the committee stages in the United States Senate, and which has been reported on, where the clear precise and definite recognition of a performing right in records was mentioned. Your information may be different, but mine is to the effect that there has never been one so clear and precise as this one, so I say that all this talk for many years in the United States has produced a consensus among a committee of the senators.

Senator Grosart: You say your information is that there has never been a bill from the Senate in which the question of a performing right in records has been "mentioned". May I suggest that you are quite wrong in that because there have been several bills in which it has been mentioned.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, mentioned, but there has not been any bill in which it has been stated in the legislation that there shall exist a performing right in records.

Senator Grosart: That is exactly my point, because what has happened in the other bill was that they have rejected that.

Mr. Fortier: Thank you for pleading my case, senator.

The Chairman: That is the end of that part of it, because we get pros and cons.

Senator Grosart: Surely that is what we are here for, to get pros and cons.

The Chairman: Have we not had enough of them?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

An Hon. Senator: We just do not want to be conned.

Mr. Fortier: The next point which I think the minister made before this committee, Mr. Chairman, was that there was some type of creativity in the manufacturing or producing of a record which was deserving of protection, and he mentioned that Bill S-9 in fact continued to recognize this creativity. My answer to that, Mr. Chairman, and I will not repeat what I said before you last week, is that creativity under the terms of the Copyright Act is translated in a copyright, un droit d'auteur. Creativity under the terms of the Copyright Act is not translated in one facet of a copyright; creativity can only spell copyright, and copyright means both protection against reproduction and protection against use being made of your property by someone else for profit without compensation. And so if the minister recognizes that there is a creativity put into the record by the record producer, and that this creativity is deserving of protection under the Copyright Act, I repeat the point which I attempted to make before this committee last week, that this creativity should be translated into a full copyright and not a dismembered copyright.

Senator Benidickson: I should like to question that. I did not get that impression from what the minister said. I thought he said the very opposite, that there was not creativity in the actual production of a record.

The Chairman: He even referred to the Economic Council report in which they said that there was some input of creativity.

Mr. Fortier: His very words were that there is some type of creativity, and I would stake my presence here on the minister's using those words. Would you agree, Mr. Laidlaw?

Senator Cook: I was just going to say that surely copyright is a statutory right, and therefore copyright means what Parliament says it means.

The Chairman: It means what you give.

Mr. Fortier: I cannot dispute that. Parliament, both in Canada and the United Kingdom, and in other legislation where there is a copyright in records, has always said that copyright shall mean protection against copying, and against use by others without just and equitable compensation.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Would you address yourself to the question of public interest? The minister said basically that the reason why this right is being modified, and withdrawn in the case of performing rights, is because he believes it will serve the public interest to do so.

Mr. Fortier: He gave three reasons.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): He did not expand on that. He said to us, "you had better ask the Economic Council." Perhaps we should do that. But would you like to say what you think about this?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, senator. I noted your question and also the minister's answers. He gave three reasons. I think senator Lang asked, "Where does the public interest lie?" He gave a three-pronged answer. He said that advertising costs charged by broadcasters will have to be increased, and that is not in the public interest. I think I leave you to conclude whether or not it is in the public interest that advertising costs should be increased because of the levy of 0.15 per cent on the commercial broadcasters.

Senator Beaubien: But you do not know what that will be.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, we do.

Senator Beaubien: Perhaps today, but not tomorrow.

The Chairman: You will have to wait until next year until the Copyright Appeal Board sets the tariff again. So it is speculation either way.

Senator Beaubien: It will give the CBC a chance to approach us for a bigger deficit. I am against it.

Mr. Fortier: So far as the CBC is concerned, the minister said that the taxpayers will have to bear an increased burden. Unfortunately, you were not here last week when I pointed out on behalf of my clients, the record manufacturers, that they were quite conscious of the fact that the CBC was a drain on the Canadian taxpayer, and that it was the avowed intention stated publicly before this committee of SRL to accept a nominal fee by the CBC in exchange for the granting by SRL to a licence which would allow the SRL and its affiliated stations across Canada to use, as they do today, our records. The award of the Copyright Appeal Board in respect to the CBC at the moment is $15,000 a year.

I repeat, I do not think that $15,000 a year, in the light of the deficit last year—was it $47 million?

Senator Beaubien: $183 million, plus interest.

Mr. Fortier: Then I should increase the nominal fee! I repeat, we cannot honestly say that the protection of the public interest means that the CBC should not be called upon to pay $15,000 a year for use of my product.

The Chairman: What you are really saying is that this should not be looked at on the basis of quantum, but on what is inherent in whatever right there is in a record.

Mr. Fortier: I have always taken that attitude, senator. Since the minister and other people have spoken so much about quantum, I feel that I should address my mind to it. The third argument of the minister as to why this existing right was against the public interest was—I do not have his exact words, but I translated it as “the poor broadcasters”. I do not think it is valid to come before this committee and say that commercial broadcasters in Canada cannot afford to pay a tariff to the record producers. I do not accept that statement.

Senator Burchill: The radio station in our small community made representations to me violently opposed to the bill because it will increase their expenses, which they cannot afford.

The Chairman: What is the total of their revenue?

Senator Beaubien: They are for the bill, not against it.

Senator Burchill: Yes, they are for the bill.

Mr. Fortier: SRL recognizes that. It is in evidence before this committee that SRL said publicly before the Copyright Appeal Board during the month of April, while these hearings on the tariff were going on, that it withdrew its application for a tariff in respect of those poor little radio stations in Canada which had a gross income of less than $100,000. Without knowing which radio station you are referring to, I would be prepared to guess that the broadcaster which made these representations to you fits into this category and has a nominal $1 licence to pay to SRL at the moment. We are conscious of the fact that there are radio stations which cannot afford to pay a tariff, but there are those that are.

Senator Cook: Would it not be a case of “Come into my parlour, said the spider to the fly.”?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You are operating on the principle that the public interest has to be taken into account in your operation?

Mr. Fortier: Absolutely. If you speak about public interest, I think you must recognize that we have in Canada a body which was set up to do just that, to protect the public interest. I refer to the Copyright Appeal Board. Canada was the first country in the world to set up a performing right tribunal. Why was it set up? It was because of exaggeration by CAPEC—BMI did not exist in those days—in the fees which they were extracting from the users of their music. In 1935 the Parliament of the day passed an amendment to the Copyright Act and said that in future the authors and composers would not be able to decide what they will charge to the users of their music. They would have to go before a quasi-judicial administrative tribunal, which would protect the public interest.

This is what any performing right society has had to do since 1935. This is what CAPEC has done for the last 30 years. This is what BMI has done since it was created, and this is what SRL has been obliged to do since it was set up.

There is a body in Canada which was set up to protect the public interest. We have been before that body, and that body has said: “The public interest will be protected if your fee is lowered from 2.6 per cent to 0.15 per cent.” We are not complaining. We are satisfied about that.

My full answer to your question, Senator Connolly, is that the three reasons given by the minister are, I submit with the greatest respect, not valid, and that he should have referred to this tribunal which exists in Canada and which has been set up to protect the public interest.

On that point I will close by referring to a question by Senator Lang: Does not Bill S-9 settle a debate between two commercial interests? My submission is that it does that and nothing else, and it settles it in favour of the broadcasters and against the record manufacturers. I think it is not the role of Parliament to take a stand between two commercial interests. This is basically what we are dealing with.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Why should not Parliament do this? I am trying to elicit information from you for the benefit of the committee. Why should not Parliament decide what is in the public interest? I put it to you, Mr. Fortier, that when you say you will not charge any more than one dollar for a licence to a station making less than $15,000 a year you are doing that because it is in the public interest. However, you do it so that this bill can be withdrawn and you can show your sense of responsibility. Who is in charge of the public interest or who should be the judge of it?

Mr. Fortier: The Government decided many years ago that the public interest should be the concern of the Copyright Appeal Board, which I think should continue.

The Chairman: We must take the position that certainly if a statutory right exists Parliament at any time can deal with it for any reason. Whether it will receive public support depends on the reasons and their justification.

Mr. Fortier's argument could only go as far as to say that Parliament has the right to amend and withdraw existing or to grant additional rights. However, the question of justification is another matter. Mr. Fortier's argument is that we should not do it on a basis of resolving in favour of one commercial interest against another. That is why we have continued this inquiry on the basis of what is inherent in the right. Is there something that should be maintained?

I do not think it is a solid argument to say that because we are resolving a difference between two commercial groups we cannot act. Maybe you should say we should not act. However, Parliament has the authority to act and it is not departing from its role in doing this.

Senator Beaubien: As a layman sees it, if I buy a record...

The Chairman: A sophisticated layman, senator.

Senator Beaubien: As a layman I can buy a record and play it; that is why I bought it. However, if I happen to own a broadcasting station and put it on the air I would be charged for broadcasting it.

Do you argue that if I buy a book and quote it on radio the author is entitled to be paid a fee?

Mr. Fortier: As one layman to another, this is exactly -hat copyright is all about.

Senator Beaubien: No; if I buy a book and wish to read it that is what I bought it for.

The Chairman: But you cannot read it to the public without paying a licence fee or royalty. That is the law.

Senator Beaubien: I think it is all wrong.

The Chairman: Yes, but it is the law.

Senator Beaubien: It will not be the law when you pass this bill.

Senator Haig: Mr. Fortier indicated that the CBC will pay $15,000 for the next six months.

Mr. Fortier: That is correct.

Senator Haig: Which amounts to $30,000 a year.

Mr. Fortier: But we have to go back for 1972.

Senator Haig: If this bill is not passed and the copyright fee or tariff is in force, the CBC will pay $15,000 for the next six months, rather than the SRL request, which amounted to $900,000.

Mr. Fortier: Do I need to address myself to Senator Beaubien's comment? Again I consider this to be the essence of copyright.

The Chairman: I do not think you need to do more than that; Senator Beaubien says it is bad law.

Mr. Fortier: Bill S-9 is bad law.

The Chairman: No, the copyright.

Senator Beaubien: Bill S-9 is required because there is some doubt.

The Chairman: Even if Bill S-9 passes and you take a book and read it on radio you could be in trouble for royalty.

Mr. Fortier: I am selling you my property to use in your home for 95 cents. If I knew that you were going to use my property to make money, which is what broadcasters do by the use of a record, I would charge you more than 95 cents for that record.

Senator Beaubien: No, you have been paying in some cases for people to play your records.

Mr. Fortier: That is absolutely true in the case of some records, but not of our whole repertoire.

Senator Beaubien: The music has become popular simply because it has been broadcast so much.

The Chairman: The argument may be as good as your book argument, which was wrecked.

Senator Hays: If we continue this exercise on Bill S-9 it will take the manufacturers 10 months to catch up to the fees received by Mr. Fortier.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): In the course of the minister's presentation he spoke of the problem of encouragement, improvement, invention and development of technology. I asked him, simply to clarify that point, if a performing right is allowed to continue as it is under the present law, surely the improvement of the quality and character of productions would be encouraged. The producers would be encouraged to that end by receiving these fees and royalties. Have you anything to say with regard to that?

Mr. Fortier: No, except that I agree with your statement, senator.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It is not a statement; it is a question.

Mr. Fortier: I agree with the substance of your question. I answer in the affirmative. I attempted to make the point last week that because of the recent CRTC regulations there was an increased need by broadcasters for Canadian content records. The only manner in which Canadian content records can be produced by record manufacturers in Canada at the moment is by increased access to funds such as those which would flow from an SRL tariff.

This is not a complete answer, but it is one of the answers. You will recall that the division of the royalties involved three categories. One is to encourage the development of Canadian artists, for which 30 per cent of the SRL dollar would be ear-marked. Another was to encourage the recording of Canadian content pieces. On that point, Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed to say further to Senator Hays' comment that the manufacturers, if he knows them, will not give one nickel to the performers—

Senator Hays: Of this amount.

Mr. Fortier: With respect, senator, there is evidence before the committee to the effect that in all countries where the performing right in records is recognized and enforced and performers do not have their own separate and independent right, there is a division of the royalties between the record producers and the performers. It cannot be otherwise.

I agree with the point made by the minister that at the moment there is not a contract. It is true we do not have a valid contract. We have made an offer to the Canadian Performing Artists' Union. There is a dispute between the members of the Union as to how the money should be divided between themselves. This happens not only amongst unions, but amongst corporations on occasion. I can only go so far as to say we have made an offer, which we will not withdraw. Even if the offer is not accepted we will pay 50 cents of every dollar we receive into a fund which will be available for the performers, because we, the record producers, recognize that without the performers we cannot cut or produce a record. The argument which I made last week was that there were three integral parts of the record. It is easy for the minister to say that the record manufacturers depend on the creativity of authors and composers, but it is conversely true also that the authors and composers, in order to get their royalties, depend on the creativity of the record producers. If we do not produce records, the authors and composers are only going to have to sell sheet music; and, as Senator Grosart well knows, they do not make that much money by selling sheet music. They have to get their works on record, so you have a trilogy.

Senator Cook: They have to get them played over the air.

Mr. Fortier: And, in some instances, get them played over the air. But there is an assurance, and it cannot be otherwise, and the history worldwide, senator, is that when the record producers have received money from users of their records, they have shared that money with the performers. We have said it; we have offered it. Mr. Dodge has come before this committee and has said, "Yes, we have received the offer but because of differences between unions we have not been able to accept it yet." I know what Mr. Dodge told me privately, but I do not wish to go any farther. I repeat the assurance which I have given, that this is not anything novel; this is normal. In the field of copyright, if the record producer is granted a royalty, he shares that royalty with the performers. We are not obliged to do it under the law, but we are going to do it.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Fortier, I am sure you are aware that the statement made by the minister is that the performer may be entitled to some part of the performing right but this should be dealt with separately, and it should not be derivative or at the mercy of the record manufacturer.

The Chairman: The minister did not say that.

Senator Grosart: He did.

The Chairman: What the minister said was that this was one of the factors that the committee reviewing that had been asked to look into. The minister was very careful, he said he was not committing himself one way or the other. He said that two or three times. It will be a subject matter for consideration.

Senator Grosart: Yes. He certainly enunciated it as a principle under discussion in respect to the revision of the Copyright Act. I am sure, Mr. Fortier, you did not intend to mislead the committee when you made a statement, which I paraphrase, that the "only way" in which the funds can be obtained by the record companies to supply the records required for the 30 per cent Canadian content, would be by access to such additional sources of funds as the performing right in the record.

Mr. Fortier: If I said that was the only way, I made a mistake.

Senator Grosart: I think you did say it was the only way.

Mr. Fortier: I thank you for correcting me.

Senator Grosart: I presume you did not intend to mislead, because I am sure you are aware that there are hundreds, perhaps thousands, of Canadian records that have been made profitably and are being used to supply that 30 per cent Canadian content, without access to any performing right.

Mr. Fortier: I am also aware that, before the CRTC regulations in January 1971, there were hundreds of Canadians records which were made by these very people who belong to SRL, but the broadcasters were not using them, because they were not able to compete with the American records; and the Canadian broadcasters, although they wave the Canadian flag, are very conscious of the fact that they can sell their time mainly when they play American records. That is one thing that has not been said before this committee.

Senator Grosart: The obvious answer, Mr. Fortier, I think you will agree, is that the companies comprising SRL probably did, certainly did, less and have done less than any other group of companies which could be put together, to assist in the Canadian content in records.

Mr. Fortier: This is as wrong a statement as I have heard before this committee.

Senator Grosart: Will you tell us, then, what percentage of all the records distributed, say in the last year, by the SRL group of companies was made in Canada?

Mr. Fortier: The figure which I gave last week was under 10 per cent, and I still stand by it.

Senator Hays: When did you make the offer to the performing artists?

Mr. Fortier: The original offer was made two years ago. Thank you for asking the question. There was a deal which was made two years ago with the Canadian Performing Artists' Union of Artists. That is when the SRL first filed a tariff, but you will recall that that tariff was withdrawn when the Bill S-9—which was then Bill S-20—was dropped. So that particular agreement was never enforced.

When we filed the new tariff in 1970, we renewed our offer to the performers and their unions, in the fall of 1970. I wish to stress that we have been in constant communication over the years with Mr. William Dodge, the secretary-general of the CLC, who is chairman of this Performing Artists' Union council or committee, so this offer in fact has always been before the unions.

Senator Hays: What were you giving them before?

Mr. Fortier: That is a very good question. We were not giving them 50 per cent. We were offering, then, as I recall, 35 per cent. Yes, we were offering 35 per cent. In view of recent evolution in the United Kingdom, particularly, and in some European countries, of a 50-50 division, within the last two years we offered 50 per cent.

Senator Hays: In the last three or four years, how much have you given the performing artists?

Mr. Fortier: Unfortunately, we have not received anything from the broadcasters, so of course have not given anything to the artists.

Senator Hays: You have not given anything?

The Chairman: This was a sharing of any royalties they might get.

Mr. Fortier: The tariff only takes effect on the 1st July, next week, senator.

Senator Haig: I move that we report the bill without amendment.

The Chairman: Just one second. Mr. Fortier, are you through?

Mr. Fortier: I would make one last comment, if I may, senator, before the axe falls. If, as the minister says, we are dealing here with a question of principle, then I say that you have the opportunity in this committee of preserving the principle.

The principle is that there should be no performing right in records. May I recommend to this committee, and may I strongly suggest, very respectfully and with much humility, that you confirm the principle which the minister has put forward, and remove the copyright in records. But, for goodness' sake, please recognize the principle that, if someone who is managing a commercial concern, a commercial interest, such as a broadcasting station in Canada, uses records which have been paid for by others, that person should be obliged to compensate the owner of that property. And do as has been done in other countries, and recognize that the record producer, although he may not have a performing right in his record, should be entitled to just and equitable remuneration for the use which is made by others for profit—I stress "for profit"—of his property.

This can be done by amending Bill S-9, recognizing the principle that there should be no performing right in records, but leaving to the Copyright Appeal Board the obligation of deciding, on a year to year basis, what is the just and equitable compensation that should be paid to the record producers when people in Canada use their property for profit.

That is done in some European countries, Mr. Chairman, and I would be very happy to submit to you a text of such an amendment. I would be very sad if this bill were reported without amendment.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Have you not got this proposal which you are making in the present law?

Mr. Fortier: No, senator. At the moment in the present law there is a performing right, and the performing right is translated into compensation.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I am sorry.

Mr. Fortier: I would be very sorry if this committee reported to the Senate favourably, or whatever words are used in parliamentary jargon, without having accepted SRL's offer to visit a recording studio and seeing for yourselves the element of creativity, or the work, labour, and skill, to use in the words of Lord Justice Maugham in the Cawardine case in the United Kingdom. What is the element of creativity? What is the input of creativity which goes into the making of a record? If you think that a musician walks into a recording studio with a sheet of music and then steps up to a microphone and records a performance you are wrong. The record producer is an essential creator of that record. I would be very sorry to see the day when the Canadian Parliament would say that you can create something in Canada, but you are not protected. In most countries in the world today if you create something like a record you are entitled to be compensated if someone uses your property. If you write a book and someone reads that book in public, then that person is using your property and you should be compensated for it. There can be difference between the author of a book or the assigner of a patent and the producer of a record.

I would urge you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, not to report this bill to the Senate, but rather to continue your deliberations, and possibly report it with the amendment which I have suggested.

Senator Benidickson: Do you want to put on record your proposed amendment?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, I do, senator, and I would be glad to draft it.

Senator Benidickson: It is not drafted?

Mr. Fortier: I do not have it with me this morning.

The Chairman: Is that your submission now?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, it is.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Fortier.

The committee has two courses. One is to deliberate further, and the other is to abruptly terminate the hearings with a motion to report the bill without amendment. The question is which course does the committee take?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I wonder whether we should hear from the Economic Council?

The Chairman: The minister suggested that. We could hear from the Economic Council on Monday or Tuesday.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. We do not have to do it today. At least, I do not see any purpose in reporting this bill that quickly. Whether the minister had suggested it or not, Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask that it be considered by the committee. I do not have any motive other than to try to get some answers on this question of public interest.

The Chairman: The first question is: Does the committee favour calling some officials from the Economic Council to answer questions?

Senator Beaubien: I would say no.

The Chairman: Will those who are in favour of hearing the Economic Council please raise their hands? Those who are opposed? The majority decision is that we do not hear from the Economic Council.

Senator Hays: I move that we report the bill.

Senator Beaubien: I second that.

Senator Haig: Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken I want it recorded that I am not voting on this.

The Chairman: We have a motion to report the bill. Those in favour of that please raise your hand? Contrary? The motion is carried.

The committee proceeded to the next order of business.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

---

No. 32

---

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23, 1971

---

Complete Proceedings on Bill C-219,

intituled:

"An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation"

---

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE

---

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators:

Aird	Grosart
Beaubien	Haig
Benidickson	Hayden
Blois	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Kinley
Choquette	Lang
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Macnaughton
Cook	Molson
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28).

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, June 23, 1971:

"Pursuant to the Order, the Senate resumed to debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Hayden, seconded by the Honourable Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière), for second reading of the Bill C-219, intituled: "An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation".

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative, on division.

The Bill was then read the second time, on division.

The Honourable Senator Hayden moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macnaughton, P.C., that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Wednesday, June 23, 1971.
(35)

Pursuant to notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 11.50 a.m. to consider the following Bill:

Bill C-219, "An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Benidickson, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Croll, Gélinas, Giguère, Hays, Lang and Sullivan.—(12)

Present but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senator McDonald.—(1)

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel.

WITNESSES:

Canadian Chamber of Commerce:

Mr. E. H. Peck, Vice-Chairman,
Public Finance and Taxation Committee;

Mr. H. J. Hemens, Q.C.,
Legal Counsel;

Mr. W. J. McNally, Manager,
Government Relations Department.

Mr. D. J. Gibson, Manager,
Policy Department.

At 12.15 p.m. the Committee adjourned.

2.15 p.m.
(36)

At 2.15 p.m. the Committee resumed.

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Beaubien, Benidickson, Carter, Cook, Croll, Gélinas, Giguère, Martin and Sullivan.—(10)

Present but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senator McDonald.—(1)

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel.

WITNESSES:

Department of Finance:

Mr. W. A. Kennett, Director,
Capital Markets Division;

Mr. R. B. Love,
Legal Advisor;

Mr. W. D. Lennox,
Accounting Consultant.

Upon Motion it was Resolved to report the said Bill without amendment.

At 2.40 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

Report of the Committee

Wednesday, June 23, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill C-219, intitled: "An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation", has in obedience to the order of reference of June 22, 1971, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted.

Salter A. Hayden,
Chairman.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Wednesday, June 23, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill C-219, to establish the Canada Development Corporation, met this day at 11.50 a.m. to give consideration to the bill.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we will now resume our hearing and proceed with Bill C-219. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce is represented, and we have told them that we will hear them first. They made representations in the House of Commons committee, and many of those representations were accepted in one form or another and were incorporated in the bill.

Senator Benidickson: On that point, Mr. Chairman, I have a copy of the bill as passed by the House of Commons. I have compared it to the bill on first reading in the House of Commons, and I cannot find anywhere an underlining to indicate an amendment. Therefore it must simply be an elimination of certain things.

The Chairman: We can ask that question. The committee would be interested in any representations that the witnesses wish to make on points where the bill does not suit them. I do not want to know where they think the bill has been adapted, or where the explanations are such that they meet their points. We take that as fait accompli.

From the Canadian Chamber of Commerce we have Mr. E. H. Peck, Vice-Chairman, Public Finance and Taxation Committee; Mr. H. J. Hemens, Q.C., who has been before us on many occasions; Mr. W. J. McNally, Manager, Government Relations Department; and Mr. D. J. Gibson, Manager, Policy Department. Mr. Peck, you may proceed.

Mr. E. H. Peck, Vice-Chairman, Public Finance and Taxation Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, we learned only last week that we would be appearing today. In a letter which the Executive Council of the chamber sent to Senator Hayden we pointed out that we did not really have the time to present another brief. We therefore simply made some comments in a letter. If it is in order, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read that letter.

The Chairman: Go ahead.

Mr. Peck: The letter reads as follows:

Dear Senator Hayden:

The Executive Council of The Canadian Chamber of Commerce appreciate the opportunity of appearing before your Committee to present the Chamber's views concerning Bill C-219, an Act to establish The Canada Development Corporation.

As there has not been sufficient time since the Bill was passed by the House of Commons for preparation of a new Brief on this proposed legislation, I am appending to this letter copies of the Chamber's submissions to the House of Commons Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. A number of copies of this letter and above-mentioned attachments are also being delivered to the Clerk of your Committee for distribution to its individual members.

The present position of the Chamber on the Canada Development Corporation was stated quite clearly in the Introduction on page 5 of the appended Brief. It was explained on the same page of the Brief, that these submissions by the Chamber on Bill C-219 are being made on the conviction that the government fully intends to proceed with this project, as well as with the desire to help achieve legislation which will be as clearly understood and soundly practical as possible.

Following hearings and study of numerous submissions by interested parties, the House of Commons Committee referred to presented a report recommending a number of amendments. These amendments, and no others, were incorporated in the Bill as passed by the House of Commons on June 9, 1971. While many of the points raised in the Chamber's submission were given consideration in the deliberations of the said Commons Committee, very few amendments to the Bill were, in fact, made. Nevertheless, we would like to submit to your Committee a short commentary on some of the major contentions and recommendations contained in the Chamber's earlier submissions on the Bill. These will be discussed under the same headings as in our original Brief.

INVESTMENT POLICY

Although there was considerable discussion of Clauses 7 and 6 of the Bill, which cover the objects and powers of the Company, no amendments thereto were recommended by the said Commons Committee. In his comments on this subject during the third reading debate in the House of Commons, Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance) was reported on page 6390 of Hansard for June 4 to have said:

"The objects of the CDC are deliberately broad. Restrictive terms would hamper the CDC's mandate to fulfill its purpose as set out in the Bill. The directors must be free to establish new policies to meet new situations. In this respect the CDC will be on all fours with other successful Canadian corporations."

(Emphasis Added)

He went on to say:

"Much has been said in and out of Parliament about the danger of conflicts between the national interest and profitability. Others seem to feel that the two are irreconcilable. The government rejects that contention..." The Chamber maintains that, in this respect, the CDC will, in fact, not be "on all fours" with other Canadian corporations. We still content that CDC directors, if they are indeed to remain independent from government influence, should be provided with more specific guidance as to objects and investment policy than is included in the Bill.

OPERATING CONTROL

In its Brief, on pages 9 to 11, the Chamber discussed this subject as it relates to CDC subsidiary holdings, and we submit that our recommendations, in this regard, are still appropriate. In its subsequent letter to the Chairman of the said Commons Committee, copy appended hereto, the Chamber commented on the matter of government control of the CDC itself. This was debated at some length on pages 24 to 27 and 35 to 37 of Issue No. 45 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the said Commons Committee for May 27.

On page 6391 of the June 4 House of Commons Hansard, Mr. P. M. Mahoney is reported to have said:

"Some critics of the CDC concept believe that any government participation in the corporation will be synonymous with interference in its operation. The best protection against such interference is a strong and independent Board of Directors chosen from the private sector. The Bill explicitly contemplates their independence. I am confident that as soon as the CDC is incorporated a strong Board will be readily formed and will assert its independence."

The Chamber contends that if the CDC is to be on "all fours" with corporate practice in the private sector, the directors will, nevertheless, be subject to government control and policy influence as the Bill now stands. In our view, this will be so at the outset, as well as in the event that the government's voting interest is some day reduced to only 10 per cent.

In commenting on the Chamber's reference in its appended letter to Section 4(2)(i) of Schedule I, on page 34 of the Bill, Mr. Mahoney pointed out (page 25 of Issue No. 45, Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of said Commons Committee) that the wording of this particular paragraph is identical with the wording of a related paragraph in the Schedule to the Canada Corporations Act dealing with constrained share companies. This is quite true. In the case of constrained share companies the paragraph is necessary to prevent groups of associated non-residents or non-citizens, but not Canadian residents or citizens, from obtaining a voting influence. On the other hand, the paragraph in Bill C-219 prevents associated groups of any and all shareholders from effectively combining to outvote the government's nominee (the Minister of Finance) at meetings.

In the practical corporate world, a 10 per cent holding sometimes is sufficient to ensure control of a company. However, a shareholder group may be formed to outvote the previously controlling block, or a take-over bid may succeed in obtaining effective or ful control. With a limit of 3 per cent of outstanding voting shares permitted to be held by a single shareholder and his associates, clearly there can never be an effective challenge of the government's ultimate control of the CDC. Undoubtedly this is as it should be.

I would like to interject here, Mr. Chairman, that the Chamber is not averse to the 3 per cent limit, which in our view should be more to prevent others from gaining control than to permit the Government to dictate policy.

Again, in practice, it is usual and proper for the controlling shareholder or group to be very much involved in policy making and very much concerned in the process of electing directors and electing or appointing senior executive officers. We do not believe that as the Bill now stands, the CDC can be much different as regards these matters than holding companies in the private sector.

It is not the Chamber's desire to comment further on this situation except to say that, unless it is to be clearly stated otherwise in the Bill, we must believe that it is the government's real intention to retain a firm control over CDC policies and activities. This conclusion would help explain the lack of precision in the objects section. In this connection we do appreciate the likelihood that it will be a good many years before the government's 100 per cent voting interest can be reduced through offerings to the public.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to reiterate the recommendations of this section on investment policy, which appear at page 9 of our brief. Our recommendations are:

—That a concise and unequivocal statement of CDC investment policy and its role in ensuring Canadian control of the Canadian economy be included in the Bill.

—That such a statement of policy include provisions limiting CDC investments to profitable or potentially profitable and sound situations.

—That the CDC's freedom from government direction be clearly stated in the Bill.

Senator Benidickson: That relates to the paragraphs immediately above taken from the Australian Industry Development Corporation Act, 1970. I think that should be on the record because it more clearly illustrates the objects.

Mr. Peck: Yes sir; we do refer in our commentary in the brief to certain provisions in the bill which established the Australian Industry Development Corporation.

Senator Benidickson: Would you care to read those paragraphs?

Mr. Peck: I shall read those three clauses from the Australian Act:

The Corporation shall pursue a policy directed to securing, to the greatest extent practicable, participation by Australian residents in the ownership of the capital and in the control of companies to which it provides assistance.

The Corporation shall act in accordance with sound business principles and shall not provide assistance in relation to a particular company unless it is satisfied that the company will operate on a profitable basis.

In the exercise of its powers the Corporation is not subject to direction by or on behalf of the Commonwealth.

Senator Croll: Do you think the second clause means a great deal? I would love to be in that position.

The Chairman: It is similar to provisions included in a will which we refer to as the pious wishes of the testator.

Senator Croll: Do you remember we always termed those motherhood clauses?

Mr. Peck: If I may, Mr. Chairman, I will comment on that. There has been some debate on this matter of policy and perhaps an inconsistency between objectives. It has been argued that there is a possibility that the CDC might become involved in investments which would be profitable only in the very long term or, conceivably, might be only in the national interest and not profitable at all. I know that the bill does mention the word "profitable".

Senator Burchill: Would that not be a matter of judgment on the part of the directors?

Mr. Peck: I have to admit that is true.

Senator Cook: Some of the provincial governments have been involved in unprofitable ventures.

The Chairman: I am a little concerned with respect to the statement in the brief. The statute does provide guidelines which are, no matter how hard it may be to harness them, the national interest and a degree of profitability.

Senator Beaubien: Only a degree.

The Chairman: Another way of expressing it would be that they will act in accordance with sound business practices and will not give assistance in relation to a particular company unless it appears that the company will operate on a profitable basis. Nothing requires the directors of this company to guarantee the profitability, but it must appear that there is a reasonable expectation in the minds of men skilful and knowledgeable in the field that there will be profit.

Therefore, it appears to me that the bill provides exactly what you say. Clause 2 sets forth the purpose of the act, as follows:

The purpose of this Act is to establish a corporation that will help develop and maintain strong Canadian controlled and managed corporations in the private sector of the economy and will give Canadians greater opportunities to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada.

The very points we are discussing are inherent in those purposes. It is different language, but the same description of intent.

Senator Cook: The reference to the private sector excludes the post office.

The Chairman: I am not sure; we may find that it will become a private business operation one day. Let us hope.

Senator Benidickson: There is nothing in the bill as specific as the third clause the witness read from the Australian act, which states:

In the exercise of its powers the Corporation is not subject to direction by or on behalf of the Commonwealth.

That is very clear; we have had statements of ministers, but not a statute.

The Chairman: Clause 6, dealing with the objects of the company, provides that they shall be carried out in anticipation of profit and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole.

Senator Benidickson: That was not my point. The Australian clause provides that the Crown shall not interfere and the witnesses told us that according to business experience it is quite likely that for many years the Crown will have 100 per cent of the shareholdings. At the minimum it will hold 10 per cent, which will likely provide effective influence in the operation and directions to the directors.

The Chairman: Senator Benidickson, there appears to be an anomaly there. Shareholders own the company. Because for a period of time these shareholders may be the Government of Canada, you suggest that they should deny themselves their right as shareholders. It is their money.

Senator Benidickson: I am not saying that at all. I am saying that if I were a director of a company I would be quite respectful to the shareholders.

The Chairman: Yes, or you would not be there very long.

Senator Benidickson: The shareholders in this case are likely to be the Government, and that will probably be so for some time. It would be very influential as a shareholder, even if it is reduced to a 10 per cent holding.

The Chairman: As shareholders should be.

Senator Benidickson: That is right.

Senator Cook: As a matter of law the Government could not veto actions by the directors.

The Chairman: No.

Mr. H. J. Hemens, Q.C., Counsel, Canadian Chamber of Commerce: That may be subject to question. First of all, as a matter of law the Government can always amend the statute. That is point number one.

Senator Cook: Parliament can.

The Chairman: Parliament can, not the Government.

Mr. Hemens: Thank you very much. The second point is that, in respect of any amendment of the charter, the Letters Patent, the views of Parliament, the approval of Parliament has to be obtained; so if the directors have proposed something which requires supplementary letters patent, or their equivalent, Parliament clearly can veto it. It is not quite as clear, with respect, sir, as it seems.

Senator Cook: If you put in the act that Parliament could not veto, then at the next opportunity Parliament would change that act. You cannot stop Parliament.

Mr. Hemens: That is quite true. We are just pointing out some of the confusions there. May I take a moment on some of the confusions? Senator Hayden referred to clause 2. Reference was made a little earlier by Senator Croll to motherhood, and if ever I saw a definition of "motherhood" there it is in clause 2.

With respect to clause 6 we have the confusion, to me at least, that clause 6(1)(c) requires the company to invest in shares or securities related to the economic interests of Canada. This is a function of the directors.

The Chairman: When you say that it requires, let us get our language straight. These are the objects of the company. In the operation of the company, the directors determine the course of action.

Mr. Hemens: That is right.

The Chairman: And the areas in which they venture and the areas in which they do not venture.

Mr. Hemens: That is correct, sir.

The Chairman: So because clause 6(1)(c) may read with any interpretation that you want to give it, it does not mean that the directors must carry out the intent of paragraph (c).

Mr. Hemens: No, but it does mean that they cannot do anything which is in conflict with that paragraph (c).

The Chairman: Why should they?

Mr. Hemens: Because they may not know what are the economic interests of Canada.

The Chairman: Then they should not be directors—and we have the power to fire them. Is not that right?

Mr. Hemens: That is very good. The only difficulty is that, from time to time and, on occasion, even in parliament, there are different views as to what are the economic interests of Canada in a particular matter. I suggest to you that this is a problem which may require some clarification. If you look at paragraph (d).

The Chairman: If you think it does, what do you suggest?

Mr. Hemens: That is a very good question.

The Chairman: It certainly is. It is easy to take away, but I want to know what do you suggest would be better language?

Mr. Hemens: I think what we have suggested, senator, is more specific references, more specific statements of objects, more specific statements of policy, set out in our brief.

Senator Hays: What page do you have those on?

Mr. Hemens: We have references to this under "Investment Policy", starting on page 6 and running through to page 9. As a matter of fact, Mr. Peck read those recommendations a few moments ago.

The Chairman: Do you agree, in relation to your reference on page 9, that there should be incorporated into this bill the third item that you quote from the Australian Industrial Development Corporation Act, that in the exercise of its powers the corporation—that is the CDC here—is not subject to direction by or on behalf of the Commonwealth. Would you agree to that going into this bill?

Mr. Hemens: Speaking on behalf of the chamber...

The Chairman: Yes?

Mr. Hemens: And without reference to personal views...

The Chairman: Yes?

Mr. Hemens: That is what we stated, sir.

The Chairman: What you are saying in effect is that the Commonwealth, it is all right for it to put its money in but it cannot go where its money is going.

Mr. Hemens: It has a right to persuade the directors to the extent of its holdings in the corporation, just as in any other corporation.

The Chairman: That means by firing them?

Mr. Hemens: That means by firing them, yes.

The Chairman: They have the power to fire them.

Senator Benidickson: The directors have power under this bill to elect some other directors—which is not usual. Usually, the shareholders elect the directors.

The Chairman: You are mistaken, senator, may I say, with all due respect. Under this bill we provide for a minimum of 18 directors and a maximum of 21. So long as the Government has 50 per cent or more of the voting shares, it can nominate I think it is the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Deputy Minister of Finance.

Senator Benidickson: Ex officio.

The Chairman: They are ex officio directors in that period, but they have no vote and they get no remuneration. As to the rest of the directors, the shareholder, the Government of Canada, is entitled to designate four or, if it does not designate them, it just takes its chances at an annual meeting, which is not much of a chance, and it could elect the whole board. There is power in the bill under which a director may be removed at any time.

Senator Benidickson: By the board of directors.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Benidickson: Which is normally done by shareholders.

The Chairman: Well, this is different, and this is to make absolutely sure that the directors adhere to the policy and the guidelines laid down in the bill. If they do not, out they go.

Mr. Hemens: May I speak to that, senator? That is a very unusual provision. The shareholders elect the directors, the shareholders having elected the directors, four-fifths of the directors then fire the directors they do not like.

Senator Benidickson: Yes. I have never heard of that before.

Mr. Hemens: I have never heard of anything of this nature.

The Chairman: It may be you will hear more of it in the future.

Mr. Hemens: We say that this is a corporation which will be on all fours with other corporations—

Senator Beaubien: That is the point.

Mr. Hemens: —and then we say it is going to have special powers.

The Chairman: Wait a minute now. We do not say that this is a corporation which is going to be on all fours with others. We provide certain powers for this corporation that you may not find elsewhere. We do give them special powers.

Mr. Hemens: Yes, you do.

Senator Benidickson: There is a clause with respect to C.D.C., that the Canada Corporations Act will not apply.

The Chairman: No. There is a clause which says that there are certain exclusions from Part I of the Canada Corporations Act, but all the other provisions in Part I apply.

Senator Benidickson: I was referring to the exclusions.

The Chairman: They exclude certain features. I can tell you one of them. If the ancillary powers in the Canada Corporations Act apply, this corporation might have a right to join in amalgamations. That is one of the sections which is excluded. But you will find that the section is repeated almost word for word as an ancillary power, except that the words "other than an amalgamation" are put in to make the change. You will find many instances where they have excluded sections of the Canada Corporations Act but they have repeated sections that, to a very great extent, are the same.

Senator Benidickson: They put them back in again.

The Chairman: Except that they put in qualifications that were not in. I would say the qualifications are by way of restriction.

Mr. Hemens: May I make a comment, senator? You say that, with the exception of the exclusions, the Canada Corporations Act provisions apply. That is true, but they apply to the company "with such modification as circumstances require". I have not the foggiest notion what that means, and I would challenge anyone to interpret it.

The Chairman: I think one of the things it means is that this is a special act company, and yet you can change the character of the company by supplementary Letters Patent. That is a modification.

Mr. Hemens: Which applies to the utilization of the provisions of the Canada Corporations Act?

The Chairman: Yes, so as to make it applicable. It was an oddity until the power was created whereby you could amend a company incorporated by statute by supplementary Letters Patent under the Canada Corporations Act. I think this is one of the things they have in mind. We will have the departmental officials here and maybe they can pick out other instances.

Mr. Hemens: It is an extremely broad provision favouring the directors. It may be useful, I do not know; but, on the other hand, it may be difficult.

The Chairman: Well, let us put it this way, that if we are dealing with the giving of legislative powers in statutes, our inclination is to be very exact. We are governed by the purposes of the bill and sometimes we had representations made that the purpose of the bill did not lend itself to being so exact, and in that event we would broaden it out. Maybe this is the type of bill, having regard to the purposes, where there should be a broad scope. They should not have to get on the telephone to the Minister of Finance to find out whether or not they should invest certain moneys. I would expect they would consult him from time to time, if they needed some money by way of a loan, and there is provision for loaning moneys, on terms that he may dictate. But would you have to ask, "Do I have a broad power to do certain things?" In talking to the Minister of Finance I would not say, "Do you want me to do this?". I think the position the minister would take would be, "Yes, you have authority." He would ask you what you were going to do with the money, and then he could decide whether or not he was going to lend it to you. It certainly inhibits the exercise of investment policy to have to get on the telephone all the time to find out, "Can I do this?". You cannot say to the market, "Just hold that position or, if you are going to do anything, go down until I decide whether I should do this or not." You have to take advantage of situations as they arise and, therefore, you need broader powers. I am sorry, I cut in. Go ahead.

Mr. Hemens: I think I have finished, senator.

Mr. Peck: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out what we are trying to point up here, and we did discuss this in our brief at pages 6 and 7, where we make the point that we believe there is a conflict between the objectives of national interests and seeking the most profitable investments. We simply discussed this point. We feel that without more specific direction the directors could perhaps have a hard time resolving this conflict in some instances. Again we are...

The Chairman: Well, if you will stop right there, please. Supposing it is a resource industry. The development of resource industries, I think you would agree, would be in the national interest.

Mr. Peck: Yes.

The Chairman: So, then, the next question I address myself to...

Senator Benidickson: Well, it could be a flop, as happened in Manitoba.

The Chairman: Yes, but this bill does not guarantee things. They have to make a decision as to whether it is profitable or not.

Senator Benidickson: And the Quebec flops of Crown companies that have been developing resources.

Senator Cook: In sponsoring the bill, Mr. Chairman, you made the point quite clear that with good luck and good management the company may have some hope of success.

The Chairman: Having money alone is not going to make this thing operate well. The key to the whole thing is the management and its direction. You make the best selections you can; you ride herd on them, but no one can guarantee. That is why I made the suggestion the other day that I thought that in dealing with resource industries maybe they should move in at a higher level. For instance, when they get to the stage where the feasibility studies have been completed, and they know that if they get into production it is normal and reasonable to expect that it will be profitable, and yet, even at that stage, there is tremendous difficulty in finding large quantities of money. I could cite so many illustrations of that that I have been through. The enterprise would become profitable more immediately than if you went into the forest in the northland and did all the original work. It may be in the national interests to do it, and it may ultimately be profitable, but the board of directors of CDC will have to say: "Are we going to go in so early?"

Senator Cook: And even when the private sector reaches that stage there is still lots of money lost, so you have to have good luck.

Mr. Hemens: With respect, senator, I think you have pointed up the conflict for the board of directors as between the national interests and profitability. It may well be in the national interest to do something immediately and it may be that that something, in the judgment of the directors, would not be profitable.

The Chairman: Then, they cannot do it.

Senator Hays: They cannot do it.

Mr. Hemens: I hope you are right.

Senator Beaubien: I think they would probably do it.

Mr. Hemens: Clause 6(1) states:

...and shall be carried out in anticipation of profit and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole.

Senator Hays: That would be dollars, would it not?

Mr. Hemens: I would hope it might be, yes.

The Chairman: The purpose refers you to the national interest, and the only word you are using that I did not feel I could accept was that there was a conflict between national interests and profitability. I do not think there is a conflict. I would say that exercising your judgment to harness the two of them will require considerable know-how and judgment, but I do not think there is a conflict where one is repugnant to the other.

Mr. Hemens: No, but in particular cases you might have this conflict.

The Chairman: Maybe the directors in those particular cases would have some judgment in the matter that might even coincide with your judgment.

Mr. Hemens: They might have.

Senator Hays: They might even ask the Chamber of Commerce about it.

Mr. Peck: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might read the summary on page 1 of our brief in this matter?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Peck: I might just read that because it goes to the problem we are discussing. It reads:

It is contended that the proposed CDC policy to promote greater Canadian control of its economy while, at the same time, to maximize economic return may lead to conflicts between these objectives. Foreign, and particularly U.S., interests are willing to pay a premium for shares of Canadian companies in the raw materials and technology fields. Therefore, in order to avoid paying excessive prices for such interests in open bidding, the CDC will have to become involved in joint ventures with foreign concerns. Government policy with respect to foreign ownership remains to be enunciated and a great deal of public uncertainty exists in this regard.

The Chairman: If you would stop right there, please: The budget that just came down deals with one of these questions and the ability of U.S. investors to be able to pay a premium, because in the United States the great complaint—and, Senators Hays, you will remember this was discussed before our White Paper committee—was that the investor in the United States who borrowed money for the purchase of shares could write off the interest. The budget now provides for that, so that has been equalized. With respect to the other aspects, I do not think anyone is saying that there cannot be conflict or repugnancy between national interest and profitability, but the bill says both must exist in the opinion of the board, so I would assume, and I think we have a right to assume, that if there is a conflict between the two aspects and you cannot fit them together, then, you do not do it.

Mr. Peck: The other point which bothered us—and this is why we quoted Mr. Mahoney on the subject—is the fact that he mentioned that the best protection against such interference as Government interference was a strong and independent board of directors.

We find this difficult to understand, because we feel that, as the bill stands, the Government itself would have this controlling function, and the directors, without more specific objects spelled out in the bill would have to refer back to the Government on what Government policy might be or in connection with matters of national interest. Therefore it would not be an independent board of directors. That is a question that we find puzzling.

The Chairman: Do you think that there are not enough public men in Canada who would take on the job of directorship in connection with such an important operation as this, that they would not be prepared to assert independence when they knew that that was a concept of their job?

Senator Benidickson: Several of our financial journals have suggested that it would be difficult to get people to take on the job.

The Chairman: But I do not agree with that.

Mr. Peck: I do not necessarily agree with that, either. Undoubtedly it would be possible to set up a board of directors. However, it would be very much easier for a board of directors to function effectively if their terms of reference were spelled out more clearly.

Senator Burchill: It will be a difficult job for a director of this corporation to steer a course between the national interest and profitability. I am thinking of the big enterprise on Cape Breton, Nova Scotia. Money has been put into it by the provincial government, and it is a profitable enterprise. However, would the directors have been justified in buying stock in that concern before?

The Chairman: Perhaps not. That was a delayed reaction. However, that does not condemn or support the bill.

Senator Burchill: No, but it shows the difficulty that exists in following a course between profitability and the national interest.

The Chairman: When the Government of Nova Scotia put money into it, they had a purpose for doing so. They hoped that it would be profitable and that it would provide development for the area.

Senator Hays: The terms of reference were a little different than those that are here.

Mr. Peck: Continuing with my letter, we say:

LEGISLATIVE CONSISTENCY

We maintain that the comments and recommendations under this heading, on pages 11 to 14 and page 20 of the appended Brief, are still valid. In particular, we would like to draw attention to the second point made in the Chamber's appended letter to the said Commons Committee. This refers to Section 20(3) of the Bill and the confusing element which in our view would be introduced into the existing body of law on the subject of when a person is "ordinarily resident in Canada". As mentioned in that letter, this matter was discussed by your Committee on January 27, 1971, with reference to the Investment Companies Act.

MARKETABILITY OF SHARES

In the Chamber's view, the amendments to the original Section 16 of the Bill will do little to improve marketability of CDC shares, when and if they are issued to the public, as claimed by Mr. Mahoney (page 6391 of the House of Commons Hansard for June 4). We submit that the complications and uncertainties of the Bill's provisions as discussed on pages 14 to 16 of the attached Brief will constitute serious inhibitions to satisfactory marketability. It is our contention that adoption of the recommendations on page 16 of the attached Brief would alleviate the problems outlined. However, we admit that these will not have to be faced until a public offering of CDC shares is actually contemplated. When and if this happens, it will always be possible to amend the Act should the problems referred to prove insurmountable.

GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION

No significant amendments have been made to this part of the Bill. We contend that the procedure of CDC redemption of government-owned common shares at net asset value, and their re-issue to the public at a marketable price, may not be possible to put into effect. In our view this can be done only when and if a market can be made at a price equal to or greater than net asset value. Yet, the market prices of closed-end investment and holding company shares in Canada, over the years, have been consistently at substantial discount from net asset values. Perhaps the CDC will be so successful in establishing an earnings and growth record that such a discount in the case of its common share prices will be eliminated. If it is not, then it would be likely that shares should never be issued to the public. The Chamber's discussions and recommendations on pages 17 to 19 of the appended Brief were made in an effort to point out this problem and assist in its solution.

I do not think that I need touch on the heading "Certain Technical Aspects". They were covered in the appendix to our brief. We mention in that paragraph that a number of amendments were made which we had actually recommended. That completes what we have submitted to you, sir.

The Chairman: To summarize the points that you are raising, they go to the more general scope in language of the objects and purposes of the bill. You think that it should be more specific. You feel also that the directors should be independent of the influence of the Government of Canada, and you realize that to do that we would have to redefine what are the rights of shareholders.

It is conceivable that at some stage we might get a bill in form and with limitations that even the Government would not put money into it. The Government could always revert to the present system, like the Cape Breton Development Corporation in the Maritimes. The Minister of Finance is the responsible minister. They can provide capital funds at the direction of the board of directors, but that has to meet certain tests and requirements as being a proper thing for regional development. Alternatively, the Government could guarantee.

That course is always open to the Government. The CDC introduced the extra feature to try to create a vehicle which at some stage might be attractive for public investment; to create it in such a way that nobody could get control, and there could be no grouping for purposes of getting control; in other words, to try to keep it in the public domain.

True, that cannot happen as long as the Government is a substantial shareholder. But conceivably, if this vehicle works the way they want it to, they may be able to withdraw a substantial part of their money some day—although for a long period of time I made my own assessment of what I thought about this as a public investment. However, Rome was not built in a day. Have you anything else to add?

Mr. Hemens: The Minister of Finance, when speaking to the House of Commons committee, referred to the: fairly tenuous position controlling a corporation of 10 per cent, if there really is dissatisfaction at the way the corporation is running.

He then went on to say that if the directors were messing things up, and were being supported by the Government 10 per cent, it would become very difficult because the other shareholders will mobilize or somebody will mobilize them.

This is not feasible under the act, because of the definition of "associates".

The Chairman: The only way that could be done effectively would be at an annual meeting.

Mr. Hemens: So long as there is in the judgment of the directors an arrangement between two shareholders there is an association and therefore a forced sale.

The Chairman: But if the shareholders feel the directors are not taking a proper stand they do not have to go further, they can nominate.

Mr. Hemens: The definition of "associates" raises a problem.

The Chairman: I know it is not easy; that only means an associate in the event of pooling of shares to be more effective.

Mr. Hemens: No, sir, it does not. That is what bothers me. Section 4(2)(i) of Schedule I of Bill C-219 reads as follows:

(i) both shareholders are parties to an agreement or arrangement, a purpose of which, in the opinion of the Board of Directors, is to require the shareholders to act in concert with respect to their interest in the company;

That effectively overcomes any possibility of mobilization of shareholders in respect of directors. I suggest that should be considered.

The Chairman: Are you suggesting that if I decided to put on a proxy fight I could not go out and solicit proxies from all the shareholders?

Mr. Hemens: I do not think you could.

The Chairman: I can go and ask them to give me their proxies.

Mr. Hemens: I do not think you could; that would be an arrangement with another shareholder.

The Chairman: Is it? It depends on what I say.

Mr. Hemens: It is in the opinion of the directors.

The Chairman: Oh, yes; then there would be a lawsuit.

Mr. Hemens: That is correct.

Senator Benidickson: At page 5 of the brief the following appears:

It is generally known that the Chamber has not favoured the formation of the Canada Development Corporation. In fact, its Policy Statement on this subject in September, 1970..

Which is not long ago. It continues:
was as follows:

It has not been demonstrated that the Canada Development Corporation fulfills an economic need in Canada at the present time or that its proposed methods of financing or operating are practicable. (It can be questioned that there is an entrepreneurial gap or a gap in our capital market and, if there are such gaps, that the Canada Development Corporation is the best way of closing the gaps.) It is submitted that a full exploration should be conducted into the use of fiscal policy to encourage savings and their investment by Canadians in Canadian equity securities. The Chamber, therefore, is of the view that the Canada Development Corporation should not be proceeded with.

My observation is that you now take the stand that the Government is determined to have this bill passed and you question the usefulness of repeating your strong statement of last fall. You went further and were helpful in suggestions as to simply patching up the bill, but you kind of went chicken on your basic objection, in my opinion.

I wonder why that developed?

Senator Hays: It is similar to the capital gains tax.

Mr. Peck: We attempted to point out in the brief that the Chamber of Commerce has a procedure for developing policy, which flows through democratic processes from chambers throughout the country. The executive council could not make another statement on policy at this stage without conflicting with the usual procedures.

Senator Benidickson: Yes, but as the chairman has pointed out, this reference to the use of the fiscal weapons was utilized quite effectively on Friday night with respect to foreign investment in allowing interest to be charged as expense.

The Chairman: I would think that is the case in other parts of the budget. I have not made a particular analysis of it as yet.

Senator Benidickson: At the same time I rather agree with the fall statement that some of the faults could be remedied better by fiscal methods than by handing over a quarter of a billion dollars in the first instance. It will certainly be a group very largely influenced by the mandarins around Parliament Hill. I think the private sector could have done these things. If they had not done them properly the Government, by changing its fiscal and company laws, could have solved some of the problems.

Mr. Hemens: It has taken us approximately 20 years to convince the Minister of Finance of the necessity for the interest provision in the budget.

The Chairman: That is right; the fiscal policy sometimes is a slow, tedious and persistent effort that culminates years later. I know for instance in 1948-1949, the spearhead being Senator Euler and his chief lieutenant the chairman of this committee, that we were fighting for two measures and were voted down in the Senate every time. We thought that the prohibition against the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in Canada was wrong and invalid. We finally put an innocent motion on the Order Paper asking that the constitutionality of that statute be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. It was referred and declared invalid, the decision being upheld by the Privy Council.

The second effort that Senator Euler put forward was against a sales tax on margarine. He argued that there was no sales tax on butter and that therefore there should not be one on margarine. It is a nutritious item of food and serves a useful purpose. Now it comes in the budget this time, 20 years later. That fits right into the pattern.

Maybe that is one of the answers. If you want some immediate economic growth you just cannot afford to wait that long. You must try something in the meantime.

Mr. Hemens: That would be dangerous.

The Chairman: We will adjourn until 2.15 p.m.
The committee adjourned.

—The committee resumed at 2.15 p.m.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, this afternoon we have before us representatives from the Department of Finance: Mr. W. A. Kennett, Director, Capital Markets Division; Mr. R. B. Love, Legal Advisor; and Mr. W. D. Lennox, Accounting Consultant. How many of them we will need to call on, in addition to Mr. Kennett, will depend on the nature of the questions. There has been a rather lengthy airing of the provisions of the bill. With that in mind, and without restricting your eloquence, Mr. Kennett, you can make an opening statement on this bill.

Mr. W. A. Kennett, Director, Capital Markets Division, Department of Finance: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. Honourable senators, this bill was first introduced into the house last January. It has been much discussed. It has been in the public limelight off and on for something like eight years. You had an excellent presentation of the technical aspects of this bill in your chairman's aspects of this bill in your chairman's introduction of the bill in the Senate. There is very little, if anything, I can add to that technical presentation. It was very complete and it represented quite a remarkable grasp of this rather complicated legislation. At least, it is complicated from my point of view, not being a corporation lawyer.

A number of amendments were made in the House of Commons when the bill was before committee. Many of them were rather small, tidying up amendments.

Senator Benidickson: How are those amendments shown? I was saying this morning that usually there is an underlining in the final bill that is sent to the Senate, and we compare that with the bill as introduced for first reading. Then we have an idea as to what the amendments are. I checked this morning and I could not see any underlining or any explanatory notes to indicate what changes were made as a result of the discussion in the House of Commons Finance Committee.

The Chairman: I understand that the underlining is done where the amendments are amendments in relation to a basic act. This is the same bill and it underwent some treatment in committee, but when it comes out of committee it comes out in the form in which it leaves the committee and there is no underlining in those circumstances. I checked with our Law Clerk and he tells me that is right. That is why there is no underlining here.

Senator Benidickson: Could we hear what amendments were made to the original bill as presented on first reading?

Mr. Kennett: Mr. Chairman, we do have a copy of the bill where the amendments are underlined.

Senator Benidickson: I went to Distribution and the copy of the bill they gave me is perfectly plain. There is nothing to indicate what changes were made between the first presentation of the bill, and the final passing at third reading stage.

The Chairman: For your comfort and information, Senator Benidickson, here is a special copy of the bill with such underlining shown.

Senator Benidickson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That is satisfactory. I see the underlining.

Mr. Kennett: You can flip through the pages, senator, and see what in fact was done. This will be better than going through these amendments, as many of them are highly technical.

The Chairman: Mr. Kennett, there are but one or two things I see that might require some explanation. I am thinking of the submission made by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. They thought the duties and responsibilities of the directors were not specific enough. They thought the powers were too broadly stated. Those were two of the main points they made. The third one was the position of the Government as the major shareholder, influencing the decisions of the board. Have you any comment on those three points?

Mr. Kennett: My understanding is—and I am speaking as an official, I want that to be quite clear.

The Chairman: That is right. In the case of any question that smacks of policy, do not answer it.

Mr. Kennett: Thank you. My understanding is that the objects of the bill are intentionally broad. They are broad because this is a statutory corporation. They are broad because it is intended that this corporation will have a long life and will want to be able to act in changing circumstances. They are broad to give the board of directors the power it will need, through time, to act in response to particular situations. On the other hand, efforts have been made to make the objects sufficiently specific, in their philosophy, in the direction in which they go, to give some guidance to the board of directors.

It would be difficult to recruit the kind of directors that would be required to make this corporation a successful corporation, if they were confined and restrained unduly. To get the right kind of people, who will take the difficult kinds of decisions which were discussed in this committee this morning, it is necessary to give them some flexibility in their operations. The general drift of this corporation is quite clear in the objects and powers of the corporation.

Senator Cook: The best thing for the Government would be to appoint the members of the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce as the first directors, and then it would be sure to be successful!

Senator Beaubien: It cannot help but succeed then.

The Chairman: They have some experience in the responsibilities and also in the criticism.

Senator Cook: I do not think this is going to give the directors wisdom if they have not got it when they are appointed.

The Chairman: This is something we do not control.

Senator Cook: I hope I am not being too premature. I move that we report the bill without amendment.

Senator Benidickson: I want to indicate that I have lived with this bill for quite a little while. I was a member of the cabinet when the concept was first developed. At that time I think the emphasis was on buying back Canada, and it seemed to be a pretty substantial undertaking. This bill in little ways resembles that original concept. I still think it is riddled with ambiguities. I do not propose to ask these witnesses in detail about some of these points.

I think the timing is bad, because from the beginning, eight years ago, when I was associated with the concept, it had a very definite relationship with policy in respect to foreign ownership in Canada.

Before we dealt with this bill—which the Government did not consider too urgent for eight years—we should have had the Honourable Mr. Gray's report—he has been working on it for some time—as to Government policy on this matter of foreign investment and what to do about it.

Mr. Chairman, rather than go into detail on the clauses of the bill, I may have a few words to say on third reading in the chamber.

The Chairman: This bill has had ample study in the Senate, even before it came to this Committee. I am not saying that because I dealt with it as sponsor. We did elaborate and develop all the aspects of the bill, so I would say there is no feature that is not known.

Senator Beaubien: There is not much to add.

The Chairman: On the question of repatriation that you are speaking about.

Senator Benidickson: There is nothing on that here.

The Chairman: There is nothing in this bill which makes any declaration of policy with respect to repatriation.

Senator Benidickson: That is right.

The Chairman: I would say that the powers of investment are such that they could invest in shares of a company which is non-resident owned. It is difficult to restrict investment policy. If the terms are national interest and profitability, there may be non-resident ownership of a Canadian enterprise that would be a very valuable thing to acquire.

Senator Benidickson: That is not presented by the bill.

The Chairman: No, it is not presented.

Senator Benidickson: I am saying that over the years it is no longer the main point of emphasis in the concept of the Canada Development Corporation.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Croll: I support this bill, but one thing did arise. There is a provision for directors to appoint directors.

The Chairman: It is the usual provision where, if there is a vacancy and as long as there is a quorum, the remaining directors may appoint directors.

Senator Benidickson: I was not sure in reading that section. That is page 8.

Senator Croll: That is not the normal corporate practice.

The Chairman: It is.

Senator Beaubien: During the year, yes. At the end of the year the shareholders elect a board of directors.

Senator Croll: I know.

The Chairman: Senator, the Canada Corporations Act uses the word "elect" where we heretofore used to talk about appointing for the balance of the term.

Senator Croll: That is right.

The Chairman: They use the word "elect", so you use the language of the statute.

Senator Benidickson: But there is no reference to "balance of term". It does sometimes happen that a director is appointed for the remaining portion of another director's term, and then the shareholders are the ones who elect the directors for the next term.

The Chairman: All it says, senator, on page 8, section 12(4) is:

The directors may from time to time appoint any other person as a director, either to fill a casual vacancy or as an addition to the Board, but the total number of directors, subject to section 41, shall not at any time exceed the maximum number fixed under section 11.

That is a minimum of 18 or a maximum of 21.

Senator Beaubien: They could only act, then if there was a vacancy either in the total number or if someone fell out who had already been appointed.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Beaubien: That is the normal practice in business. At the end of the year all the people who are directors would have to be re-elected or reappointed.

The Chairman: That is right. When you are elected a director you are only a director until your successor is appointed.

Senator Croll: All right.

The Chairman: Senator Cook, do you have any other questions?

Senator Cook: No.

The Chairman: I have noted what your motion is, Senator Gélinas?

Senator Gélinas: I support the bill.

The Chairman: Senator Carter?

Senator Carter: No.

The Chairman: Senator Sullivan?

Senator Sullivan: No questions.

Senator Benidickson: Mr. Chairman...

The Chairman: We have heard from you.

Senator Benidickson: May I speak again?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Benidickson: What is the situation with respect to voting for preferred stock? It is optional, is it not, that the board can decide whether to allow voting privileges on the preferred stock or not allow voting privileges on the preferred stock?

The Chairman: That is put a little differently, senator. I think the provisions in the bill are that preferred shares may be issued in series. One series, if the directors so determine, may carry voting privileges in certain events, that is, if there is default in payment of dividends, et cetera; but they may also be issued without any voting rights. This depends on whatever the conditions are that are attached to them. Section 18(2) states:

In the absence of other provisions on that behalf in the by-laws, the preferred shares of the company do not carry voting rights.

But remember that a preferred share that carries a voting right in any circumstances is, for the purposes of this bill, a voting share. Regardless of whatever restriction and everything else in the bill, it is in the category of a voting share.

Senator Croll: Will you stop talking this bill out?

The Chairman: I am so anxious that each senator should fully understand that, when he asks a question, that I do not want him to feel that the chairman has been..

Senator Benidickson: We are very careful, Mr. Chairman. We do not often have the free benefit of your counsel.

Senator Croll: The emphasis was on the "free".

The Chairman: It is free in the sense that I do not get any more than the rest of you. Before I put this motion, Mr. Kennett, is there anything more that you wish to say?

Mr. Kennett: No, sir.

The Chairman: Mr. Love?

Mr. Love: No, sir.

The Chairman: Mr. Lennox?

Mr. Lennox: No.

The Chairman: We have a motion to report this bill without amendment. Those in favour? Contrary?

Motion carried.

The committee adjourned.

---

Published under authority of the Senate by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Information Canada, Ottawa, Canada.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

---

No. 33

---

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23, 1971

---

Complete Proceedings on Bill C-239,

intituled:

“An Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act”

---

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE

---

(Witnesses:—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Haig
Beaubien	Hayden
Benidickson	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Kinley
Choquette	Lang
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Macnaughton
Cook	Molson
Croll	Smith
Desruisseaux	Sullivan
Everett	Walker
Gélinas	Welch
Giguère	White
Grosart	Willis—(29).

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, June 23, 1971:

"Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lafond, for the second reading of the Bill C-239, intituled: "An Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act".

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Honourable Senator Argue moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator McNamara, that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Tuesday, June 29, 1971.

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9:30 a.m. to consider the following Bill:

Bill C-239 "An Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Aird, Beaubien, Burchill, Giguère, Haig, Macnaughton and Molson—(8).

Present, but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senator Lafond—(1).

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel.

WITNESSES:

Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce:

Mr. W. E. Jarvis, Co-ordinator,
Grains Group;

Mr. N. A. O'Connell, Executive Secretary,
Grains Group.

Upon motion it was Resolved to report the said Bill without amendment.

At 10:10 a.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

Report of the Committee

Tuesday, June 29, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill C-239, intituled: "An Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act", has in obedience to the order of reference of June 23, 1971, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted.

Salter A. Hayden,
Chairman.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Tuesday, June 29, 1971

[Text]

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill C-239, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, met this day at 9.30 a.m. to give consideration to the bill.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, this morning we are dealing with Bill C-239, and we have here to explain it Mr. W. E. Jarvis, Co-ordinator, and Mr. N. A. O'Connell, Executive Secretary, the Grains Group, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Mr. Jarvis will make the opening statement.

Mr. W. E. Jarvis, Co-ordinator, Grains Group, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, this bill contains relatively minor amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. The primary purpose of the act is to give producers the opportunity to receive advance payments at the beginning of the crop year, on grains which they will deliver to the Canadian Wheat Board. The amendments continue the pursuit of that objective, but some changes are involved.

The most important change is that wheat, oats and barley will be given more equal treatment. In the past the maximum loan was $6,000—as it continues to be—but that maximum could only be had by taking an advance on wheat. With these amendments, if a producer has enough oats or barley and has sufficient quota and marketing opportunities available to him, he will be able to get a maximum on either oats or barley as well. The rate of advance per bushel is set in the statute now at $1 for wheat, 70 cents for barley and 40 cents for oats. This bill provides for a rate to be established at the beginning of each crop year, but specifies that it must be in an amount approximately two-thirds of the initial price for the grade of grain which will be in the largest volume in the forthcoming year. So it is geared to adapt itself from year to year to the actual quality situation of the crop.

The Chairman: I notice that the bill is to come into force on August 1. That is a significant date, is it not?

Mr. Jarvis: Yes, that is the beginning of the crop year, and we are most anxious to have the bill in effect at that time, if possible.

The Chairman: Is the initial price you talked about the basis for determining the advance?

Mr. Jarvis: That is correct.

The Chairman: It is determined on that basis.

Mr. Jarvis: That is right. All the machinery for the new year comes into effect on that date.

With respect to repayment, rather than paying back an amount which is different from the rate of advance per bushel as it now is in the act, the new provisions will make the rate of repayment exactly the same as the rate of advance. Moreover, the amount of advance will be geared to an individual's marketing opportunity. He must have the quota opportunity available to him to get the advance. These two things combine to give much greater certainty that the advance which is given at the beginning of the crop year, shortly after August 1 in most cases, will be repaid completely during the year.

The Chairman: What is the rate of advance, for instance, for barley?

Mr. Jarvis: That will be set later, but it looks as though it will be in the area of 60 to 65 cents a bushel, as of August 1 this year; and then they can repay it at the same rate.

The Chairman: But you mentioned the figure of 70 cents for barley. What was that figure?

Mr. Jarvis: That is what is in the act now. This bill would have the effect of replacing it with an amount to be set each year.

The Chairman: The amount you mentioned, 60 to 65 cents, would be the total amount of advance in respect of barley, then.

Mr. Jarvis: Yes, it will be an amount per bushel determined at the beginning of the year, and it will also be determined by acre. If the quota opportunity for barley looks like 12 bushels and the man has been assigned 50 acres for the delivery of barley, then it is an arithmetical calculation of 50 acres, 12 bushels and 60 cents, if that is the figure, so long as he has the grain on hand.

The Chairman: Is this advance paid by instalments? That is what I had in mind when I asked the question about rates.

Mr. Jarvis: Normally, producers come in at the beginning of the year to take out advances. Although an increasing proportion of the producers come in, only a certain proportion take out advances. Those who do normally take the advance in one action. There is nothing to prevent their coming back, and some do take advances early in the year and then come back for more a little later.

I should like to comment briefly on two other points. Two situations are dealt with in this bill which previously had been left to separate legislation. The first is in respect of advances for the drying of grain in years of very difficult harvesting conditions, when there is a lot of grain to dry. There has been legislation from time to time to provide advances against the cost of drying. These are included in the bill on the basis of a provision for Governor-in-Council action. The second is that there is a similar provision for advances in an unharvested year. Both these depend on the Governor in Council taking action in a year in which these kinds of measures are required.

Mr. Chairman, in summary those are the main provisions of Bill C-239.

Senator Macnaughton: Mr. Jarvis, who has the right to fix the rate?

Mr. Jarvis: The Governor in Council finally sets it each year, prior to August 1.

Senator Macnaughton: Which means, in effect, the Wheat Board.

Mr. Jarvis: Well, the Wheat Board administers it so they will certainly be involved in recommendations and will certainly give their advice as to what is going to be the largest volume grade associated with it, but then the cabinet would decide on the actual rate.

The Chairman: Which minister who made the recommendation?

Mr. Jarvis: I am not sure, just at the moment.

Senator Haig: It would be the minister who answers for the Canadian Wheat Board, surely.

Mr. Jarvis: That is the practice, yes.

Senator Haig: The Wheat Board will have to give you the mechanics of this whole thing, the quota system and what the producers intend to produce. They will set what they think will be the ceiling price of that grain.

Mr. Jarvis: That is right. Indeed, they administer it.

Senator Smith: This bill does not spell that out, though. It is in the act which this bill amends.

Mr. Jarvis: That is right, except that the act does not say that the Canadian Wheat Board shall administer it. That is by arrangement. That is the machinery we use.

Senator Burchill: What is the basis of the price on which the advance is made?

Mr. Jarvis: The price is the initial price which is set for the total of the crop year on the basis of the Lakehead price or the price at Vancouver. For example, in the forthcoming year it has been indicated that the initial price on No. 1 C.W. wheat at the Lakehead will be $1.46. This bill provides that the cash advance shall be in an amount approximating two-thirds of the initial price and relating to the largest volume grade. We anticipate that No. 1 C.W. will be the largest. Therefore, approximately two-thirds of $1.46 will be the rate for wheat.

Senator Burchill: But this advance is available before seeding.

Mr. Jarvis: No. It is renewed as of August 1. So far as this bill and the Canadian Wheat Board are concerned, the new year starts on August 1.

Senator Burchill: Then the initial price is fixed before that.

Mr. Jarvis: Yes. The initial price is set before August 1 for that crop year.

Senator Smith: It is a forecast arrangement made to the best of the knowledge of the Wheat Board and other advisers. It is a kind of determination of what they think the price is going to be. They make that and call it the initial price. Then, as the crop year progresses, they make a final settlement. I know that in many years when there has been more they have paid that extra final price, but has there ever been a crop year in which the initial price was more than the final settlement?

Mr. Jarvis: That has happened on two or three occasions, but it has been a rare occurrence. There was a pool on oats early in the 1960s when that happened. There was a pool on wheat in 1968-69, when there was a loss, and I believe in that same year there was a loss in barley.

Senator Smith: What happens to the particular farmer, if there is a loss, in relationship to the Wheat Board?

Mr. Jarvis: Well, he has received his initial payment and the Canadian Wheat Board has provided over the years that the Government picks up any losses on pools.

Senator Smith: This does not happen very often?

Mr. Jarvis: It has not happened very often.

Senator Smith: Just once in a while. In parts of the country where they are not familiar with or very well informed about western agriculture, the general feeling is that the farmers have been heavily subsidized over the years.

The Chairman: I notice that when the question arose as to who the minister was, you referred us to the original act. In that act, section 15 reads as follows:

15. As soon as practicable after receiving requests therefor from the Board, the Minister of Finance shall out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund pay to the Board

(a) interest charges paid or payable by the Board with respect to money borrowed by it or advanced on its behalf for the purposes of this Act, and

(b) amounts of advance payments outstanding at the time of default, to the extent that the Board has not been reimbursed therefor after default.

"The Board" there is the Wheat Board, so, in connection with the financing arrangements, first of all you have to go to the Minister of Finance and then he has to go to the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Mr. Jarvis: This is an important provision in this bill because these are interest-free cash advances, and unless a loan goes into default, as the bill provides, there is no interest charge. Also if he pays in cash rather than in grain, the bill provides that he shall pay interest.

The Chairman: The Wheat Board handles the wheat, barley and oats?

Mr. Jarvis: That is right.

The Chairman: And it is the vehicle through which the sales are made?

Mr. Jarvis: That is right.

The Chairman: Therefore, the Wheat Board can receive the proceeds of the sale, and all it has to do is look at the ledger and see if "John Jones", for whom they have sold and whom they have credited with a certain quantity of wheat, oats or barley, owes so much in respect of advances. So they can do all the arithmetic themselves, can they not?

Mr. Jarvis: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is a very straightforward mechanism in the sense that every producer has a permit book and, if he gets an advance, it is recorded in this book, and with every delivery there is an offset against that. It is a very straightforward method.

The Chairman: He would never get more than a net amount of money. It would always be less what he owes?

Mr. Jarvis: That is correct.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, I move that we report the bill without amendment.

The Chairman: Is the committee satisfied with the explanations we have had?

Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The committee adjourned.

---

Published under authority of the Senate by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Information Canada, Ottawa, Canada.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

---

No. 34

---

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1971

---

First Proceedings on Bill S-22,

intituled:

"An Act to incorporate United Bank of Canada"

---

---

(Witnesses—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Haig
Beaubien	Hayden
Benidickson	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Kinley
Choquette	Lang
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Macnaughton
Cook	Molson
Croll	Smith
Desruisseaux	Sullivan
Everett	Walker
Gélinas	Welch
Giguère	White
Grosart	Willis—(28)

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, June 15, 1971:

"Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Honourable Senator Robichaud, P.C., moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macnaughton, P.C., that the Bill S-22, intituled: "An Act to incorporate United Bank of Canada", be read the second time.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Honourable Senator Robichaud, P.C., moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macnaughton, P.C., that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Wednesday, September 15, 1971.

(38)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9:30 a.m. to consider the following Bill:

Bill S-22, "An Act to incorporate United Bank of Canada".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Beaubien, Blois, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Desruisseaux, Everett, Haig Lang, Molson, Smith, Sullivan, Walker and Welch—(16).

Present, but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senators Laird and Robichaud—(2).

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel and Pierre Godbout, Director of Committees, Assistant Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel.

Upon motion of the Honourable Senator Molson it was Resolved that, unless and until otherwise ordered by the Committee, 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of all proceedings of this Committee be printed.

WITNESSES:

Mr. B. V. Levinter, Q.C., Counsel,
United Bank of Canada;

Mr. W. E. Scott,
Inspector General of Banks;

Mr. A. S. Goldberg, Counsel,
United Trust Company.

At 11:10 a.m. the Committee deferred consideration of Bill S-22 to a later date and then proceeded in camera.

At 11:50 a.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Wednesday, September 15, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill S-22, to incorporate United Bank of Canada, met this day at 9.30 a.m. to give consideration to the bill.

Senator Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I call the meeting to order. We have before us this morning Bill S-22, an Act to incorporate United Bank of Canada.

I suggest that before we proceed with the hearing on this bill we pass a general resolution to print all proceedings of this committee, unless in a particular case we decide not to. There seems to be some confusion, although I thought the understanding was clear that all proceedings would be printed unless we made the decision otherwise. A resolution in our Minutes of Proceedings of today would clarify the situation. Is that agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: We have appearing before us those proposing the incorporation. Mr. B. V. Levinter, Q.C., is appearing as counsel, I believe. Also Mr. G. R. Dryden is appearing as counsel.

As I understand it, the provisional directors are also present, and I expect that counsel for the applicants will introduce them.

The United Trust Company is also appearing, I think on the point of protesting against the name; and we expect the Inspector General of banks to be here.

Mr. Levinter and Mr. Dryden, both of you are appearing as counsel. Who is going to make the initial presentation?

Mr. B. V. Levinter, Q.C., Counsel: I am, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. G. R. Dryden, Counsel: I had not understood that I was appearing as counsel, senator.

The Chairman: Your name appears on the list as counsel; that is all I know, but I did not create the list.

Will you proceed, Mr. Levinter, and give us a summary of the purposes of this bill?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I come before you as the representative of the provisional Board of Directors of the proposed United Bank of Canada; and at the outset, may I thank you on behalf of the members of the provisional board for the opportunity of appearing before you. I know you have pressing problems constantly before you, so vital to the wellbeing and interests of our nation.

You may ask how the idea for a new bank was first conceived. The idea was first engendered roughly a year ago, when the Honourable Walter Gordon addressed a group of Jewish people, suggesting to them that they had failed to take part in the field of banking in Canada, although they had been most active in every other aspect of Canadian life. I considered his remarks, for undoubtedly they were the truth; but his remarks applied equally to many other ethnic groups which represent a considerable and significant portion of the Canadian population.

Canada is a great country, made up of at least 23 different ethnic groups, including people of French origin, Anglo Saxon origin, and the many others who make up the rich mosaic of Canada today.

A cosmopolitan bank representative of all people in this country was thus conceived; a bank which at this crucial stage in our country's development would provide involvement, dialogue and communication with all people, and which would take into account the basic needs, and hopes, of people at all levels of Canadian society.

Meaningful involvement, dialogue and communication must start at the top—the Board of Directors—because it is here that every philosophy and direction of an organization is established. It is from the board that the organization is established. It is from the board that the organization acquires its character, its beliefs, its prejudices and approval in the business society. Thus, in this aspect it is our fervent desire to cope with the needs of all peoples in this country with the United Bank of Canada.

We believe a new chartered bank should come into being under a board representative of all Canadians and their growing needs. Ours will be such a board; ours will be such a bank. At the present time the provisional board is made up of a director from our French-Canadian community, a director from our Polish community, a director from our Italian community, and two directors from our Jewish community, namely, my father and myself. May I introduce to you our directors: Dr. Gerald LaSalle from Sherbrooke, Quebec; Mr. Zenon Gutkowski from Toronto; Mr. A. J. Pianosi from Sudbury; my father and myself.

Perhaps, honourable senators, I might give you a brief breakdown of the background of the various provisional directors. Firstly, may I mention Dr. Gerald LaSalle. In 1940 he obtained his MD at Laval University. In 1941 he went into the practice of general medicine at Ansonville in Ontario. In 1944 he was a member of the Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps. In 1946 he returned to the practice of general medicine, in Montreal. In 1952 he became the assistant medical director of the Royal Victoria Hospital in Montreal. In 1953 he became the director of Montreal University Hospital and a director of the Montreal Hospital Council. In 1955 he was the founder and director of the Superior Institute of Hospital Administration at the University of Montreal and Professor of hospital administration at the University of Montreal. In 1956 he was the founder and first executive director of the Quebec Hospital Association. In 1961 he became the Registrar of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of the Province of Quebec. In 1963 he became a member of the Board of the Excellence Life Insurance Company, in Montreal. In 1964 he was the Dean of the faculty of medicine at the University of Sherbrooke and the executive director of the University Hospital, executive director of the Health Services Centre and a Governor of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of the Province of Quebec. In 1968 he became vice-president in charge of medical affairs at the University of Sherbrooke. In 1969 he became an honorary colonel in the 8th Medical Army Corps.

Mr. Pianosi is president of Norite Builders Limited in Sudbury and president of Pianosi Brothers Construction Company in Toronto. He has been active in Sudbury all his life, firstly in the groceteria business and then in the building and real estate business. He was born in Copper Cliff, where he has since resided. He was educated at Copper Cliff Public School, St. Michael's College School and served in the Canadian armed forces from 1941 to 1946. He is a life member of the Royal Canadian Legion. He serves on the Board of Regents of the University of Sudbury. He is a director of the Montessori Club of Sudbury; a director of the Sudbury & District Boys Home. He is a trustee of the Italian Society in Copper Cliff and a former Vice-president of the Sudbury District Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Gutkowski was born in Lodz, Poland, on August 22, 1930. He became a landed Canadian immigrant in 1949 and was granted Canadian citizenship in 1954. He became a chartered accountant in 1959 and from 1960 to 1963 successfully completed the course in Commerce and Finance at the University of Toronto. From 1960 to the present he has been a lecturer in accounting and auditing in the Certified General Accountants' Association of Ontario. From 1960 to 1966 he was an instructor with the chartered accountants course at Queen's University in the School of Business at Kingston. He was an instructor at the University of Toronto in the Department of Extension in 1960 and 1961. In 1961 and 1962 he was a class assistant in the faculty of commerce at the University of Toronto, in the Department of Political Economy. From 1959 to 1960 he was a business assessor for the Department of National Revenue. From 1957 to 1969 he was a director, the treasurer and the manager of the St. Stanislaus' Parish (Toronto) Credit Union Limited and increased their assets under his managership from $950,000 to $10 million when he retired. From 1969, when he retired as president, he has been a director and first vice-president of this credit union.

My father was born in October of 1898 and, as some of you may know, graduated from Osgoode Hall Law School in 1921, and has practised as a barrister and solicitor ever since. He was appointed Queen's Counsel in 1936; he has served three terms as a Bencher of the Law Society of Upper Canada, is presently a Life Bencher of the Law Society of Upper Canada and is a director of the International Academy of Trial Lawyers, of which there are only three members in Canada. He heads the firm of Levinter, Dryden, Bliss, Maxwell & Hart.

The last member of the board is myself. I am also a partner of the firm of Levinter, Dryden, Bliss, Maxwell & Hart. I was born in Toronto and attended Upper Canada College, Weston and Oakwood Collegiates and the Ontario Agricultural College in Guelph, from which I graduated in 1947 with a Bachelor of Science in Agriculture (Animal Husbandry). I then attended Osgoode Hall, was called to the Bar in 1952 and joined the firm in which my father was a senior partner. I was subsequently appointed a Queen's Counsel. I am a member of the Advocates' Society and the International Academy of Trial Lawyers.

One of the best decisions I ever made was to marry the former Marion Fischer, granddaughter of the late T. Stewart Lyon, one-time editor of the Globe, and later chairman of Ontario Hydro. We have four marvellous children, of whom we are eminently proud.

At this time may I note that our banking system was modelled after that which developed and which was still developing in the middle 19th century, in England, then the greatest mercantile power in the world. The system was the branch system, the advantages of which were many. To mention a few: there was the ability to harness scarce resources so as to take deposits from one community for use in the development of another. There was the ability of an enterprise to attract persons of talent, develop specialist expertise, to go before the world with the implication that "We are a Canadian bank, we are a great bank, and we deal wherever in the world the business of banking and the business of Canada takes us."

The system was excellent, but the needs of Canada are changing. The provisional board has a regional concept. Our concept is to set up advisory boards within different areas of Canada. These boards will be composed of local people who are familiar with local needs. It is hoped that within guidelines and controls set up by the permanent board of the bank, and management, these boards will run their branches within their regions and be, to as great an extent as possible, autonomous.

A further concept relates to what has been said before as to how our banking industry grew; that is, by taking funds from one area of the country for the development of other areas within Canada. Our concept is that, as much as feasible, loans shall be made in areas in proportion to the deposits which the area has contributed, so that this money will be available for the development of areas in which these deposits have been made. This, of course, has its limitations. Firstly, there is the availability of proper loans in specific areas. Secondly, one must follow good business practice. Thirdly, one must practise good banking practice; and, fourthly, the welfare of the bank as a whole as management conceives it. This we believe merits your consideration with regard to our charter. That is our regional concept.

A further consideration for the granting of the charter is that we believe in further competition in the banking industry. The demand for financial services is increasing at a rapid rate. It is in the public interest that we have more competition in banking; another bank to service Canadians and Canadian business. The banking industry is well regulated and controlled by the Government by way of the Bank Act and the Inspector General of Banking. Depositors are protected by the Canadian Depositors Insurance Corporation.

Banking is a profitable industry now operating to full capacity. We are in fact asking for a charter to compete in an industry where demand exceeds supply. The average rate of return on equity after tax has increased from 8.92 per cent in 1963 to 11.82 per cent in 1971, as calculated by the Canadian Bankers' Association.

A new well organized bank cannot help but stimulate the Canadian economy, if only through a new approach to solving financial problems. The bank sees as its major role that of solving customers' problems. It will establish and maintain leadership in this field through the following: firstly, a constant awareness and reassessment of consumer wants and needs; secondly, a continual reappraisal of all aspects of its operation with a view to improving performance; thirdly, an unbiased appraisal of any new technological developments that may be used to improve management efficiency; fourthly, a willingness to accept the problems which inevitably arise from a drive for growth and profits; fifthly, an approach that looks for opportunities rather than problems in any given situation; and, sixthly, and very important, a strong social commitment.

As regards financing for the new bank, our first move was to hire the firm of Chartec Limited to survey the investment community with respect to the raising of capital. Chartec was provided with four guidelines. Firstly, ownership of the bank was to be held as widely as possible by as many Canadians as possible. Secondly, the bank was to have an initial capital of at least $20 million. Thirdly, the provincial directors were in no way to control the bank financially. And, fourthly, Chartec and its members were to have no financial interest in the actual sale of the shares.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): What is Chartec?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Chartec is composed of Mr. Dennis Dwyer, Mr. Robert Wilson, and Mr. Bernard Charest. They are located in Montreal and are financial consultants. Mr. Dwyer has had a great deal of experience in the marketing of securities. Mr. Wilson has had a great deal of experience in institutional buying, and Mr. Charest has had a great deal of experience in management of investment funds. They came to us very highly recommended.

We are pleased to advise that on the basis of their investigations, which we have very closely examined, we are assured that upon receipt of the charter the bank will be able to raise at least $20 million.

May I now discuss the topic of management? We admit that we were very concerned at first about our ability to attract bankers with the qualities, commitments and senior banking level expertise required to start and operate a bank on an on-going basis under our philosophy. Any doubts that we might have had have certainly been dispelled. To date we have had numerous inquiries at all levels regarding possible employment, and we are pleased to advise that we have a commitment from a senior Canadian banker to join our board and become president and chief executive officer if and when we are granted a charter. We have tentatively reviewed our manpower policies and requirements with him, and we can assure you that our organization will be manned with bankers who are wholly professional and wholly Canadian.

Our priorities during the first year will be to hire and train personnel, the establishment of uniform systems, methods and procedures, and formalization of the personnel, credit, administration and marketing functions. At the same time we will be laying out the operating manuals—routine procedures and bank forms required to provide the day-to-day basis of the banking services available through chartered banks today.

Our prime objective is to develop a solid basis from which the bank can build and expand. This task will involve considerable detailed work in the areas of manpower planning, compensation, employment, training, public relations, accounting, management information systems, control, capital budgeting, profit planning and analysis, purchasing, premises, service mix, pricing, advertising, market research, liquidity management, consumer loans, commercial loans, et cetera, and in some stages will of necessity overlap with our branch expansion program.

We will establish branches as soon as it is practicable in the key commercial sectors of Canada. The exact locations and priorities are, of course, a decision for management. We are also aware of the tremendous role Canadian banks play in the international financial markets, and we intend to move in this direction from a solid Canadian base by establishing strong correspondent bank relationships, and thereby evolving a reputation for soundness and integrity in the international money market, and ultimately establish representative offices abroad and expand by whatever means are available and appropriate in the future.

Therefore, in summing up my submission may I say to you the following. It is in the public interest that this application to Parliament for the charter for the United Bank of Canada should be granted. The applicants have proceeded as carefully and as responsibly as they could with every aspect of the matter, and we shall continue to do so.

Enlarging to some extent on why I say it is in the public interest, may I say it is in the public interest that we have more competition in Canadian banking. Particularly, we should have a new national bank to compete with the others. It is in the public interest, quite apart from the aspect of competition, that we have another bank to serve Canadians and Canadian business, by broadening the credit-granting base; that is, taking money into financial institutions to broaden the credit base.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the witness a question? Do you know any country that has more banks to serve its population than Canada? Though you do not seem to think this committee knows very much about banking, we have gone into this subject quite fully, I believe, and I do not think there is a committee in this country that knows more about banking than this one. When you talk of broadening the base, do you know any country that has anything like as many banks that serve the population as this country?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Senator, if you are referring to branches, that is one thing. When it comes to banks, there are many.

Senator Beaubien: What serves the public? It is the branches. If you are in any town in Canada there may be four different banks you can go to. They may be branches, but they are there.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: With respect, I submit that there are nine banks in this country.

Senator Beaubien: How many branches, and how many branches per bank?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: There are a great number of branches, but you have nine banks competing with one another. There are many branches.

The Chairman: I am wondering why you draw the distinction between banks and branches. The branches are the tools, are they not?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: You are proposing to have branches?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Yes, of course.

The Chairman: Therefore, there must be some virtue and some need in order to operate a bank in having branches to serve people.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Unquestionably. Of course, I agree with the branch system completely. It is the same as with car manufacturers. If there are five manufacturers of cars, they may have thousands of dealerships, but the fact remains that there are only five makes of cars competing with one another. That is my only point.

The Chairman: But all the banks have the same product, do they not—that is, money?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: That is very true, sir.

Senator Molson: The head office, I presume, will be Toronto?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Yes, sir.

Senator Molson: I suppose the first branch would be in Toronto. How many branches is it contemplated to open initially?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Establishing branches is expensive.

Senator Molson: I know that very well. I just want to know what your plans are initially. Are you going to start with one branch, five branches, ten branches? What is the contemplated number?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: What I, as a member of the board, would like to see is five branches opened—in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. I would think the first priorities would be Toronto and Montreal, and I would hope they would open almost simultaneously. Then, as management considers it advisable—and we must rely on our experienced management—I would like to see branches open in these other centres as quickly as is reasonable.

Senator Molson: You are talking of raising $20 million. How much of that would be capital and how much would be paid-in surplus?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: We anticipate forming shares at $5 a share. Subject again to what our investment counsellors and the people who will be marketing the stock advise, we are now working with a tentative figure of $25 per share, which would leave a $20 spread. This would be subject again to advice from the experts.

The Chairman: Mr. Levinter, at the beginning of your remarks you stressed the racial origins in connection with the establishment of this bank. In operation is it proposed that there be any direction of policy for loaning, for soliciting deposits, and so forth, on the basis of racial origins of people? What was the purpose of stressing racial origins in connection with this application?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: This is not stressed. It is no more important than any other of the aspects I have mentioned. It is submitted that various ethnic groups have not taken part in banking. I believe it is an acknowledged fact. This is one of the things that we want to accomplish, to give all people—and I stress all people—the opportunity to participate in banking at all levels. If one asks whether the purpose of the bank is only to look after specific European ethnic groups, the answer is no. The answer is that this bank is a bank of Canadians. We are all Canadians. I do not care what our ethnic background is, we are all Canadians. However, as banking has developed, many Canadians of various ethnic backgrounds have not had the opportunity to take part in, or they have not in any event taken an active part in, banking, so we conceived that this would create the vehicle.

Senator Connolly: Do you think the Scots have had the monopoly so far?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: I would prefer not to make any comment on that, senator.

The Chairman: Do you know how many of the various ethnic groups are presently shareholders of existing banks?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: No, sir, I do not.

The Chairman: So when you make the statement that they are not taking part, it is at best a surmise?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Well, sir, it depends on the area of “taking part” we are discussing. I have no doubt that there are a number of ethnic groups that have investments in banks. For instance, I might have in my portfolio, as I did have, a certain amount of money in banks. What I am talking about in referring to “taking part” is being on the board, taking an active part in management, and in the operations of the bank. I am not talking about the investment sector.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Senator Carter: In establishing this new bank are you trying to fill any gap that is not being filled by the present banking system, the nine banks? Will you have a different policy? Are your objectives in any way different from those of the existing banks?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Our first and primary objective is to have a successful bank. Our second objective is related to social conscience. We cannot deal with the largest accounts, because we will not have enough money. We want to try to encourage and develop smaller businesses. Yes, I think that we will try to look at small business with more understanding, knowing the problems that small business has in getting operating capital to expand.

Senator Connolly: How would you have that kind of expertise of knowing what small business requirements are? Is this going to result from training?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: I am sorry, I did not hear the complete question.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I will repeat it. You said that what you intended to do was look after the requirements primarily of small business, at least at the beginning. To do this you must have some expertise as to the requirements, the legitimate and reasonable requirements of small business. Where will you get that expertise? By Training?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: From training and from existing banking institutions. Our personnel will of necessity come from existing banking institutions. Our personnel will be trained but, yes, also in a training program we will also train in this direction, because this is the policy of the board, to look after small business and we will direct management to train themselves and become acquainted and make this a certain part of their service mix.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Apart from the social aspects of this, are you satisfied that giving priority to the requirements of small business is going to be a good practice for a national bank in Canada to proceed upon? You will have to look for larger accounts and bigger businesses.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Of course, sir, everything is relative. When I think of bigger accounts, I think of one groceries chain that has a standing bank loan of $25 million. That is a groceries chain. A thing like this is completely out of our realm. When I am talking of small business, I am talking of loans up to $100,000 or $125,000. May I please make this clear? I will not be taking part in the management. This will be left up to management. I have learned a lot about banking in the last year and I have learned a lot about mixes, and that you have to have a certain amount of money in one direction, a certain amount in another and a certain amount in another; but basically this has to be left up to them. They will have to have the proper mixes, the proper expertise, to follow through with our concepts. I believe that our management is so alert, so vital and so vigorous that they will accomplish this. I am very excited about management.

The Chairman: Mr. Levinter, at or about the time the present Bank Act was before Parliament, we had a rash of applications for bank charters. There were, possibly, four. Only one of them survived to the stage of getting into operation. I remember sitting here as chairman, with all the provisional directors of this bank sitting here, including the premier of the province, who undertook to answer all the questions that were asked of him. He prefaced each answer by saying, "That is a very important question and I am very glad you asked it," and then we would get a political speech. I can remember Wallace McCutcheon, who was a senator and a member of the committee and knowledgeable in banking, indicating the capital that was proposed for this bank in relation to the capital of existing banks, and the thing seemed to be at a fantastic level. However, it did get its feet on the ground and it did get an amount of capital and it is operating successfully, but in an area that is not as elevated as was pictured to us.

Now, of four, only one made the grade. Have you made any analysis as to why? Was the competition too strong? Was the difficulty of getting money too great?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Sir, I have already been perhaps castigated once with regard to making certain statements which perhaps this committee already knows. Firstly, I know this committee is more intimate with the problems that made these various banks fail. I know that I would not be so presumptuous as to try to tell you these reasons. But, yes, we have made a study of them. I have my own very real views as to why these banks did not get off the ground. I have my views as to why the Bank of British Columbia only raised $13½ million. But I do not think that any one of them had our concepts, or that any one of them went into the project the way we have done.

If you would like me to expand on the reason why I think the Bank of Western Canada failed and why—Is Laurentide one of these you are referring to?

The Chairman: Yes, I think they did not pursue their application beyond the first time round.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: I think we have our own judgment on this, but there is a big difference between the hundreds of millions of dollars that, for instance, the Bank of Western Canada was going to establish as capital, and the amount they actually got.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: That is why I have said $20 million. I did not say forty, fifty or sixty million dollars. I would love to have forty or fifty million dollars. We have surveyed the market, and if you are interested in my expanding on the financial aspects of this to some extent, I will be delighted to do so. I also have Mr. Dwyer to tell you what we have done to survey the market. In view of our surveys, I think that we are being reasonably conservative in saying $20 million.

The Chairman: I do not think we need that, because there is a provision in the Bank Act, as honourable senators know, that even though a charter is granted, before the bank can start to operate it must get the consent of the Governor in Council. At that time, they must give an indication of the quantity of money they have subscribed for it, and if they have less than their authorized capital, then there is provision in the statute for reducing the amount of the authorized capital. So we can feel certain that the Governor in Council will not give consent unless he is satisfied at the time of application that it is a going concern. We have the Inspector General here, and we will hear from him on that.

Senator Cook: On that point, do I understand the witness to say that the bank will be selling shares for $25, $5 par value and $20 surplus? Is there talk about raising it to $100?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: No, sir, because all we would do is, perhaps, issue one million for $25. No, we would not. We would issue less than one million shares of stock; we would just take down from the treasury less than a million shares and the balance of the shares would remain in the treasury.

Senator Cook: Then the authorized capital would be only $5 million and the surplus would be $20 million?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Yes.

Senator Carter: I would like to clear up something. I may have misunderstood the witness. His references seemed to imply that he had a concept of banking which is somewhat different from that of the present banks. Is that a correct interpretation?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Our provisional board of management has, I think, a somewhat different concept. If I may just reiterate, it is the regional concept. In other words, we have considered that if deposits are made in, let us say, Nova Scotia, the money raised in Nova Scotia by way of deposit should first be made available—again, within guidelines—to people who need loans there and for the development of the Province of Nova Scotia, instead of bringing it down here for the development only of Ontario or only of Quebec.

Senator Carter: So that each branch bank will be, in effect, a sort of regional bank? Is that what you are saying?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: That is right. Subject, of course, to overall control and management at home. One cannot let it go hog wild.

Senator Molson: In that connection, the board of directors has certain responsibilities which they cannot delegate.

The Chairman: That is right. The directors of this bank will be dealing with money that has been invested by shareholders. Do you subscribe to the principle that they should follow the regional theory of investment, even though investment opportunities and earning capacity are greater in another area than where the money was raised?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: No, sir. I was talking strictly about deposits. We must remember that the overall concept must be the success of our bank. It has to be successful or otherwise every great concept and every social concept that we have will fail. Above all, we must make sure that our bank is strong. At the beginning it will be tough sledding. We will have to look for the very best areas in which to put the money. We owe a social duty to various regions, to help or facilitate the financing of industry in specific areas. I believe it is one of our social duties.

Senator Cook: I think the history of banking will show that most banks that tried the regional theory either failed or merged.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: That is the reason why we have a national concept. We have a national concept unquestionably. When we think of this bank, we think of Canada as a whole. As a matter of fact, I might say that the world is our market. We cannot even confine ourselves to Canada in looking at the prospects for the bank. We must look to the wellbeing of the bank anywhere in the world.

The Chairman: Except that in the beginning and for some time you would be a long way from the international markets.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: I am afraid so.

Senator Molson: Might I ask whether it is proposed in your by-laws, or through any other way, to limit the ethnic makeup of your board or management? How do you expect to perpetuate this situation which you are now starting with a provisional board, which no one can quarrel with? How do you expect that it will continue? Where do you think you will be in five or ten years, or in the future? Do you think you will be able to continue in this way?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: I do, from a practical point of view. Firstly, our goal is to have mass distribution of stock so that nobody has control of the bank.

Senator Molson: That is, on the market, at some stage?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: That is right. With vast control, and with nobody being able to control the bank, proxies generally will come to either the president or to the chairman of the board. The chairman of the board and the directors who have our concept now can guide the bank in the future.

There are so many things with which we will be faced. I appreciate that this is a problem, but we hope to be able to cope with it. I can only say "hope". That is our ambition.

Senator Molson: Presumably your board will be wider than the provisional board? Is it your idea that you would go to further ethnic groups, to try to make this as broad as possible?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Yes. Not only ethnically. There should also be representation from both sexes, and from all age groups, so that the philosophies of all Canadians could be transmitted to the bank, that they may look after all segments of our population, the young and the old and the in between, the female and the male, the ethnic groups, everybody. That is our concept—Canada.

The Chairman: You would not forego the basic concept that applies to banking as well as to any other business, which is making money?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: I have tried to make it clear that, with all the idealism and with the greatest social conscience, if the bank does not make money it is all for naught. That is our primary goal.

The Chairman: How do you propose to assure yourself that there is not a movement at some time to take over the shares in the market? I do not mean a legitimate takeover. I mean the other kind of takeover that we read about. What in the way of checks or controls do you see are possible and practicable?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Firstly, we have the Bank Act which, of course, limits ownership. In the first instance we are going to limit the amount of shares to be held by anybody. We are planning that an affidavit will be taken by subscribers of shares setting out in the affidavit the number of shares they hold on their own behalf or on behalf of others, and the bank, in the initial issue, will be able to control the amount that anyone holds in the first instance. With very widespread distribution, this is one check. But I suppose that other than the Bank Act there is really nothing that anybody can do.

The Chairman: Except that the big banks that exist today would not be as vulnerable to that situation, because it would take too much money. But in certain instances it might be very valuable to have an identifiable entity. If it does not cost too much money it might be very attractive at some stage.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: That is a very valid point. In the first instance I ran into a situation where I saw that a group was trying to use the Bank as a vehicle for its own purposes. I was very trusting. It took me about three weeks to catch on to what was going on, but it took me about twenty minutes to solve the problem, which was to completely disassociate myself from the group. I know that we will be vexed with these problems. What you say is a very real fact. We cannot start any bigger. I do not know what else we can do. We can simply appreciate the situation and try to meet it when it occurs.

Senator Desruisseaux: Mr. Chairman, on a very minor point I have noted that the venerable father of the speaker for the group was born in 1891.

Mr. I. Levinter, Q.C., Provisional Director: Senator, I was born in 1898. I am not quite that ancient.

The Chairman: Senator Desruisseaux, I can tell you Mr. Levinter is still very alert.

Senator Desruisseaux: He was born in 1898, so that makes him 73. I had wondered whether the Bank Act would prohibit him, since we are following the Bank Act on the age limit of 75.

The Chairman: Yes, the limit is 75. There is a statutory prohibition at that time.

Senator Carter: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Levinter mentioned that one of the objectives of the new bank would be to help the small businessman in the various regions in which the new bank would have branches.

Mr. Levinter, I asked you earlier if you were trying to fill any special need or any gap that you felt existed in the present system. I think there is a gap, and the gap has to do with the small businessman you referred to. From my experience, the greatest need of the small businessman has been a need for working capital. He has not been very successful in getting it from the established banks. As a result he has had to fall back on government, but government is very reluctant to set up an agency for that purpose, because government does not wish to interfere with the free enterprise system or with the present banking system.

Have you any special ideas on how you are going to help these people? Do you expect to be more lenient with respect to working capital for small businessmen than the present banks are?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Sir, I agree with everything that you have said. I do not think it is a question of leniency. It is a question of investigating situations and making decisions. It is far easier for a manager to say to Domtar, "Yes, you can have another million dollars," because, basically, that is not a decision. They get the million dollars. Head office is going to clap. The manager gets his interest rate and there is very little risk. But if this same manager has to put out 20 $50,000 loans to small businessmen, he has to make 40 different decisions. He is going to have to work. He is going to have to investigate and he is going to have to stand by his decisions.

The Chairman: Plus one more thing: he has to study his mix.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Of course. I see, Mr. Chairman, you are very intimate with banking.

That is all true, Senator Carter, but we propose to deal with it in this way: we will make our managers work and we will make them make decisions. That is the point.

Senator Walker: Mr. Chairman, may I ask Mr. Levinter, whom I know very well and whose father is one of the greatest members of the bar in Ontario, whether in connection with his bank any capital commitments have been made so far?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Well, sir, we have all as a matter of course qualified, but that is all we have done. We have qualified with the Bank Act.

Senator Walker: You have qualified with the Bank Act, but outside that there is no capital commitment?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: No, sir, not until the charter is obtained. We have surveyed a market, but when you say "actual commitments", we did not look for actual commitments. We wanted to come before you and know we could raise it.

Senator Walker: Have you any profit and loss projections made by your experts or by yourselves in conjunction with your experts?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Yes, sir, I do. I do not have them with me today, but, from memory, the experts anticipate a dividend within about three years. Again, much will depend on how much money is raised and on how a thing like this snowballs. Maybe it will go to more than $20 million, but with $20 million we anticipate a dividend within about three years. Moreover, considering international financing, et cetera, and that will not be big for the first five years, we are hoping for around $400 million in assets.

That is about all that I can say. They have worked it out very carefully and have worked out their opening expenses, operating expenses, and training expenses and it is very expensive from the point of view that we have a high upper echelon, a high cost for administration, because we have to have all of the top people but yet few branches. So that, in the first instance, we are kind of top heavy, as a new bank would have to be, but our experts anticipate $400 million in assets in five years and to declare a dividend in three.

The Chairman: Mr. Levinter, I assume that you are familiar with section 10 as to the qualification that provisional directors must acquire in the way of subscribing for shares in their own right.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Oh, yes, of course.

The Chairman: I would expect at some stage that would be satisfied before you would expect to get a charter.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Oh, of course.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: I can advise the committee that we have complied with the section for the subscription of shares as required under the Bank Act, and I would be glad to show anyone the subscriptions.

Senator Burchill: Mr. Levinter, I am bothered with one aspect of the regional concept you were discussing with Senator Carter. As an illustration, at one point you mentioned the province of Nova Scotia. You said that the outlay of loans in, say, one province would be governed to some extent at least by the deposits that came from that province. Is that what your idea was?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: No, sir. What I am saying is that it is not the outlay of loans on an overall concept, but that we think the province or region that has made deposits should have first call on their deposits for good industrial loans. I am only talking about deposits. I am not suggesting that if, in Nova Scotia, a good loan on the overall concept was available to the bank that the bank would not walk in and try to facilitate it. Of course it would.

Senator Burchill: Regardless of where the deposits came from?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: That is right, sir. In other words, it can only be done with a certain percentage of the funds. We want to do this as much as is feasible, but we must never overlook the overall concept of the bank as a whole. We must consider it as a bank—one bank.

Senator Lang: Mr. Levinter, did I understand you to say that you anticipate assets under administration of over $400 million within five years?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: That is what our proposed management has calculated.

Senator Lang: In other words, you anticipate taking $80 million a year on average on deposits.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: I do not know what type of progression they used, senator. I think the first year is going to be really rough, but they used a certain progression by studying statistics of banks that have opened with certain capital in the first instance, and then assuming reasonable growth they assumed that with our concepts, certain loyalties which we hope to establish in Canada among Canadians, that this was a reasonable anticipation.

Senator Lang: At $400 million what sort of capitalization would you have?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Capitalization? Do you mean investor equity?

Senator Lang: Yes.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: We were anticipating at that time $20 million.

Senator Lang: With $400 million in assets?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Now, of course, that does not necessarily mean deposits. When I talk assets I am talking overall money available. This can be from international markets or it can be from any place.

Senator Lang: What ratio does that give you in your assets to your capital?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Twenty to one.

Senator Lang: Twenty to one?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: I think that that is pretty well in line with the present banks.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Senator Molson: Mr. Levinter, have you or any of your people consulted with the Bank of British Columbia as to what their progress and problems have been in their brief history? I should think that would be very useful information.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Management, no; financial consultants, yes.

Senator Molson: What about directors?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: No, not yet. We consider that the first thing we must do is to get a charter, and then, as the Chairman has indicated, the Inspector General of Banks and the Governor in Council will have to approve our operation. When we originally contemplated this bank we said the first thing to do was to obtain a charter and then the next thing would be to obtain management. Then the next thing we have to have is financing, and we have been taking it step by step.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Can you get the second without the third?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: I do not think that one can get financing without the management. That is why we took it in that order.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Who is going to finance the operation while it is under construction?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: I am.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Thank you, Mr. Levinter. Do you have anybody else with you who wishes to make representations?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: No, sir.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

Mr. Scott, would you please come forward?

Honourable senators, I do not need to introduce Mr. Scott who is the Inspector General of Banks. We have had him before us previously and now we will get the benefit of his views in relation to this application for a bank charter.

Mr. Scott, you have heard the evidence which has been given, and perhaps at the outset you would tell us what your function is and what your responsibility is in relation to getting the consent of the Governor in Council even after a charter has been approved. What requirements would you have to look for and be satisfied about?

Mr. W. E. Scott, Inspector General of Banks: The Bank Act itself sets forth certain specific requirements which must be met before the approval of the Governor in Council may be given. Now while it is not specifically provided for in the Act, presumably there is an opportunity to advise the Minister whether in the opinion of the Inspector General the project looks like a reasonable starter, and the Governor in Council is not obliged to give a certificate to commence business even though the specific requirements may have been met. There is what I might describe as a grey area there.

The Chairman: We have heard something about the philosophy behind this bank and something about its regional concept, but underneath it all they do have a concept which you would expect every institution to have—that is to do the best they can so as to make money. Now you say the Governor in Council would look at—and this might rest on your advice to some extent—the feasibility of the operation in the light of what the people who are going to control and operate the bank have to say as to their plans. How far would you develop your study of that phase?

Mr. Scott: I am not sure I can be specific, Mr. Chairman. If one were of the opinion that at the contemplated date of opening for business there simply was not competent management, presumably one would express an opinion to that effect and then it would be up to the Governor in Council to decide whether to take the chance on whether that management would be forthcoming.

The Chairman: So you would take a look at the competence of the management?

Mr. Scott: Yes.

The Chairman: Anything else?

Mr. Scott: I do not think so.

The Chairman: You would endeavour to satisfy the statutory requirements?

Mr. Scott: Quite.

The Chairman: Now are you in a position to tell us or have you acquired the information in such a way that you cannot tell us what has been the annual rate of deposit received by the Bank of British Columbia since it started to operate?

Mr. Scott: It has now been open to the public for a little more than three years, and the last financial statement shows that its total resources are now slightly more than $150 million. It started with a capital slightly less than $13 million.

The Chairman: And as to its deposits, do you recall what they amount to?

Mr. Scott: The total deposits would be $150 million less $13 million which would be roughly $135 million or $137 million.

The Chairman: If you average that progressively, it means that they have been taking in about $35 million per year in deposits?

Mr. Scott: Yes, or perhaps a little more.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Scott, how much capital do you think a new bank would have to raise before you could recommend to the Governor in Council to give them an operating certificate?

Mr. Scott: The Bank Act contains a minimum of $1 million subscribed. Presumably if Parliament had felt that some much larger amount was essential in all cases, a much higher figure would have been stipulated in the Act. But conceivably one might have a situation where if the capital raised had been set at a lower point and the plans of the bank were quite out of proportion to the capital, this would become a factor, but I do not think that one can rule out a bank with small capital provided the requirements of the Act have been met with if their plans are consistent with that capital. I would not want to at any rate.

The Chairman: Well, you would not expect plans leading to the establishment of a substantial number of branches and thinking in terms of the international money market as being a relevant consideration in relation to a capital of $1 million.

Mr. Scott: I agree with what Mr. Levinter said this morning that branch openings are expensive. If one were to contemplate a number of them within a limited period, it might erode a fair amount of the initial capital before the bank was paying its way.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): In other words you think it is prudent to proceed slowly.

Mr. Scott: Yes, although the rate might be influenced by the extent of capital raised. If you raise a lot of capital you can start more ambitiously than if you have a small amount of capital.

Senator Lang: Mr. Scott, are banks covered by the Canada Deposit Insurance?

Mr. Scott: Yes, they are automatically.

The Chairman: Under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act the depositor is protected in a limited way to $20,000.

Mr. Scott: Twenty thousand dollars per account, per institution.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): And the bank pays the premium, which is geared to the deposits.

The Chairman: It is not related to its capital.

Mr. Scott: It is related to the amount of deposits in the area which is insured, namely up to $20,000.

Senator Lang: Does that apply to branches? Could there be $20,000 coverage in a head office and $20,000 in a branch, for a total of $40,000?

Mr. Scott: No; the limit is effective on the total deposits in one institution. It does not matter if it is spread between a number of offices; there can be $20,000 in each institution.

Senator Lang: One bank would only have $20,000, no matter how many branches there were?

The Chairman: It is cumulative, up to $20,000.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Mr. Chairman, there is always a problem for this committee and for any committee of Parliament in respect of applications such as this, because any Canadian can come here and make an application for a bank charter. Relying on what we hear from the witnesses, the applicants and the Inspector General of Banks. . .

The Chairman: But we can still say yes or no. The statute does not compel us to say yes.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): No, of course not; we have to use our judgment. Is it unfair to ask Mr. Scott, "Does the application in this case appear to be reasonable?"

Mr. Scott: At this point, Senator Connolly, it is very difficult for me to say that.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Could I perhaps be a little more precise? At this point is it possible for anyone to say that any application is a reasonable application?

Mr. Scott: I think it is possible to say that people are proceeding in a reasonable fashion. I do not believe anyone can say in advance whether the outcome will be financially successful.

The Chairman: I do not think you can expect guarantees that the project will be successful.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): No, and I think the experience of this committee in respect of the four banks referred to earlier by the chairman was a good experience.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Those applications were only 25 per cent successful.

Mr. Scott: Of course, only one of them had a run at it.

Senator Molson: What about the Bank of Western Canada?

Mr. Scott: It never opened its doors.

Senator Molson: No, but it tried pretty hard for a while, did it not?

Mr. Scott: It was not a failure to generate business or operate successfully that caused it to cease.

Senator Walker: They were in a hurdle race. However, is this not a unique bank application, inasmuch as it is appealing to the ethnic groups, which are very powerful in Canada now? I believe there are approximately 300,000 or more Italians in Toronto. They like to have a say in their own banks and would like to have Italian directors and other persons interested in them. No one can say that the Jewish community is not very powerful financially and in population. The other ethnic groups must also be taken into consideration.

Is it not a harbinger of success if they could obtain the backing of these very large ethnic groups which, as I understand Mr. Levinter, they have in mind?

Senator Cook: Another way of putting it would be: Is there any reason to prevent this group from endeavouring to form the bank at the present moment?

Mr. Scott: From my point of view I do not care where they get the money, so long as they get enough to be successful.

Senator Molson: May I ask the Inspector General whether he agrees that there is a need, or a place for a bank such as the one proposed?

The Chairman: He may or may not wish to answer that question.

Senator Molson: I think the question as to a place for one is fair. If there is not a place, he could not possibly recommend the application. There must be a place; maybe not a need.

The Chairman: That would be an element for his consideration in advising his minister or the Governor in Council as to the feasibility. Maybe he will consider this in that sense; if there is not a place, it is not feasible.

Senator Molson: That is my point. I would like to ask him if he agrees that there is a place for another bank such as that proposed.

Mr. Scott: I might just mention, Senator Molson, that this Government and, I think, preceding governments have stated that it is government policy to encourage the formation of new banks. Therefore it would be inappropriate for me to suggest that that was wrong.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): We cannot ask you to comment on government policy.

Senator Molson: I do not ask for a comment on government policy but, as Inspector General of Banks and charged with the supervision of the banking system, I do not think it is an unfair question to ask him if there is a place in Canada for another bank. I think this committee takes the same view as the Government, that there is a place for properly set up banks. That was the view years ago when, as the chairman has said, one out of the four who came here was successful, two did not pursue it any further and the third raised the money, then backed away.

Senator Cook: One answer is that there is always room to talk.

The Chairman: It depends on who is pushing it. Senator Molson, maybe the witness can protect himself, but your question bothers me, as it puts him on the spot to answer by virtue of his position as Inspector General of Banks as to whether there is or is not a place for another bank.

Senator Lang: It is a question rather in the nature of public convenience and necessity, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I am just giving the opportunity. You may not feel that you wish to answer that question, in which event I will not pursue it.

Mr. Scott: I am not sure of all the implications of the question. For example, is it to say that there is room for another bank and imply criticism in some way of the operations of the existing banks?

Senator Carter: Can we put it this way: one of the objectives of the Bank Act revision, as I recall it, is to increase competition among the existing nine banks. If competition is a good thing and we want more of it among the existing nine, is there any reason that there should not be ten, which would improve it further?

Mr. Scott: There have been ten.

The Chairman: We have had more than ten at times and they saw fit to merge.

Senator Molson: I think my question has now been answered.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Under the provisions of the Bank Act it is open to a group of Canadians to apply for a charter regardless of the existing institutions. It is the right of a Canadian to do this and this group is exercising that right. They assumed a great deal of responsibility, but I suppose they take that risk when they come to Parliament with their application. We do not necessarily endeavour to protect them, except within the four corners of the Bank Act.

The Chairman: What you are not looking at, senator, is that banking is quite different from an industrial company. In an industrial company the people who want to get going on it put their money into it, but when you are establishing a bank you are dealing with depositors' money.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): That is precisely the point I was coming to, and perhaps this is a proper question to ask the Inspector General: Is there danger for the public here? In other words, by approving an application for a charter are we putting risks before the public that are unwarranted and undue? Is it in the public interest to consider a further application for a bank, and in particular in this case are the circumstances described by the applicants such as to warrant a conclusion that it is a reasonable risk to allow the public to assume? There are some protections. The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is protection for the depositors. The investor takes chances the same way the applicants would take their chances.

Mr. Scott: I am not sure how to answer your question. Under our system, of course, Parliament does accept a large measure of the initial responsibility in its judgment of the persons involved and their capacity to carry out their intention. There are countries where this decision is made by officials, perhaps equivalent to Letters Patent. It does not go through Parliament or Congress, or whatever. Under our system the initial responsibility lies with Parliament after it has informed itself as far as possible as to the capacity of the people to carry out their intention.

Senator Lang: Are banks the only charters left to Parliament now? Am I correct in that assumption?

The Chairman: Railways, telephones.

Senator Lang: We no longer have any other financial institutions such as life insurance companies, trust companies?

The Chairman: No. May I change the subject for a minute? The great concern I have, which I raised with Mr. Levinter and I was wondering how it concerns you, is the matter of security. We read a great deal nowadays about the establishment of fronts for operations that are not legal. There is no such suggestion in what I have said in relation to this application, but if we assume that a charter is granted and they commence to operate and there has been a very wide distribution of the shares, and the capital involved to move into the market and acquire those shares or control of them would be much less than of any other banking institution in Canada, is it part of your job to be on the alert to see if there is any such movement or would you look for it?

Mr. Scott: Yes, it is, and it was particularly with a view to the possibility of new bank proposals coming forward that the 10 per cent limitation on any one shareholder and his associates was written into the act in 1967. It is theoretically possible for people who are not associated in any way to get together and gain control of the stock of a bank, no one of them having more than 10 per cent, but if they are associated in any other common project such as being directors or officers, or whatnot, of any other corporation, then their holdings are pooled and they would run into the 10 per cent limitation. We would really have to worry about a group not associated in any other way, but combining for the first time in going after the stock of a bank. As the chairman has said, this danger is greater the smaller the amount of stock involved. We do watch the records. We get regular returns of the major shareholders in banks and we watch for possible associations.

The Chairman: I think it is almost impossible to lay down a line that you could follow with assurance that you would catch such a situation. You just have to keep checking.

Are there any other questions?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): How long has it been since there has been a bank failure in Canada?

Mr. Scott: The Home Bank in 1923.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): And have the safeguards which have been built into the Bank Act mitigated against the possibility of failure in your view?

Mr. Scott: Yes. For example, the setting up of the office of Inspector General of Banks, following the Home Bank failure, and also the provisions concerning the auditors of banks were greatly stiffened at that time.

The Chairman: I learned how not to run a bank when the Home Bank failed. One of my first duties in law was working with the man who was prosecuting the directors of the Home Bank. I am not sure that I ever learned how to run a bank, but I certainly learned how not to run a bank.

Senator Walker: Was that Mr. Tilley?

The Chairman: No, Mr. McCarthy.

Are there any other questions? I wanted to ask Mr. Scott a further question as to whether he sees any objection to the name United Bank, since we are about to hear from a person representing the United Trust Company in opposition to the use of that name.

Mr. Scott: There is no objection on the part of the Government to the name.

The Chairman: Thank you.

We now have Mr. Goldberg who is appearing on behalf of the United Trust Company.

Mr. A. S. Goldberg, Counsel, United Trust Company: Mr. Chairman, honourable senators, I am appearing on behalf of the United Trust Company which is an Ontario trust company having 30 branches in Ontario and approximately 30,000 depositors. The name of the company was changed to the United Trust Company as of September 1, 1970, and the company since that time has spent a great deal of money in expensive radio and newspaper advertising. We have no objection to the incorporation or the granting of a charter to the United Bank. Our objection to the proposed bill, however, is that the name United Bank may be confused with the name of United Trust Company.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): What is the exact name of your company?

Mr. Goldberg: United Trust Company.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Of Canada?

Mr. Goldberg: No, just United Trust Company.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): And the name of the bank?

Mr. Goldberg: I believe it is the United Bank of Canada.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): We have the United Trust Company on the one hand, and you are in the trust company business which is aligned to banking, and on the other hand we have the United Bank of Canada, and you feel these two names will be confused.

Mr. Goldberg: Yes, I do, senator. Our submission is that if you look at the two names on two separate pieces of paper they may not look alike, but when you get into the question of advertising for depositors, the names United Trust and United Bank will be used. I cannot see the advertising geniuses at work trying to use the full names in each case. They use the catchiest phrase available, and our submission is that the public will likely be confused by the fact that the two names are so similar. It is unlike the case where you have the Bank of Montreal and the Montreal Trust Company, and other names like that, which I submit are just as confusing, but at that time the trust companies were not competing as directly with the banks for depositors as they are today. At the present time the banks are advertising for depositors and the trust companies are doing the same thing. They each announce different rates of interest and different chequing privileges. My submission is that if they use the name United Bank it will create confusion in the minds of the customers, and particularly so if one considers that the first branch of the United Bank is expected to be in Toronto and that the United Trust Company does have 15 branches there.

The problems have been foreseen by Parliament in terms of other matters, particularly in terms of the Trade Marks Act, section 7(b) of which says that no person:

—shall direct public attention to his wares, services or business in such a way as to cause or be likely to cause confusion in Canada, at the time he commenced so to direct attention to them, between his wares, services or business and the wares, services or business of another;

My submission is that the two names are likely to cause confusion. People have gone to court over similar names. I do not want to cite a whole series of cases, but there have been several cases dealing with names that are similar, particularly where companies are not competing directly but are in very closely allied lines, in which the courts have held that the names are so similar that the public would be confused. The whole purpose of section 7(b) is to avoid confusion of the public, and our problem is that we are very concerned that the public will be confused, that depositors will come into the United Bank and say, "You advertized 8 per cent credit on savings accounts, and yet you are only giving 7 per cent", and vice versa, they will come into the United Trust and be upset because of the United Bank's advertising.

Senator Haig: They would not make a deposit in the bank.

Mr. Goldberg: That is true. The problem is that at that time he has already been confused and has gone to the length of going into the bank.

The Chairman: He would still be looking for his 8 per cent, would he not?

Mr. Goldberg: Yes, he would.

The Chairman: So he would not leave his money with the bank.

Mr. Goldberg: That is true. My submission is that he would at least be enough confused to walk into the wrong place, and that is the problem we face and that we are concerned about. We are not saying we will end up on the losing side; maybe the United Bank advertising will do well for us.

The Chairman: He would quickly be unconfused if he were not going to get 8 per cent, would he not?

Mr. Goldberg: He would be. The problem is that he was confused by even having to go to the bank. I submit at that stage of the game he will be upset with perhaps both the United Bank and the United Trust. Mr. Levinter indicated to me earlier today that he had given deep consideration to the name. I submit that the name is not so unique or distinctive that it cannot be changed without hurting the bank, and I submit that the name should be changed.

The Chairman: Suppose they were using symbols and the United Bank had the symbol UB, following the lettering that the CNR is favouring now, and suppose the United Trust used the letters UT. Do you say that in that context there would be confusion?

Mr. Goldberg: Only if the symbols were very similar. If the symbols were similar, then the fact that they are two separate letters would not, I submit, unconfuse the public. This is what the courts have held.

The Chairman: Except that you are addressing yourself to confusion in the name.

Mr. Goldberg: Yes.

The Chairman: When you are talking about symbols, if the bank produced a symbol that would lead the public to think it was a trust company you would have an action quite independently, would you not?

Mr. Goldberg: Perhaps we might. What we are trying to do is head off the possibility of getting involved in that kind of action.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Do you really think there is that kind of confusion in these days of mass advertising, between trust companies and banks? Take the Royal Trust and the Royal Bank. Does anybody confuse the facilities and the work of the Royal Bank with that of the Royal Trust?

The Chairman: I do not think so.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps there was a day when that happened. When I think of a trust company I think of something altogether different from a bank.

Senator Burchill: There is the Montreal Trust and the Bank of Montreal.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): The witness used that as an example, and it is a good example.

Mr. Goldberg: I quite agree that you, senator, perhaps do not have any risk of confusion between trust companies and banks. I am talking about the common depositor who does not associate a trust company with the old trust facilities of looking after estates and real estate, but who looks at a trust company as a house where he can deposit his money. If you walk down Sparks Street, for instance, and take a look at the new Toronto-Dominion Bank and the new Montreal Trust, from outside one looks the same as the other. The names are different, but certainly in appearance each one looks like the other. The banks are starting to look more like the trust companies.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Some banks look like steeples, but people do not go into them to go to church.

Senator Lang: Do the applicants have any other name that they would just as soon have as "United", like "Home"?

The Chairman: I do not feel strongly enough that there can be any confusion, and I therefore did not ask them the question, but if any senator wants to ask about it, that is perfectly all right.

Senator Walker: It is in the interests of each of them to keep themselves distinct, is it not?

Mr. Goldberg: It is. I am not suggesting that we are going to get any advantage, or that they are. My submission is that it will be confusing.

Senator Walker: Your symbols will be distinct too, so there would not be any opportunity for confusion, would there?

Mr. Goldberg: I think there is.

Senator Walker: Do you?

Mr. Goldberg: In terms of looking at the kinds of advertising that banks and trust companies do at the present time, particularly in looking for deposits, and with respect to other facilities, I can foresee the public just saying "United" for the United Bank or the United Trust, and I submit that for the unsophisticated members of the public there is a risk of confusion.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Senator Lang: Mr. Chairman, may I, through you, direct a question to the applicants and ask them if there is any other name they would be equally happy with?

Mr. B. V. Levinter: When the name "United Bank" was formulated, we were familiar with the fact that back in 1970 the company of Mann & Martel had a company the United Trust. We were completely cognisant of what a bank is. There is a distinction between a bank and a trust company. We considered the name because we anticipate being national. The name "United" is a uniting of all communities. It was very important to our concept that all people would be together in a cosmopolitan way, and we would be a united Canada. I do not see how anyone could ever mistake a trust company for a bank. If someone is sufficiently sophisticated that they know they can get 8 per cent on a deposit, they are surely sufficiently sophisticated to know where to go to get it.

The Chairman: The only question at the moment is whether you have been thinking in terms of an alternative name. Your answer can be "Yes" or "No."

Mr. B. V. Levinter: No, sir.

Senator Desruisseaux: You mentioned that you were going to operate in the Province of Quebec. I see you have incorporated only one name.

The Chairman: No, two names. There are two names in clause 5 of the bill.

Mr. B. V. Levinter: Banque Unie du Canada.

The Chairman: If there are no further questions there are certain determinations we should make. We may want to have a discussion. When the witnesses have retired we can discuss our views on this. Then I want to detain the committee perhaps for five or ten minutes, but no more, for an in camera discussion on Bill C-259, and the tax summary, just to tell you where we are at. Is that agreeable to the committee?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The committee hearing continued in camera).

The committee adjourned.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

---

No. 35

---

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1971

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1971

---

First Proceedings on:

"Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation"

---

---

(Witnesses—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Grosart
Beaubien	Haig
Blois	Hayden
Benidickson	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Lang
Choquette	Macnaughton
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Molson
Cook	Smith
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28)

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Orders of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, September 14, 1971:

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator Hayden moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Denis, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, tabled this day, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto; and

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Minutes of Proceedings

Wednesday, September 29, 1971.
(39)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9:30 a.m. to consider: "Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Aird, Beaubien, Benidickson, Blois, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Flynn, Gélinas, Haig, Lang, Macnaughton, Molson, Sullivan and Walker—(17).

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel and Mr. Alan J. Irving, Legal Advisor.

WITNESSES:

Mr. Arthur A. R. Scace, partner, law firm of McCarthy and McCarthy.

Mr. Stephen C. Smith, partner, law firm of McCarthy and McCarthy.

At 12:25 the Committee adjourned.

---

2:15 p.m.
(40)

At 2:15 the Committee resumed.

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Aird, Beaubien, Benidickson, Blois, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Flynn, Gélinas, Haig, Lang, Macnaughton, Molson, Sullivan and Walker—(17).

Present, but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senator Laird—(1).

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel and Mr. Alan J. Irving, Legal Advisor.

WITNESSES:

Mr. Arthur A. R. Scace;

Mr. Stephen C. Smith.

At 5:00 p.m. the Committee adjourned until Thursday, 30th September at 9:30 a.m.

---

Thursday, September 30, 1971.
(41)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9:30 a.m. to further consider:

"Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Aird, Beaubien, Benidickson, Blois, Burchill, Carter, Choquette, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Gélinas, Haig, Lang, Macnaughton, Molson, Smith, Sullivan and Walker—(18).

In attendance: The Hon. Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel; E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel and Mr. Alan J. Irving, Legal Advisor.

WITNESSES:

Mr. Arthur A. R. Scace;

Mr. Stephen C. Smith.

Upon motion of the Honourable Senator Macnaughton, it was Resolved that the Leader of the Government in the Senate, on behalf of the Committee, request the Minister of Finance to submit to the Committee a list of the proposed amendments to be submitted by his Department respecting Bill C-259.

At 12:15 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

F. A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Senate.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Wednesday, September 29, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9.30 a.m. to give consideration to the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto.

Senator Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I call the meeting to order. As you know, our purpose this morning is to commence the study of Bill C-259 and to indulge in a little of what I call the educational process of getting some background and understanding of it.

We have two gentlemen here to help us on our way in that regard. I will tell you briefly about them, and then I would like them to amplify on it.

A course of lectures was prepared at the request of and for the Law Society of Upper Canada, and you are looking at the gentlemen who did most of the work on that. A series of lectures was delivered to the members of the Law Society. I do not know how many were in attendance—perhaps 500 or so—and these are the men who did the major portion of the work in that regard. I feel this is the way we should begin in order to get some understanding of this bill. You are certainly not going to master all its details in one or two days, but at least when we go back over parts of it, when the briefs come in, you may be more familiar with and have a somewhat better understanding of it. That is the idea of these discussions.

I should tell you the allocation of headings today. We are going to start with the changes in personal tax, with which Mr. Stephen Smith will deal. Then we are going to consider capital gains, which is a very important subject and which has a great many ramifications. Mr. Arthur Scace is going to deal with that. We have an agenda beyond that, but capital gains is bound to take some time.

Senator Beaubien: We are going to sit this afternoon?

The Chairman: Yes, this afternoon and tomorrow morning. For those who might like to know when Lazarus Phillips is going to be here, I can tell you that he will be present in the morning. He said he would not miss these hearings for anything in the world. He is going to be chief counsel for the committee.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, this is a matter we will have to deal with only once, to make the procedures completely regular. What I note is that the two topics which we will be discussing this morning—namely, personal tax and capital gains—are the first two items in the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, which was the basis of your motion in the Senate, and from there you go on to the legislation arising therefrom.

The Chairman: Yes, the selection is just coincidental, not deliberate. That is the order in which they appear in the summary.

Senator Connolly: They happen to be the first and second chapters of the summary.

The Chairman: Yes. The other thing I should say is that so far as questions are concerned, our two witnesses are prepared to accept questions at any time. That is the only way we can deal with it. We cannot just go ahead with a lecture for half an hour, or something like that, because there may be a question, the answer to which would help you right at the beginning to understand, so you are free to ask questions at any time.

Mr. Scace, is there a short statement you would like to make before Stephen Smith proceeds?

Mr. Arthur R. A. Scace, partner in the law firm of McCarthy & McCarthy: I think you have covered it very well, Mr. Chairman. We are certainly prepared to accept questions, but I do not give any undertaking that we can answer them. I think at this time, even three or four months after the bill has been introduced, nobody in the country has all the answers, and we are all struggling to try to get them.

I think you will all be aware that this is probably the most difficult piece of legislation that has ever been placed before Parliament. I am not an expert in these matters, and you may be able to find something that you think ranks with it. It is very complex, and necessarily so. As soon as a capital gains tax is imposed the ramifications of it necessarily involve a complex tax statute. You have probably heard a lot of criticism in the press and from various associations about its complexity, with people saying they cannot understand it. It is difficult, but I believe a lot of practitioners have now come to the conclusion that it may not be complex enough; that there are gaps, that there are things that should be in there and that are not. I believe it will get worse before it gets better.

If I may refer to the order in which we are dealing with the different subjects, I think it was fortuitous that personal taxation came first and then capital gains. We just wanted to give you an initial rundown on the important but fairly minor changes in the personal field. Capital gains came next, because it is the keystone of the system.

With that, I would like to turn you over to Mr. Smith.

Mr. Stephen C. Smith, partner in the law firm of McCarthy & McCarthy: The remarks I have to make on the taxation of individuals and families are really just a brief summary of those areas. They are not a lecture that we prepared for the Law Society, because we felt it was something people could read for themselves. These remarks are intended as a survey of the matters dealt with in chapter 1 of the Government's summary of Bill C-259, and put the other topics, which are much more important, in context.

Mr. Benson said that the changes in the bill as they affect individuals and families—and I am talking about individuals apart from their capacities as investors; I am not talking about their capital gains or their dividend incomes, but basically their employment incomes—the changes in those areas were intended, he said, to significantly reduce the tax burden on lower-income Canadians. This is done, first, by changes in the progressive rates; secondly, by higher personal exemptions; thirdly, by broader deductions for wage earners; fourthly, by the general income averaging provisions; and lastly, by broadening the tax base to include a number of types of receipts that have not before been included in income.

I will deal with the last point first, the ways in which the tax base has been enlarged. Arthur Scace will deal with the treatment of capital gains, but that is the first obvious enlargement of the tax base, the inclusion of one half of your capital gains in income.

Secondly, the dividend tax credit has been revised to require the inclusion in income of the credit—the gross-up and credit system—which is really intended to make that credit as progressive as the tax rates themselves.

The third major enlargement of the tax base is the requirement that fellowships, scholarships and bursaries be included in income. A $500 exemption applies there. Research grants are included where they exceed the expenses of doing the research incurred by the researcher (sections 56(1)(n) & (o)).

The fourth area that has been added is medicare contributions. The amount contributed on an employee's behalf to a public medicare plan by his employer is to be included in the employee's income (section 6(1)(d)). The same thing applies to adult training allowances, including benefits which may be paid under special programs to assist the textile and automotive industries, although the automotive industry one may be redundant by now (sections 56(1)(m) 56(1)(a)(vi) & 56(1)(a)(v)).

Another area is unemployment insurance benefits. They now have to be included in income, but the employee is given the right to deduct his contributions to the plan (section 56(1)(a)(iv) & section 8(1)(k)).

Payments received under income maintenance are to be included where the plan is one to which the employer has contributed, but it is only the excess over the employee's own contributions that is taxed, not the total of the employer's and the employee's contributions.

Senator Connolly: Is that latter done separately? In other words, do you get the deduction as a deduction from general income, or do you get it in a specific category, in which you report the payments you get and then deduct from that? It may not matter.

Mr. Smith: It is clause 6(1)(f) of the bill.

Senator Connolly: It may be a detail we can deal with later.

Mr. Smith: As the clause reads, the amount that is to be included is the amount he is paid as a benefit out of the plan, but then he deducts what he has contributed from that benefit to get the portion of it that is taxable.

The Chairman: He reports the net, in other words.

Senator Connolly: It is sort of dealt with as a class benefit, a categorical benefit. I am sorry, I should not have asked that at this point.

Mr. Smith: The last inclusion in income that is new is really just a refinement of something that has been going on all along. That is the personal use of a company car. Under the present act the department has ascertained how much use of a car was in fact personal, what percentage of the use might be attributed to personal use, and has required the inclusion in income of that portion of the cost of providing the car. Under the tax reform bill, in clause 6(1) (e) and clause 6(2), there is a minimum taxable value set out. At least 1 per cent per month of the original cost of the car will be deemed to be a benefit to the employee, or one-third of the rental that the employer pays for the car if he leases it. That is the minimum. Nobody can report less than that amount of personal use as income. But it still leaves it open for the department to say that it should be half or 100 per cent, depending on the facts.

Incidentally, if on any of these points you would like the clause references, I have them in my notes. I do not know whether you want to be bothered with them all, but any that you would like to have I can give.

Senator Carter: If you would not mind reporting that, it could go on record. It might be useful to have later on.

Mr. Smith: I will see that the record has the references for the comments already made.

The Chairman: The comments that have already been made and are not annotated in that way will be dealt with when we get the typescript and they can be included before the final printing.

Mr. Smith: The second category of changes I would like to deal with is the deductions in computing income that are new deductions or exclusions from income, which really amounts to the same thing. The first area is child care expenses, which is dealt with in section 63. This permits a taxpayer, usually the wife, to claim up to $500 per child who is under the age of 14, up to a maximum of $2,000 per family. The wife ordinarily claims it, but if the husband is a widower or divorced or separated and he has custody of the children, the husband can claim it. It can only be taken when the child care that is provided is necessary for the taxpayer to earn employment or business income. It can cover ordinary baby-sitting costs, day nursery care and limited amounts of board where it is paid to a school or camp, up to $15 per week per child for board.

Another limitation is that it cannot exceed two-thirds of the earned income of the parent who is making the deduction.

The second area is employment expenses. Every taxpayer who is employed will be entitled to a deduction of 3 per cent of his employment income, up to $150 per year. That is introduced by section 8(1) (a). The thing to note is that the employee does not have to provide any receipts of expenses. It is like the standard medical deduction. He just claims it.

Senator Connolly: That is, every person receiving wages or salary is entitled to $150, whether he is in business or in the public service or in education?

Mr. Smith: It would not apply to somebody who is in business personally on his own account. It is intended to cover employees.

Senator Connolly: Employees in business, but it does cover public servants too?

Senator Benidickson: Not necessarily an architect; it could be a schoolteacher.

Mr. Smith: It is not available to salesmen who could otherwise claim expenses under the act; and it is not available to a member of the Senate or of the House of Commons.

The Chairman: And it is not available to a director, as a director.

Mr. Smith: That is right, because he would not be considered as being employed.

Senator Macnaughton: Be sure to put the reference in.

Mr. Smith: It is section 8(1) (a).

Senator Connolly: Do you intend to give the rationale for these changes? I suppose that generally they are thinking about situations where a man has to incur heavy expense, say to get to his work from his home?

Mr. Smith: I think it was implicit in many of the briefs, and in the White Paper itself, that employees as a class have felt hard done by because they cannot claim deductions, except those that the act specifically permits them to claim. These were very ungenerous. This is an attempt now to give some recognition to the fact that an employee in many cases has to travel to his job, he has to buy clothes, he has to buy in some cases tools and other things like that, that his employer does not provide. The employer could deduct them, where they are necessary for the job and he provides them, but in many cases he does not.

Senator Benidickson: This has been previously very narrow. It started with railway men and then it widened a little.

Senator Flynn: When it is a deduction of only $150 as a maximum, what about someone who earns a $20,000 salary? He may have greater expenses of the nature you have described. As Senator Connolly says, if he has heavy expenses for going to work, the $150 would not carry him very far.

Senator Connolly: From what I have seen a man who is in that category probably would have opportunities to get additional expense money. For example, if he had to take a trip out of Canada or out of his home city, this would be an expense against the firm. There would be things like that. I think this is primarily intended for rather personal expenses incurred in the earning of money.

Mr. Smith: Yes. It really means that if the employer did pay for them, they would be considered as a benefit to the employee and would be taxed anyway. It is a general concession to employees.

Mr. Scace: Senators will note the revenue effect of the proposal. It is not broken down completely, but the employment expense allowance, moving expenses and other deductions which are being talked about, will come to somewhere between $205 million and $285 million.

Mr. Smith: There are a lot of employees.

Senator Connolly: It covers everyone in the country except the self-employed.

Senator Molson: It does not matter whether he is receiving some expense allowances as well?

Senator Benidickson: That is the same as the Charitable Donations Act.

Senator Molson: You do not have to give to get!

The Chairman: No, the hand is out. That is a starter.

Senator Molson: Yes.

Mr. Smith: Another new kind of deduction for individuals is moving expenses. That is provided for in section 62. This is made available as a deduction to employees, self-employed persons, and full-time students, who are not otherwise reimbursed by someone for making a move. It is available as a deduction in the year of the move or the next following one. One limitation is that the new place of residence must be at least 25 miles closer to the new job location. Obviously, one does not want people moving from one side of Toronto to the other claiming that as a moving expense.

The Chairman: Or moving from one side of the street to the other.

Senator Beaubien: What about senators moving from Newfoundland to Ottawa?

The Chairman: You are dealing with a special category, senator.

Mr. Smith: The expenses defined include the cost of travel of the taxpayer and members of his household, their board and lodging while they are travelling, transportation and storage costs of their personal effects, the cost of cancelling a lease and the selling cost of their old residence. That is all in section 62(3).

Senator Molson: There is no limit on that?

Mr. Smith: No. Another category of expense deduction is not really a deduction but rather an exclusion from income. Ordinarily expenses of transportation, board and lodging may be required to be included in income. They broadened the scope of the deduction available to employees to cover employees who leave their ordinary residence for at least 36 hours for purposes of their work. The work site that they move to is to be a temporary one where they could not reasonably be expected to maintain an establishment for their family and from which they could not reasonably be expected to return home every night.

Where your employer does reimburse you for, say, moving to a temporary assignment some distance away, ordinarily those personal expenses would be an inclusion in your income. He would pay you for your meals and board and you would ordinarily have to put that into your income. Section 6(6) provides that you do not have to include these amounts in your income. It is excluded from your income even though he has reimbursed you for them.

Senator Connolly: What is the check on that, in the event of employers absorbing inflated amounts on these items?

Mr. Smith: There is an overall check in the act on the employer trying to deduct unreasonable expenses. The other check is the purpose for which they are paid. They do not attempt to prescribe how luxurious a motel you put your employee up in.

Senator Benidickson: This is a loop-hole for a small corporation that is dominated by one individual. He could inflate his moving expenses as an employee of what is really his own corporation, could he not?

The Chairman: Except that even at the present time, under the existing law, the employer, if he pays out expenses of this kind, would be making a deduction, and he would have to support that deduction as being a reasonable amount. That still exists. The point is that under the bill the employee does not have to include the amount of money that he is paid. That is excluded from his income. Heretofore it had to be included in his income on the theory of the income tax department that if there is a deduction or exclusion then somewhere else the person who gets it will have to take it as income and pay taxes.

Senator Burchill: Under the existing law, does not the individual, if he includes that in his income, put an expense item on the other side to counteract it?

The Chairman: But he would not have an expense item relating to that particular thing, because the money would have been provided by his employer.

Mr. Smith: The employer would deduct the expense.

Senator Flynn: There is a difference between travelling and living expenses. Travelling expenses for other persons and employees could be deducted before. Is the living allowance to be included?

Senator Carter: I am not quite clear on that. Is that not a double exclusion, because a company writes it off as an expense and the receiver does not include it in income?

The Chairman: Is it not a kind of benefit that should be counted as income in the hands of the employee?

Senator Connolly: Obviously not.

Senator Beaubien: The receiver has to pay it out.

Senator Benidickson: It should not be, unless it is padded.

Mr. Smith: The evil they are trying to get at is the employee who perhaps can live modestly while he is in his own home, but all of a sudden he is sent off to a distant job site and he is put up in a hotel and eats all his meals in a restaurant. That is much more expensive living than when he is at home. Yet that benefit would have to be included in his income, and he would be left with less after-tax income than he would have had he just stayed at home.

Senator Connolly: Yes. It is quite an administrative load for the department to carry, but they have been carrying it up until now. I suppose they have their ways of dealing with it.

Mr. Smith: There are limitations on it. He cannot be expected to set up his own household in another place for as long as he is there, and he cannot be expected to return to his home. So they are thinking of job sites that are out in the bush, and that sort of thing.

Senator Molson: Before we completely get away from moving expenses, section 62(3), I see that item (e) includes the selling costs in respect of the sale of his old residence. How would you define that? Would that be his loss or only commission?

Senator Connolly: Commission.

Senator Molson: What about his loss?

Mr. Smith: I think that is the cost of selling the house, the agent's commission, legal fees, and that sort of thing.

Senator Connolly: And any survey, if he has to provide it.

Senator Molson: Is that defined? Could the selling costs include the loss on the house where an employee has been married for 12 months and then moved again? He certainly sustains a loss.

Mr. Scace: Generally now, and under the bill, that is a personal loss. Under the bill it will probably be the principal residence.

Senator Molson: And any capital gains.

Mr. Scace: That is right. There is provision, both in the jurisprudence and the interpretation bulletin published by the Department of National Revenue, where you have employers who enter into arrangements with their employees to reimburse them for any loss up to a fair market value, and so on. That is not considered to be a gain if they are reimbursed when they are forced to move. It must be assumed that will continue, but generally a loss on your house is a non-deductible capital loss.

Senator Cook: In theory, you have lost whether you have sold it or not. When you have sold it you have established a loss.

Mr. Smith: That is right.

The Chairman: But they could not directly allow a loss on the sale of a principal residence when they are not taxing the gain.

Senator Flynn: They can. That all depends. If you sell because you want to live in an apartment, that is not the same thing as if you move to another location where you have to work. There is a distinction there. I am not too sure that a capital loss on a person's residence, resulting from the obligation to move for reasons of employment, should not be a deductible expense. If he makes a gain, then that may be taxable; I do not know. Can you do it as often as you want?

The Chairman: There is a limit. You cannot get yourself in the business of acquiring and selling principal residences, so-called.

Senator Flynn: If he makes a capital loss, one has to remember that the department would have to offset his moving and other expenses, such as the commission to the agent, legal fees, and so on. You would consider the whole transaction.

The Chairman: Senator Flynn, there is some relief recognized at the present time, because usually, certainly in the larger corporations, when an employee is asked to move as a term of his employment and he owns a house, then, if he cannot sell it readily, his employer will take his house over and pay the employee the fair market value. Then, if the employer makes any more on the subsequent sale of the house, the employer will pay the employee that additional amount.

Senator Flynn: I am merely suggesting that the wording may be wide enough to allow the inclusion of that kind of loss, and, if there is a gain, it would have to be diminished by the other expenses applicable, such as moving expenses, legal fees and so on.

The Chairman: In my opinion the wording in section 62(3) of the bill is not broad enough in its reference to the selling cost in respect of the sale of the old residence. If you wanted to cover that, I think you would have to do it specifically.

Senator Connolly: It would be a little different from the scheme of the act, if it were done, because of the treatment in respect of capital gains in connection with principal residences.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Flynn: It is not the same thing.

Senator Molson: In my opinion the wording in subparagraph (d) is different in that it would suggest that the selling cost there is a narrow definition of commissions, fees, and so on. The other refers to the cost to him.

The Chairman: Of cancelling the lease?

Senator Molson: Yes. They would probably have worded it differently. If there had been any intention regarding a loss on the house it probably would have been the cost to him in respect of the sale.

Senator Flynn: Can we not note that there is a difference and, possibly, that the act should make it between the case where you are forced to sell for reasons of employment and the other case where you sell because you want to?

The Chairman: That is a point we might very well note, and it is now noted in the record. When we come to the stage of questioning witnesses or departmental representatives this point will come up and it will arise again when you are considering your summation. The point is made now.

Senator Beaubien: Agreed.

Mr. Smith: If I may move on to the next major change, it concerns retirement plans of various sorts. As you know, there are registered pension plans to which the employer contributes and the employees may contribute, depending upon the plan. There are deferred profit-sharing plans to which the employer contributes. Then there are registered retirement savings plans to which individuals may contribute, where each individual has his own plan.

The upper limits on the deductible contributions to those plans have been substantially increased. In the case of registered pension plans the upper limit was $1,500 by the employer and $1,500 by the employee. Those limits have been increased to $2,500. In the case of deferred profit-sharing plans, to which the employer contributes, the limit there has likewise been increased to $2,500. Contributions by individuals to registered retirement savings plans have been boosted from $2,500 to $4,000.

Any taxpayer who has accumulated funds in an existing plan may still apply the old section 36 averaging provisions to remove his contributions. After the new system starts, any payments out of such plans out of post 1971 contributions will be treated under the new averaging provisions, which I will come to in a few moments.

In the case of registered retirement savings plans, in section 146 the new act repeals the previous flat rate of 15 per cent which applied to amounts paid upon the death of the individual. These payments are now going to be treated as a return of premiums and will be included in the taxpayer's income unless he elects to purchase an income averaging annuity with the money he receives out of the plan or unless he elects to transfer the payment to another plan or to a registered pension plan.

The Chairman: If he just takes the money, then it is income.

Mr. Smith: That is right.

Senator Connolly: In that year?

Mr. Smith: Oh, yes.

Senator Connolly: The year in which he gets it.

Mr. Smith: The general averaging provisions would apply, but they, of course, are not as broad as the purchase of an income averaging annuity which, virtually, defers the whole thing. Neither are they as broad as putting it into another plan, which has the same effect.

Senator Connolly: You are talking about registered plans, generally, here.

Mr. Smith: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Is there any change in the opportunity that is available to a professional individual, for example, in respect of his retirement savings plan?

Mr. Smith: That is what I was just referring to.

Senator Connolly: That is included in all of this?

Mr. Smith: I was referring specifically to registered retirement savings plans.

Senator Connolly: I see.

Mr. Smith: In that case you enter into an agreement with a trust company or an insurance company, or an organization such as that, and that organization usually effects the registration for you.

Senator Connolly: And the limit there was formerly $2,500 but has now been increased to $4,000.

Mr. Smith: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Under the present system, if you belong to a plan other than a registered retirement savings plan, about which we are talking, by how much is the total contribution reduced?

Mr. Smith: It is reduced by $1,500. All they have done in this respect is to increase the upper limits on contributions. Otherwise they have left the schemes of the various registered plans exactly the same.

Senator Haig: It is taken as a deduction.

Mr. Smith: Yes.

Senator Connolly: If you invest it, it becomes a deduction from your income that year.

Mr. Smith: Yes. You have to pay it to the plan.

Senator Connolly: Part of my interest in this stems from the fact that this whole matter has come up a number of times in the past. I remember that Senator Beaubien referred to this particularly in connection with the retirement plan of senators. We had quite a discussion on the whole question.

The Chairman: Senator Beaubien, you are being accused of something here!

Mr. Smith: They have also applied new investment restrictions. I believe the department discovered that many taxpayers were perhaps taking unfair advantage of the contributions, particularly to registered retirement savings plans, by investing the, for example, in the preferred shares of their own company. As a result, in the future there will be restrictions on the types of investment that such a plan may allow for, and most notable in that regard is a restriction on the foreign investments that they may make. There used to be no restrictions on retirement savings plans. They are now brought under the same sort of restrictions the registered pension plans are under. The foreign investment restriction which used to apply to registered pension plans has been changed. It used to be based on the percentage of foreign income rather than the cost of the investments. It is now going to be not more than 10 per cent of the cost base of your investments which may be foreign investments.

Mr. Benson issued a press release on that subject early in July. That release helped to explain the provisions in the act. Incidentally, they are set out in sections 205 and 207.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, this is going to be a very complicated part of the bill. Perhaps Mr. Smith could give us comparative examples in respect of the present act and the proposed measure. Perhaps he could give us an example of what would happen under the present act and an example of what will apply under the proposed bill.

The Chairman: In relation to what?

Senator Connolly: In relation to the very point he has just been talking about.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Smith: What pension plans could do under the present act was to invest a very large percentage of the funds paid into the plan in foreign investments, provided that those foreign investments as a total did not produce more than 10 per cent of their total income. Now it would be very easy to buy American growth equities which paid little or no dividends, the type that sell at a very high multiple and provide a very low yield.

The Chairman: Reaching for a capital gain?

Mr. Smith: Yes, and put those into a plan and perhaps have 50 per cent of your assets producing less than 10 per cent of your income. Now you are going to be limited to 10 per cent of the value going into the plan, the original cost of the investments. So you will not have the opportunity to put such a large percentage of your funds in foreign investments.

The Chairman: I wonder whether they are not missing an opportunity for capital gain in those situations now that they are bringing in a capital gains tax. The idea of stopping this in the first place I presume was because untaxed capital gains were being made. But now since they are being taxed, what is the reason for making the change?

Senator Beaubien: To keep the money in Canada.

Senator Connolly: I think Senator Beaubien has put his finger on the point. Probably the rationale behind this is to encourage investment in Canada.

Mr. Smith: Not only that, but having increased the upper limits there would now be a lot more money going into these plans and the effect would be quite substantial if it all flowed out of the country.

Senator Connolly: What do you mean by "increasing the upper limits"? Is it simply because the plans have more money?

Mr. Smith: No. An individual can now contribute $1,500 more per year to such plans, and similarly for registered pension plans.

Senator Connolly: It suggests a trend towards nationalism in investment.

Mr. Smith: The next major topic deals with changes in the deductions allowed from income to compute taxable income. The first group deals with changes in personal exemptions. A single taxpayer under clause 109(1)(c) will be able to deduct $1,500, instead of the $1,000 which he can deduct at the present time. In the case of a married taxpayer the exemption will be increased from $2,000 to $2,850. But where the wife's income is over $250 per year, the husband has to reduce his exemption for her—which in fact amounts to $1,350—by $1 for every $1 of her income. So if she had an income of $1,600 or more, he would lose the exemption.

The Chairman: He would be a single man for tax purposes?

Mr. Smith: Yes. The people who are to be treated as married for the purposes of getting this exemptions have been expanded to a widow or widower where such person is supporting a brother, a child or other relative of that sort living in his house. But he does not get the exemption for a dependent child at the same time. He gets one or the other.

Senator Connolly: Is the relationship the test, or is the fact of living in the house the test?

Mr. Smith: Both.

Senator Connolly: Is there any legislation on the relationship? For example, what is the situation in the case of a grandfather or an aged aunt or an aged uncle? Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, it is unnecessary to ask these questions.

Mr. Smith: It would be somebody who was wholly dependent for support and who was connected through blood relationship, marriage or adoption with the taxpayer.

Senator Connolly: That is almost the whole scope of relationship, is it not?

Mr. Smith: In the same way the married exemption is reduced for the wife's income, so the exemption here would be reduced by the dependant's income. The present exemptions for dependent children are retained at their present amounts, that is $300 for children under 16 and $550 for a child 16 years and over. The income of the dependant is treated in a similar fashion to the income of a spouse in that it reduces the exemption gradually. There is a $1 reduction for every $2 of the dependant's income in excess of $1,000, and where you are entitled to the $550 exemption, it is one for one. Furthermore there is an increased exemption for certain taxpayers over the age of 65, or for people who are blind or who are confined to a wheelchair. The exemption is increased to $650. The guaranteed income supplement under clause 110(1)(f) is going to be exempt as well.

Senator Connolly: That is exempt from tax; it is not a deduction. These are anomalies we should take note of, Mr. Chairman. It is strange that they should be exempt when they include unemployment insurance benefits and things of that sort. In this case they are going to exclude payments made for guaranteed income supplement.

Senator Cook: But they would not be liable for tax if they were going to get the guaranteed supplement anyway. They have to prove need to get the supplement so I do not see how it could be regarded as taxable anyway.

The Chairman: But while proving the need and even while there might be need it could be that the income would still be up to the limit of the exemptions.

Senator Cook: But surely that would be very small.

Mr. Scace: If you had the old age security of $950 or $1,000, or whatever it is, but your point is that it would have to be up around $500 before you would become taxable as a single person.

Senator Cook: But when you get to age 65 you get another $500 there.

Mr. Smith: There have also been changes in the treatment of charitable deductions. The maximum deduction has been increased from 10 per cent to 20 per cent of income. The one-year carry forward of charitable deductions is retained and the existing $100 standard deduction in lieu of providing receipts is retained as well.

The Chairman: That is clause 110(1)(a).

Senator Connolly: Is that a percentage of net rather than gross income?

Mr. Smith: That is income.

Senator Connolly: Taxable income?

Senator Molson: Income of the taxpayer.

Mr. Smith: It is a deduction in computing your income, so you would be talking about income before these deductions.

Senator Molson: Are not some of these provisions wider, such as those for amateur athletic associations and the United Nations agencies?

Mr. Smith: Yes. Clause 110(8)(b) is the national amateur athletic associations. They are treated as a charity for the first time. Various Olympic organizations have been set up to support Olympic sport. Up to now they have not been qualified under the usual legal definition of "charity."

Senator Flynn: Should not political parties be treated as charitable organizations?

Senator Cook: Educational.

Senator Molson: Welfare.

Mr. Smith: The old treatment of medical expenses has been retained with certain exceptions. The contributions of an employer to a public medical care plan have been included in the employee's income. Medical expenses are defined to include the care of the taxpayer and his family, anything paid to an institution for the physically or medically handicapped. That is clause 110(1)(c)(vi).

Senator Connolly: Mr. Smith, in connection with charitable donations, does the department under the new bill still retain the right to rule what type of organization qualifies?

Mr. Smith: Oh, yes.

Senator Connolly: That is undisturbed?

Mr. Smith: Yes. The only real change is to bring in this category of amateur athletic associations.

Senator Connolly: They still have to register.

Mr. Smith: They still have to qualify under one of the various categories.

Mr. Scace: In the case of revocation of registration of a charity there are administrative provisions for appeal which were not in the previous act.

Senator Flynn: I wish to mention that I was not exactly joking when I referred to political parties. The Chamber of Commerce, meeting now in Quebec, has recommended that contributions to political parties be allowed as deductions from income.

The Chairman: Senator Flynn, you will be able to raise that question personally with the Chamber of Commerce here next Wednesday.

Senator Flynn: Now that everyone is covered by Medicare, I understand that expenses which are not covered will be deductible from income, but is there a certain percentage that has to be attained before the deduction applies?

Mr. Smith: Yes; it is the same system.

Senator Flynn: Three per cent?

Mr. Smith: Yes.

Senator Flynn: How will the taxpayer with Medicare ever reach 3 per cent?

Mr. Smith: Well, that is right. If he pays premiums to a private health service plan which applies in addition to Medicare, those are deemed to be medical expenses which he could deduct. However, he is not entitled to deduct any kind of medical expenses for which he is reimbursed by any plan.

Senator Connolly: He does not receive it twice.

Mr. Smith: No, that is right.

Senator Flynn: Previously, even if he received payment from a private insurance company, he could deduct?

Mr. Smith: He could deduct the premiums. He pays, but he cannot deduct the benefits they pay for him, the indemnity.

Senator Flynn: So that this provision is now more or less insignificant.

Mr. Smith: I suppose the rationale for it is that the Government is picking up most of the Medicare expense, or a large portion of it, so they do not want to double up on it.

Senator Flynn: I suggest that the minimum should not be applicable with the new system. Any amount spent above what is paid by Medicare or any additional insurance that a taxpayer has should be deductible directly.

The Chairman: Do you mean that you spend and there is no reimbursement?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Gelinas: Dental treatments are included, so that you can exceed that 3 per cent.

Senator Flynn: Occasionally; not very often.

Mr. Smith: Another major change is the whole field of income averaging. There was a considerable amount of criticism in various briefs to the effect that taxpayers should be given generous averaging provisions to spread income where they have peak earnings years followed by lower earnings years. There are two kinds of averaging.

One is usually termed general averaging. It applies to all taxpayers automatically and applies each year. It will be assessed by the Government's computer facilities, so the taxpayer does not have to worry about it in his return. He reports his income and they run his return through their program. If it shows that he is entitled to a refund because of this averaging provision, then he is given a credit. That applies where income in a particular year is 20 per cent more than the average of the preceding four years and 10 per cent more than the immediately preceding year. There are provisions to cover those who are just entering the labour force to give them an averaging base and so on.

Senator Lang: What clause is that?

The Chairman: That is clause 118. That is what you term the automatic?

Mr. Smith: That is the automatic general averaging. The more interesting one, really, is what is usually termed forward averaging. That is the provision in clause 61, which will be of most help to taxpayers who have a very high income in one year. Clause 61 permits the taxpayer to spread his income by taking any amount of his income and buying an income-averaging annuity from an institution. He is given a deduction for the premium he pays for the annuity under certain limitations. To qualify he must purchase that annuity within 60 days of the end of the year.

The annuity can be issued by any company authorized to carry on that business, either federally or provincially. It must be issued for a single lump sum premium, and the first annuity payment must commence within 10 months of the purchase of the contract, so that it will be in the year following the year for which the deduction is claimed at the latest. The contract must provide at least one annual payment; it could be any number during the year. The annuity must be for life and with or without a guaranteed term, which cannot exceed 15 years. It could be simply for a guaranteed term not in excess of 15 years. In any case, the guaranteed term cannot go beyond the individual's 85th birthday, but there is no limit on how short a term the annuity must have. It could, for example, be three annual payments, if you like.

The Chairman: The taxpayer settles the amount of money that would otherwise be income, he wants to use this to buy an income annuity and then he gets it back when the income annuity starts paying off. He can really call the tune on that, and he gets a deduction for the premium that he pays, the lump sum in one year, is that right?

Mr. Smith: That is right.

Senator Connolly: In the year in which he pays it, but in that year he will also get an annuity payment.

Mr. Smith: That is right.

The Chairman: Well, the income he gets on that income annuity will be income.

Senator Beaubien: It will be taxable.

Senator Connolly: Would an example of this be an artist or an athlete who all of a sudden receives a terrific windfall in the way of either an increase in salary or proceeds from the sale of some pictures, or something of that nature?

Mr. Smith: I will give you an example. They are set out in section 61. I have a list here of all the different things that would qualify: Taxable capital gains minus your allowable capital losses; income from the production of a literary, dramatic, musical or artistic work; income from activities as an athlete, musician or public entertainer; a single payment received from a superannuation or pension plan, such as a return of contributions or payment on death; a payment on retirement in recognition of long service; a single payment out of a deferred profit-sharing plan on retirement or withdrawal or death; a payment under a death benefit plan for employees; return of premiums from a retirement savings plan upon the death of the annuitant; proceeds from the disposition of depreciable property. That is an important one. A taxpayer who owns a building individually, and who would suffer recapture or a depreciation on the sale, can in effect use his recapture, which would otherwise be income, to purchase the annuity. Then there are the proceeds of the sale of the goodwill of a business; proceeds from the sale of inventory or accounts receivable on termination of a business; and the benefits under a stock option plan.

All of the averaging provisions in the act that used to apply to those types of payments are washed out completely in favour of this income averaging annuity. For example, the treatment of stock option profits in section 85A is repealed in favour of this. There are transitional provisions which allow people to pick up their present options under Section 85A, but after the transitional period is over they will have to use the stock option profits to purchase income averaging annuities in order to avoid being taxed on them.

The Chairman: The attraction of a stock option as such was watered down considerably a few years ago. Before that it was quite beneficial, and now there is really some reinstatement here if you want to use the income that would otherwise be taxable to generate an income annuity.

Mr. Smith: The averaging is perhaps more generous. You can spread it further into the future than you could under the old section 85A: that is, looking at your previous three years average tax rate.

Senator Molson: In the case of a stock option the profit is not realized by the individual. He would have some difficulty paying for the annuity unless he took up the stock and sold it.

The Chairman: He would have to sell it, yes.

Mr. Smith: It is not until he exercises the option that he is taxed.

Senator Molson: He would have to sell it right away.

Mr. Smith: Yes.

Senator Connolly: And if he did not sell it, it would be considered as part of his income.

Mr. Smith: He would have to sell enough of the stock to get an amount equal to what otherwise would be taxable. He would still have some stock left.

Senator Molson: It takes away some of the general purposes of stock options.

The Chairman: You mean the acquisition and the holding?

Senator Molson: Yes.

Senator Beaubien: It is better than it was.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, could we consider that a little further? Senator Molson has raised some good points. Suppose, for the sake of argument, a man becomes entitled to, say, 10,000 shares of stock which is worth, say, $2 a share, and he is given the certificates and he holds the 10,000 shares; he does not liquidate anything. Is he allowed to hold those shares in his portfolio as a capital asset to be disposed of in due course?

Mr. Smith: Well, say the value of the stock, when he exercises his option and buys it from the company, is the $2 a share, as you mentioned, but his option price was $1, which means on 10,000 shares he has a $10,000 stock option profit which the act would require him to include in his income, now he can pay the tax on that or he can buy a $10,000 income averaging annuity and spread it into the future. Where he gets the cash to buy the income averaging annuity is his problem, but obviously if he does not have the cash he will have to sell part of the stock.

Senator Connolly: That is a good explanation to have on the record. The other question I would like to ask is this: I notice that some of these payments or realizations that you mentioned occur on death and they become income. Normally, I think, under the Succession Duty Act or the Estate Tax Act on death, say, a lump sum payment out of an annuity arrangement would be a capital asset for the purposes of the estate or succession duty tax. I take it it is because the estate tax is being done away with that it now becomes income. Is that so?

Mr. Smith: No; it was always income subject to the averaging provisions that were in Section 36 of the act. Those averaging provisions are now being repealed in favour of these averaging provisions which are, in the case of the income averaging annuity, perhaps more flexible than section 36 was, but as far as inclusion in the estate is concerned, it would be the net estate after debts, including the income taxes payable by the deceased up to the date of death, that would be subject to estate tax.

Senator Connolly: I am just wondering what happens in the case of a widow whose husband's estate, as a result of his death, is entitled to a lump sum payment, say, of $20,000. That has heretofore been an asset of the estate which became taxable for succession duty purposes. I am right so far, am I?

Mr. Smith: Yes.

Senator Connolly: It was never considered to have been part of his income for the year in which he died. I think you pay succession duty on it and it is a death benefit. It just adds to the capital value of the estate.

Senator Flynn: If it is in respect of an insurance policy, I agree with you. Suppose it was as a result of an annuity.

Mr. Smith: Well, what happened under the present act was that you had an exemption from income tax for certain death benefits up to $10,000, and the balance of the benefit would be taxed to the estate, and that income tax would be a debt of the estate which would be deductible in computing the taxable value of the estate for estate tax purposes, so that whatever estate tax might apply on the estate would apply in that aspect as well. There are in the Estate Tax Act quite extensive exemptions for benefits for the surviving spouse, either outright or by way of a life interest or annuity, so that there was a fair amount of scope for deferring tax until the wife's or husband's death, as the case may be.

Mr. Scace: What you are thinking of, senator, might be that if you have an annual pension, they would capitalize that pension. That would clearly be an asset of the estate.

Senator Connolly: Yes, they do that.

Mr. Scace: But the other situation, I think, is the net amount after you pay the income tax liability.

Senator Molson: In the case of an artist or athlete, and so on, he can get it spread over 15 years.

Mr. Smith: Or his lifetime.

Senator Molson: Or the difference between?

Mr. Smith: The maximum term would be an annuity for life with a guaranteed term of 15 years.

Senator Molson: Not less than 15 years.

Mr. Smith: I am just talking about a guarantee, but it can be a life annuity, if you like.

Senator Molson: Presumably he has a career, whether as a musician or an athlete, of some years, so in fact year by year he could continue this process. Supposing you took the minimum time of 15 years, and say he had a 15-year career, he could in fact have an annuity spread out in the end over 30 years, could he not?

Mr. Smith: The maximum term would be an annuity spread over his entire life, if he survived the maximum guarantee period.

Senator Molson: But a minimum of 30 years in that case, if he did it year by year for 15 years?

Mr. Smith: Yes.

Senator Molson: And he could avoid the tax other than the annuity all the way through. The amount he received as an annuity when the payment started is what he would be paying tax on.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Molson: That, of course, would be increasing as he kept on buying new ones.

The Chairman: Of course, you must remember that it would then be a carry, the incidence of tax would be levied on what his overall income was in that year, and it might be that when he stops earning the high income that hockey players and musicians may earn his rate would be less and he would pay less tax.

Senator Haig: He gets the premium as a deduction.

The Chairman: He gets the premium as a deduction.

Senator Haig: In the year in which he buys the annuity.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Haig: And when the annuity payment is made it is income, and he pays tax on it.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Connolly: It is spread, so it is reduced.

Senator Molson: I was worrying about some of these little chaps like Bobby Orr, and so on, and wondering how they were going to make ends meet.

Senator Flynn: You should know something about that.

Senator Molson: Not Bobby Orr, unfortunately.

Senator Flynn: What about winning a sweepstake? That would be a capital gain.

Senator Beaubien: That is a windfall.

Mr. Smith: I think that is treated as a windfall.

The Chairman: That is treated as a prize, I think, in the language used in the statute, is it not?

Mr. Smith: They exempt the gain on a prize won in a lottery. I guess a sweepstake is a lottery.

Senator Gelinas: No tax at all.

Senator Molson: What about grants from the Canada Council and other bodies of that sort?

Mr. Smith: Earlier I mentioned scholarships, fellowships and research grants.

Senator Molson: I referred to grants. You see, you have been specific so far. Are grants in general included? Prizes?

Mr. Smith: Not unless they can be tied to—

Senator Molson: There is a bank that gives $50,000 every year in prizes. Is that taxable?

Mr. Smith: The Nobel Prize, for example, is not, I think, covered.

Senator Beaubien: That would not be taxable?

Mr. Smith: I do not think so; not the Nobel Prize or something of that sort.

Senator Connolly: The $50,000 Royal Bank award every year is never given to the same person twice.

The Chairman: What is the basis for it? An educational grant?

Senator Connolly: Eminence generally, excellence.

Senator Beaubien: Cardinal Léger got it one year.

Senator Molson: There are several of that sort.

Mr. Smith: I think paragraphs (o) and (n) of clause 56(1) are relevant.

Senator Molson: "—research or any similar work". That is specific again.

Mr. Smith: Clause 56(1)(n) though says "in a field of endeavour ordinarily carried on by the taxpayer".

Senator Molson: No.

The Chairman: "—or a prize for achievement in a field of endeavour".

Mr. Scace: This comes into the capital gains area, but really what you have with the new bill are three categories. First there are items which are clearly income, and always were income. Then there are items which are entitled to capital gains treatment. Then there seems to be a third category which is exempt. It seems to be exempt because in order to have a capital gain there must be a disposition, so if an amount is received that does not arise by a disposition, it seems to go completely untaxed. One example I can think of is a gambling gain. In some cases gambling gains were income under the old act, but generally they were not.

Mr. Smith: Casual gambling.

Mr. Scace: Casual gambling. It seems to me that there might be that kind of thing in that exempt category. Certainly it has to be interpreted.

Senator Connolly: There is no specific provision for windfalls in either the old act or the new bill.

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Mr. Smith: Before we get on to capital gains, which is far more interesting than these topics, I will make one or two comments about the changes in the rate structure. Basically, they have made it one rate instead of all the bits and pieces that we have now. The old age security tax, social development tax, the three per cent surtax, the tax on foreign investment income, and so on are all swept into one rate structure. The way provincial taxes are calculated has been changed too. Under the present act there is a deduction in respect of provincial taxes. Now provincial taxes will be calculated as a percentage of the total federal tax instead of by the abatement from the basic tax system. The standard rate of provincial tax will be 30 per cent of total federal tax, but I think any province has the freedom to raise that. The result of the new rate schedule would be a combined federal and provincial rate that peaks at 61.1 per cent on income over $60,000. That should be compared with the net present peak rate of 82.4 per cent which cut in at $400,000.

Senator Connolly: Perhaps I might ask a question here about the 30 per cent provincial tax. This is not a taxation question. Is it proposed that that 30 per cent will be paid out of the federal treasury to the provinces?

Mr. Smith: Oh yes, I think the federal Government will still be the collecting agent.

Senator Connolly: It will be the collecting agent for that 30 per cent?

Mr. Smith: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Which will be refunded to the province.

Mr. Smith: One thing to keep in mind is that the rate structure set out in the bill is just the federal rate. To get the true rate 30 per cent of the federal rate has to be tacked on to that.

The Chairman: So your overall would be whatever the rate in the bill produces plus 30 per cent of that.

Senator Beaubien: Quebec gets 50 per cent now.

The Chairman: The provinces can add any amount to that; that is their privilege.

Senator Cook: There are certain advantages in being a hippie!

Mr. Scace: On that last question I think the bill is confusing, because if you look at the rates under the present act and go to, say, $24,000 or $25,000, the marginal rate there is 50 per cent. If you go to the bill, the marginal rate is 39 per cent. We have really got a nice reduction in tax and what you have to do is—

Senator Beaubien: Add on a third.

Mr. Scace: Yes, 30 per cent is added to the 39 and produces 50.7 per cent. That is your rate at the margin for a province levying a 30 per cent tax. But it is not clear, looking just at the rates in the bill.

The Chairman: But if you take that 61 per cent rate in the bill, there may be some deception in that rate, because if you want to get the overall rate—

Mr. Scace: The top rate in the bill is 47 per cent and if you take 30 per cent of that it gets you up to the 61.1 per cent.

The Chairman: Yes. Are there any other questions you wish to ask on this subject before we change?

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, there is one idea which occurs to me. For the first time this morning we have had the introduction of the term "marginal rate". This is going to come up very often in our hearings. I wonder whether Mr. Smith would like to give a definition, for the record, of a "marginal rate", so that we will know clearly what we are talking about?

Mr. Smith: As you know, the act, in setting out the rates, starts with the level of income. For example, if you turn to the act, section 117(1)(a) starts off by saying that the tax is 17 per cent of the amount taxable if the amount taxable does not exceed $500. Then in (b) it moves on and says that the tax is $85 plus 18 per cent of the amount by which the amount taxable exceeds $500 and does not exceed $1,000. The marginal rate at that level is the 18 per cent that applies between $500 and $1,000. If you step up to, say, someone earning in excess of $24,000, once he has hit $24,000 his marginal rate becomes the rate that applies on the next bracket, and that bracket is between $24,000 and $39,000 and the rate set there is 39 per cent plus 30 per cent provincial tax.

Senator Connolly: In other words, in the table the tax on $24,000 is specifically set out?

Mr. Scace: Right.

Senator Connolly: Then, when he gets over that, into the other bracket, the percentage of the other bracket is the marginal rate?

Mr. Scace: Yes.

Senator Connolly: That is what I wanted to see on the record.

Mr. Scace: If someone says he is at a marginal rate of, say, 50 per cent, that means he is earning between $24,000 and $39,000.

Senator Lang: Are the rules with respect to general averaging confined to income, or are there averaging provisions with respect to capital gains?

Mr. Smith: The forward averaging provisions apply to capital gains as well. Half of your taxable capital gains, half of your gross gains, which would otherwise be included in your income—that can be used to purchase an income averaging annuity.

The Chairman: Because that part of it is income.

Senator Lang: Is there some place in this bill that says that part is income?

Mr. Smith: I think that is a good place for Mr. Scace to start.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we move now into the area of capital gains. Mr. Scace is going to develop that subject. It is a subject that will take some time and it is important, so we should make sure we understand it as we go along.

First, there will be a brief recess, ten minutes.

(A short recess)

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we shall now consider the second heading, which is capital gains. Mr. Arthur Scace will take us through that. It will be fairly lengthy. It is the keystone of the bill and I think it is important that we should get as good a grasp of it as we can.

Senator Beaubien: Do you expect to sit this afternoon?

The Chairman: Yes. In checking with some of the senators during the break, I reached the opinion that we should adjourn at 12.30 and come back at 2.15. I thought we might go through until 5 o'clock in the afternoon. I now call upon Mr. Scace.

Mr. Scace: Capital gains is reasonably complex. I would like to start out by giving a very brief summary of the main aspects of the legislation and we will then go into the details.

Senators, you are probably familiar with most of the main aspects. The basic proposition is that one-half of all capital gains will be included in income and taxed at normal personal or corporate rates depending upon whether they are received by an individual or by a corporation. Conversely one-half of any capital loss will become deductible and the basic rule is that it is deductible against one-half of capital gains.

The half inclusion of a capital gain is called the taxable capital gain, and the deductible portion of a capital loss is called the allowable capital loss. We will be using those words throughout.

In addition to being able to deduct an allowable capital loss against taxable capital gains during a year, an individual, and only an individual, can deduct $1,000 of allowable capital losses against his other income in the year.

In addition to this, there will be a one-year carry-back and an unlimited carry-forward of allowable capital losses against taxable capital gains; and in the case of an individual you also get the $1,000 deduction against other income.

Generally, capital gains will become taxable and losses deductible upon the sale of an asset or the disposition of an asset—we will talk about that a little later; it is a very lengthy definition—upon emigration from Canada, ceasing to be a resident of Canada, and upon the making of a gift or at death. Those are the principal ways that gains and losses are realized.

In certain instances there is a tax-free roll-over or exemption from capital gains tax. The main one, I suggest, is the exemption on gift and bequests between spouses, provided that you qualify within the rules.

There are also certain other exemptions, in particular amalgamations, the incorporation of a company, the transfer of assets to a partnership, or partnership assets to a company, and so on. We will touch on these later on.

There is an exemption for principal residence. This has been given quite a bit of press coverage. The exemption is for the principal residence plus up to one acre of subjacent and adjacent land.

Personal property will not be taxed unless the sale price of the property exceeds $1,000.

Another rule is that assets which would have been taxable in full under the old act will continue to be taxable in full under the new act and will not be entitled to capital gains treatment. One senator was mentioning this at the break. The most common instance would probably be land. In most cases now, if you dispose of land, unless there has been a very lengthy period of retention or it has been an income-producing property, most people seem to get taxed on the gain. If you are taxed under the present act, you will continue to be taxed under the new act at full rates, and you will not be entitled to capital gains treatment.

Finally—and we will deal with this at some length—there are special rules for determining the cost of an asset both before and after valuation day, specifically to get us into the new system and over the transition.

Very briefly, that is the summary of the main elements of the bill. We would now like to show you how these come out in practice, explain what the detailed legislation says, and perhaps draw your attention to certain anomalies or short-falls in the bill which we hope will be corrected. The Department of Finance is aware of many of these short-falls and we suspect that they will be dealt with in the amending legislation. However, we will touch on this.

The starting point for capital gains, and for calculating all income under the act, is section 3. Perhaps we could go through section 3. The income of a taxpayer for the taxation year is the income determined by the following rules:

Subparagraph (a) says that you calculate the amount of your income from employment, business and property, other than a taxable capital gain. Essentially that is the rule that we have now.

You do not get to capital gains until you reach paragraph (b), which is reasonably complicated. It says that you determine the amount, if any, of the aggregate of taxable capital gains—that is one-half of the gain—for the year from dispositions of property other than listed personal property—that gets special treatment—plus the taxable net gain from dispositions of listed personal property.

There you bring in taxable capital gains plus the taxable net gain from listed personal property.

Section (b) also says that you take your capital gains plus the taxable net gain and subtract the allowable capital losses.

Subparagraph (c) then permits you to make certain deductions. Subparagraph (d) goes on to permit various losses from an office, employment, business or property.

We then pick up capital gains again in subparagraph (e). Subparagraph (e) basically gives you the deduction, in the case of an individual, of $1,000 against other income.

It says that you determine the amount if any by which the remainder calculated to that point exceeds the lesser of either the difference between allowable capital losses and capital gains where you are in a loss position, or $1,000 if you are an individual, and that is your income.

To show you how this works out, we have put this diagram on the board.

Coming down this column here—E.I. means employment income. This means taxable capital gains and allowable capital losses. 3(b) is the net amount, that is, the amount by which taxable capital gains exceeds allowable capital losses.

3(e) is the additional deduction equal to the lesser of either your loss position on capital transactions or $1,000.

So we come to No. 1. Let us take a man who has employment income of $10,000, taxable capital gains of $5,000, and allowable capital losses of $2,000. Under 3(b) you determine the net amount of your gain, which is $5,000 minus $2,000. So the inclusion under subparagraph (b) is $3,000.

You then go down to (e), which says that you can deduct the lesser of the amount by which your losses exceed your gains, which is zero, or $1,000. So you get a nil deduction under 3(e) because you are in a positive position. So you end up with income of $13,000.

Coming down here, it is slightly different. The taxable capital gains are $2,000, the allowable capital losses are $5,000. Therefore under subparagraph (b) you do not have a positive amount. Therefore there is nothing included. Your losses exceed your gains.

You come down to subparagraph (e) which says the lesser of losses, which would be the net losses, which would be $3,000 or $1,000. So you get your $1,000, or an income of $9,000.

Senator Beaubien: To go back to No. 1, is half your capital gain taxable on this?

Mr. Scace: That is right. By definition the taxable capital gain is half the amount of the gain. We would have had a capital gain of $10,000; and similarly on losses—the losses would have been $4,000.

Senator Aird: Would you go to column 2 again and describe the application of 3(e) as related to the negative factor of a $3,000 loss?

Mr. Scace: We have a situation here where allowable capital losses have exceeded our taxable capital gains by $3,000. The basic rule is that allowable capital losses can be deducted against taxable capital gains, so that gives us a net amount of $3,000. We have really taken $2,000 off there. The second rule is that where you are in that sort of negative capital position, $1,000 in any year of allowable capital losses can be applied against other income. That is what 3(e) says. You can deduct the lesser of either your loss position of $3,000, which was not applied against taxable gains, or $1,000. So it is the lesser of the $3,000 or the $1,000. We take the $1,000 and we end up with $9,000.

Senator Carter: What about the other $2,000? Do you deduct that in subsequent years?

Mr. Scace: We will come to that a little later. We will complicate it in order to show you how it works. You have a net of $3,000 on losses. You take $1,000 off. You now have $2,000 still that has not been deducted. We will show you how that gets deducted in future years. That is running ahead a little bit at this moment, however.

Now, columns (3) and (4) do not add a great deal. Here you can see $4,000 taxable capital gains; $5,000 of losses; you are in a net $1,000 loss position. There is no inclusion under 3(b) because of that. Here it is the lesser of your loss position of one or $1,000, so you end up with $9,000.

The Chairman: Mr. Scace, I think we had better have that chart to which you are referring included as part of the record. It would simplify following what you have been saying.

Mr. Scace: Yes, and we could simply refer to these columns (1), (2), (3) and (4).

(The table follows)

	(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)
E.I.	$10,000	$10,000	$10,000	$10,000
T.C.G.	5,000	2,000	4,000	4,500
A.C.L.	2,000	5,000	5,000	5,000
3 (b)	3,000	nil	nil	nil
3 (e)	nil	1,000	1,000	500
I.	$13,000	$ 9,000	$ 9,000	$ 9,500

Mr. Scace: Now, in column (4), just as a slight wrinkle on what we have said, here you have taxable capital gains worth $4,500. You have an allowable capital loss of $5,000. The net loss position would be $500, and there would be no inclusion because of the loss. How much do you deduct? It is the lesser of your net loss position of $500 or $1,000 and you get your $500 deduction and you come out with $9,500.

So in case (4) and in case (3) you have used up your net loss position all in the same year.

Very briefly and basically that is all section 3 says. It is relatively simple. There is one problem from a technical point of view which has been brought to the attention of the Department. I do not know whether they are going to do anything about it, but some of the language in section 3 is a bit vague and could do with some clarification. For example, section 3 uses the words "determine the amount by which the remainder, determined under" previous paragraphs exceeds this and that. I think it is reasonably clear what they are intending, namely, that you add various things and then you deduct various things. But the use of the language is vague. "Determine the amount by which the remainder" and so on does not make it entirely clear. It seems to some of us that it might be open to some misinterpretation.

The Chairman: The same word is being used in different contexts and with different connotations, I agree. For example, the word "determine" is being tossed around in different contexts and with different meanings. It would appear that there would be an editing job done on the language.

Mr. Scace: It is not serious, but some clarification might be helpful.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Scace: Leaving section 3, we go on to subdivision (c), which starts with section 38 and then goes on to section 55. Subject to a few exceptions, most of the law on capital gains is found in sections 38 to 55. Now, to determine what a capital gain or a capital loss is for the purpose of the act, you start with section 39. If I may paraphrase it, section 39 says that a capital gain is something that would not have been taxed either under the old act. The same applies to capital losses. So the net result is that a capital gain is something that was entitled to a capital gains treatment—that is, no tax under the old act. Again the same applies to a capital loss.

As one senator remarked, this has the result that all of the old law and the old distinctions, very imprecise as they were, between what was capital and what was income still stay with us and we will be litigating them for the next ten years, or until we get tax reform again. The only difference is that rather than fighting about no tax versus full tax we are now talking about half tax versus full tax. So the differential has been reduced.

Another aspect which was raised very briefly this morning is the possibility that certain things may be exempt.

Senator Connolly: Do you mind my interrupting, Mr. Scace? On the last point, have you any suggestion to make which would clarify the position that you criticize? I take it that the burden of the criticism—and it seems to me justified—is that it brings into the new law the whole of the old law on what was a capital gain and what was income.

Mr. Scace: I am not sure that I levelled that as a criticism, Senator Connolly. As a lawyer I think I am probably quite happy about it.

Senator Lang: Senator Connolly should be, too.

Mr. Scace: The cure for it seems to be unpalatable, however. That is to say, that any gain, from whatever source, should be considered income and fully taxed is not too palatable. As soon as you want to give some type of income—and here it is capital gains—preferential treatment, you have to distinguish, and this is probably as good a way as any. If you are complaining, you may be complaining of the imprecision of the old jurisprudence, but I have no cure apart from that.

Senator Cook: The practical effect of this is that in the future we will all be pleading capital gains.

The Chairman: Yes, in other words, you would try to identify whatever you have as a capital gain.

Senator Cook: Otherwise you pay the full tax. In the future we will be pleading capital gains whereas at the moment we are saying we do not want to plead capital gains.

The Chairman: You still measure the capital gain or not under whatever the jurisprudence is now.

Senator Connolly: All the old decisions are still going to be brought to bear.

Senator Beaubien: We just cannot get the lawyers out of business.

The Chairman: We need to do a little, you know.

Mr. Scace: Well, there is the possibility here that the national revenue may not be quite as severe as they were, in that previously they had to assess or they were not going to get any tax, whereas now they may say that if you accept the capital gains treatment they will not push you on and try to get the full inclusion. Similarly, the courts, to the extent that they do not have to follow precedent, may back away from some of the harsher decisions of previous years.

In order to have a capital gain, apart from what we have just talked about, you must have a disposition. It seems to us that there are certain types of receipts which are realized without a disposition. Earlier this morning I mentioned gambling gains. Perhaps Senator Molson's idea of the Nobel Prizes or the Royal Bank awards and things of that sort would come in here.

The Chairman: And grants.

Senator Beaubien: When you say "disposition", do you mean a sale?

Mr. Scace: the word "disposition" is defined at great length. It certainly includes sales, but it includes a great many other things as well. We will come to that later.

Senator Beaubien: So long as you get rid of it somehow. That is the point.

Mr. Scace: So long as you get rid of it somehow, that is right.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Scace: That is what a capital gain is. You then go to section 38 which defines the taxable capital gain as being one-half of the amount and the allowable capital loss as being one-half of any loss.

In addition there are certain items of property which are excluded from the capital gains provisions. There are three of these. The first one is eligible capital property. We will be talking about that later today or tomorrow. Basically, eligible capital property is goodwill or other nothings. I think you are all aware that there was a class of expenses which were not currently deductible and were not entitled to capital cost allowance treatment and they became known as nothings. They are now called eligible capital property and get special treatment.

The second exclusion from capital gains are amounts receivable for resource properties, and the third one is life insurance policies. Capital gains tax will not apply to life insurance policies.

In the case of a capital loss, those three exclusions are equally applicable, and in addition you cannot get a capital loss from the sale of depreciable property. That is explicable because you already have in the act and will have in the bill provisions whereby if you sell depreciable property for less than your undepreciated capital cost you will get a terminal loss and therefore there is no need for capital loss treatment of depreciable property.

The Chairman: Terminal loss means that the sale would have to exhaust that class in order that you might have a terminal loss.

Mr. Scace: That is right. Let us take one asset—the senator is being more sophisticated than I am in talking about classes—but if you just take one item or if you purchase a depreciable asset for $100, then you are entitled on a depreciable asset to take capital cost allowance on it, at a specific rate. Let us say it was a building, then you would be entitled to 5 per cent per year on a diminishing balance basis. So, after a number of years you could get down to where you had taken $50 in capital cost allowance and at that point in time the remaining balance of $50 which is called undepreciated capital cost—the remaining amount from which you can take capital cost—or is the UCC if we can use a short form.

If you then sell that asset for less than the undepreciated capital cost, you are entitled to what is called a terminal loss. Let us say you sold it for $20, you would have a terminal loss of $30, the rationale being that the depreciation rates or the capital cost allowance rates were not sufficiently generous to allow for the depreciation of the asset and therefore you would get a write-off when you actually sell it.

Senator Connolly: In that case when you sell it for $20 you have taken a $30 loss.

Mr. Scace: Yes.

The Chairman: Which you deduct.

Senator Connolly: Then that $30 is an ACL, is it?

Mr. Scace: No; as I say under capital cost treatment it is not an allowable capital cost because you have specific provisions dealing with losses on depreciable property called terminal losses where you sell for less than the undepreciated capital cost.

The Chairman: It is deducted from what might otherwise be income.

Mr. Scace: Yes.

Senator Connolly: That is right. You get credit for it.

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Senator Connolly: Do you mind if I use an example here. Let us suppose for the sake of argument that you buy a piece of equipment such as a computer where the time over which you depreciate it is 15 years and, in fact, it becomes obsolete in 5 years. Now let us say that following your example you have written it down to the $50 level from $100. Then it is sold for scrap. I take it then that the owner of that equipment who had to sell it for scrap does not complain about the fact that the depreciable life of that equipment was too short. He simply gets the benefit at the end in the form of a terminal loss.

The Chairman: The terminal loss provision scales up his write-off.

Mr. Scace: This works very fairly, and there is no complaint. The exemption from capital losses for depreciable property is quite legitimate and quite fair because of this rationale.

Senator Lang: This is the same as the law is now.

Mr. Scace: That is right. The only problem is that the terminal loss provisions are really found in the existing regulations and as I think you are very much aware we have not seen the regulations under the new bill, so we can only assume that they will be the same in this particular area. All indications are to that effect.

Now, in computing the gain, there is really no problem here. The computation of the gain is found in section 40 (1) of the bill, and basically what you do to calculate it is to take the proceeds of the disposition—that is a defined term—and in this case we can say you take your sale price and subtract from that your adjusted cost base plus your sales expenses.

Let me give you an example. If I have an asset which costs me $50 and I sell it for $100. Under the new bill you can say the $50 is my cost. However, we will complicate it in a few minutes. They refer to the adjusted cost base which is a defined term and certain amounts must be added to and subtracted from your original cost to come up with the adjusted cost base. So, here is your sale price minus your adjusted cost base minus the expenses of sale, and let us say that those expenses amount to $5. This would give you a net capital gain of $45. To calculate your capital loss, you just reverse that procedure. If we take it here where you come up with a gain of $45, of course the taxable capital gain is only one-half of that.

Senator Lang: So we do not need recapture any more.

Mr. Scace: Yes, we will need recapture and we will still have it.

The Chairman: You can have recapture and capital gain.

Mr. Scace: We are going to have recapture.

Senator Lang: One on top of the other?

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Senator Molson: We are going to have everything.

The Chairman: From soup to nuts.

Mr. Scace: Now, moving along, here you have an asset which you purchased for $100 as original cost, and you depreciate it by $50 of capital cost allowance over the years, and you then have an undepreciated capital cost of $50.

You then go to the reverse of Senator Connolly's example in that we have an asset which has appreciated. In fact, you would wonder why it would be depreciable property. In any event you sell it for $160 and in that case the difference between $50 and $100 will be recaptured and will be includable in income in full. The difference between $100 and $160 is $60 which will be a capital gain, but it will be entitled to preferential treatment and only half of it will be included in income so you will pay on $50 plus $30 which is $80.

Senator Connolly: It is very simple when you have an explanation, but try to read that in the act.

The Chairman: It may now be more intelligible when you read the act.

Mr. Scace: I think that is all we can hope to do. You have to study these provisions on your own, but if someone gives you an indication before you start of what they are trying to say it makes it a little easier.

The Chairman: You can only tell the judge also, but it helps.

Senator Lang: Are we certain that this act does exclude the difference between $50 and $100 from capital gains tax?

Mr. Scace: I am satisfied of that. It excludes it from capital gains tax because capital gain is measured as the difference between selling price or proceeds of disposition and adjusted cost base.

Senator Lang: So we are back at Section 3?

Mr. Scace: Yes. To get the doubling up which I think you have in mind the definition would have to say undepreciated capital cost.

Senator Carter: Is the present law different from that?

Mr. Scace: The present law is exactly the same for the $50.

Senator Carter: But the capital gains is contained in the new law.

Senator Flynn: There is no change in what would otherwise be considered as capital gains but is presently taxable. Is this based on practice rather than the principle of the present legislation?

Mr. Scace: There is nothing in the present legislation. Section 3 of the current act provides that tax is paid on income and, apart from certain specific items, it is not defined. We can only go to the cases in the jurisprudence, of which there are literally thousands.

Senator Flynn: Your conclusion is that the new text does not change this principle, even if it is implied in the present legislation?

Mr. Scace: If I understand your question correctly, yes.

Senator Flynn: I mean, it is not explicit that this kind of capital gain should be considered as income; the sale of houses is considered as having created an income, rather than a capital gain?

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Senator Flynn: And it goes on in the same way, which is why it will be taxed in its entirety and not subject to the 50 per cent deduction provided for the new capital gains taxed under the new legislation?

Senator Beaubien: There is a big difference between the present act and this, with depreciation allowance of $60 and a sale for $160, a full tax of $110 is paid today.

Senator Flynn: Not necessarily.

The Chairman: No, if you are in a business, all of it is income; if it is a capital gain transaction under our present law, then the capital gain part of it would not be taxable.

Senator Beaubien: If I own a building for which I paid $100,000 and depreciate it over the years by $50,000 and sell it for $160,000, which is the example there—

The Chairman: The recapture is only the depreciation which comes into the income.

Mr. Scace: You bring $50 in; the $60 would be a capital gain which is not taxable. The rationale is the same now, except now half of the $60 becomes taxable.

Senator Beaubien: I see; I was wrong.

Senator Flynn: In other words, they do not want you to gain by having the new capital gains tax.

Mr. Scace: You will be worse off because of the capital gains tax system; there is no question about that.

Senator Walker: In other words, the actual capital gain is taxed at 50 per cent but the recaptured depreciation is taxed at 100 per cent.

Mr. Scace: That is right. There are a great many special rules in section 40. I do not intend to go through each and every one in detail. I would like to draw your attention to one or two of them, however. The first is that where the taxpayer is a corporation he cannot claim a capital loss, or an allowable capital loss, where the property is disposed of by the corporation to either a parent company, a subsidiary company or a sister corporation, if there is no loss on such a transfer.

Another rule is that no loss or gain results from the disposition of a chance to win a prize or a right to receive an amount as a prize in connection with a lottery. You might note that there is no definition of a lottery in the bill; I am not sure what a lottery is, to be honest about it. It might be helpful if such a definition were given.

The Chairman: Except that defining very often limits. If there the word "lottery" was undefined it would take on whatever the custom of the trade has been, and might have a broader meaning than would be written in by definition. We must think of that.

Senator Molson: I note the term "lottery scheme" is used, which sounds rather more sinister than just a lottery.

The Chairman: The word lottery would be broadened by stating any scheme which approximates a lottery.

Under paragraph (e) where the taxpayer is a corporation and cannot create a capital loss, how does that relate to the fair market value? If a corporation sold to another corporation that it controlled at the fair market value at the time of the sale and the fair market value was less than the cost?

Mr. Scace: So that even by doing it at fair market value there was a real loss?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Scace: I think Section 40(2)(e) prevents the deduction of that loss.

The Chairman: That is right; certainly under the law as it is at the present time it was always safe to proceed on the basis of the fair market value.

Mr. Scace: That is right and we will come into this later, senator. However, one of the problems as we see it under the new bill is that in non-arm's length transactions the scope permitted for transferring assets, which may have very valid and legitimate business reasons, is very much diminished because they have to pass at fair market value. There are some exclusions, but they are much curtailed under the new act, so that will be a problem.

Senator Lang: Does "controlled" have the same definition as under the old act?

Mr. Scace: Yes sir; 50 per cent, plus one.

Another concept contained in Section 40(2)(g) is that of a superficial loss. It provides that there will be no deduction. That type of loss is defined in Section 54(i) as the loss from a disposition of a property in any case where the same or identical property—that "same or identical property" becomes "substituted property"—was acquired during the period beginning 30 days before the disposition and ending 30 days after the disposition by the taxpayer, his spouse or a corporation controlled by the taxpayer and at the end of the period the substituted property was still owned.

The Chairman: Does this situation not prevail in the United States, where tax losses are created at the end of December by sales and the property is repurchased in January?

Mr. Scace: That is correct. To take a very simple example, suppose I own 10 shares of ABC Company and my purchase price was $100, and the market has declined to $50. On the other hand, I have another asset which behaves in completely the reverse way. I have a purchase price again of $100 but a current value of $150. For good business reasons I sell this asset and make a $50 capital gain and a $25 taxable capital gain—over here I am in a loss position. I do not want to pay tax on the $25 gain, and I do not really want to get rid of that stock—I want to keep it in the family—so what I can do is transfer this asset to my wife at $50 and that would show as a $50 capital loss and an allowable capital loss of $25.

The Chairman: Do you not mean an allowable taxable gain?

Mr. Scace: No, I have a loss on this side which, apart from the superficial loss rules, would be an offset and I would not pay any tax on that and this asset is still in the family.

The Chairman: That is an allowable taxable gain?

Mr. Scace: No, I had a loss on this side.

Senator Beaubien: But you would not get it back.

Mr. Scace: That is a wise observation. It is generally true of my wife.

Senator Beaubien: It would be a loss all right.

The Chairman: That is a personal loss.

Senator Connolly: So you neutralize the tax?

Mr. Scace: That is what you would be intending to do, but you cannot get a deduction for a superficial loss and, by the definition, that would include a sale to your wife. You do not get that $25 allowable capital loss. You are stuck with the $25 capital gain.

Senator Connolly: Even if you do not repurchase from your wife you do not get it?

Mr. Scace: Not if she owns it at the end of the period. That is the rationale. That is not too serious in most cases because what happens is that the wife has paid $50 for it, and her adjusted cost base is increased by the amount of the loss so that, in effect, her cost base will be the $50 that she paid to her husband plus the amount of the loss which gets her back up to the $100. If she then sells it later on—a true disposition and not within the family, so to speak—for a loss she will get that loss.

Senator Walker: There is no point in doing it, then, is there?

Mr. Scace: No, there is no point with this definition. All countries imposing a capital gains tax have this type of provision. I have not done a thorough study on it, but the provision that we have in the bill is probably less severe than most other taxing statutes. For instance, you would seem to be able to avoid it possibly by selling to a child, or to a company owned by your wife.

Senator Beaubien: What would be the situation if you just sold it on the open market and bought it back on January 1?

Mr. Scace: That would be a problem too because you have this 60-day period—a 30-day period on either side. For example, if we take the day you sell it you cannot re-acquire it within a 30-day period. You are just rolling it over and they will not allow it.

Senator Beaubien: You would have to wait 31 days.

Mr. Scace: Yes, that is right, and that puts you at risk in the market.

Senator Beaubien: It is good for the broker.

Mr. Scace: These superficial loss rules will not apply in the case of an emigrating resident when a departure tax is imposed. It will not apply in the case of death; it will not apply to certain trusts and also in one or two other more specific situations.

There is a problem with the definition of a superficial loss, and it might be possible for the Senate to draw the department's attention to it. They may be aware of it, but it seems to us that you could have a problem where the saving of taxes was not an issue at all. In other words, you are just acting as a normal prudent investor or businessman.

Let us take an example. Suppose a taxpayer owns 100 shares of a company stock which he purchased at a price of $50 each, and then subsequently the market price goes up to $100, say, by December 4, and he then purchases another 100 shares at $100. He now has 100 shares which he purchased at $50 each, and another 100 shares which he purchased at $100 each. Now, assume that during December the market collapses and the price declines from $100 to $20, and on December 26, which is within this 30-day period, he sells half of his shares, namely, 100 shares, at $20—

Senator Beaubien: What a trader!

Mr. Scace: I do not know about that. It seems to me on the second transaction he has incurred a real loss of some amount. If it is his first purchase it is a real loss of at least $30, and if it is the second purchase there would be a real loss of $80. The act provides for averaging the cost, but apart from that situation he would seem to be within the definition of a superficial loss, and he would get no deduction for his loss. As we said, it is conceivable that if you sell to your wife she gets to add the amount of the loss to her purchase price, but it appears that in this particular situation he gets no deduction for his superficial loss and he cannot add it to anything either. You could get a true inequity in that particular instance.

Senator Connolly: There would be no correction for that under the draft act we now have except perhaps at the discretion of the official who would say: "This is a legitimate transaction which you have undertaken." The first example you gave was a devised operation.

The Chairman: There is one way of curing it, I suppose. If you establish a real loss, and if it is not recognized as an allowable capital loss, the act should go on to provide that in those circumstances you would be entitled to add it to your cost.

Mr. Scace: That is the intention of the legislation, Senator Hayden, but it just does not work in this one funny instance.

The Chairman: I think we should have a look at it.

Senator Cook: Just before you go on, Mr. Scace. I would like to go back to one of your earlier examples. The wife got the depreciated stock at $50 and then you worked out what she would pay. What was that again? I missed that.

Mr. Scace: The amount of the superficial loss incurred by the husband. We assumed this is an asset that he sold to his wife at a loss and the amount of his loss was $50. He has sold the property at fair market value to his wife for $50 and she has an acquisition cost of $50, but the act goes on to provide that except in this one instance which I have just given you the amount of the superficial loss—that is, the $50—can be added to the transferee's or the acquirer's cost base.

The Chairman: To the wife's cost base.

Mr. Scace: Yes, the wife's cost base in this example, so that would bring her up to a cost base of $100 which is the same as what the husband had. In other words, there is no penalty. She is put right back in the same position as her husband was in, so it is eminently fair.

Another special rule is that you cannot get a deduction for a loss from the disposition of property where the proceeds are compensation for property unlawfully taken, or compensation for property destroyed, and any amounts payable under a policy of insurance in respect of loss or destruction. Probably the most important one here is the latter. There is no loss if the proceeds of insurance are not sufficient to cover the cost of the property. In other words, you cannot get a deduction for a casualty loss on insurance. I think the Government has just said that they are not going to be the insurers for private individuals, and on that basis it is a reasonable policy decision. On the other hand, you get some hardship where it is impossible to insure property for 100 per cent coverage.

The Chairman: Which section is that?

Senator Flynn: Suppose you make a gain out of the proceeds of the insurance? Suppose you have insurance for the increased value of the asset?

Mr. Scace: That can be a capital gain.

Senator Flynn: It could be a capital gain?

Mr. Scace: Yes, sir.

Senator Flynn: The other way it would not be a capital loss.

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Senator Flynn: That seems unreasonable.

Mr. Scace: You gentlemen are more experienced than I am about insurance. I am not wholly familiar with it. I think the problem usually is that you cannot get 100 per cent insurance.

Senator Flynn: Oh yes.

Mr. Scace: It is rarely that you get insurance in excess of 100 per cent.

Senator Flynn: Oh yes, you can certainly get insurance for more than your costs.

Senator Connolly: Yes.

Senator Walker: Not your loss.

Senator Flynn: If I pay $25,000 for a house and it is worth $50,000, I can get, if not $50,000, certainly $40,000 insurance on it.

Senator Lang: I think what Mr. Scace is referring to is the case where the insurer requires that the owner act as a co-insurer.

Senator Flynn: Let us forget about that. It seems unreasonable, if I get the proceeds of an insurance policy after a fire, that there is a capital gain, because there is a deemed realization I suppose in such a case, but if I lose by the same token, because I have not enough insurance or no insurance at all, I will not be able to deduct that as a loss.

Mr. Scace: Let me just make two comments. First, if you receive more than the cost of the property—in other words, it is a capital gain—you do get an exempt roll-over if the insurance is used to buy another property. I agree with you in wondering, looking at it from the taxpayer's point of view, why there should be a capital gain with no loss. I guess it has to be looked at from the government's point of view, because they would in effect, from the tax point of view, become the insurer on every property where people fail to take out adequate insurance. I think that is what they are trying to avoid.

Senator Lang: I would think that is wrong. I do not think they become an insurer. They should have to ride with the success and with the failures of each one of us.

Senator Flynn: If I use the proceeds of the insurance policy to build a new house, am I still taxed on the increased value?

Mr. Scace: I was going to come later to the question of re-investing it, but I can do it now if you wish. If it is re-invested, you will not get taxed at that time.

Senator Flynn: But the cost of my new house will be the cost of my old house.

Mr. Scace: That is right, which is also pretty fair, I think. I seem to be defending the bill here, and I am not sure I want to be in that position.

Finally on the specific rules, you cannot get a deduction where the loss arose from the disposition of personal use property. We will tell you what personal use property is in a moment.

Now we come to specific definitions. I start off with the definition of "Proceeds of disposition". That is to be found in section 54(h). It is a very extensive definition. This answers one of the previous questions. It starts off as including the sale price of property that has been sold, and goes on to enumerate a number of other specific items. I think the one interesting feature of this, from a taxpayer's point of view, is that it is not an exhaustive definition. You find this throughout the bill. It uses the words "'proceeds of disposition' of property includes", and there are eight enumerated proceeds. There could be others that they have not thought about, which could still constitute proceeds of disposition. It becomes somewhat difficult in practice at times to figure out just what else might be included, apart from the enumerated items. There are some reasonably good battles over what is or is not included.

Senator Walker: I did not realize you were coming to that. Would a judgment for damages, for instance, in a tort action still be free of capital gains tax, supposing a person got a judgment of $100,000? It has been free of tax to date.

Mr. Scace: That is right. That is a good example. I had not thought about it. If you go back to my original rationale, if it is a capital gain now it will be taxed as a capital gain under the new bill if there is a disposition. If you look at the definition of "disposition"—

Senator Walker: It is very difficult to determine.

Mr. Scace: I do not know.

Senator Walker: Usually a return in a damage action is supposed to be in any event, depending on the lawyer, equal return for equal loss.

Senator Flynn: Material loss. If a house is destroyed by fire, for instance, in the case you just mentioned, through the fault of a third party, I get judgment against the third party for the appraisal value of the house. In accordance with what you said before, this would be taxable. It could be a different story if I got an amount for bodily injuries, for instance. That would not be taxable.

Senator Walker: It has always been free so far.

Mr. Scace: I think that is a fascinating question; it is an item we have not thought about at all. I think you are right and it is an exempt item.

Senator Walker: Perhaps it would be a good idea to forget about it!

The Chairman: To be subject to tax you have to read on in the definition of "Proceeds of disposition".

Mr. Scace: That is right, of disposition.

Senator Walker: It is not covered here.

Mr. Scace: Not specifically. Again it says "includes", and I do not know what that means.

Senator Beaubien: It does not exclude.

Mr. Scace: It is not exhaustive.

Senator Lang: I do not think the ordinary meaning of the words "Proceeds of disposition" would include that sort of receipt.

The Chairman: You mean, to bring it in you would have to say the damages were the proceeds of the disposition, and that is the causing of the injury to you?

Senator Lang: Yes, it is going pretty far.

Mr. E. Russell Hopkins (Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel): What about 54(h)(iii), "compensation for property destroyed"?

Senator Lang: That is the one Senator Flynn mentioned.

Mr. Scace: Senator Flynn mentioned a personal injury action, in which you would be the property destroyed, if you want to say you are property.

Senator Connolly: Your arm or leg perhaps.

Senator Walker: That would be ridiculous. You are supposed to get a damage judgment according to the damage that you personally have suffered. When you are compensated for injuries to yourself, to have to take from yourself and pay a capital gains tax on only having yourself restored to normal does not seem right, does it?

Mr. Scace: It does not seem right.

Senator Walker: Perhaps that is why it is not included. It would be unjust to include it.

Senator Flynn: Especially if any human is depreciated.

The Chairman: I think we have dealt with that now.

Mr. Scace: We have taken a look at the definition of "Proceeds of disposition". There is then a very extensive definition of a disposition. Again the word "includes" is used. The opening item says that:

any transaction or event entitling a taxpayer to proceeds of disposition is a disposition. They have you chasing your tail on that one. There are also a great many other things which in general would cover most commercial transactions.

There are a number of exclusions from the definition of a disposition, which are well set out in section 54(c). It does not include, for instance, the transfer of property as security for a loan. It does not include any transfer where there is no real change in the beneficial ownership. It does not include the issue of a bond, debenture by a corporation, or the issue of a share from the Treasury. All those things are excluded. But, generally, most others are caught.

While we are talking about dispositions, as defined, there are also certain deemed dispositions or deemed realizations. I referred to them very briefly in the summary.

The first one is what we call a departure tax. You find that in section 48 of the bill. Essentially, what that says is that a taxpayer, when he ceases to be a resident of Canada, is deemed to have disposed of his capital property at fair market value. In other words, the tax is imposed at that time. There is an exclusion for taxable capital gains, up to $2,500. That means you can have a total capital gain of $5,000. I will give you an example. If a man has assets worth $100,000 and the value had gone up to $200,000, and he is a resident of Canada, and decides to move to Bermuda or the Bahamas, when he gives up his Canadian residency there is a deemed realization fair market value. The difference between the $200,000 and the $100,000 would be brought into income. He can subtract $5,000 from that and gets a total capital gain of $95,000, and a taxable capital gain of $47,500.

There is also a provision, which we will talk about later on. He need not pay tax on certain assets which are called taxable Canadian property. These are specifically defined in the bill; they are more or less permanent assets in Canada. Non-residents are subject to tax on such assets. So, even though he goes to another country, he will still remain liable for Canadian capital gains tax on those assets.

Senator Walker: Supposing he decides to come back from the West Indies, as some people are hoping to do, how will he be taxed for capital gains tax? Supposing that most of the money is raised while he is in the West Indies?

Mr. Scace: When he comes in, when a person becomes a resident, there is a deemed acquisition at fair market value . . .

Senator Walker: As of that date?

Senator Burchill: To qualify, would a man have to renounce his Canadian citizenship?

Mr. Scace: No. Residency is not dependent on citizenship.

The Chairman: It is residence.

Mr. Scace: You can retain your Canadian citizenship, sir.

Senator Aird: How would they police this?

Mr. Scace: That is a real problem. What we are really talking about in policing is something other than that which is attached to Canadian properties. If you have real estate in Canada or something like that, you can get a lien on the real estate. For instance, on portfolio investments, you can have millions of dollars in portfolio investments and accrued gains, and I do not think there is any way we can police it, if somebody wants to be fraudulent or dishonest.

Senator Flynn: They would have to apprehend you were leaving the country.

Mr. Scace: That is right.

The Chairman: I think there is one way, if the transfer offices were in Canada, on your investments, and they learned about them.

Senator Flynn: You could have arranged for the transfer before leaving.

Senator Walker: You could have it in certificates.

Mr. Scace: It would be very difficult.

The Chairman: It would be very difficult, yes.

Senator Lang: It would be a question of giving up the residency.

The Chairman: You could mail the letter in Toronto, Montreal or Ottawa, and it might take that long to reach its destination.

Mr. Scace: I think this assumes that somebody wants to be honest. If anybody wants to go to the length of committing fraud, there is very little the government can do. For instance, as a resident, you could sell shares and realize a capital gain of a million dollars, and you do not have to report that until the following year. You then go out. If you want to be dishonest about it, you put the money in your pocket and leave.

Senator Flynn: There is a penalty of imprisonment for that?

Mr. Scace: There is a penalty of imprisonment, if you are in Canada.

Senator Flynn: I was thinking of when you would come back for a short visit. Can they arrest you then?

Mr. Scace: If you are going to do this kind of thing, I strongly suggest you do not come back.

Senator Walker: But you could not be extradited for that?

Mr. Scace: Other jurisdictions—and this is true of our own law—will not enforce the revenue statutes of another country. So really, under the current or existing law, you can do that with impunity.

Senator Lang: This concept must involve the imposition of some duty on a resident. For instance, if I were buying a house, would I have to find out that the person from whom I am buying it is still a resident of Canada, or something like that?

Mr. Scace: Yes, sir. This is a very difficult problem. I do not know whether we plan to touch on this. I think it is serious, but I do not know whether you want to deal with it now or later. For me, this would be quite a convenient point at which to stop.

The Chairman: If we postpone that question until we resume, this would be a good point at which to break. We will come back at 2.15 p.m., full of vim and vigour.

The committee adjourned.

Upon resuming at 2.15 p.m.

The Chairman: The hearing is resumed.

Mr. Scace: Before the adjournment we were talking about the departure tax under section 48. Two questions were raised, one before we adjourned, and then another one just before we recommenced.

I will deal with the latter one first. If I can draw your attention to section 48(2), the question was whether there was any provision for employees of multinational companies who get moved in and out of the country? A person may be a resident in Canada for awhile and may be transferred to another country for a short period of years and then return to Canada. I gather some of the briefs on the White Paper were concerned about that.

Section 48(2) is designed to cover that situation. It provides that if a taxpayer who is an individual so elects in a prescribed manner and within a prescribed time, and if he furnishes the minister with security of some sort or a charge on property, or somebody guarantees the potential tax, the departure tax will not apply to him. It goes on to say that he is really deemed to be a resident throughout his period of absence. I think that aspect of it is covered.

Senator Haig: If a bank, a trust company or a multinational company sends a man away for a period of three to five years, they would arrange his tax position with the department.

The Chairman: He is the one who has to make the election under this section.

Senator Beaubien: What happens if he changes his mind?

The Chairman: Well, the security is there for that purpose. He has to furnish the security.

Mr. Scace: There is a provision that says that you can do it by way of guarantee from another person. The company could guarantee it. Mr. Smith whispered in my ear, "What happens if the employee leaves the company when he is a non-resident? How does the company go after him?" You would probably have a law suit.

Senator Beaubien: The company would put up the guarantee.

The Chairman: They would have a problem in trying to pursue him in another jurisdiction.

Mr. Scace: The other question was on non-residence and capital gains tax. The taxing or the charging section is section 2(3). It says that a non-resident person who has disposed of taxable Canadian property is liable for capital gains tax.

Taxable Canadian properties are then defined in section 115(1)(b). There is a long list. It includes real property situated in Canada, or an interest therein. It refers to any other capital property used in carrying on a business in Canada, one share of capital stock in a private corporation and more than a 25 per cent interest in any other kind of company.

There are certain other things too. The way this is to be enforced creates a problem. If you assume that you have a non-resident vendor who is selling taxable Canadian property, section 116 is designed to enforce that.

If I can paraphrase almost two pages of the bill, as we understand them, firstly it is envisaged that a non-resident vendor intending to sell taxable Canadian property, say real estate, will write to the department giving a description of the property, the intended proceeds, the date of disposition, the cost of the property, and the amount of the gain, and put up either the tax or some security for the tax. If he does that, the department will issue a piece of paper called a "certificate limit." Any time a certificate limit has been issued the parties may go ahead and close their deal and there will be no problem.

Senator Haig: That applies to personal plus corporation?

Mr. Scace: That is right, it would.

Senator Sullivan: And real estate?

Mr. Scace: It would certainly apply to real estate and to shares of private corporations. If he does not tell about the intended sale, a subsequent provision says that once a sale has taken place within 10 days, he must give them some kind of information and pay the tax.

We then come down to the last subsection which is section 116(5). Essentially it says that where a certificate limit has not been issued the Canadian purchaser resident is liable for 15 per cent of the amount of the proceeds in excess of the certificate limit.

Senator Haig: Where does he get the certificate limit?

Mr. Scace: For example, say a non-resident has a property which cost him $100 and he proposes to sell it to a Canadian purchaser for $200. He would write into the department and they would issue him a certificate limit with respect to the $100 gain. If as the transaction eventually went through the sale price turned out to be $250 instead of $200 as in our example, there would be a gain of $150 with $100 cost, and section 116(5) says that the Canadian purchaser is liable for 15 per cent of the excess, which, in our example, is $50.

But as we read section 116(5) it seems to say that if the non-resident does not obtain the certificate limit, in other words, if he does not come forward and nothing is done, then the Canadian purchaser could be liable to pay tax equal to 15 per cent of the total purchase price, namely, $250 as in our example.

Senator Connolly: You mean just the excess?

Mr. Scace: I think it is possible to read it—

Senator Beaubien: You can read it either way.

Mr. Scace: You can read it that if no certificate limit is obtained, then section 116(5) does not apply. However, we have talked about this matter on many occasions with a number of people, and a good many of them agree with the interpretation I am giving you.

Senator Connolly: What do you think the intention is? Is the intention merely to tax the $150 as in the example?

Mr. Scace: When they set up this section 116(5) I do not think they ever thought that it could apply to the whole purchase price. I think it is one of those inadvertent situations.

Senator Walker: That is a terrible penalty for an innocent person to pay.

Mr. Scace: Yes, it is. The real problem is, if you are acting for a Canadian purchaser of real estate or shares, how do you determine the residence of the vendor? You could take an affidavit or receive representations, warranties and covenants, but if the man is fraudulent those things are not worth the paper they are printed on. Alternatively, you could escrow the funds. I am not a real estate lawyer, but it seems to me that if you were to go to the registry office and say that you were going to close but were intending to withhold 15 per cent of the purchase price in case the vendor was a non-resident, then you just would not have a deal.

Senator Connolly: No, they would not give you the deed.

Mr. Scace: It would seem that you would almost have to go to the Department of National Revenue on almost every transaction, unless you are sure.

Senator Connolly: In other words, anybody closing a real estate transaction has an additional search with the Department of National Revenue before he can advise his client that he can close. The client on his part may very well be liable for 15 per cent of the whole purchase price under the interpretation we have here.

Senator Haig: Unless, of course, the vendor has asked for a certificate limit.

Mr. Scace: If you have an honest vendor, or one who is going to comply with the act and has either got a certificate or, on that second branch, has gone and paid the tax, then there is no problem. Supposedly, in most situations, that is what will happen. However, if you are looking at the bad situation, it could be very serious. Naturally, from the point of view of practice you obviously have to guard against the bad situations.

The Chairman: I think there would be another requisition on title, and that requisition would ask for evidence that the vendor is a resident of Canada.

Senator Flynn: You know, this may be pushing quite far into the province of civil rights. I realize this is ancillary, but this is getting mixed up into the problem of property rights.

Senator Connolly: That is right.

Senator Walker: This is really rough.

Senator Flynn: It is very serious.

Senator Connolly: It is just as much a factor as a sheriff's seizure. When you get a sheriff's certificate to the effect that a man has no executions against him you have to have one drawn from the registry.

The Chairman: What is it that you may accept as satisfying you, reasonably, that this man is a resident? What do you accept?

Mr. Scace: I think they could amend the section to make it clear so that it exempted a Canadian purchaser who exercised due care and diligence. It would then become a question of fact that he had. I expect representations, warranties, affidavits and whatever you want would suffice. If you have been careful about it, that should suffice.

Senator Connolly: Your success would depend very largely on where the onus lay. If the onus lay on the department to prove that the vendor was non-resident, that would be one thing, but if the onus were on the purchaser to prove that the vendor was a resident, then he might be up against a difficulty.

The Chairman: What you are interested in knowing, really, is whether the vendor is a resident. If he is a resident there are no penalties and no complications.

Senator Molson: Mr. Chairman, I find this very depressing. The number of transactions that can occur in any given period in this country will be reduced enormously. I am not sure whether any advantage will go to the public or to the government or to anybody as a result of this legislation. It just seems to me that everything we run into is so complex that the ordinary man with a camp in the country or something of that sort, who tries to sell it to somebody, will find it exceedingly difficult. By the time he finishes getting his certificate and getting in touch with the department, finding out this and finding out that, it will just have made his life extraordinarily difficult.

Senator Benidickson: He will probably just burn his camp for the insurance money.

Senator Molson: He might just do that.

Senator Walker: There would seem to be no relief at all from this. It is an enormous penalty.

The Chairman: The answer might be if he is able to satisfy himself.

Senator Walker: But he cannot satisfy himself.

The Chairman: On what Mr. Scace has suggested, he can.

Senator Walker: If you meet a vendor you do not necessarily know what his situation is. He may assure you that he is a resident. He may give you affidavits and you may get affidavits from his bank and he may still turn out to be a non-resident. If that happens you are it. It does not matter what steps you have taken.

The Chairman: That is right, and that is why I put the question earlier: what can you get that will satisfy this problem and upon which you can properly act.

Senator Walker: That is right. I thought that was a good question and that it should be incorporated.

The Chairman: I have made a note here and it will also be in the record of today's proceedings.

Senator Lang: Mr. Chairman, I assume that a non-resident who gets a certificate limit pays the tax in order to get that certificate limit.

The Chairman: Or he puts out a security for the tax.

Senator Lang: In other words, he has to put out this tax before his deal is closed.

The Chairman: No, he can put out the security. He does not have to pay.

Senator Beaubien: He gets the bank to guarantee that, if it is sold, he will pay it.

The Chairman: If the deal does not go through, then there is nothing.

Senator Beaubien: He pays the Receiver General of Canada, it says.

Senator Haig: The question I should like to raise is what is a resident or a non-resident? For example, what is the category of the chap who goes out to work for a multinational corporation for three or five years? Is he a permanent non-resident? And then if a real estate transaction goes through, what are you going to do with respect to him?

Senator Lang: If I may come back to my point, Mr. Chairman, as I see the mechanics of it, the non-resident would pay to the Receiver General of Canada the tax or the security for the tax. If the transaction thereafter does not close, that non-resident would have to go back to the department to get his money. In my experience it would be about one year later that he would get it.

Senator Haig: Two years.

Senator Flynn: You are an optimist.

Senator Beaubien: Is there any way we could put the onus on the department whereby the purchaser could go to the department and indicate that he is ready to buy and ask them to inform him whether the vendor is a resident or a non-resident.

Senator Flynn: This morning we were speaking about the difficulties of enforcing the payment of the tax on the Canadian who decides to live elsewhere. The Government has not provided any remedy for that situation. But in this case they have found some kind of remedy by saying that the purchaser will be liable. To me that is nonsensical. It is penalizing someone who has nothing to do with the problem of payment of the tax. If they have not been able to find a way to enforce another provision, that does not justify trying to enforce it by forcing someone who is not responsible. You cannot find a reasonable solution that way. It seems to me completely unethical.

The Chairman: But it is taking the easy course.

Senator Flynn: I agree that it is. Of course it is. Nevertheless, I think we should object strongly to that.

The Chairman: Non-residence here, in this case, includes just what it says—a non-resident. It does not include only a person who decides to depart from Canada. It covers a person who may at all times have been a non-resident.

Senator Lang: Is it not an underlying concept of withholding tax that the imposition of liability to withhold is placed on the person who has control over the money flow? I think of the employer or the company paying dividends. In this case you are imposing a liability on an entirely different class of person to withhold a tax.

Senator Beaubien: The fellow who pays the money out.

The Chairman: The theory behind it is to impose a liability on somebody who is within the jurisdiction.

Senator Lang: Yes, but it is a withholding tax, really.

Senator Flynn: Would it be constitutional to provide that in any case the purchaser would be entitled to withhold 15 per cent of the price for, say, three years in order to give time to the department to find out whether the vendor is a resident or not?

The Chairman: The answer to that question is that we can make any suggestions to remedy that situation that we think are feasible.

Senator Flynn: We could make it even if it is absurd to show the absurdity of the solution provided herein.

Senator Aird: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the witnesses on this specific point if there has been any discussion in the seminars or have they heard any suggestions that would relate to the situation of companies inserting themselves into the middle of such a transaction and you could have an indemnification coming forward? It seems to me that this is perhaps one of the ways that this might be cured. It might be costing a little more money and might be creating a whole new area of business but it is a way of protecting the purchaser.

The Chairman: You are speaking of something in the nature of a company that might guarantee title?

Senator Laird: That is right.

The Chairman: Then you might find a company that would guarantee residence.

Senator Flynn: But that is in favour of the Government. That is entirely a new concept.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Flynn: And I do not agree with it at all. I think the Government should take its own risk and settle its own problems, and not ask a purchaser for a guarantee to pay the tax of a third party who might commit fraud.

The Chairman: This arises where you have a capital gains tax and everybody who makes a capital gain, with certain exceptions, is subject to pay tax no matter where he may live.

Senator Flynn: I know, but let them run after him if they want to do it. It is their own business and should not be the problem of the purchaser.

Mr. Scace: There is an interesting twist to this, Mr. Chairman, and to put it into perspective, most of our tax treaties now exempt capital gains, so what we are talking about right at this moment would only apply to non-residents of most countries with whom we do not have treaties. Of course, that is not entirely true because I do not think the Japan-Canada Convention exempts capital gains. I suppose Mr. Benson is going to amend all of our treaties so that they will permit taxation of capital gains.

But to take a situation which you might have now—and I give you this more or less tongue in cheek—say you have a resident of the United States selling taxable Canadian property to a Canadian purchaser. Under the present treaty there is no capital gains tax on the US vendor but it is conceivable that you might be able to read section 116 as saying that there is an additional tax on the Canadian purchaser even though the vendor was not liable for tax. It seems to me that is possible.

Senator Walker: But there would be no object in that.

Mr. Scace: Well, I cannot see it happening, but technically it is possible.

The Chairman: Well, I think we have it ticked.

Mr. Scace: If we have the same amount of trouble with the other deemed realizations as we had with that one, we will be here for quite some time.

The next one is the deemed realization on gifts. Basically when you make a gift inter vivos there is a deemed realization at fair market value. Let me give you an example; if I own a property which I bought for $100 and it is now worth $200 and I give it to my son, there is a realization of $100 capital gain and a $50 taxable capital gain.

Senator Benidickson: Payable by you?

Senator Flynn: Or by your son if you are a non-resident.

Mr. Scace: This is section 69. Similarly there is a deemed realization on death. With the abolition of estate tax, the substitution for that is a deemed realization on death under section 70 (5). Now basically so far as that deemed realization is concerned, if you are dealing with non-depreciable capital property, the deemed realization is at fair market value. If you are dealing with depreciable capital property, the deemed realization is at what has come to be called the midway point. That is the undepreciated capital cost plus one-half of the difference between fair market value and undepreciated capital cost. Let me give you two quick examples.

If I have non-depreciable capital property and I have a cost of $100 and at my death it is worth $200, it is deemed to be realized at the fair market value of $200 and there will be a $100 capital gain and a $50 taxable capital gain. In the case of depreciable capital property, say I bought for $100 and I depreciated it down to $50 and on my death it is worth $200, the midway point rule says that the deemed proceeds are undepreciated capital cost, which is $50 here, plus one-half of the difference between fair market value at death which is $200 and the $50. That differential is $150, and one-half of that is $75. So the deemed realization price is $125. Now in this example, if we can just take it out, we have $100 plus $50 UCC and a deemed realization price of $125, we get a recapture of $50 plus a capital gain of $25 and half of that of course would be $12.50. It becomes a little more complicated where you have a number of different assets in a class, but essentially that is the rule.

Senator Benidickson: Is this under the present law?

Mr. Scace: No, sir, this is under the proposed bill.

The Chairman: You have two elements of taxation there.

Senator Flynn: Would the $50 be taxable in its entirety here?

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Senator Flynn: As if the law were not changed?

Mr. Scace: So then we have the situation that this $50 recapture is fully included in income while this $25 is a capital gain and therefore you only recognize one-half, so therefore it is half an income.

Senator Beaubien: Let us take the case of a man who died a few days after the value date, whenever that might be, then they would only recapture part of the captured depreciation. Would that not be the case?

Mr. Scace: We are going to get complicated here.

Senator Haig: What have we been doing all afternoon?

Mr. Scace: For example, take an item of non-depreciable capital property with a valuation day value of $100. Who knows when valuation day is? If it is December 31 and the owner died on January 1, it is unlikely that the fair market value would be much more than $100, so he has no problem.

Unfortunately, you get a different situation. Over here we have a cost of $100 over a undepreciated capital cost of $50; the asset has not gone up in value. In that case the midway point rule would say redeemed realization $50, plus the difference between fair market value and undepreciated capital cost, which is $100 minus $50, or $50. Half of that is $25, so your realization price would be $75, which would result in $25 of recapture.

The interesting feature of this is, if you look at section 20(6)(d) of the current act, on death there is no recapture of capital cost allowance. The depreciable property goes to the beneficiary, if passed by will, at fair market value. He acquires at the fair market value and there is no recapture to the testator.

Senator Benidickson: That is why I asked the question as to the difference between the two.

Mr. Scace: You can say we are going to change the rules for the future; that would be fine, but I have given what could be a concrete example, what you are getting is retroactive recapture that you would not have had if you died before the system came in. If you died on December 31 you have estate tax, but you have no recapture. However, if you died on January 1, assuming those are the relevant dates, you would have retroactive recapture.

Senator Benidickson: Plus the fact that you may have provincial taxes by that time.

Mr. Scace: We have them in Ontario now. For those people who receive tax advice, there are ways of avoiding this retroactive recapture, but it is still there.

Senator Beaubien: Everybody would just have cash and when they die it would not have gone up or down.

The Chairman: Have you any suggestions?

Mr. Scace: I can tell you how to avoid it.

The Chairman: I know how to avoid it; you just do not have any property. That is a simple way of avoiding it, but the idea of this complication is because they want to get at two taxes, bring in recapture at full marginal rates and bring in capital gain and the capital gains tax.

Senator Walker: That is a double tax.

The Chairman: There are two taxes; we had this this morning with some other items. Perhaps they should draw a line on a time basis and recapture to the extent that depreciation has been taken before the date of death should remain where it is now; that is, it is nowhere. If I am disposing of property after this law comes in they should only deal with whatever depreciation has been taken in that period and against whatever my income might be. That would be subject to recapture and could well enter into this calculation. They should draw a line, and not go back into what I have accumulated in the way of write-offs quite innocently and subsequently find the position where they are taxable, which they are not at

Senator Benidickson: That is to avoid this retroactivity?

The Chairman: Yes; at least, that is my feeling at the moment.

Senator Walker: And that goes back indefinitely.

Mr. Scace: Let me try to put it into perspective. It has reference only to depreciable property, and I can only guess that most of it will have come down in value. Therefore perhaps the example is a little unrealistic, in that if you have an undepreciated capital cost of $50, that may come pretty close to the fair market value, in which case there is no problem. Certainly to the extent you are in the position suggested by Senator Connolly this morning, where the asset may have gone up in value—and I guess there may be quite a few examples—you would encounter this retroactive recapture.

Senator Benidickson: Perhaps the property has gone down in real market value at the time of the death but, on the other hand, it may not have done so, because of the inevitable inflation that we have been experiencing over such a long period. A property that normally would have gone into disrepair, or become not as attractive as a new property, has a market value due only to inflation, so you are taxing inflation.

The Chairman: You are arguing two ways. If there is not much of this occurring then it is certainly scraping the bottom of the barrel to try to deal specifically with it; if there is much of this, then the question is whether it is fair and equitable to deal with it in this manner.

I think perhaps we would have to take the latter course in deciding if there is anything we can do to catch that situation, but it does appear to be something that we should have a good look at. We are accumulating a few already.

Senator Macnaughton: The thing to do is not die.

The Chairman: I do not suppose you can do as is done here, where a deemed realization is made; you cannot be deemed to be still alive.

Senator Walker: Do it ahead of time, and get it settled up.

Senator Carter: Do you have to furnish proof?

Mr. Scace: The other side of the deemed realizations for gifts and death is that the transferee, or the person acquiring, obtains a cost base equal to the realization price. With non-depreciable property, if the cost was $100 to the deceased, and the fair market value at death is $200, then that is the deemed realization price and that $200 becomes the cost base to the beneficiary.

Similarly with the midway point rule, it is the calculated proceeds. I might say, if you have a situation with depreciable capital property where the fair market value is less than undepreciated capital cost, then the rule is reversed. Fair market value is the base plus one-half of the difference between undepreciated capital cost and fair market value. However, that really does not cure the problem.

The Chairman: Is there an allowable capital loss for that circumstance?

Mr. Scace: You should get a terminal loss, sir, yes.

Going on to something that really gets extremely complex, and I do not know how extensively we can deal with it, we start off by saying that when you calculate a capital gain essentially it is the difference between your proceeds and your adjusted cost base. The adjusted cost base is a defined term, and it is found in section 54(a)(i) wherein it states:

where the property is depreciable property of the taxpayer, the capital cost to him of the property as of that time, and in any other case, the cost to the taxpayer of the property adjusted, as of that time, in accordance with section 53,—

So that with depreciable property there is no problem. With none depreciable property it is the cost as adjusted by section 53. If we just go on to the concluding words in the definition:

—except that in no case shall the adjusted cost base of any property at the time of its disposition by the taxpayer be less than nil;—

We will come back to those words in a minute. That is adjusted cost base, and the problems come with the adjustments to it, and you have to then turn to section 53. Section 53(1) contains a number of additions to the cost base. They go on for two and one-half pages with the subtractions. I only want to give you a few of the additions and subtractions, and I will try to do it briefly, if I can.

To understand the first one we have to go to section 40(3). Section 40(3) says that where you have a cost of property, and by section 53(2) if the subtractions from the cost take you below zero the amount that you go below zero is a gain. It might be better if I showed you that one on the board. Let us say you have a cost of property of $100. Section 53(2) states that you have to adjust that cost by subtracting $150 which results in a negative amount of $50, and that minus $50 is itself a capital gain.

The most likely way that this could result is where corporations have distributed dividends out of their 1971 surplus. As you probably know, the tax treatment of surplus in existence in a company at the time of implementation of the bill gets reasonably favourable tax treatment. It can be taken out at a minimal tax cost, but it comes out in the form of a non-taxable dividend, so that when the shareholder receives it he pays no tax on it, but he must reduce the cost base of his shares by the amount of the dividend. In other words, you could own shares in a company and receive $150 in non-taxable dividends out of the 1971 surplus, or the surplus in existence upon implementation day, which would reduce you to a negative and that will become a capital gain.

Senator Lang: I have to go home. I have to get a company out of existence pretty quickly.

Mr. Scace: The first addition to the cost base is the amount of that gain. It states in section 53(1)(a) that you add that negative as a plus to the cost base. I am not sure what you add the negative to. Do you add it to the minus $50 to come out at zero, or do you start at zero to come out at a plus $50 as your cost base?

In the definition of adjusted cost base it states that in no case can the adjusted cost base at the time of disposition be less than nil. On the other hand, at this point in time you really do not have a disposition, so I think the correct result is that you add the $50 to the minus $50 and you come out at zero.

Senator Benidickson: Certainly that should be marked as something we should inquire about when we get the minister or his representative here.

Senator Sullivan: The trouble is he will not know.

Senator Beaubien: And he may change his mind afterwards.

Mr. Scace: There are a number of other additions which you must make to the cost base. These are generally beneficial to the taxpayer. These are certain types of dividends, and certain capital contributions made to a company. Mr. Smith will be talking about two areas of the law—partnerships and international income—at some time. Very briefly, foreign accrual property income must be added to the cost base and similarly all partnership income must be added to the cost base, but you get a corresponding reduction when the income of the partnership is actually distributed.

Another aspect of this which we dealt with this morning is the superficial loss question. You will recall that when you get a superficial loss the transferee can add the amount of the superficial loss to the cost base, but I suggest we still have that gap that we mentioned this morning.

Still another aspect that becomes quite important, and I suspect you are going to get some briefs on it so you might want to take a serious look at it, arises from section 18(2). Section 18(2) disallows the deduction of interest of property taxes from other income with respect to vacant land.

To the extent that interest and property taxes on vacant land are disallowed they can be added to the cost base of the land, so you get a deferral of those taxes until you sell the property. On the other hand, a deferral of a deduction is a tax loss. You are paying taxes sooner rather than later and that is a disadvantage. I might say right here that where I think you are going to get a lot of queries in the briefs in relation to the exclusions under section 18(2).

That section does not apply apparently where land is included in the inventory of a business carried on by the taxpayer, or where it is otherwise used in or held in the course of carrying on a business, or held primarily for the purpose of gaining or producing income from the land. I can read those exclusions any number of times, and they do not become any clearer on subsequent readings. I have seen some correspondence with the department in which they come up with interpretations of the exclusions that I would not have made, and I think you are going to get a lot of discussion over the particular operation of section 18. In any event, for present purposes the only reason for mentioning it is that to the extent that the deduction is deferred you add it to the cost base of the property.

You then go on to section 53(2) deductions from the cost base, and I have already mentioned what is perhaps the main one, namely, dividends in the form of non-taxable dividends out of the 1971 corporate surplus.

Senator Benidickson: That means accumulated surplus up to 1971?

Mr. Scace: That is right, sir. It is technically defined, and we will get into it tomorrow. Currently under the existing act dividends between two Canadian companies are tax free. Inter-corporate dividends are tax free. However, if one Canadian company acquires the shares of another Canadian company the surplus on hand as of the end of the prior fiscal year is designated, and if a dividend is paid out of a designated surplus the inter-corporate exemption is lost. Essentially the law will be the same under the new bill. However, instead of losing the inter-corporate exemption, what you get is a penalty tax of 25 per cent of the amount of the dividend. As far as a deduction from the cost base is concerned, section 53(2) states that where a dividend is paid out of a designated surplus you must deduct from the cost base the amount of the dividend less the tax paid.

If there is a dividend out of designated surplus from company A going to company B in the amount of $100, there would be a $25 tax payable by company B, and $100 minus the tax—the dividend minus the tax—or $75, would be deducted from the tax base. There is a similar provision in the case of non-resident takeovers.

One very important provision, which I know was inadvertent on the part of the Department of Finance and which I think they will cure,—if they do not I hope somebody will—is section 80, which deals with an outstanding debt between two taxpayers being settled or extinguished, or in some way reduced without payment, or for a lesser amount than the principal amount. If there is a debt between A and B of $100, A being the father and B the son, and the father says, “I forgive that debt of $100”, section 80 provides that one of several things can happen. First, the amount of the forgiveness must be applied against certain losses, to reduce various types of losses that B might have. If that is not the case, if B does not have any losses, then the $100 must be used to reduce the cost base of certain of B's assets.

Senator Beaubien: And if he has none?

Mr. Scace: If he has none he is in good shape! Let us say he owns two shares of Bell Telephone that are worth $100.

Senator Haig: No, call it the ABC Company.

Mr. Scace: Suppose he owns two shares of ABC Company worth $100. It is conceivable that the forgiveness of that liability is a subtraction from the cost base and the ends up with a cost base of zero, so if he ever sells the shares for $100 there will be $100 capital gain.

Senator Molson: What has his debt got to do with his owning some shares in the ABC Company? What is the relationship? That is what puzzles me.

The Chairman: If you forgive a debt there are certain consequences.

Senator Molson: How does he pick out what it applies to? That is what I really mean. Just anything?

The Chairman: Whatever he has, in a certain order.

Mr. Scace: Talking about losses first, the section says:

to the extent that the excess exceeds the portion thereof required to be applied as provided in paragraph (a)—

Which is the application to reduce losses.

—to reduce in prescribed manner the capital cost to the taxpayer of any depreciable property and the adjusted cost base to him of any capital property.

It would appear that the minister could take any property of B's that he wanted, and reduce the cost basis.

Senator Beaubien: If B had a house and that was the only asset he had, would that affect the house, or is the house exempt anyway?

Mr. Scace: If it is a principal residence it is exempt, so it would not really matter.

Mr. Smith: What they are obviously thinking of is the debt that arose on the purchase of the shares from the father, but the section is drafted in a broader fashion than that.

Mr. Scace: The Department of Finance did not intend that it should cover the normal situation, the most common of which would be if you had an estate freeze from father to son, where he transferred assets over to the son at fair market value and took back a note, which has been a common estate planning device. The normal thing was to forgive the note over a period of years. However, if you forgive the note you will get this result. It is fairly easily avoided if people have tax advice, because if gift tax is in fact abolished, which may not be the case, the father can give his son $100 in cash, and then the son pays off the note and you are out of section 80. But if there is still gift tax there is still a penalty.

Senator Cook: Would it not be covered by saying “forgive a debt which was incurred in respect of”?

Mr. Scace: In certain transactions, yes, you could do it. Do not get me wrong here. The Department of Finance was not aware of it. It has been brought to their attention. I do not think they intended it should have this kind of application.

The Chairman: You are now talking about the Department of Finance in relation to section 80?

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Senator Walker: There is a lot they did not mean.

The Chairman: Well, this is what happens when you start rushing a job like this, and even taking a year is rushing it.

Senator Haig: Let us get down to the complicated sections!

The Chairman: We are coming to them.

Senator Walker: We have to get conditioned to them.

Mr. Scace: If you will give me one more moment, I will then get to the principal residence provisions, which will be a welcome relief.

Senator Haig: If a person lives in an apartment and has a summer cottage, or an estate, can he declare that summer cottage as his principal residence?

Senator Beaubien: He can declare anything. He has the choice.

Mr. Scace: I say no. I will answer that specifically when I go through the principal residence provisions. I think there is an easy answer to that, and I think it is no. Let me give you two slight complications and then I will get to the question of principal residences. Section 53(2)(k) provides for the deduction from the cost base of:

any grant, subsidy, or other assistance from a government, municipality or other public authority.

This is a fair provision. If you buy a property for $100 and you have a $50 governmental grant, your cost base will be the difference of $50. The only reason I draw it to your attention is that we have had a comparable provision in the act for a number of years in relation to depreciable property in the form of section 20(6)(h). That section has been carried forward into the present bill, but in addition to the things I have just read off it states that an amount paid under an appropriation act need not be deducted from the capital cost of depreciable property. We can only question why there is a divergence between the treatment of non-depreciable capital property and depreciable capital property.

One question I think you should ask the officials who appear before you is on section 53(2)(m), which provides for the deduction from the cost base of such part of the cost to the taxpayer of the property as was deductible—in computing the taxpayer's income for any taxation year commencing before that time. I have yet to meet anybody who knows what that means, or why it is there. One of our partners suggested it was there as a filler between section 53(2)(l) and section 53(2)(o), but unfortunately there is no section 53(2)(o), so that answer failed. We have no idea what it means.

Senator Walker: It could go back 30 years.

Mr. Scace: We now come to principal residences. Basically, principal residences will be exempt. There will be a pro-ratio if the residence has not been used during all of your ownership of it as a principal residence. In other words, if you bought it initially for rental and you had it as a rental property for ten years, and then you moved into it yourself for ten years, and then you sold it, one-half the gain would be exempt.

There is a difficulty with the bill in the way it is drafted now, that in setting up this pro-ratio, they are going to take into account years prior to 1972. This was not intended and I gather there is going to be an amendment to it. The pro-ratio will only be based on years after 1971. This can be beneficial or harmful to a taxpayer, depending on what the use was in the relevant years, so I do not know what the exact result will be.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Scace, if you had only one property and it happened to be in the country, and you lived there part of the time but not all of the time, could you say that that was your principal place of residence?

The Chairman: I would say that if there you carry on a way of living that indicates that this is your chief residence—you have maintained it, furnished it, and it looks like a house—

Senator Haig: Mr. Chairman, let us get at an uncomplicated situation. I have a summer cottage which I use during May, June, July, August and September. And I live in an apartment. Can I declare that summer cottage as my principal place of residence?

Mr. Scace: The definition of principal residence is that it must be a housing unit "ordinarily inhabited" by you, the taxpayer. I do not know what "ordinarily inhabited" means. All I can suggest is that if for ten months of the year you live in an apartment, then that is the housing unit you ordinarily inhabit, not your summer cottage.

Senator Haig: Now you complicate it again. Some people have a residence in Toronto, Montreal, or one of the big cities, and they go away for six to eight months, to Florida or the Bahamas. They have a principal place of residence in the city. Is that considered their principal place of residence?

Mr. Scace: Senator, I cannot tell you. It depends on what the meaning of "ordinarily inhabited" is. I suspect that, in that situation, probably they would be able to claim for the house in Canada that they have for four or five months a year.

Senator Haig: Rank discrimination.

Mr. Scace: Very good. I think all you can say is that there is going to be an immense amount of litigation on this particular subject.

Senator Molson: Actually, if the other house we are talking about, the secondary place, is outside of the country, it might be rather easier that if it were just a camp up in the country within Canada, because if it is outside the country at least his residence would have to be established. So there would be some indication, if he is a person who can have a house in Toronto and go to Florida for eight months, that it would have to be known whether he is a resident of Canada or Florida.

The Chairman: No, you can have a number of residences for tax purposes, but this must be the principal place of residence.

Senator Haig: I want to get the principal residence. I am thinking of an apartment dweller who has no real property except a summer cottage in Canada. Can he declare that as his principal residence?

The Chairman: Principal residence does not necessarily need to be real property. If he lives in an apartment, that can be his principal place of residence.

Senator Haig: It is capital gains I am talking about.

Mr. Scace: I do not know what the alternative is. I agree with you that there may be inequities. If the alternative is to try to set up specific rules, they may lead to even greater unfairness. I suspect that what is going to happen is that we will have lots of litigation and certain rough ground rules will get established. I cannot really give you any help on it. I do not know.

Senator Molson: Was there this complication in the background of previous legislation, showing a difficult situation in regard to residence and so on, or is this more or less a new one?

Mr. Scace: I think this is a new one for Canada, sir.

Senator Beaubien: What about the Americans? What do they do?

Mr. Scace: I am not sure how they deal with principal houses. Can you say, Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith: No.

Mr. Scace: This is more in line with the U.K. Perhaps we could have a search done of the U.K. jurisprudence, to see what they came up with. I cannot answer that question offhand.

Senator Beaubien: It would be interesting to know about that.

Senator Walker: And what a socialist government does.

Mr. Scace: On the definition of principal residence, there appears to be a gap—which may be remedied. If the deceased person has set up a house trust, a trust holding a house for his spouse, that may not qualify within the definition of a principal residence. I understand that the Department of Finance is aware of that and it may be remedied.

Apart from that, the definition seems to be reasonably comprehensive. Some briefs have gone in concerning leasehold land. Apparently, that problem is very troublesome out in British Columbia, though not so much so in our part of the country.

Senator Benidickson: Are you thinking of resort land in Ontario?

Mr. Scace: Not so much. I gather that there are many properties in British Columbia which are more on the U.K. system where you enter into a lease for 99 years.

Senator Haig: Why are we turning so much to farmers' places?

Senator Molson: Why blame the farmers?

Senator Beaubien: If you have a property in the country which is not your principal residence and which cost you $50,000, and you were to sell it for $25,000, can you show a capital loss of $25,000?

Mr. Scace: That is recreational property. Recreational property, if you want to call it that, is personal-use property, and one of the rules I read this morning was that there can be no loss on personal-use property.

Senator Beaubien: That is where most of us join hands.

The Chairman: The law is clear on that.

Mr. Scace: It is defined in section 54(f):

(f) "personal-use property" of a taxpayer includes

(i) property owned by him that is used primarily for the personal use or enjoyment of the taxpayer or for the personal use or enjoyment of one or more individuals each of whom is either the taxpayer or a person related to him—

And there are other items as well.

In the case of a principal residence, a farmer is also entitled to principal residence treatment. He gets an option of either pro-rating the part of the farm on which his principal residence is—he takes his principal residence plus one acre and pro-rates his proceeds over the total disposition price and gets that exemption—or, alternatively, he can take $1,000 a year over the number of years over which the property was occupied as a principal residence, whichever gives him the better treatment.

Senator Haig: That is a deduction.

Mr. Scace: It is an exemption. It means it is exempt and not subject to tax.

Senator Benidickson: This would apply to a gentleman farmer who may reside on some very valuable land, adjoining a very large city. He can only use one acre of that land, plus his residence. Is that so?

Mr. Scace: If he is a farmer, that is correct. Anybody, though, can get an exemption on up to one acre of land on which his principal residence is situated. He can get an additional amount, if it was necessary in some fashion for the use and enjoyment of the taxpayer. It is hard to see situations which would fall under that, unless the extra land were needed for access, or unless municipal legislation required the additional land. Those would be two possibilities.

Senator Beaubien: If you had a property that you were using as a farm, and you sold it at a loss, would you use that as a capital loss?

Mr. Scace: Yes, I think that would be a capital loss.

The Chairman: I suppose the other situation is at the discretion of the minister, where you may have an area of more than one acre. I can conceive of a situation, certainly in some zoning provisions and in some real estate subdivisions, where the requirement is, say, one-half to three or five acres of land. There is a provision in the bill under which you could apply in the discretion of the minister, to have a larger area as part of the principal residence.

Senator Benidickson: Because he could not have less under the zoning law?

The Chairman: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Scace: The way it reads is that any excess over one acre shall be deemed not to have contributed to the individual's use and enjoyment of the housing unit as a residence unless the taxpayer establishes that it was necessary for such use and enjoyment.

The Chairman: You could not have it if there were that zoning provision. He could not have the residence without the acreage.

Mr. Scace: The next item is personal-use property. We have gone through the definition, which includes most things in your house, such as automobiles, recreational property, and so on.

Basically the rule is that there is no capital gain unless you sell the property for an amount in excess of $1,000. If you sell it for less than $1,000 there is no tax. If you go above $1,000 your cost is the greater of $1,000 or your actual cost.

Senator Benidickson: This is on an individual item, and not on a class as a whole?

Mr. Scace: Yes, it is on an individual basis. Suppose you have a piano which you bought for $500 and you sell it for $450. There would be no tax consequences.

Senator Benidickson: And in the case of pictures, it applies to each individual picture if its costs is not over $1,000?

Mr. Scace: Within limits. There are certain rules in relation to sets of things. If you have an item which costs you $500 and you sell it for $1,500, your cost is the lesser or the greater of your actual cost of $500 or $1,000. So you bring in a gain of $500, and so on.

The Chairman: Senator Benidickson, you could not break up a set of, say, 12 cups and saucers and sell one of each and have that limitation on each.

Senator Benidickson: But the cups and saucers might be worth $500 each.

Mr. Scace: The provision in relation to sets is found in 46(3). It states that where you have personal-use property which would ordinarily be disposed of as a set, and they are disposed of by more than one disposition and are acquired either by one person or a group of persons not dealing at arm's length, you then prorate the cost and the proceeds. So, in effect, you do not get the advantage of the $1,000 exemption on each item. You prorate it down and you will be taxed as though you sold the whole group as a set.

There is perhaps a gap here. If you sell it to a group of persons, say, dealers, all of whom are dealing at arm's length, it seems that you can avoid this set rule. If you were selling your china, and you went to separate dealers in downtown Ottawa who were unrelated, and who dealt at arm's length, you could avoid it.

Senator Walker: You spoke about a car. Would that apply to airplanes and boats?

Mr. Scace: I think so, if they are for personal use. You then get another concept called listed personal property. If you will recall, when we started off we looked at section 3(b), which said that you brought in taxable capital gains other than from listed personal property, plus the taxable net gain from listed personal property.

Listed personal property is defined by section 54(e) as including prints, etchings, drawings, paintings, sculpture or other similar works of art, jewellery, rare folios, rare manuscripts, or rare books, stamps or coins.

Listed personal property is set out as receiving special treatment. It is a category, though, of personal-use property, and consequently the $1,000 exemption or limitation would be equally applicable.

The term that has been used throughout is taxable net gain from dispositions of listed personal property, and you take one-half of that amount. To obtain the net gain, you take your gains in a year from selling listed personal property and you subtract any losses from selling listed personal property in a given year, and you can carry back and forward losses from listed personal property incurred in prior or subsequent years.

Senator Haig: What do you do about gifts that you receive? Senator Hayden has received many gifts of trays, and so on. That is personal-use property. What happens if he disposes of them? Does he place a value on them?

Mr. Scace: Firstly, if you receive a gift, under section 69 your acquisition cost is the fair market value.

Senator Haig: But suppose you cannot ascertain that fair market value.

Mr. Scace: Let us say it is zero. If it is zero, and subsequently you sell that tray or whatever it is for $2,000 then, as it is personal-use property, you apply the rules and there will be a $1,000 gain. You subtract $1,000. It might behoove a person who felt the tray was worth more than $1,000 when he received it, to go out and get a valuation on it.

Senator Beaubien: That would apply only if you could prove that it had gone up from the valuation day, would it not? This is all in the future. If you have a tray and the valuation day is in December and you sell it in June of the next year, you cannot prove there is any difference in the value of it.

Senator Haig: I was referring to a tray bearing an inscription that it is given in appreciation of services. That is of no value to any other person except the family who owns it. What do you do with that? You cannot sell it.

Mr. Scace: If there is no value, there is no problem.

The Chairman: If you cannot sell it, you cannot make a gain.

Senator Haig: Thank you.

Mr. Scace: That basically concludes the special cases. The only comment I would make on listed personal property is that it seems that they have gone to great lengths to provide special rates for these specific types of assets. One wonders whether it is all worth it; why they do not say it is all personal-use property.

The Chairman: Except that they are distinguishing between the two. On listed personal-use property you can have a loss; is that not right?

Mr. Scace: You can have a loss, senator, but historically—this may not be true in the future—the kinds of things that are listed as listed personal property have generally appreciated. I refer to such things as stamp collections, jewellery, and paintings, et cetera.

Senator Molson: Not necessarily paintings.

Senator Lang: Do you treat the listed personal properties as a class?

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Benidickson: Where is that found?

Senator Haig: It is on page 84. It is section 54(e).

Senator Burchill: You mentioned stamp collections. How do you put a fair market value on a stamp collection? It is something you have built up over the years. How do you figure out a profit on that?

The Chairman: You establish a value on valuation day.

Senator Beaubien: The value would be the value you would get for it. If you value it at the end of this month and then sell it next year, it would be hard to say that the value had changed in that length of time.

Senator Walker: Until this matter is clarified, the best thing for the taxpayer to do is to ignore it.

Mr. Scace: We will be coming to valuation day later, but you have the choice. We do not know when valuation day will be. You can try to get a value some time between now and the end of the year or shortly thereafter. Alternatively, if you do not get a valuation done, it really will not become a problem until you subsequently sell or dispose of the property. Then you will be fighting about what the value was when you got it. That may be helpful, if you have a large appreciation. It might indicate that perhaps the value on V-day was greater than somebody told you he thought it was on V-day. You have to make this judgment and I think everybody is his own best judge of that, if he knows what assets he has.

Senator Haig: Are you going to deal with shares in personal corporations or non-public corporations or private corporations?

Mr. Scace: Yes, sir. We are dealing with corporations tomorrow. Shares make no difference. Shares are just capital property and are subject to capital gains tax.

Senator Haig: I am talking about valuations.

Mr. Scace: We will come to that, if you like.

Senator Lang: In the future, Mr. Chairman, amateur stamp collectors will have an incredible job of bookkeeping. I doubt if they will do it.

The Chairman: For those who have the flair for collecting stamps—and those people who think little of the art of stamp collecting might use other expressions than “flair”—there are well-recognized markets all over the world for stamps. There are books published offering stamps of various types and ages.

Senator Lang: People who indulge in hobbies such as stamp collecting or collecting paintings, and so on, are not generally prone to maintaining a set of books to ascertain their capital cost.

Mr. Scace: Just continuing on, there are a number of special rules set out in the act and I will deal with them very briefly. For instance, if you sell property on which you have to give a warranty or covenant with respect to certain things in relation to that property and later on you have to honour that warranty and pay out some money, that pay-out will be a capital loss and it is deductible against capital gains in the year the property was disposed of, in any of the six immediately following years from the date you gave the warranty.

Senator Haig: It is not against income; it is just against capital loss?

Mr. Scace: It is a capital loss, sir. Therefore, the allowable capital loss portion, basically, is deductible against capital gains plus $1,000 if you are an individual. I suppose the problem with that is that you may not have taxable capital gains in the year you have to honour the warranty. It might be fairer if you could re-file for the year that you gave it or the disposition took place.

The Chairman: I think the option would be a very thoughtful thing to have, because in the year in which this occurred you might have other capital gains or losses that you could bring in.

Senator Haig: What the witness says is that you can push it forward.

The Chairman: You might not have anything to push it against, except the $1,000 of general income.

Senator Haig: That is your tough luck.

The Chairman: The point is that in the year in which you dispose of it you may have had something left there that you could write this off against.

Senator Haig: Mr. Scace said you could take it in that year or carry it forward.

Mr. Scace: If you are required to realize on a warranty you can take the loss. You can get the allowable capital loss. If that occurred in the year of the original disposition or any of the six immediately following years, then all right. There are also special rules in relation to part dispositions.

The Chairman: What was that section you were referring to?

Mr. Scace: Section 42. The special rule in relation to part dispositions is found in section 43, and section 45 contains special rules where you have changed the use of property. For example, if you start off with one use, say, a personal use, and change it to a business use, you are allowed to acquire it at the fair market value at that time and so on. I think the rules are generally fair.

The Chairman: If you are allowed to acquire it at the fair market value at that time, you may incur a capital gain.

Mr. Scace: It depends which way it is going, yes, sir, but I think that is fair.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Scace: We have a problem with section 47, if you would take a look at that. It contains the rules in relation to identical properties. What section 47 is trying to do is to say that where a person owns identical properties that had different costs, what he should do is average the costs. That is the intention. For example, if I bought one share at $20 and another share at $30, then when I wanted to sell one of those shares I should use the average cost, which would be $25. Let me take you through it. The most common situation with identical properties would be shares and bonds. For example, you own a group of properties, and if you wanted to dispose of part of the group and retain the other part, then subsection (a) says that the adjusted cost base of the part disposed of is the proportion of the total adjusted cost base averaged out. In other words, if in my example I sell the one share for $50, then using my average cost as $25, I have a gain of $25 and there is then no fight about whether I am selling my $20 share or the $30 share.

The difficulty arises when one comes to subparagraph (b), which says that the taxpayer is deemed to have disposed of the part of the group retained at that average cost, which in my example is $25, and to have reacquired it at that same average cost of $25, thus giving the taxpayer a new base of the average of the part retained. The difficulty with it is that, although you have this deemed disposition, it does not say what your cost was of the group retained prior to this deemed disposition. Paragraph (a) only refers to the average cost of the part disposed of and that works all right, but I think you can get a problem with subparagraph (b) in that you are deemed to have disposed of the part so retained, at the average cost but nobody really tells you at the time of that deemed disposition what your cost is. It may be historical cost rather than average cost. But the intention is clear and I think that this is just a drafting technicality which I hope will be cured.

The Chairman: I think you could argue pretty strongly that it is the average for all purposes rather than the historical cost.

Mr. Scace: That is clearly what you would argue, but whether you could be successful in court or not, I do not know.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, just on this one point there seems to be a gap in the draftsmanship. Now I understand there are a great many amendments coming to this first reading draft which we have before us now, and it may very well be that some of these are to be picked up and clarified when the amendments are made in the House of Commons.

The Chairman: But that will take place in the committee of the whole.

Senator Benidickson: On this point, under the new rules—and I am not as familiar with them as I should be having been out of the House of Commons for five years—is it after second reading itself and before going to committee of the whole that the legislation goes to the House of Commons committee?

The Chairman: This legislation will not be going to a House of Commons committee at all. It is to be dealt with in committee of the whole.

Senator Connolly: Having arrived at that point, I understand that the normal practice in the House of Commons is to deal with the amendments as the sections are reached in discussion. On a complicated bill like this I wonder whether despite the fact that it might be a departure from parliamentary practice, we might get some agreement that all of the amendments, or at least all of them that are known before consideration in committee of the whole begins, will be made known to us so that we might have a chance of looking at them here. We would then know the kind of legislation we might actually have to deal with when the bill comes.

The Chairman: We do not have any position on that. The usual practice is to move amendments when they are dealing with a particular section. I would doubt very much if the Minister would want to embark upon the course of introducing them all at the very beginning. That is the only way we might get the list of the amendments in the beginning, because certainly the amendments would have to be presented in the House of Commons before they could be made available to us.

Senator Benidickson: Then, Mr. Chairman, are we not in a unique position, and I might add a favourable position, in view of the complicated nature of this legislation, in that the House of Commons will not have the opportunity to examine outside witnesses such as we will have?

The Chairman: That is what we will be doing.

Senator Flynn: We may be in a fortunate position, and the House of Commons in an unfortunate position.

Senator Walker: Is that not the idea behind our hearings now?

Senator Benidickson: Therefore, the responsibility on us, as far as the public is concerned, is unusually heavy.

The Chairman: That is right. You can also be sure that the staff we will have in committee will keep up from day to day with whatever may be suggested by way of amendments in the other place.

Senator Benidickson: This is rather anomalous in that the history is that the Senate plays a secondary role in matters of finances and taxation. But by this practice we shall be playing a very important role.

The Chairman: We found procedures for moving ahead of that position.

Senator Flynn: It will be sober, second thought ahead of time.

Senator Macnaughton: Mr. Chairman, do you think we might have a short recess?

The Chairman: Yes.

A short recess.

Mr. Scace: I will hurry through a few items which I think are reasonably dealt with in the bill. There is provision for a tax-free roll-over when converting a bond into shares, or a bond into a bond. There is a gap in the act; there is no provision for conversion of shares into shares. The department is aware of that and, hopefully, that will be one of the amendments. Those items are contained in sections 51 and 77.

Senator Connolly: Is that roll-over dollar for dollar, so to speak?

Mr. Scace: Yes, sir.

Senator Connolly: And there is nothing as between shares?

Mr. Scace: I do not believe the conversion of shares into shares is covered.

Senator Connolly: Do you mean shares of one company and shares of another on a one-for-one basis, or at least a dollar-for-dollar basis?

Mr. Scace: I am really referring to a conversion.

Section 52 provides a number of rules for determining the cost of an asset where the amount has been included in the taxpayer's income. An example is to be found in the present act and its counterpart in the bill of section 8. Where there has been an appropriation to a shareholder and some property has been given to him. On an asset such as a car that amount will be included in the shareholder's income. He then obtains a cost base equal to the fair market value at that time. There are a number of rules such as that.

There are also specific rules dealing with options and, so far as we can tell, the option rules work reasonably well. They are contained in section 49.

A very brief description of the option rules is that when an option is granted it is deemed to be a disposition of property and the consideration for the option is a gain. Therefore, if I own property and I give Mr. Smith an option to acquire it for $10, that is a disposition, and the $10 is a capital gain of mine. If Mr. Smith subsequently exercises the option, what happened previously, the inclusion of $10 as a capital gain, is wiped out and is included in calculating the proceeds. For instance, if the acquisition price was $100 I add the amount of the option, $10, for total proceeds of $110. Conversely, he obtains a cost of $110. If it is an option to dispose of property there is a deduction rather than addition. It seems to work out reasonably well.

Senator Connolly: Does that apply to share warrants entitling one to buy a certain number of shares on a number of warrants presently held?

Mr. Scace: I do not really know; I am trying to think of it. If you had the warrants on the original acquisition in some fashion, I suppose you would have the cost of the warrants and the cost of the shares you acquired by exercising the warrants. This would be the original cost of the warrants, plus whatever number of dollars you have to pay for the shares. I think that would be the treatment, which is similar, but I am not aware of any particular provision.

Senator Haig: The warrants are sold at a certain price; you buy a bond for a certain number of warrants and their value is there. It may go up or down, but that is the cost of the warrant to you.

The Chairman: Plus the cost of whatever is paid when the warrant is exercised.

Senator Haig: Correct; you have the cost of that stock.

Senator Connolly: There are two problems: first of all, if you sold the warrants you might be taking a gain—

Mr. Scace: It would be property.

Senator Connolly: I suppose it would; it would be something in addition to your shareholding.

The Chairman: You would be dealing in property.

Senator Connolly: Yes, but if you did not sell the warrants but used them to buy additional shares, the money you paid for the shares plus your warrant is the cost.

The chairman: That is right. It might be variable, I take it, Mr. Scace? It might be either the cost at the time of acquisition of the warrants or, if they have a market that is higher at valuation day, that might be taken. I do not see any difficulty in that.

Senator Beaubien: Do you have the option: either cost to you, or valuation day?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Scace: That is right; we will spend some time on that in a moment. It is one of the key considerations to understand.

The next major area that you might wish to consider is that of the carry forward and carry back of capital losses. I have outlined the situation in general terms. The act provides that in the event of an excess of allowable capital losses over taxable capital gains in a particular year, that becomes the net capital loss position for that year less, for an individual, $1,000. The definition of net capital loss is found in section 111(8). That net capital loss position can be carried back one year, or forward, indefinitely against taxable capital gains or, if you are an individual, it can also be applied against $1,000 of other income. That provision is contained in section 111(1)(b). I have calculations available, if you would like to see the operation of this provision. I think that for the most part it works reasonably well.

There are also restrictions, much as in the present act under section 27(1)(e), concerning how business losses must be used up and so forth. For the most part they are a direct reading on the present act and I do not think they create any problem; everyone knows how they operate.

There is one interesting situation where a corporation has a net capital loss position. In other words, it has incurred more capital losses than it has been able to set off against capital gains and when control of that corporation changes, which is 50 per cent plus one, the net capital loss position is eradicated. So there can be no dealing in capital losses where there is a change in corporate control.

Senator Connolly: Just because of the change in control?

Mr. Scace: The mere change in control; that is provided in section 111(4).

The Chairman: Oh, yes; this has been quite a stunt over the years.

Mr. Scace: It blocks it completely.

Senator Connolly: Over the years we have not had capital gains tax.

Mr. Scace: I am referring to business losses; the rules have been tightened up over the years in the form of section 27(5)(a) of the existing act and they have been carried over into the bill. However, there still is an opening in the case of business losses. If you have a change of control the loss carry forward position will still exist if the same business is carried on in which the losses were incurred. So you have a chance of maintaining the carry forward; you have no chance in the case of a net capital loss position.

Senator Connolly: Operating losses as against capital losses incurred?

Mr. Scace: That is right.

The Chairman: Are you saying that where there is a net capital loss position in a company, that goes on forever, so long as the company remains in that business operation?

Mr. Scace: Are you referring to capital losses, sir?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Scace: No, sir; there is no restriction on its staying in that particular operation, so long as there is no change of control.

The Chairman: That is right.

Mr. Scace: I can perhaps make it more clear with a quick diagram. Let us assume you have business losses of $100 and a net capital loss position of $100 in a company. We have Company A and Company B, and Company A acquires control of Company B. Immediately that net capital loss carry-forward position is eradicated. You do not know what happens to the business loss because it is deductible if the same business is carried on, but if the same business is not carried on you lose it. If it is carried on you will get the carry-forward position.

Senator Connolly: No doubt there are grey areas where it is a question of whether it is fully carried on.

Mr. Scace: It is a question of fact as to whether that has happened.

Senator Flynn: Not grey; dark.

Senator Connolly: If it is dark you know what your position is. If it is grey you are not clear.

Mr. Scace: The next area concerns the basic tax-free roll-overs. There are a number of instances where you do not have a disposition within the definition of a disposition in section 54 (c), so they would be one form of tax free roll-over. Another form is where you have a disposition and receive compensation for property destroyed under a policy of insurance or compensation for property taken under statutory authority. In that case you get a roll-over to the extent that you re-invest the proceeds in new property.

This was Senator Flynn's point this morning. To the extent that you do not re-invest the proceeds there will be a gain. I can show you that one on the board.

If you have property costing $100 and you receive compensation in the amount of $150, say, under a policy of insurance, and you then use $140 of the compensation to acquire a new property equivalent to the one that was destroyed, your gain will be $10 and the cost of the new property for capital gains purposes will be $100. You are put back for capital gains tax purposes into exactly the same position that you were in before and you only get a gain on the amount that you did not re-invest.

Senator Haig: You pay tax on the $10.

Mr. Scace: The $10 would be a capital gain, so $5 would be the taxable capital gain.

The other major roll-over is in the case of transfers between spouses. In both the case of death and when a gift is made, it is exempt if the transfer goes to the spouse absolutely or if it goes to a trust for the spouse and the trust complies with the following conditions: First, the spouse must be entitled to receive all of the income of the trust other than taxable capital gains that arose before the spouse's death, and, second, no person except the spouse may obtain any part of the capital of the trust. Essentially, this is the same type of qualifying trust that you have under the Estate Tax Act.

There is one slight imperfection or lack of clarity in the definition. As I said, the spouse must be entitled to all of the income other than the taxable capital gains. I think what it means is that so long as your trust document states that all of the income goes to the spouse, she does not necessarily have to get the capital gains. However, you can interpret it to mean that she is not entitled to capital gains at all. I do not think the latter interpretation will hold, but it is possible.

The qualifying trust is set out in section 70(6). Where property is transferred to a qualifying trust if it is non-depreciable capital property the property moves over at the adjusted cost base, and if it is depreciable capital property it goes over at undepreciated capital cost. In other words, if I own non-depreciable capital property costing $100, and if at the time I die or make a gift of the property to my wife it is worth $200, there is no capital gains tax, but my wife acquires that property at $100.

Senator Walker: So they pick it up when she dies.

Mr. Scace: That is right, but you get the exemption between spouses.

Senator Connolly: Or when she sells it.

Mr. Scace: Or when she sells it, yes, sir.

You can also get a tax-free roll-over where you transfer property to a corporation in which immediately after the transfer you own 80 per cent or more of the shares. This exemption would cover the situation where you are incorporating a sole proprietorship, and it would also cover the situation where you transfer from a parent company to a subsidiary where you had 100 per cent ownership. It would not cover the reverse situation where you have a transfer from a subsidiary to the parent company.

There are very complicated election rules. These are set out in section 85 of the bill. They get extremely complicated, but they do appear to work. You also get a roll-over, as I have said, where there is a transfer by a partnership to a corporation or a transfer into a partnership. Mr. Smith will be talking about that. You can also get a roll-over where there are certain re-organizations of capital, and also with amalgamations. In the case of amalgamations the rules get quite complicated, but essentially if it is a straightforward transaction without undue complication there is no problem. For example, if there are two predecessor corporations coming together there will be no capital gains tax on their assets. They just come into the new company at the adjusted cost base. If you are looking at the shareholders and they are getting shares in a new amalgamated company they will get those shares at the adjusted cost base of the old shares.

The Chairman: That is section 86, is it?

Mr. Scace: Section 87, sir.

The Chairman: Yes, section 86 is the re-organization.

Mr. Scace: Section 88 provides for a tax-free roll-over in the case of a wind-up from a subsidiary to a parent. There may be problems in that particular roll-over, but they are extremely technical and I think it is probably better to avoid them at the present time.

Before we get into the valuation day and the transitional provisions there is a general tax avoidance provision in section 55 which applies specifically to capital gains, and basically it states that where you have done something by any one or more transactions in a way that may be considered to have artificially or unduly reduced the amount of the gain or created a loss or increased the amount of the loss, the gain or the loss, as the case may be, shall be computed in the normal fashion as if this artificial creation had not occurred. This was obviously put there to cover those situations which they have not thought of, and in case there is a glaring loop-hole in the capital gains provisions.

We come now to the transition rules. This has been a very hot topic of debate in the papers. I am sure you saw Mr. Benson's letter in reply to Mr. Asper's column. I think Mr. Benson was correct. The transitional provisions are found in the transitional rules and the first one is rule 24 which anticipates that there may be two valuation days.

The Chairman: What part was that again?

Mr. Scace: The transitional rules occur after the main sections of the act.

Senator Beaubien: What page?

Mr. Scace: I am looking at rules 24 and 25 at page 421. These are the income tax application rules, 1971. I think we will get two valuation days, which will be fixed by proclamation. If anybody has any inside knowledge, I think you gentlemen will have it far sooner than Mr. Smith or I. I do not think anybody on the outside knows. Rule 25 goes on to state that each of such days must be after June 18, 1971, and that either or both of them may be before or after the coming into force of the act. It is anticipated that the act will come in January 1, 1972, so valuation day would conceivably be before that, although it might be after. I think most people think it will be close to the end of the year, but again we do not know.

Senator Beaubien: Why would there be two, and how could you use two?

Mr. Scace: I am not sure of the rationale for the two. Maybe with publicly traded securities they are a little concerned about people driving the market up in an unreasonable fashion. I do not know.

Senator Lang: There is not much hope of that today.

Mr. Scace: I would like to see it go up for one day.

Senator Connolly: I had not thought about this before, but it just occurs to me that if valuation day is prescribed by the new legislation, and you say it might be proclaimed before the end of the year or after, if it is before the end of the year it would still have to be after the passage of the legislation would it not? Valuation day only becomes effective as a result of the implementation of the legislation in Parliament.

Mr. Scace: Say valuation day was on December 15 and the legislation became effective on January 1—

Senator Connolly: I am not talking about it being effective. I am talking about the passage through Parliament with Royal Assent. You would have to have Royal Assent before decreeing what would be valuation day, would you not?

The Chairman: If it did not there would certainly have to be considerable re-drafting to try to make a valuation day prior to the date of coming into force, trying to make it the effective date.

Senator Flynn: They might announce that it will be decided valuation day will be such a date, even before the passage of the act.

Senator Connolly: Would such an announcement prior to Royal Assent to the bill have any validity?

Senator Flynn: It would not, but it would be binding on the good faith of the government.

Senator Beaubien: We have often had changes in tariffs that have been announced when the minister has got up and said, "This is effective today".

Senator Cook: Valuation day in the past.

Senator Beaubien: This is going to be like a budget speech. We have had that in many cases, where the government has said, "This is effective today."

The Chairman: For all practical purposes, if you said, "It is not law yet so I will not pay it", you would have a lot of problems by the time it became law.

Senator Beaubien: We are talking about the effective date. Whether you want to pay it or not is another thing. If the government says that today is valuation day through the minister saying so in the House of Commons, I think there are lots of precedents for that.

Senator McNaughton: I do not think so, not with a taxing bill.

Senator Flynn: It is a conditional decision that the minister makes on budget day, because if it is not ratified by Parliament it lapses, as we have seen with the two per cent tax; it was valid up to the date when Parliament defeated the bill.

Senator Cook: The same thing has happened to wheat payments now, although I know it is scandalous.

Mr. Hopkins: It has to be validated retroactively by the legislation coming into force or it is ineffective. It is really a declaration of intention until ratified by Parliament.

Senator Beaubien: Still, it would be valuation day, if the minister said that for evaluating stocks today is the date.

Mr. Hopkins: If the act so reads it could be so, but not until the act comes into force.

Senator Connolly: It will depend on the wording of the section when valuation day is.

Mr. Hopkins: That is right.

Senator McNaughton: If eventually the bill is never passed, all the valuation days in kingdom come will not apply.

Senator Beaubien: If the bill is never passed we will never have a capital gains tax, so it would not matter to us whether there were a valuation day or not.

Senator Flynn: That is wishful thinking.

The Chairman: We are doing a lot of speculating.

Senator Lang: I assume rule 26(3) overcomes the problem of the cost of the property as opposed to valuation day value.

Mr. Scace: That is right. We are just coming to that. In any event, if the Government has a problem on how it gets valuation day into effect, from valuation day on, if the legislation goes in, that is the base, apart from what I am just going to say, for measuring capital gains.

How do we get into the system? Rule 26(3) is possibly the most ingenious piece of drafting you will find. It covers property other than depreciable property, and I urge you to read it. I think it can be simplified. It talks about an amount that is neither the greater nor the least of the following three—cost, market value on V-day and proceeds of disposition. The way this will work out can be simplified diagrammatically. In one we show cost and V-day value in a situation where you go into the system with a winning asset; in the other you have a loser. In both cases there is a tax-free zone. I think every example you go through would fit rule 26(3). For instance, if there is a cost of $100 with a V-day value of $200 and you sell for $300, you are taxable only on the difference between $300 and $200.

Senator Haig: At half rates.

Mr. Scace: At half rates, or half inclusions. If the cost was $100 and V-day value $200, if you sell for $150 nothing happens; it is in the tax-free zone and is a neutral transaction, if I may put it that way. With a cost of $100, if you sell for $50, the difference between $100 and $50 will be a capital loss, and half of that will be the allowable capital loss. The same can be done in the other case, depending what the proceeds are; whether they fall below the line, above the line or in the middle, the gains, losses or neutrality can be measured.

Senator Beaubien: If you elect to take the value of a stock and it is above the cost and you sell it below the value of the stock, if it is above your cost you cannot take it as a deduction. It that what you mean?

Mr. Scace: I think I understand your question. These tax-free zone rules apply automatically. As an alternative to the tax-free zone rules, under rule 26(7) an individual has the option of electing to value all his assets at fair market value on V-day. If you owned two assets, represented by these diagrammatic charts, you could take both assets and, as opposed to the tax-free zone rules, you could elect to have them start at V-day value. So on this one you take that value, and on this one you take that one (indicating on blackboard). If that happens, you take V-day value, you get your inclusions if it goes above V-day value, and you get a deduction if it goes below. Here you will get an inclusion if it goes above and a deduction if it goes below.

May I say one more word? This may become more clear. If you look at the tax-free zone, the tax-free zone is not very beneficial to a taxpayer, where he has a winner. The reason for that obviously is that if the price goes up he immediately becomes taxable, while if it goes down he does not start getting an allowable loss in any form until it gets below his original cost. On the other hand, when you have a loser, the tax-free zone rules are very advantageous. You start off with your V-day value down here. If it begins to drop, you immediately start getting deductions, but you are not going to become taxable until you get back to your original cost. So the tax-free zones are disadvantageous for winning assets; they are advantageous for losers.

As I said, they apply automatically unless you are an individual and you elect to have all of your assets valued at fair market value on V-day.

In the debate between Mr. Benson and Mr. Asper the confusion arose because rule 26(7) refers to "each" asset, and you have to read it carefully. I think the meaning that comes out of it is that it means "all" assets, or "3ach and every" asset—that you take all your assets in the tax-free zone or you are allowed to take all your assets at market value.

Senator Beaubien: You cannot pick and choose?

Mr. Scace: No.

Mr. Beaubien: The minister told us definitely you could pick and choose.

An Hon. Senator: Does that refer to some assets or to all assets?

Mr. Scace: To all assets. These are all non-depreciable assets that we are talking about here.

Mr. Smith: If he wanted you to be able to pick and choose, it would be very easy to amend the rule to state that.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, do you not remember the minister's answer? We asked him directly if it applied to each and every asset, and he said yes, you can take either valuation date or cost, on each and every separate asset.

The Chairman: We were talking about the White Paper provisions then. The minister may have said that somewhere. He was not before us on the White Paper.

Mr. Scace: I think the confusion arises on rule 26(7), which gives an election for fair market value. It says:

Where, but for this subsection, the cost to an individual of any property actually owned by him on December 31, 1971 would be determined under subsection (3) or (4)—

Which is the tax free zone rule.

—and the individual has so elected, in prescribed manner . . . in which the disposition of any such property occurs, the cost to him of each capital property . . . actually owned by him on December 31, 1971 shall be deemed to be its fair market value on valuation day.

Certainly, on an initial reading, many of us thought that that referred to a specific asset, but from Mr. Benson's letter in the Globe and Mail—and certainly the Department of Finance intends this—it seems that you cannot pick and choose. You must take either the tax free zone or the fair market value. It is a case of "either/or". I think they have used the wrong word. It may be that the correct word is "each", and it may be grammatically correct and produce the result, but it is a little unclear and I think they should put in "each and every" or "all" property, and then it would be absolutely certain that what they are saying in rule 26(7) will give the intended result, and I am telling you what is the intended result here.

Senator Cook: Assuming that it applied to each class of persons it seems rather stupid to say "all" classes.

Mr. Scace: I do not know what the classes would be.

Senator Cook: I mean shares, and then real estate.

Mr. Scace: There is no suggestion of that.

Mr. Smith: There is one further point on the tax-free zone rules that I might mention. In order to have them apply, it appears that you have to know three amounts. You have to know the original starting cost, the V-day value, and the proceeds of disposition. The last two are fairly easy to arrive at, but many taxpayers may not be able to come up with the cost of assets that they may have bought a long time ago or that they may have traded in in the meantime.

Mr. Scace: This is another problem and I think it is a very serious problem. There is some dispute about this. We think, on our interpretation of the bill, that if you have received assets by inheritance or by gift, whether they are depreciable or non-depreciable, your cost is zero.

Senator Beaubien: When you sell them there would then be 100 per cent tax?

Mr. Scace: In the tax-free zone rule, if this is zero then what you are talking about is that you can never get a loss, because you are coming down to nil and you will never get a loss if the value falls. Then you are very wise to take the fair market value election, because then you establish a base, and whether you go up or down you would be all right.

Senator Cook: May I interrupt you there? If you take fair market value of something inherited, and that has not depreciated, does that mean the fair market value for shares?

Mr. Scace: You have to have fair market value for everything. This comes to a situation, when you take the fair market value election. You would have fair market value election in one situation, where you were in the very fortunate position that all your assets were winners.

The Chairman: Or if you had entirely inherited or gifted property.

Mr. Scace: If the preponderance of your assets were winners, then you take it. I do not want to come out too strongly on this inherited property having no cost base. We are firm on our conclusion on it. I gather there is a split in the Department of Finance, as to which way it goes.

I see that some honourable senators have the Clarkson, Gordon brief in front of them. I see that they say it is fair market value. I am sure I am not telling stories out of school if I add that they had a split about it in their firm. They came down on that side. We think they are wrong, but they could be right.

The Chairman: What do you suggest? That it be done by way of clarification?

Mr. Scace: I think they could put in a very simple provision, that the cost of assets inherited was the fair market value at the time of the bequest of the gift. That would solve it.

Senator Cook: It was a question 25 years ago.

Mr. Scace: That is right. That would not be too difficult, senator, because probably there would have been estate tax, succession duty, or a return filed of some sort, and you might have the values there. If they were lower, you might be in the peculiar position of arguing that they should have been higher.

Senator Flynn: You are not speaking of taking the value at the time the transfer of the property was made 25 years ago, are you?

Mr. Scace: Suppose you inherited one share of the XYZ Company 25 years ago which was worth $50 at that time, and that amount was entered in the succession duty return and you have a value up here of $100. Surely, you are better to take that $50 25 years ago as your cost rather than taking zero, if our interpretation of the law is correct.

Senator Flynn: If the share is on the market today, you know what the value is on valuation day.

Mr. Scace: You can elect to take the fair market value option. In our example, if you inherited this $50 share 25 years ago and it is now worth $100, in that case you are probably better to take the fair market value election, because if it goes up you are taxable and if it goes down it is deductible.

The Chairman: That applies to all others.

Senator Flynn: It is difficult to imagine that assets that were valued 25 years ago, whatever they were, would be higher than the fair market value of today on valuation day, with inflation and everything.

Mr. Scace: One of the difficulties with this no cost on inherited or gifted assets is that it discriminates between two people, both of whom inherited wealth of some kind, but one inherited it in specie or kind, and the other received cash and then bought the identical asset.

The Chairman: Is it not the situation that there are certain options here. If there are not enough options, perhaps we will write some more.

Senator Cook: It certainly wants to be looked at.

Mr. Scace: 50 per cent of your assets may be winners and 50 per cent losers. If you want to keep one tax free zone rules for your losers you might say "How can I get out of it?" and you say, "Well, perhaps somehow I can roll over my winner by selling it to my wife". Let us take an example. We know that the cost of the asset in the example is $50. If you sell it to your wife at $100, then within the family you have a new high value of $100, so the tax-free zone rules might apply. However, by Rule 26(5), if there is a non-arm's-length transfer, the transferee gets the old cost of the transferor, and such a rollover is impossible.

Senator Flynn: It is a problem of valuation between the winners and the losers.

Senator Haig: Assuming that your gift of 10 shares is at zero and they are then divided or subdivided and get to 50, what happens then?

The Chairman: They are still zero.

Mr. Scace: I do not think that would make any difference. There is another possibility that you might think about to avoid the rules. Let us say that this was a share of the ABC Company which was a listed public company, and you decided to sell your shares in the market and buy them back and establish a new base. Rule 26(6) intended to say that if you re-acquire within a 30-day period you are back in the same position that you would have been in if it had been a non-arm's length transaction. Originally I read the section as being all right, that it worked; but it has been brought to my attention that it does not work.

If you follow it through very closely it is trying to relate it back to 26(5), but it does not have all the connecting links.

As it now stands, rule 26(6) does not do what it says; but I think it is fair to assume that before this goes through we will have something that does work, which will prevent people rolling over to get a new high value within a 30-day period.

There are all kinds of complicated things going on. If you owned Canadian bank stock A and you wanted to stay in banks but you did not care whether you were in bank stock A or bank stock B, you could sell bank stock A and buy bank stock B, and obtain a new cost; and that is not caught by any of these rules. Some very complicated swaps are going on.

There are two more points. There are also special rules during the transition to distinguish between assets acquired before the implementation date. Basically you get a first-in first-out method of disposition, and that also applies where some assets are acquired before and some are acquired after.

The Chairman: Which number is that?

Mr. Scace: That is found in rule 26(8). Lastly, with depreciable property you get specific rules. I think it is sufficient to say that they seem to work, so that any appreciation over cost up to the V-day value will not be subject to capital gains tax. They have very complicated provisions where you have non-arm's length transfers. I think they are basically sound. Some of the drafting may be a little tough to deal with, but they appear to work.

The Chairman: Which one is that?

Mr. Scace: You find those in transitional rules 20 and following. They start at rule 20(1). However, you still have the problem with depreciables in that you can get the retroactive recapture. We spoke about that at great length.

Gentlemen, I think those are the capital gains provisions.

The Chairman: Before we adjourn until tomorrow morning at 9.30, it might be of interest to the committee to note the order of business for the next few days. We propose to proceed with the third item tomorrow, that is, corporations and distributions to shareholders. Mr. Scace will deal with that rather big item. Mr. Smith will then deal with partnerships and professional income. That will certainly take the morning. There are other items as well, but we will have only a short time in the afternoon, as I see it—up to perhaps three o'clock—in which to deal with them. That is something we can decide at the time.

On Wednesday, October 6, the people who want another bank will be coming back with certain information they had not been able to give us before, which should not take too long, and after them we will have the Canadian Chamber of Commerce to deal with on the subject of taxation. That should take us through the morning.

We are open in the afternoon on Wednesday, and I understand Thursday is also an open day. If Mr. Smith and Mr. Scace can manage it, perhaps they will come back next week. They can let us know.

Senator Connolly: Are there any bills from the House of Commons that are likely to be referred to this committee, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: I have been spoken to about the $80 million bill, and I understand that it will come to this committee. I am not sure just when it will get here, however.

Senator Connolly: Will it interfere with the planned sittings on the tax measures?

The Chairman: Senator, somehow or other we are going to manage to keep Wednesdays and Thursdays available for this work.

Senator Haig: Mr. Chairman, I move we adjourn until 9.30 tomorrow morning.

The Chairman: Shall we adjourn?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The committee adjourned.

Ottawa, Thursday, September 30, 1971

Upon resuming at 9.30 a.m.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we will resume our hearing this morning with Mr. Smith and Mr. Scace. Our first subject matter will be partnerships and professional income. Stephen Smith is going to deal with that. Then we are going to consider corporations and distributions to shareholders, which is quite an important and heavy item. We hope to complete both of these items by lunch time, but do not feel any restraint so far as questions are concerned.

Senator Beaubien: Very good, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Connolly: You mean that, do you?

The Chairman: Yes. The word "restraint" I meant in relation to questions.

Mr. Smith: There are really two quite separate topics that I am going to talk about this morning, Mr. Chairman. One is the new method by which taxpayers in the professions are to compute their incomes and the second is the computation of partnership income. The only connecting link between these two topics is that many professional businesses are carried on by partnerships. First I will deal with taxpayers in the professions.

You will recall that the White Paper caused a fair amount of consternation among professional taxpayers, particularly accountants and lawyers, and more so the lawyers, in my opinion, by suggesting that taxpayers in the professions generally should no longer be able to compute their incomes on the cash basis of accounting for tax purposes but rather should go on to a full accrual basis which would require them to account for work in progress. That was a particular problem for lawyers because many lawyers have inadequate records of what their work in progress consists of, and they have a real problem when it comes to valuing it.

Perhaps I could read to you two short paragraphs from the White Paper which put the whole subject into context. I refer to paragraphs 5.46 and 5.47 of the White Paper:

5.46 Generally, taxpayers who are in business must compute their taxable income on what is known as the accrual basis. This means that a merchant must take into account the inventory of goods he has on hand, the amounts due to him from his customers, and the amounts he owes to his suppliers. An exception to this general rule has for many years been made for taxpayers in the professions (doctors, dentists, lawyers, chartered accountants, professional engineers, etc.). These taxpayers have been permitted to choose to report their income either on the accrual basis or on the cash basis—that is, they could omit the amounts due them from their clients and their "inventory" of unbilled time. Once a taxpayer chooses one basis he cannot switch to the other without the consent of the Minister. The government believes that the tax postponement permitted by this concession has given professionals an unwarranted advantage by comparison to the rest of Canadians, and it therefore proposes that professionals be required to use the accrual basis.

5.47 A problem would exist in switching professional taxpayers now on the cash basis over to the new system. This problem relates to their receivables and inventories at the date of the change over. For example, if 1971 is the first year of the new system, the problem would relate to the receivables and inventories as at the end of 1970. These amounts would not have been included in the taxpayer's 1970 income because they would not have been collected at that time. They would not be included in the 1971 income because they were earned before that time. To require that the entire amount be brought into 1971 income would impose an abnormal tax liability in that year. As a consequence, the government proposes that these taxpayers be entitled to bring these amounts into income over a number of years. Specifically, they would bring them into income as their total outstanding receivables and inventories are reduced. This amount would of course be in addition to the amount of their income computed on the accrual basis and would mean that they would be taxed on the greater of a cash-basis income or an accrual-basis income until they catch up to other Canadian businessmen.

Now the representations made by various professional groups resulted in the Government's putting in the bill what is essentially a compromise between the Government's position of full accrual and the representations made that professional taxpayers should be entitled to remain on a cash basis. Now this compromise is set out in section 34 of the bill which sets out rules for computing the income of a taxpayer, that is any taxpayer be he an individual, a corporation or a partnership from a business that is a profession.

Now there is one thing to note and that is that there is no definition of "profession" in the Act, so presumably the Courts will have recourse to dictionaries, and perhaps there is some jurisprudence on the subject but the definition of "profession" may end up being somewhat broader than the traditional professions that the Government obviously has in mind.

Now the rules set out in section 34 are first of all in subsection (a) that sections 12(1)(b) and 21(m) of the bill do not apply. Section 12(1)(b) is the section that requires the inclusion of accounts receivable in income unless the taxpayer is already on a cash basis accounting. So they are taking that section out. Section 21(m) is the reserve for goods and services, rent, etcetera, not yet delivered or earned against the inclusion of the amounts received by the taxpayer on that account.

Now subsection (b) says that every amount that becomes receivable by the taxpayer in the year in respect of property sold or services rendered in the course of the business must be included in income. So as soon as you have billed, if you are a professional, the amount of your account comes into your income. Subsection (c), however, is intended to prevent what some people have referred to as the ice-cream scoop theory of law office management—the professional who goes along working month after month and getting in minor accounts until he runs out of money and then he looks around to see what accounts he can bill. He may be very tardy in rendering his accounts.

Subsection (c) says that you are going to be deemed to have billed or to have obtained an account receivable on the earliest of the day on which you actually billed it, the day on which it would have been billed if you had not delayed unduly in billing it or the day on which you actually collected it. That would be the day on which you were paid for your services if you were paid in advance. They do not define "undue delay" but obviously it is intended to give the department some power over the professional who just will not get around to billing.

The Chairman: This is really a bit childish, isn't it?

Senator Walker: Why are they so fussy and meticulous in a matter like that? It seems unnecessary.

Mr. Smith: I think you would have to see in the books of a number of professionals to know whether they have a point or not. The suggestion is that some people keep building up their work in progress and not billing and keep deferring it from year to year and that deferral is worth something to them in the sense that they have postponed the taxation of it, but at the same time they have not had the use of the money themselves.

Senator Lang: I think some firms are putting it into their trust account and just taking in their fees. This is under the old system. However, that has been eliminated now. I think we are stewing about nothing.

Senator Connolly: Either a professional has to bill because he wants to eat, or he is going to defer his billing and then get a great glob of income in one year that would put him into a bad tax bracket.

The Chairman: And in these times you cannot gamble on taxes going down.

Senator Beaubien: The real effect of this thing would be to give the government more money in the year it comes in.

Mr. Smith: It speeds up the collection of tax.

Senator Beaubien: If over the years you paid on every dollar that came in, then all of a sudden you have to pay on an amount which you would only have paid in the next year because you deemed it to be owed and it would be an asset to the income.

The Chairman: Next year if it becomes a bad debt, you charge it off against the income of that year.

Senator Beaubien: So all you do is give the Government more income in one year.

Mr. Smith: I shall get to it in a moment, but there are transitional rules to cover the change-over.

Senator Connolly: If subsection (c) were removed, then you would be on a billing basis.

Mr. Smith: Yes, (c) is not essential to the scheme.

Senator Connolly: It gives the department some discretion?

Mr. Smith: That is right, but ultimately the court would have to decide whether there had been undue delay.

The Chairman: Then the rather extraordinary position is that you will have a layman making a determination as to when an account is in shape to be billed. Very often there are delays in sending out accounts because the client is not in a good position to deal with it right away and, rather than have an outstanding account, you just defer billing it.

Senator Molson: I have just one question which will probably show my ignorance. This is all detailed by section, and yet when we come to section 34(1)(a) it refers to paragraph 12 and so on. Then in dealing with it Mr. Smith says that section 12(1)(b) does not apply.

Mr. Smith: I have always referred in the old act to section numbers but I guess they have changed the nomenclature somewhat, but I do not think it is significant.

Senator Molson: But they are described as sections here. At the head of these things for section, can we read paragraph? Are they really interchangeable?

The Chairman: When you go back to what they refer to as 12, you can call it section.

Mr. Smith: Well, referring to a part of the section—I think when they refer to part of a section—in other words to a subsection—they call it paragraph.

The Chairman: When you look at the original place in the bill, they refer to it as a section.

Mr. Smith: Yes, but I think if they were referring to all of section 12, they would refer to it as section 12. But if they are only referring to subparagraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 12, it is a different matter.

The Chairman: When I look at the bill on that I see it is entitled section 12(1)(b).

Senator Molson: I am not really nit-picking but when I read this first I wondered where paragraph 12 would be because we are dealing with sections. Maybe this is sheer ignorance on my part.

Senator Beaubien: Well, Mr. Smith answered it very clearly. It is a subparagraph of the section.

Senator Lang: For the purpose of the record, I want to object to the considering of a business as a profession. There is no such thing as a business that is a profession or a profession that is a business.

The Chairman: They are contradictory terms.

Mr. Smith: If you go along you will see that subsection (d) of section 34 says that where a taxpayer elects in his tax return he is not required to account for work in progress. Now the important point to note for any professional taxpayer here is that in his first tax return, presumably, he must make this election or he will be required to account for his work in progress. One might have expected that it would be the other way around, that he wouldn't have to account for it unless he specifically elected to account for it. This is something each professional taxpayer will have to look out for in his first return under the new system. Once you have elected in the first year, that applies to all subsequent years unless you are permitted to revoke your election with the Minister's consent.

Now from section 34 you move to Rule 23 of the transitional rules. That is the section which deals with the change-over from the cash basis to this form of accrual. It is at page 419 of the CCH edition. Rule 23(1) says that in computing income for the 1972 taxation year the accounts payable which were outstanding at the end of the 1971 year may be deducted. That is to make sure that they are in fact accounted for in the 1972 year. Otherwise they would not be taken into account in the 1971 year because they had not been paid and specific treatment is required to obtain the deduction in 1972.

Senator Connolly: I am sorry, Mr. Smith; but I did not follow you.

Mr. Smith: In 1971 you have been on the cash basis, so you have deducted the accounts that you have actually paid, but you have not deducted those that are merely outstanding at the end of the year in computing your income, so this section 23(1)—

Senator Connolly: What do you mean by "deducted in 1971, including the accounts that you have billed and have paid?"

Mr. Smith: I am referring to your expenses, the liabilities side of your balance sheet.

Senator Connolly: Oh, I am sorry.

Mr. Smith: The amounts that you owe other people.

The Chairman: These are deductions.

Mr. Smith: So you have only deducted those that you have actually paid in 1971. Therefore in 1972 this gives you the deduction of the outstanding balance of those.

Rule 23(2) provides that where an election has not been made not to account for work in progress, the work in progress at the beginning of the 1972 year is to be taken on the same basis of valuation as at the end of the 1971 year. That section has no application to taxpayers who decide that they are not going to account for work in progress and so elect.

Rule 23(3) deals with the accounts receivable which were outstanding at the end of the 1971 year. To make any sense of subsection 3, you have to turn to the definitions in subsection 5. The first one is "investment interest" and the definition of that term depends on whether it be an individual taxpayer, a partnership or a corporation that may be carrying on a profession.

The investment interest of a sole proprietor is just his accounts receivable at the end of the fiscal period under consideration. In the case of a partnership, it is the adjusted cost base of the partner's interest in the partnership. I will discuss the computing of that later, but basically it is the partners' capital account, with all assets being taken at their tax values. It is not only receivables; other assets are also taken into account. Basically it is the partner's equity in the partnership.

In the case of a corporation, the investment interest is defined as either the accounts receivable, or a portion of them, depending on how many years have elapsed after 1971. The idea in the case of the corporation is that the accounts receivable at the end of 1971 will be brought into income gradually over a 10-year period.

"1971 receivables" is also a defined term in subsection (5). It is basically what you would expect it to be, the accounts receivable outstanding at the end of the 1971 year, less debts that became bad before the end of the year. These are the accounts which were not previously included in income because the taxpayer was on a cash basis.

Going back to subsection (3), this is intended to bring into income the 1971 receivables and at the same time allow a reserve. This will avoid taxpayers who are making this transition being suddenly faced in 1972 with all their income on an accrual basis, plus their 1971 receivables, which would obviously throw up a much larger amount of income.

The Chairman: You would really have a balloon there.

Mr. Smith: That is right. So subsection (3)(a) provides that an amount not exceeding the lesser of the amount deducted the year before may be deducted. That is to bring in this rolling reserve or your investment interest in the business at the end of the year in question.

For the 1972 year the amount that is deemed to have been deducted under that provision for the previous year is taken as the amount of the 1971 receivables. In other words, for the 1972 year the deduction is of the lesser of 1971 receivables or the investment interest in the firm at the end of the 1972 year.

For taxation years after 1972 the deduction is of the lesser of the amount that was deducted the previous year, on your investment interest at the end of the year.

Subparagraph (c) provides for the inclusion in income of the amount deducted under subparagraph (a) for the previous year.

Subparagraph (d) merely picks up bad debts which may have accumulated subsequent to 1971.

I have placed on the blackboard a rather oversimplified example of a professional firm to illustrate these rules. Not being an accountant, this may be a rather simple-minded example; I am sure any accountant would say that the figures from year to year do not follow. However, I have just assumed some hypothetical numbers and I have allowed the profit of the firm to fluctuate. The example assumes a four-man partnership which is reasonably profitable. I have allowed it a profit as a firm across the top.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, before Mr. Smith starts explaining the table on the blackboard, could we at this stage instruct the reporters to leave a space in order to have that table inserted in the record?

The Chairman: Yes. They have already copied the table from the board. It will be incorporated in the record.

Senator Connolly: At this point?

The Chairman: Yes. It will not go in as an appendix.

TABLE II

	1971	1972	1973	1974
Profit for year	200,000	220,000	160,000	240,000
Net Receivables	50,000	55,000	40,000	60,000
Other Assets	10,000	10,000	10,000	10,000
Total Assets	60,000	65,000	50,000	70,000
Payables	10,000	11,000	8,000	12,000
Partners' Equity	50,000	54,000	42,000	58,000
Adjusted Cost Base of each partner's interest	12,500	13,500	10,500	14,500

Mr. Smith: Across the top of the chart I have four taxation years; the numbers are all with the thousands omitted. The headings are down the left-hand side. The first heading is the profit of the firm. The second heading is the account receivable outstanding at the end of the year. The next heading is the fixed assets or other assets, making a total asset which is the fourth heading down. The next heading is the accounts payable at the end of the year.

"Equity" means the equity of all of the partners in the firm—the total of all of the partners' capital accounts. The final figure across the bottom is the adjusted cost base of each partner's interest. This assumes that the four partners each have a 25 per cent interest, so I have just divided the equity of the firm by four. I have let the profit fluctuate from year to year starting out with a base in 1971 that rises in 1972 and then falls below the 1971 figure in 1973 and then recovers to a greater number in 1974, and I have allowed the various financial assets to fluctuate in proportion to it. That is why I say most accountants would take the position that this does not follow, but it serves my purpose.

Senator Beaubien: How would the assets be taxable?

Mr. Smith: These are all balance sheet items from the end of the year.

Senator Beaubien: Yes, but you do not pay income tax on the assets.

Mr. Smith: This is just setting out a typical balance sheet which I will use for some examples. If you take a particular partner of the firm in 1972 having a 25 per cent interest in the profits and the capital of the firm, his share of the profits will be $55,000; 25 per cent of the top figure. Now, section 23(1) gives him a deduction of the accounts payable that were outstanding at the end of 1971. Taking 1972 as an example, his interest in the profits would be $55,000, so what we are looking at is his 1972 adjustment to income under Rule 23. He has income of $55,000 as his share of the profits. Under Section 23(1) he can deduct his share of the accounts payable that were outstanding at the end of the previous year.

Senator Connolly: The second-last line is his interest in the profits?

Mr. Smith: No, this is the profits. These are the accounts receivable; these are the other assets; this is the total assets; this is the accounts payable; and this is the total partners' equity and the adjusted cost base. His share of the equity, if he has a 25 per cent interest—

Senator Connolly: The accounts receivable just happen to coincide with the equity?

Mr. Smith: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Smith: Now, in 1972 you start off with the partner's income of $55,000. Section 23(1) gives him a deduction for his portion of the accounts payable which are outstanding at the end of the previous year. That is this figure. His share of that would be one quarter on $2,500, so he can deduct that when computing his income for the year 1972. You then move over to section 23(3)(a) under which he is entitled to deduct the lesser of his share of the 1971 accounts receivable which is this figure here and which amounts to $12,500 or the adjusted cost base of his interest in the partnership at the end of the taxation year 1972; this is this figure over here. That gives him a deduction of the lesser of the two figures.

The Chairman: Would you mention the figures?

Mr. Smith: The lesser of $13,500 or one quarter of the 1971 accounts receivable, which is $12,500, so he would be allowed to deduct $12,500. Moving over to subparagraph (c) of Section 23(3) it says to add the amount that you deducted the previous year. Well, you did not deduct anything the previous year under that subsection so subsection (c) says that you add instead your share of the 1971 accounts receivable which is the figure of $50,000 and 25 per cent of that is $12,500, so you add $12,500. You have deducted $12,500 and you have added $12,500 which results in you having no adjustment to income.

Senator Molson: You still deduct the $2,500.

Mr. Smith: Yes, the two $12,500 washed themselves out, but you have a deduction for the $2,500 for the payables. Your net adjustment in 1972, then, would be $2,500.

In 1973, however, the activity of the firm has fallen and the partners' equity has been reduced. In other words, they have taken out a portion of the financial assets; they have not maintained their equity at $54,000. They have let it drop to $42,000.

Mr. Smith: I have allowed it to fluctuate with the level of income, but there is no necessary connection between the two. The key to this is how much you draw out of the firm. If you maintain the investment interest or equity that you had in 1972, you will not have to make any adjustment to income. It is only when you pull out capital, as it were, that you run into an adjustment. If you run through the examples for 1973 your have income of $40,000 which is 14 of $160,000. You have no adjustment to make for the accounts payable, 1971, because that has been taken care of in 1972. It is just a one-year provision. You then go to section 23(3)(a) and you deduct the lesser amount that you deducted for 1972, which you will recall was $12,500 or the adjusted cost base of your partnership. The interest of all of the partners has fallen off and one-quarter of the interest is now only worth $10,500, so what you deduct as being the lesser is the $10,500. You then come to section 23(3)(c) and you find you have to add the amount you deducted the year before, which was $12,500. Now, you have deducted $10,500 and you have added $12,500, so you have an adjustment to income of plus $2,000. The reason for that is that you have allowed your investment interest to drop, and the Government says that by allowing your investment interest to drop you are pulling out some of the accounts receivable which were outstanding in 1971, and because the Government deems you to be pulling out that money it requires you to include a portion of it as income.

I do not need to run through the example for 1974 because you will see that the investment interest has risen again to a greater number than it was back here, and the effect of that is that there will be no adjustment in 1974, no inclusion of income as a result of section 23(3).

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, if other methods of preparing income tax returns for other groups in the economy are as complicated as these in this act are, I do not know where we are getting to. We have many lawyers in this committee, and we have two very brilliant young men giving us an explanation of this section, yet we are having the greatest difficulty trying to understand it, much less say that we are able to operate it. Now we are asked, in other words, to foist this on the public of Canada and say, "Here, this is the way that you should run your affairs and make up your tax returns." We have all complained through the years about the complications of the Income Tax Act, but it seems to me that this is beyond the bounds.

The Chairman: Well, Senator Connolly, perhaps what we need at this time is a reincarnation of the Gilbert and Sullivan era so that we could really put this to music.

Senator Sullivan: Only you should give it a name other than Sullivan!

The Chairman: Perhaps in that way the public would get some understanding of the complications.

Senator Molson: It might be a bit of a dirge.

The Chairman: The way to deal with this one is to lam-poon it.

Mr. Smith: I have heard Arthur Scace attempt to sing. I think you would need to get a new cast, if you were going to do that.

The Chairman: Perhaps you could take the tenor lead yourself.

Senator Molson: Mr. Smith, this establishes the income of the partner in the partnership. Is this correct? What happens when he moves that into his own tax return?

Mr. Smith: I will come to how you account for partnership income, but the point of this, first of all, is to bring it into the 1971 receivables and then allow a reserve. The effect of the reserve is that so long as you have a professional practice that is increasing in volume and you keep your capital account up to not less than what it was in 1972—in other words, you are not pulling your capital out of the firm—you will never have to bring this reserve into income until such time as you decide to retire or such time as your practice declines in volume and, hence, there are fewer financial assets invested in it.

Senator Molson: You see in 1973, for example, the accounts payable are down and therefore pull more out of the business and the individual has a bigger income.

Mr. Smith: Yes.

Senator Molson: And that is the year when the partnership's receipts are down.

Mr. Smith: I said that these numbers do not necessarily add up from year to year, but are just hypothetical examples.

Senator Molson: But that point is still valid. If the receivables are down $15,000 and the accounts payable are only down $3,000, then the money has gone out.

Mr. Smith: Yes, it has gone into the hands of the partners. What the Government is trying to do is only tax the 1971 receivables as that money is, in fact, withdrawn from the business by the partners—or it could be a sole proprietor or corporation.

The Chairman: If you leave it there as a sort of permanent capital, there is no tax problem.

Mr. Smith: That is right.

The Chairman: At that time.

Senator Connolly: What we are trying to get at, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that some professional groups do not render accounts, or they wait for a long period of time before they do. Is this the thing that these sections are trying to correct?

The Chairman: I think in the course of the White Paper hearings there was the suggestion that there were long delays in billing and you would have money on account that you just kept.

Senator Connolly: And you would draw on it in the bad years.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Perhaps I am being simple-minded about this, but suppose for the sake of argument we use the example that I am one of the partners and that in 1971 I am entitled to $55,000 from the firm, that in 1972 I am entitled to $55,000, and that in 1973, when I have been living at the rate of $50,000-$55,000, I am down to $40,000. If we have in this firm money that would give me another $10,000, representing accounts which have not been billed, and if I bill them in 1973, what is wrong about billing them in 1973 and paying at the rate of $50,000 in 1973?

The Chairman: If you bill them in 1973, then of course they are income in 1973.

Senator Connolly: That is right, and presumably you would pay at the rate of $50,000.

The Chairman: We are talking about the accounts receivable with which you come into this taxation period. In other words, we are talking about the 1971 receivables.

Mr. Smith: Say your income in 1973 is only $40,000 for that year, but they assume that because you have allowed your investment interest to drop below what it was in 1972 you have withdrawn some of this float in 1971 accounts receivable at the end of 1971. If you were on a cash basis in 1971 you would not have accounted for the $50,000 of accounts receivable. If you just went on to this accrual method you would never account for it. You would have that money to pull out in cash and never pay tax on it. So Rule 23 says that we are going to make you account for this $50,000 which would otherwise be ignored in the transition from cash to accrual, but we are only going to make you account for it when, in fact, you withdraw it from the firm and you do that when you allow your investment interest to drop, that is your capital account, to drop below what it was in 1972.

That is really all that they are trying to get at. Otherwise you would get your share of the accounts receivable free of tax.

The Honourable Lazarus Phillips (Chief Counsel to the Committee): Had you covered the point previously made by Senator Connolly, if a bill is capable of being billed in the sense that the work is completed and, if you deliberately postpone it, it must come into income even though not billed?

Mr. Smith: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: You covered that?

Senator Connolly: And the department has the discretion to tell you that.

Senator Lang: This has been dealt with in other contexts in the act merely by taking the average rate of taxation over the preceding three or five years. I do not see why the same problem could not be dealt with in the same way here. It would not be quite as advantageous. I am sure that any professional firm would rather pay an average rate on the $50,000 over the succeeding five years than to go through this ridiculous computation every year for the lifetime of the partnership.

Mr. Smith: It enables you to defer it until such time as you do withdraw it.

Senator Lang: Indefinitely, in other words.

Mr. Smith: So it is more generous than requiring you to include it in a three-year period.

Senator Lang: I recognize that it is more generous than what I am suggesting, but I am saying that a recognized technique in this sort of case where you get a balloon effect might be better.

Mr. Smith: That is, in fact, what they did for corporations. They defined the investment interest, if you had a corporation carrying on the profession, as being a proportion of the 1971 receivables which declines by one-tenth for each year for the next ten years so that a corporation could bring in one-tenth of it every year.

Senator Lang: I think that would be much better than what is contemplated here.

The Chairman: It is an alternative we can look at, senator, when we get to that stage.

Mr. Smith: The problem really arises when you have people withdrawing from partnerships and not getting their full share of all the financial assets of the partnership. Really, what it is going to force partnerships to do is to revise their partnership agreements in the light of these rules and the new methods of accounting, which might be a good thing. I think many legal partnerships have been giving too little attention to their own partnership agreements and to their own accounting.

Senator Lang: I agree. I think the ordinary accrual method of accounting is far superior to the cash basis method. I am in favour of that proposition, but we have some complicated roll-over on receivables which is an unduly burdensome technique and is going to complicate partnership agreements tremendously, especially when a partner withdraws and so on. You are going to have infinite calculations, which any sound person would want to avoid even if it meant a little more tax.

The Chairman: On the point of dealing with a partnership when a partner retires or dies, that partner would still have an interest in the accounts receivable of 1971 that had not been drawn down.

Senator Lang: He is going to get the balloon effect then.

Mr. Scace: You would have to amend most partnership agreements so that when a man dies or leaves he is given enough cash to pay his tax on his share of the receivables and other amounts. When there is a withdrawal of one partner, there should be a provision that the partnership is not dissolved at that time. I think most partnership agreements in existence now have in effect a dissolution of the partnership when one partner withdraws or dies.

The Chairman: I think with respect to many partnerships nowadays, on the pay-out which it becomes necessary to make following retirement or death, there is a provision for the instalment liquidation of his interest over a period of years so that it does not come out.

Mr. Smith: The other technique is that forward averaging by purchase of an income averaging annuity will be available, and also Rule 47 of the Transitional Rules perpetuates the present averaging provisions that are in section 70, so that a partner who dies could average over 5 years the accounts receivable that would come into income at death. Or there is the option of filing a separate return as if that year those receivables had been received in separate years. You would get another crack at the rates.

The Chairman: And his marginal rate on that amount would only be whatever that amount attracted.

Mr. Smith: Yes.

The Chairman: That is the value of a separate return?

Mr. Smith: Yes.

If there are no further questions, I will try to give a brief survey of how partnerships are to account for tax purposes.

Senator Walker: I saw you smiling when you said that and I think it should be on the record.

Mr. Smith: I said "brief" because there are only two ways of doing this, either as a quick survey or getting bogged down in some of the detailed provisions. I do not think we have time to do the latter.

Senator Burchill: In comparing the two methods, we had representations made during our hearings on the White Paper from the professional groups who wanted to retain the cash method. That seemed to be the general view. Now I am not quite clear as to why the Government wants to make the change. Is there much money involved in it?

Mr. Smith: There may be. It is really a question of the timing of the income, and a cash method of accounting gives most taxpayers who are on it a deferral. They don't bring money into income as fast as they may be earning it, but only as fast as they are getting paid for it. It comes in eventually, but at any time you can defer tax you have the use of the money that would otherwise have gone in taxes. So it is of some benefit to you, and I guess the government thought the benefit was not justified in these cases. But I think the point that most of the professions were upset about was the fact that they would have to account for work in progress, and I say the provisions in the bill are a compromise in that it gives the professional the option not to account for work in progress. That was the key point. Sure, any professional would like to stay on a cash basis of accounting, but he is in a sort of midway position if he is on accrual method for his receivables but does not have to account for work in progress unless he wants to do so. And that compromise is a real benefit at least to lawyers.

Senator Benidickson: I am glad to hear of that compromise because practising in a small town, without an expert accountant such as you might have in a large office, it is practically impossible to get your bills out, if you are rushed. Your billing is rather a personal affair. Therefore it is not a matter of having the use of any money and not paying taxes promptly on the use of that money, because you do not get paid until you bill. But the average small office of a professional man only gets paid after he bills. He does not get what is on his books as a receivable.

Mr. Smith: Perhaps I could quickly go through partnership accounting. The basic change made is to require the computation of income—and I do not mean taxable income; I mean the profit or income of the partnership—at the partnership level instead of partner by partner. The theory at present is that you compute the income of each partner, but from a practical point of view I think most accountants have been doing it at the partnership level anyway, and then coming down to the partners' share of it. I think the act is just catching up with the accounting practice in this case. If you look at section 3 of the act you will find that the income of a taxpayer includes among other things his income from each business or property. You will remember that that was the charging section we were looking at yesterday.

Now section 12(1)(L) provides that there is to be included in computing the income of a taxpayer for the taxation year as income from a business or property any amount that by virtue of subdivision (j) of the bill, is his income for the year from a business or property. So you then go to subdivision (j) which comprises sections 96 to 103 and you find the rules for computing the income of a partnership.

If you just look at section 96 for a moment you will find it is the key section and what it says is to compute the income of a partner as if (a) the partnership was a separate person resident in Canada, (b) as if the partnership had a tax year the same as its fiscal year and (c) as if each partnership activity was carried on by a separate person, and you made a source by source computation of each taxable capital gain—that is the one-half you have to include in income—and each allowable capital loss, that is, the half of the capital loss that you can deduct—and each income from the business and each loss from the business for each year. (d) says you compute all these things as if there was no deduction for exploration and development or depletion and (e) says that you compute it as if each gain from certain farming land was computed without capitalizing interest and property taxes. But that is of minor significance, I think, in the usual professional context I have been talking about.

Now subsection (f) and subsection (g) say that you compute the income of a partner as if the income or loss of the partnership from each source for a taxation year was the income or loss of the partner from that source to the extent of his interest. The reason for this source-by-source computation is that it is not the partnership which gets certain deductions in computing taxable income but rather the partner. So in order to give the partner his dividend tax credit, his depletion, his exploration and development expenses and so on, you have to be able to source the income of the partnership.

Now the partnership takes all the deductions permitted under division (c) of the act but those are usually the deductions to compute income. But those deductions do not include certain things such as charitable donations, prior years' business losses, dividend tax credits and so on. The biggest effect of this change requiring the computation of income at the partnership level is that capital cost allowances will now be taken at that level instead of partner by partner. And that requires you to transfer the depreciation base of each partner at the start of the new system to the partnership. That is done with a series of detailed rules, which appear to work, and they are complex only because up to now it was up to each partner to decide how much capital cost allowance he actually claimed. One partner could claim it faster than another, if he wished, up to the maximums provided by the act. So there could be situations in which some partners had claimed more than others. The bill requires the transfer of the base that the partner who has claimed the most would have in the assets, as if he had the whole interest. You just multiply by 100 over his percentage interest in the firm to arrive at the firm's total depreciation base. A partner that had not claimed as much would be left with some balance that had not been deducted. So the solution is to allow him to write it off as he pleases.

Senator Connolly: Up to now you have been referring to professional partners?

Mr. Smith: All partnerships.

Senator Connolly: But, generally speaking, professional partners have no depreciable assets.

The Chairman: They have some.

Senator Connolly: Well, equipment and furniture; it is relatively minor when compared to business partnerships dealing in land and so on.

Mr. Smith: That would be true of a professional partnership. However, I am now referring to all partnerships, no matter what business they carry on. As you know, it is relatively rare for most businesses to be carried on as partnerships unless there is some impediment to their incorporation.

Senator Connolly: Perhaps professional partnerships should be allowed to incorporate.

The Chairman: You would have to talk to the Law Society.

Senator Connolly: I know.

Mr. Smith: The non-professional side of a professional business can be incorporated. Any large professional partnership will have the clerical help it requires, space, stationery and services of that type. It is always open to the professional partnership to incorporate that side of it and have the corporation charge it for services. That would simplify the accounting of most partnerships.

The Chairman: I am formulating a phrasing for the deductions you are explaining as between partnerships and the individual partners. I suppose the real description would be that there are partnership deductions and there are personal deductions?

Mr. Smith: That is right. I do not wish to discuss the detailed ways in which the depreciation base of the partnership would be transferred. They are set out in Rule 20 and are rather complex, to say the least, but they appear to work.

Senator Molson: They ask for clarification of Rule 96(1)(b), which provides:

... as if ...

(b) the taxation year of the partnership were its fiscal period.

Mr. Smith: They are not taxing the partnership, but computing the income of the partnership as if it were an individual taxpayer. So they must give it a taxation year. It does not have one if it is not taxable, so they pretend its taxation year is its fiscal period and compute its income for that period as if it were the taxpayer. When you come right down to it, it is the partner who is taxed, not the partnership. However, they are computing the income of the firm at the partnership level and then attributing it to the partners.

Senator Molson: The expressions taxation year and fiscal period trouble me, because the fiscal period may contain different rates because of different taxation years.

Mr. Smith: It means basically that the partner includes in his income this computation of income at the partnership level for any fiscal period of the partnership which ends in his own taxation year. In the case of a partnership with a January 31 year end, the individual partner has a calendar year end. For calendar year 1972, the partner's income would include his share of the income of the partnership for the 12 months ended January 31, 1972.

Senator Molson: Then why does it not say so?

Mr. Smith: That is what it is attempting to say.

Senator Molson: Oh, I am sorry; I am a little dense.

The Chairman: Let us have a look at where the attempt is, Mr. Smith.

Mr. Smith: It is section 96.

The Chairman: Do you mean in paragraph (b)?

Mr. Smith: To tie it all together, in starting I went through the relationship between these various charging sections, 3, 12(1)(l) and 96. You have to look at all three of those; it pulls into the individual partner's income his share for the fiscal period of the partnership that ends in his own taxation year. Many of these provisions really have to be set out and puzzled over to see what they say.

Senator Molson: Either you are adjusting the fiscal period to meet the taxation year, or you are changing the taxation year to agree with the fiscal period to make this work. I am not quite clear what you are doing.

If the fiscal period of the partnership ends at April 30, is the taxation period of the partnership the year ending April 30?

Mr. Smith: Yes; it says computing the income of the partnership as if it were a taxpayer having that year-end. Once that is done and an income figure emerges which is attributed to the partners. They include it in their calendar year in which the fiscal year of the partnership happens to end.

The Chairman: In the case of a partner on a calendar year and a partnership on any month in that year, that partnership income would be included in the partner's income in his fiscal period of the calendar year if the partnership fiscal period terminated within that year.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: The individual files on a calendar basis and the partnership income at the close of its fiscal year, as if it were a taxpayer, is included in the individual calendar year.

The Chairman: It could mean that with a fiscal year ending April 30, 1972, and the partner having to account for that income in his 1972 calendar year, the partnership period would start in 1971.

Senator Molson: That is right.

Mr. Smith: To go on to another topic, obviously there are two ways of obtaining a capital gain. The partnership can sell an asset and realize a capital gain, or the partner may sell his interest in the partnership and realize it that way. The bill attempts to provide a variety of roll-overs or tax-free transfers where no capital gain or loss is recognized, to permit people to come into, retire from and incorporate partnerships, and so on. There are a number of types of transactions; transfers of property to a partnership by either a partner or someone who becomes a partner at that time; transfer to a partner from a partnership; transfer to a corporation from a partnership, where the partnership business is being incorporated; sale of an interest in a partnership; and sales of property by the partnership itself to third parties.

Generally, the partnership is treated as if it were a person for the purpose of computing gains or losses, half of either then being attributed to the partners themselves. I think it is probably sufficient to say that there are these various types of roll-overs. They are quite technical. The first one is a roll-over to the partnership from a partner or someone who is becoming a partner by transferring property.

The Chairman: What section is that?

Mr. Smith: Section 97. It is a roll-over if all of the partners concur, and it is a Canadian partnership. There are limitations on the election and it does get rather technical.

Section 98 has in it roll-overs where there is a disposition by the partnership of property to a partner. Section 98(3) is the roll-over you get on dissolution.

Senator Walker: How does that work?

Mr. Smith: You do not really want to know, do you, Senator?

Senator Walker: I know it is complicated.

The Chairman: Section 98(3) has a lot of words in it and there it is.

Mr. Smith: Section 98(6) allows you to dissolve a partnership and yet not be deemed to have realized capital gains provided all of the partners form a new partnership. If that takes place they deem the old partnership to have continued. In section 85(2) there is a roll-over on the transfer of property to a corporation; this is similar to the roll-over that a sole proprietor would have. There is also a roll-over where a partnership chooses to incorporate a subsidiary; that is in section 85(3).

Generally speaking, I think they have been reasonably generous with the roll-overs, and the limitations which they have imposed on them are really intended to prevent tax avoidance by the use of the roll-overs.

A rather technical subject is the computation of the adjusted cost-base of a partner's interest in a partnership. Mr. Scace was mentioning how you compute various kinds of adjusted cost bases under section 53, and there are special rules for partnerships under that section.

There are also some transitional rules in Rule 26(9) to get your starting adjusted cost base where you have a partnership in existence, and again those rules are very technical. I think with the amount of time we have left we really should not get into them. I just mention it because they are there, and basically they look at all the tax values of the various assets of the partnership and give each partner his share of them as a starting point.

The Chairman: Would you say the rules work reasonably fairly?

Mr. Smith: If they mean what I think they mean, they work reasonably fairly, yes.

The Chairman: Is there any doubt about the meaning you have described?

Mr. Smith: I find if you stare at them long enough, Mr. Chairman, the meaning starts to come through. There may be some amendments which will make them easier to read.

The Chairman: I suppose you should assign reading time limits and realize then that if you read for that amount of time you are guaranteed to understand them.

Mr. Scace: Do you want a time limit on that? Mr. Smith is one of the few people in the country, I think, who completely understands the partnership provisions. It took a reading time of approximately one month.

Mr. Smith: That was partly because I had my feet off the edge of a dock while I was doing it. It always takes longer that way.

The Chairman: You had to dealy while the fish came on the line.

Mr. Smith: Yes. I would like to turn this over to Mr. Scace now because he is going to go through corporations, which is a very complicated subject and it would be something of a whirlwind tour if he finished before lunch.

The Chairman: There are no other questions on the partnership aspect? There is some reading we have to do, but that is to be expected. At least we know where it is now and we have the particular references.

Mr. Arthur Scace is now going to move into the area of corporations and distributions to shareholders.

Mr. Scace: This is a fairly lengthy topic. I think we can only do a gloss on it, but we will try to run through it and I will try to do it in a way that will make some sense. It is hard to know with corporations just where to start. To begin with, I just want to give you two or three definitions of the various types of companies and perhaps you will keep them in mind as we go along.

The first definition is of a public corporation. You will find that definition in section 89(1)(g). Essentially it is a corporation resident in Canada whose shares are listed on a prescribed stock exchange or, alternatively, a corporation may elect to be a public corporation if it complies with certain conditions relating to ownership, shares, and market distribution.

The Chairman: The minister has a discretion, then, does he not?

Mr. Scace: That is right. The minister may designate a corporation to be a public corporation if it complies with certain conditions. At this point in time we really do not know what the conditions are; we just know the general range that will be considered. They will come out in the regulations.

The next definition is that of a private corporation. It is defined in section 89(1)(f):

"private corporation" at any particular time means a corporation that, at the particular time, was resident in Canada, was not a public corporation, and was not controlled, directly or indirectly in any manner whatever, by one or more public corporations;

A subsidiary of a public corporation, therefore, could not be a private corporation. It does not get any particular name under the bill; I guess you can just call it an ordinary corporation.

There is also no real significance to being a public corporation. You just get the general tax treatment, but it is necessary to have the definition in order to determine whether a company is a private corporation.

A third important type of company is called a Canadian-controlled private corporation. You will find the definition for that in section 125(6)(a). It means:

a private corporation that is a Canadian corporation other than a corporation controlled, directly or indirectly in any manner whatever, by one or more non-resident persons, by one or more public corporations or by any combination thereof;

In other words, if you have control by non-residents or control by a public corporation you will not qualify as a Canadian-controlled private company. The significance of being a Canadian-controlled private company is that you are entitled to the small business reduction under section 125. We will talk about that in a moment.

The Chairman: Mr. Scace, your reference there with respect to special tax treatment refers to the small business reduction, does it?

Mr. Scace: Yes. A Canadian-controlled private corporation is entitled to a reduction in tax. We will deal with that specifically in a moment.

The Chairman: I just thought we should label it.

Mr. Scace: Yes. The next thing I would like to go on to is the dividend tax credit. The dividend tax credit has been changed under the new bill. As you know, we now have a 20 per cent dividend tax credit on dividends received from taxable Canadian companies. Under the present system, if you receive a $100 dividend from a Canadian company your rate of tax is 50 per cent which means your tax is $50 and you can subtract 20 per cent of the dividend so that the deduction of 20 per cent gives you a net tax on that dividend of $30. I think we are all familiar with that. It really gives you a reduction of 20 percentage points on any dividend that you receive. This is going to be changed under the new bill by a grossing-up of dividend tax credit. The authority for doing that is section 82.

How this will operate is really fairly simple in concept. I will give you the simple way of doing it and then I will show you how it actually operates.

You take a dividend of $300, and because of the dividend tax credit being one-third—it is now one-third rather than 20 per cent because it is easier to deal with either $75 or $300—the dividend tax credit under section 82 is one-third of the dividend, which would be $100. But you take the $100 and you add it to the dividend. That gives you $400, which is the amount upon which you will calculate your tax. If we still have the 50 per cent tax rate, then at 50 per cent we will get $200 in tax. But we are then entitled to deduct the amount of the gross-up or the amount of the credit so that we will get minus $100 and your tax will therefore be $100.

The actual mechanics of the dividend tax credit are a little more complicated than that. Essentially, what you would get on a straight dividend where there is no interest expense, is that, if you are a 40 per cent taxpayer or under, the new credit is more beneficial; if you are 40 per cent, it is exactly the same as under the present system; if you are over 40 per cent, it is less advantageous.

The Chairman: Just to get an idea of the application of this, the 40 per cent rate would be in relation to about $11,000 in taxable income.

Mr. Scace: Yes, the 40 per cent rate would be on a taxable income between $11,000 and $14,000.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Scace, what is the reference for taking the grossing-up amount off the tax you would otherwise pay?

Mr. Scace: I will come to that, senator. It is a little more complicated. The reference is section 121.

The way this operates, if we take our $300 dividend, we gross-up the one-third dividend tax credit. That gives us $400.

Senator Connolly: Would it throw everybody off, Mr. Chairman, if I asked why that $100 gross-up is added? Is it because of a credit?

Mr. Scace: You get the credit later on.

Senator Connolly: I realize that, but what is the antecedent of this?

Mr. Scace: I do not know whether I can answer that question. A simple answer is that it is because they tell you to do it. But I think the real answer is that if you want to get integration, well, the dividend tax credit is really partial integration. You will see when we come to the investment income of private companies that it is completely integrated under the bill. I think without the gross-up you would not get the integration.

The Chairman: Is there not another suggestion that might be made, that a credit is a form of income?

Mr. Scace: I suppose that is right.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I think the real answer, Senator Connolly, is that this method is a lingering curse of partial integration that the other chamber allowed to go in. We recommended the complete annihilation. This partial integration has given us two problems: this being one of them, and the other being one which this speaker will come to later, namely, the 33 13 per cent tax on the private companies. Those are the two bequests of partial integration that the other house has given us.

Senator Connolly: I think Hon. Mr. Phillips is right about that. With respect to the 33 13 per cent tax credit, I think there is some harking back to the fact that so many Canadian companies being resource industries you are dealing with a wasting asset and it was a 33 13 per cent tax credit because it is a Canadian company. What is the genesis of the tax credit?

Senator Beaubien: Let us deal with this thing first.

Senator Connolly: Senator Beaubien, the point that bothers me in this is the background. I think that in order to understand it thoroughly we have to know the background of the whole thing.

Mr. Scace: The genesis of the tax is obviously an incentive to buy Canadian shares. The amount of the incentive could be anything from 1 per cent to 100 per cent, depending on how good you want to make it. The mechanics of it could be anything as well.

One interesting feature you referred to inferentially is that you get the dividend tax credit on any dividend from a taxable Canadian company, and there is nothing in the bill comparable to the White Paper where the Canadian company had to have paid tax. So the shareholders of resource companies or companies with large capital cost allowance deductions will get the dividend tax credit, whereas under the White Paper integration they would not have received any entitlement.

Senator Connolly: I think I have enough now.

Mr. Scace: If you look at the tax rates in the act, the specific federal rates are set out and you must add 30 per cent of the federal rate for the province. If we take a 40 per cent federal rate for this calculation, in addition to that there will be a provincial tax of 30 per cent of the 40 per cent which will be 12 per cent. Then we are really looking at a total of 52 per cent. You have your grossed-up amount of $400. You apply 40 per cent to that and it is $160. Section 121 says that you do not deduct the $100, the full amount of the gross-up. Rather you deduct four-fifths of that amount, which would be $80. That would give you a federal tax of $80. To get your total tax you then have to add the provincial tax, which is 30 per cent of $80, or $24. This gives you a total tax of $104 for a 52 per cent rate taxpayer.

The reason they picked four-fifths was, according to my understanding, that it was the closest whole number or easy fraction that was beneficial to the taxpayer in every case. Also, if they did it any other way the provinces would have to legislate a dividend tax credit. So this was the easy way. I can show you how it comes out with a better result doing it this way. If you take your $300 dividend and gross it up with the $100 tax credit and then apply the 52 per cent rate to the $400, that will produce $208. If you then deduct the $100 credit you will end up owing $108 in tax as opposed to the $104 in tax arrived at by the way I showed you previously. That indicates that with the four-fifths, and the slight complication it involves, taxpayers are in fact better off.

One last thing on the dividend tax credit under the current Act is this. If you had borrowed money to buy shares and you received dividends on the shares, in calculating your dividend tax credit, you must deduct the interest from the dividend. So, if you received a $100 dividend and you had a $50 interest expense, the amount on which you could take the dividend tax credit would be $50 so that rather than getting a $20 dividend tax credit you would only get a $10 dividend tax credit. This has been changed under the bill in that the interest expense does not have to be deducted for the purpose of calculating the credit. Where there is an interest expense involved, the dividend tax credit is much more advantageous for all levels of taxpayers under the present bill.

Senator Lang: If you borrow money.

Mr. Scace: If you borrow money. Now coming back to companies, there will be a flat rate of tax for companies. You will find this in section 123. For 1972 it is going to be 50 per cent. It will then decline by 1 per cent per year until 1976 when it reaches 46 per cent. You will of course have your provincial credits and your provincial taxes as well.

Senator Connolly: The 30 per cent provincial tax remains stationary, does it?

Mr. Scace: Well, 30 per cent provincial tax for individuals is what the federal Government would like the provincial governments to impose.

Senator Connolly: Subject to what the provinces might do, the 30 per cent remains despite the decrease in the amount of federal taxes.

Mr. Scace: Right. Now you have this flat maximum rate of tax, but you also have what they call the small business reduction which is supposed to be the counterpart of the split rate of tax we now have, that is 21 per cent of the first $35,000. The small business reduction will be 25 per cent in 1972, and it will reduce with the reduction in the top rate until it reaches 21 per cent in 1976. So a company entitled to the small business reduction will pay a tax of 25 per cent on its eligible income.

Senator Lang: We are back to pre-1949 now.

Mr. Scace: Was that the rate at that time, senator?

The Chairman: But that is limited.

Mr. Scace: That is right, and I want to tell you about the limitations. It is very complex, but section 125 provides for the small business reduction starting off at 25 per cent. As I said, the only kind of company entitled to a small business reduction is a Canadian controlled private corporation. The reduction is limited to income earned from an active business, and we cannot really tell you what an active business is. There probably will be some litigation on that. In addition there is an annual limit of $50,000 per year and there is also a total limit of $400,000. Now one thing I do not think is particularly clear in the red book, the summary, and there seems to be some confusion among business people is that if you at any time in a Canadian controlled private company earn $400,000 of active business income you lose the small business reduction. If you have a company that in 1972 is fortunate enough to earn $400,000 you will get the small business reduction in 1972, but never after that because it has hit the total business limit. On the other hand if it only makes $50,000 each year, it will take eight years before it gets up to the $400,000 limit.

Senator Connolly: Once it reaches that, is there a change?

Mr. Scace: Once it reaches the $400,000, it is finished, subject to this: the maximum can be reduced by paying dividends to the shareholders and for every $3 in dividends paid to a shareholder, the maximum is reduced by $4. Let us take an example. If I have a company that has reached the $400,000 limit and there is cash in the company and the company pays the shareholders a $75,000 dividend, the maximum amount will be reduced by four-thirds of that which is $100,000, and when you deduct that $100,000 you end up with $300,000 and so you have recouped $100,000 which is available for the small business reduction.

The Chairman: That is the only way to be reincarnated?

Mr. Scace: It is really the only way, that is correct.

Senator Molson: This limit that is defined here, does it mean net profit?

Mr. Scace: The maximum is $400,000 minus a thing called the cumulative deduction account, and you will find that in section 125(b)(i). You will find it is the corporation's taxable income for the year from an active business. So what you have then is the maximum of $400,000 minus the cumulative deduction account which among other things says you add your taxable income from an active business. That would be your income after adding deductions to compute your taxable income.

The Chairman: One of the points put forward to us by representatives of small business when they were here was that they cannot go out and borrow money in the usual way as larger operations can do. They have to generate the money themselves. Now this new method of calculating your entitlement to the lower rate of tax would appear to defeat that, because if you want to stay in the ball park and enjoy for a period of time that lower rate, you must keep paying out dividends to reduce the impact of the cumulative effect which will build you up to $400,000. Of course, the shareholders could take it and accomplish that and then, I suppose, lend it back to the small business.

Senator Lang: After tax—that is the whole problem.

Senator Carter: It also defines a small business.

The Chairman: Yes. We wrestled a long time with that, if you remember; we had a great deal of evidence.

Senator Carter: It ceases to be a small business when it has over $400,000 of capital.

Mr. Scace: There are several complicating features to the small business reduction. The availability can be lost if the tax saving or the tax reduction is not used in the active business. A penalty tax is imposed under Part V of the act, which starts at section 188. Basically it provides that if the business had been entitled to the small business reduction and the saving was taken and put into what is termed a non-qualified, or ineligible investment, which is defined, a tax of 25 per cent on two times the amount of the ineligible investment will be levied. So the tax saving cannot be taken and put into most normal types of portfolio investments. Otherwise this penalty tax must be paid.

In addition, under Part VI there is another penalty tax. This starts at section 191. When a Canadian-controlled private company, that is the one entitled to the small business reduction, is taken over by a non-resident, the amount of the tax will be the tax saving that the acquired company had been entitled to, or has taken under the small business reduction. This tax will not be fully on stream until eight years from now. For instance, a company making $50,000 a year would take eight years before it reached the $400,000. The tax saving on that would be $100,000, which would be the penalty tax on a non-resident acquisition.

The interesting thing with this particular tax is that if it is intended to discourage non-resident take-overs, it possibly does it, but I think it does it in a funny way, because it will not really be a tax on a non-resident. I think its effect will be that the price that the Canadian shareholder can demand will be reduced, so that the effect will be a tax on the Canadian vendor, which will discourage him from selling to a non-resident.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Any resemblance to a banana republic in our country is coincidental.

The Chairman: Mr. Scace, may I just attempt to get the effect of that: if a small business has not reached its cumulative limit of $400,000 and it is decided to sell out to a non-resident, the penalty tax is on the small company and its shareholders. If they waited until they reached their cumulative limit, after which time they would no longer be entitled to the lower rate of tax, then this penalty tax in sections 190 and 199 would not apply, would it?

Mr. Scace: The tax will apply in the case of a non-resident take-over of a Canadian-controlled private company, even if it has gone above the limit and that happened some years previously.

However, there is an interesting wrinkle to your question, in that there is no penalty tax when a Canadian-controlled private corporation which has taken the reduction goes public. If it could comply with the conditions prescribed for a public company, it might be able to qualify. There would be no tax or recapture of the small business reduction and then it could sell out. It would probably avoid the Part VI tax on a non-resident take-over.

The Chairman: You mean it might get the minister to exercise his discretion.

Mr. Scace: If he knew what was going to be done I doubt if he would, but that is a possibility.

Also, similar to the low rate of tax we have now, there are rules with respect to associated companies. However, they have been loosened up a little. The basic rules are contained in section 256(1); that is the equivalent of section 39(4) of the present act. For instance, in a situation of a husband owning one company and a wife owning another, under the present act if either one of them owns one share in the other's company they are associated. That has been relaxed to a 10 per cent limitation.

We also have the deemed association rules under the new bill, section 138A(2) of the present act, section 247(2) of the bill. As a result of the association, a Canadian-controlled private corporation that has taken a small business reduction on $200,000 will lose the reduction if it is acquired by another Canadian-controlled private corporation which has also taken a small business reduction on $200,000. The two are combined to come up to the $400,000.

As I have said, in the case of a public take-over of a Canadian-controlled private company it ceases to qualify as a private company, let alone a Canadian-controlled private company, and the reduction will be no longer available, although there is no recapture.

The next topic is intercorporate dividends. Basically under the present act and the bill, intercorporate dividends between Canadian companies pass tax-free. There is a qualification in the case of private companies receiving portfolio dividends, which we will come to shortly. Intercorporate dividends are essentially the same, the reference being section 112.

However, the designated surplus provisions have been altered. Surplus, as we said yesterday, becomes designated when one company acquires the shares of another company and the surplus on hand as at the end of the preceding taxation year is then designated. A dividend cannot be paid out of a designated surplus to the acquired or acquiring company without paying tax; the exemption is lost.

The Chairman: You said acquires the shares; you mean acquires—

Mr. Scace: Control; excuse me, senator.

The method of taxing dividends out of designated surplus will change. A tax of 25 per cent will be imposed under Part VII, starting at section 192. If a dividend is paid from Company B to Company A out of designated surplus, Company A will pay a tax of 25 per cent of the amount of dividend which came out of designated surplus. As I said yesterday, the dividend less the tax will reduce the cost base of the shares.

The Chairman: That is, the paying company gets the special tax.

Mr. Scace: The receiving company.

Senator Beaubien: What is the system now?

Mr. Scace: Take the example of a dividend of $100 going up; Company A brings it into income and is entitled under section 28(1)(a) to subtract the amount of the dividend, so it really shows no dividend. If it is out of designated surplus, he loses the deduction, so he has $100-worth of income, on which he pays tax at normal rates.

Senator Beaubien: That is today?

Mr. Scace: Yes. The rules of designated surplus have also been tightened. The definitions of designated surplus and control period earnings under the present act had a few gaps, which have generally been filled.

There is also one interesting provision containing very ingenious drafting if it works. For instance, if Company B has $10,000 surplus and Company C, which is Company B's subsidiary, has $20,000 of surplus and Company A acquires the shares of Company B it becomes the ultimate parent company. Under the present act, when Company A acquires Company B, this $10,000 of surplus will be designated and it will lose the inter-corporate deduction.

However, under the present act nothing happens to the surplus in Company C, so it is not designated. It can pass tax-free up to Company B. It will be deductible to Company B and, similarly, when it gets to Company B it forms part of B's control period earnings and can be paid to Company A tax free.

They changed this under the bill. The change is very complex and it is in section 192(10). Essentially, what it says—and it is imported into the various definitions—is that when Company A acquires Company B and you have Company C down here, the surplus in Company C is notionally designated. It may pass tax-free up through the chain until it gets to the top company or the acquiring company, in which case it becomes taxable. So the net result of the new bill will be as before, the $10,000 surplus in Company B will be designated and there will be a tax if it is paid to Company A. The $20,000 surplus in Company C is notionally designated, and by that I mean it can go up to Company B, tax-free, but in B's hands it becomes designated surplus and so it cannot be paid up to A without having the tax become exigible. If you want to see ingenious drafting, I suggest you take a look at section 192(10).

There is another problem with this too. The definition of control in section 192(4) has been altered a little. It is possible that the effect is that when Company A acquires B, not only is B's surplus designated but so is C's. So it could not move within the chain. But that is not what they intend, and they are going to take a look at it and try to satisfy themselves that that is not the result. They would not have gone through this lengthy exercise of enacting an assumption, if that was to be the result, so it is just a technical drafting matter.

The Chairman: This is something we should follow, to see whether the change is made to reflect that?

Mr. Scace: Yes, sir. I am moving along much more quickly than I had thought I would, and I may get through early.

The next point we come to is investment income of private companies. I think this has to be explained graphically.

Senator Connolly: Before we get to that, would you mind my asking an elementary question? In a corporate dividend, between Canadian companies, tax-free, what is the rationale behind the establishment of the concept of a designated surplus? Why, simply because a company takes over another company, in which it always had shares, should it have to pay tax because it has taken over the company, to take out those dividends?

Mr. Scace: It was designed to deal with a form of dividend stripping. Without designated surplus, Company A could acquire Company B by using Company B's money. I will show you how this would work. Let us say that Company B has $1 million cash surplus.

Senator Connolly: Available for dividends.

Mr. Scace: Yes. Now, Scace comes along. He has no money whatever, but he incorporates a shell Company A. Then this shell Company A enters into an agreement with Company B to purchase the shares for $1 million. Company A borrows $1 million from the bank and the $1 million is paid to B's shareholders. The transaction is closed. Company A owns Company B. The $1 million, without the designated surplus provisions, would be paid as a dividend to Company A which would use it to pay off the bank. You would have stripped B and Company A would have acquired a company without using any of its own funds.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I think it might be pointed out that that was in a period when we had no capital gains, so that it would create non-taxable income to the vendor of the shares.

Mr. Scace: There is a thought, that perhaps designated surplus is not necessary under the bill. Under the present act, the top rate of tax is 80 per cent. A dividend to a shareholder whose marginal rate is 80 per cent would result in a tax of 60 per cent after the dividend tax credit. As opposed to that, if you sell your shares, there is no tax.

Under the bill, the top rate is 61.1, I believe, including the provincial tax. After you have subtracted the dividend tax credit it comes out to approximately 47 per cent. Your top rate on capital gains, is approximately 60 per cent. If only half of the gain is recognized you can look at it as being only the half rate of tax. Half of 60 is 30, so we have reduced the differential from 60 to 17. For 17 points of tax I think there is some question as to whether we need designated surplus.

The Chairman: Now we come to investment income of private companies.

Mr. Scace: As the Honourable Mr. Phillips said, we do have complete integration for investment income of private companies. We also have integration of active business income of a Canadian controlled private company that gets the low rate. Once it gets over the maximums, there is no integration. I can show you a number of examples, possibly. We start with a portfolio dividend from a Canadian company to a private Canadian company. Let us say the dividend was $300. The recipient company must pay a special tax of $100, it is a third of the dividend. This is the dividend, this is the corporate tax. But that corporate tax is refundable. The company will then have $300 available to pay out to those shareholders as a dividend. It will have the $200, which is the net after paying the refundable tax, plus the $100 in refundable tax which it will eventually get back from the Government.

Senator Connolly: This is, as between what companies?

Mr. Scace: This is a portfolio dividend to a private corporation.

The Chairman: From a public company.

Mr. Smith: Would you make clear what you mean by portfolio dividend?

Mr. Scace: For the most part, it is a dividend from a non-controlled company.

Senator Connolly: It is the ordinary meaning of a portfolio?

Mr. Scace: That is right. If you have control here, it will not be a portfolio dividend; it will just be an exempt intercorporate dividend. Apart from certain complications, it will apply where there is no control.

Coming back, we have $300 which is available to be paid out to the shareholder. So we get a $300 dividend to the shareholder. You treat it as a normal dividend. You gross it up by one-third, which gets you to $400. Assume that the shareholder is at a 50 per cent rate of tax. The tax on $400 would be $200, minus, the dividend tax credit of $100—here I am simplifying the tax credit calculation—which comes out to $100. The total tax is $100.

That is total integration. If the shareholder of the private corporation had received that portfolio dividend directly, he would have ended up with the same result. You gross up to $400, the 50 per cent rate of tax is $200 minus the dividend tax credit, which gives you $100. They have allowed the dividend to pass right through the company, and it is treated in the hands of the shareholder exactly as if he had received it directly.

Senator Lang: It is the same as a personal corporation.

Mr. Scace: Really it is, except that with a personal corporation the income for a year was deemed to be attributed at the end of the taxation year.

That does not happen here. The corporation receiving this dividend can keep it and there is no tax effect to a shareholder until it is actually paid out.

To qualify that, there is a tax effect, because this one-third tax on portfolio dividends for private companies is equal to the tax that would be paid by a 50 per cent shareholder. If the shareholder has a marginal rate of less than 50 per cent, the ultimate tax, if received directly, would be below $100. So more tax is being paid initially than if it had gone to him directly. So there is a slight penalty there.

On the other hand, if the shareholder's marginal rate is over 50 per cent, there is a benefit and a deferral because the immediate tax is less than it would have been.

The Chairman: This is the reverse of the new feature they have been stressing on the new form of dividend tax credit, where the higher your rate the lesser the benefit.

Mr. Scace: That is right. This is really the only kind of deferral that is available.

Senator Connolly: Could they possibly have made it more complicated?

The Chairman: I do not know what "more complicated" means, senator. Either a thing is complicated or it is not.

Senator Connolly: I think they have reached the ultimate.

Mr. Scace: Mr. Smith and I, and others, have worked long enough on it, and although we may not understand it completely, we at least can follow it through.

The one interesting feature is that much of the complexity is found in the integration of private company investment income and the small business reduction. Generally this will apply to small companies and small incorporated businesses. Those are the people who will really have a tough time figuring the whole thing out and who will need professional advice.

Mr. Smith: And they are the people who are least able to cope with the complexities.

Senator Connolly: They must plan the activities of their company so that they will know whether they are afloat or not. A lot of the genius, evil or otherwise, behind some of these rules is that they have not thought about the problems of the businessman. This is just the taxing. He has problems of sales, of overhead, labour and public relations. Perhaps I am a "nut" about this, but it seems to me that we have reached the point where we do not dare to go into business.

The Chairman: I think it might be of some advantage, for the purpose of the record, if Mr. Scace would state in a very summary way the adverse effect of these complexities in relation to small businesses or to those who can least afford to take on a deal with these complexities.

Senator MacNaughton: The final solution is a 100 per cent tax.

Mr. Scace: The difficulty is that they have tried to provide incentives in various ways for small businesses and private companies. Those incentives are in the form of a small business reduction, basically, and the integration feature on investment income. There is no possible way that they could provide these things without it being as complicated as they are. It is a very complicated subject. As the senator said, they have been ingenious and have done an extremely good job on it.

Senator Connolly: I did not say that. I said the opposite. However, I think you are quite right in drawing the other conclusion.

Mr. Scace: The problem is—and I think Mr. Smith stated it very bluntly—that the kind of companies who would be entitled to these particular benefits are not the large companies, but the small incorporated businesses. I do not think that a man who is concerned about carrying on his business will ever understand the complexities of the statute. He will have to rely on expert advice, and hopefully he will get it.

Senator Burchill: But the expert advice, in a lot of our towns and communities across Canada, has come from lawyers. People go to lawyers to make out their income tax forms. The office of Senator Aseltine made out the income tax forms for hundreds of people. But those offices could never follow the intricate explanation that we have received this morning.

Mr. Scace: I am not sure that I am doing what Senator Hayden wanted me to do, but, if I could put in a word in defence, my initial reaction to the bill was like everybody else's in that I was staggered by it. It has required an immense amount of work for those of us in the accounting and legal professions who do tax work. Initially, we made the comment to the Department of Finance that it was just too complex and nobody would understand it.

Part of the problem is that we are starting from a dead stop, from zero. For the first time ever—perhaps the only other occasion was 1917 when the Income War Tax Act was introduced—there are no real guidelines.

But things are coming out. We have the Clarkson book. We have this one from the Law Society. A lot of people are publishing. Once the documentation and the information is out, I think that people will develop a fairly reasonable understanding of what it is all about, much as we have now; but it will take time. I think that may happen. That is a possibility, sir.

Senator Connolly: When I seconded the motion for these hearings, one of the things I said was that generally I thought the new tax act, compared with the White Paper, was an improvement and generally applied it. However, when I listened to the complexities of the bill, I thought I was wrong. Now, when I hear about the results, perhaps there is an element of my being right, because it may be that the small taxpayer, and perhaps all taxpayers, will get some benefit from this over what the situation might have been had the provisions of the White Paper found their way into the legislation.

Really, the thing comes down to the use of experts upon whom we have to rely. I think Senator Burchill had a point when he said that perhaps we can get these experts in the bigger centres, but in the smaller centres they will be very hard to find.

Mr. Smith: Perhaps I could just add a word. The complexities come in large measure from the incentives that many taxpayers argued should be preserved, the small business reduction being the most important of them, I suppose. The complexities come from the limits that have been put on it. As you know, the present split rate was a very inefficient incentive, because it was a subsidy to those who did not lack capital necessarily, those whose businesses were not necessarily expanding, as well as those who were, so the limits that have been put on it are designed to make it an incentive for those people who do lack capital in fact, and who are starting out from scratch, the theory being that once they have derived a benefit, a tax reduction that is worth $100,000 to them, that should be

it. The government subsidize them to the extent of $100,000, they have got it, so long as they really need it to carry out their active business they can have it, but once they start putting it into portfolio investments, why should they have it? The complexities come from circumscribing the incentives in that way to make it efficient as an incentive.

Senator Lang: I object to Mr. Smith saying the government subsidizes anybody by taking less blood out of them.

Mr. Smith: Compared to another taxpayer, where the circumstances are similar.

Senator Beaubien: The torture is a little less.

Senator Lang: I have had some experience of the average assessor in the Department of National Revenue, and I do not know how the department will recruit or train enough assessors with sufficient expertise to do even a normal assessment job.

The Chairman: They will educate the computers!

Senator Connolly: To condition the computer they have to have experts too. I think this is right. We are talking now about the problems that are created for the businessman as a result of this complex legislation. We should have some concern too for the problem of administering a bill as difficult as this. I would think the tax people in the Department of National Revenue must be scratching their heads very, very hard to try to figure out what the people in Finance have really intended with some of these sections.

The Chairman: I would think their interpretation service will be overworked, and bulletins may come out very slowly.

Senator Molson: We have not mentioned the increased work load that is being put on people, all working for the government, trying to understand what the tax is supposed to be and what is supposed to happen. As Senator Connolly said a little earlier, it probably means that a lot of them will not be selling anything or doing anything; they will merely be sitting scratching their heads and trying to get their lawyer and accountant to straighten out their tax problems.

The Chairman: When they get to the finality—

Senator Molson: They have not got the money.

The Chairman: —the calculation would be a hypothetical problem, "If I had the money".

Senator Molson: By that time.

The Chairman: This is what the answer might be.

Senator Connolly: It is purely academic; there is no money.

Senator Molson: The big companies will perhaps have less difficulty in coping, but that does not mean there will not be more people and more time spent on this non-productive business of trying to figure out how much they owe the government.

The Chairman: This is not in aid of unemployment, is it?

Senator Beaubien: It will employ a lot of people.

Senator McNaughton: Surely it amounts to this. We will have to pay much higher fees for the expert advice and/or you will have to hire another 20,000 experts for the Department of National Revenue to explain what they are trying to get from you.

The Chairman: I do not know why you put an "or" in there. I do not think it is disjunctive; I think both things will have to happen. The department would have to acquire an educated staff and business would have to acquire it, because very often they have different views and end up in law suits.

Senator Lang: I think also that among the unsophisticated high complexity tends to encourage evasion.

Senator Beaubien: It is bound to.

Senator Lang: I think this will flow from this type of legislation.

Senator Connolly: Maybe we have reached a kind of society that is so complex that to regulate it we have to have incomprehensible laws at times.

Senator Walker: Are not a lot of these complicated features due to the fact that companies have done their best to circumvent the law?

The Chairman: No, I do not think so. I think that would be an unfair conclusion. The law is there and you are supposed to be your own assessor. You interpret it, and very often you have disagreements with the assessor.

Senator Connolly: Following what Senator Walker just said, I think it is a perfectly legitimate exercise for a taxpayer to minimize his tax.

The Chairman: I do not think that was Senator Walker's problem.

Senator Connolly: If that is evasion—

The Chairman: No.

Senator Walker: That is not what I meant. It is plugging the loop-holes.

The Chairman: That is a different problem.

Senator Walker: Is that not the problem?

The Chairman: Why do they call them loop-holes?

Senator Walker: Because the public finds ways of getting around them.

The Chairman: Start at the beginning. The beginning is that Parliament devises a scheme of taxation and the words they use produce certain results. In those words certain situations are not covered. Therefore there is no law and no taxation feature applicable to the situations they have to cover. When business people discover that situation they avail themselves of it. This is why they talk about amendments plugging loop-holes. I think "loop-hole" is a misnomer. It is just that the scope of the legislation at the beginning was not expanded as broadly as they subsequently realized they should have done.

Senator Walker: It has been now.

The Chairman: The scope is now being enlarged.

Senator Connolly: This is the first grab. We still have not got the amendments that are going to come in the next five years.

The Chairman: That is quite true. I would think the immediate amendments would be for clarification, and also to make sure that what is in the bill is what they mean.

Senator Walker: Is it a fact that the draftsmen of our statutes now are not as well trained as they used to be? Honestly, in the last few years things have been getting awfully complicated.

The Chairman: You made it difficult for me to answer that question when you said, "Is it a fact". I do not know as a fact.

Senator Connolly: I would think the draftsmen are perhaps more ingenious and better trained now, but the things they are required to put into the statutes are so complicated that they cannot possibly write it in terms of one syllable.

Senator Burchill: They invent new words.

The Chairman: You must underline too the speed with which they are expected to produce. That is a very important factor. With bills like this tax bill speed would be a very difficult thing to apply if you wanted to have the bill completely intelligible.

Senator Lang: I believe the United States' revenue code has some sort of explanatory paragraph attached to each section in lay language, setting out the general purposes of the section. Although they do not have legislative effect, they sometimes have an interpretative effect. Certainly they aid in finding the right places to go for the answers. I am wondering if we should not be thinking of a similar sort of device to attach to this piece of legislation.

The Chairman: Maybe the summary of the legislation with the raspberry-coloured cover was intended to be an indication of the purposes.

Senator Lang: Perhaps that summary should be put in the bill.

The Chairman: What good would it serve? There is no correlation between the two, so that just printing the summary as part of the bill for its persuasive and interpretative effect would not prevent our having to wade through the whole of the bill.

Senator Lang: That is not what I meant. I meant to follow the U.S. procedure. As I understand it, each section of the U.S. act has an explanatory paragraph preceding it, dealing with the very section. It seemed to me it would be of great assistance to the lay person and lawyer if such explanatory sections were inserted in this bill.

The Chairman: That is on record now and when we come to think about this in summation we can see about that.

Do you wish to continue now, Mr. Scace?

Mr. Scace: I hesitate to become more complex, but if you would like to see it, I can show you how interest income and capital gains income in a private corporation are integrated.

The Chairman: Have you the sections there?

Mr. Scace: Yes. All these things are a combination, but, basically, for interest you look at section 129.

Now, to take an example, let us say you have $100 of interest income. The corporation will have a flat rate of tax of 50 per cent. So $50 is the flat rate of tax in this amount.

Senator Connolly: What do you mean by interest?

Mr. Scace: On a bond or debenture. Anything like that.

Senator Connolly: I see.

Mr. Scace: Twenty-five percentage points of the tax, in this case $25, is potentially refundable. So $25 of the $50 is refundable to the corporation. As with the portfolio dividend, this means that the corporation has $75 available to pay out as dividend to a shareholder. It has the net between the $100 and the $50, which is $50 plus the $25 of the $50 which is potentially available as a refund.

So if the dividend is $75 and it is paid to the shareholder, we then go through the normal grossing-up procedure. One-third is $100. Let us say the shareholder is a 50 per cent rate taxpayer. There is a $50 tax. You subtract from this the amount of the gross-up or the dividend tax credit, which produces $25 in tax. The total tax is $25 to the shareholder plus $25 up here, because $25 of the original $50 got refunded.

Similarly, if the interest was received directly by the shareholder of the private company without the intervention of the private company, there would be $100 of interest income. He is a 50 per cent taxpayer. Therefore, there would be $50 in tax for a net of $50, which is exactly the same.

With capital gains it is a little more complicated. Let us say the corporate capital gain is $200. One-half of that is taxable. So you get a taxable capital gain of $100. The non-taxable portion of the gain, this other $100, goes into a thing called a capital dividend account. We will come back to that in a moment.

Looking at the taxable portion, the corporate tax is 50 per cent, or $50. But as in the case of interest income, one-half of the corporate tax is potentially refundable. So $25 of the $50 can get refunded to the corporation. Just looking at the taxable half of the dividend, we have the $50 still available plus the $25 refund. So we can pay a dividend to the shareholder of $75, gross it up to $100 and he is at the 50 per cent rate so his tax is $50 minus the gross-up which produces $25 tax. So at that point of time the tax which has been paid is $25 by the shareholder and $25 by the corporation, the original $50 less the $25 refund.

The non-taxable half, the $100, as I said before, goes into the capital dividend account persuaded under section 83(2).

Senator Connolly: That is segregated on the company's books.

Mr. Scace: That is right. It is a sort of notional account.

Senator Lang: Can you borrow money against it?

Mr. Scace: I do not think it is a real asset. The real asset is $100 in cash. It goes into this notional capital dividend account and you may pay dividends out of the capital dividend account tax-free to the shareholder. So that you have $100 going over to the capital dividend account and it comes out as a tax-free dividend to the shareholder. So the total or net result is that the tax that has been paid is $25 plus $25, which is $50, and the total tax is $50. The net to the taxpayer is $150.

Now, if he had done that directly, the taxpayer would have realized the $200 capital gain. One-half of that would have been the taxable capital gain. If he is a 50 per cent rate taxpayer as in our example, then that is 50 per cent of $100 and it is $50 tax so that it is exactly the same tax and the same net. That is how it goes through. The only wrinkle with respect to the capital dividend account is that it does not come into play until you have taken out the 1971 surplus in the company. That is the next topic.

In those three calculations you see how the total integration of private company investment income is achieved.

Senator Lang: So we are now going up from the present 15 per cent to 25 per cent. When you extract tax-free capital gain from the corporation now you are going to have to pay 15 per cent tax before the undistributed income goes out.

Mr. Scace: That is right. For example, let us say a corporation realizes a $200 capital gain now, there is no tax in the company. So you have zero tax. But that gain gets locked in behind the undistributed income in the company, and, you are right, to get at it you cannot distribute it tax-free until you have paid out all your undistributed income, which means the 15 per cent tax under section 105 of the existing act. That really results in an approximate 37 per cent tax rate, because on the dividend out you do not have your dividend tax credit. So it is better, if you are under 37 per cent, to pay it out as a straight dividend. If you are over the 37 per cent, it is better to go with section 105 of the present act.

We then come to the 1971 surplus. This is really what we touched on yesterday. At the end of 1971, companies if they are not in a deficit position will have a surplus, and this surplus will be made up of three things. It will be made up of tax paid undistributed income on hand; that is income or surplus that the company has earned and upon which it has paid the 15 per cent tax under existing section 105. Let us take an example of this; if in 1970 the company has $100 surplus or undistributed income and it paid the 15 per cent tax, then it has $85 left. But if it does not use it or distribute it, then that $85 is in a notional account called tax paid undistributed income going into the system. There will also be straight undistributed income, and that is roughly the same undistributed income as we have now with one major change. Undistributed income under the present act starts from 1917 and is calculated up to the present time. Undistributed income for the purpose of 1971 surplus only covers from the year 1950 to 1971. So for companies which were in existence prior to 1950 their pre-1950 surplus is no longer considered to be undistributed income.

Senator Connolly: But in both those cases the corporate rate has been paid on the profits, and in case No. 1, in addition to that the income that they are holding there as undistributed has already been subjected to the 15 per cent tax and that is why it is not tax free.

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Senator Connolly: And then in case No. 2 the 15 per cent tax has not been paid on the undistributed income.

Mr. Scace: No. We will come to that in a minute and we will see what happens to it.

The third item is capital surplus. Capital surplus is a very lengthy definition. It is in section 89. Capital surplus is going to be made up of a number of things. Probably included in it will be pre-1950 undistributed income, and this is one of the great advantages to the method of distributing 1971 surpluses. So you will have pre-1950 undistributed income in there, and you will also have accrued capital gains up until implementation of the system. If the company has an asset which it bought at $100, and on V-day it is worth $200, that $100 is notionally included and it will fall into capital surplus if it is ever sold.

Taking the 1971 surplus out of the company, the tax paid undistributed income can just be paid out as a straight dividend, not taxable to the shareholder. On the undistributed income, under section 96 you may pay 15 per cent and it can be paid out to the shareholders after the 15 per cent tax has been paid. With capital surplus nothing need be done. It can go out, after these amounts, tax free to the shareholder and no additional tax has to be paid. Now you can see that one great benefit of these distribution rules is that without the new bill companies which had say $1 million of undistributed income earned prior to 1950, the tax cost of getting that out under section 105, the immediate cost, would be 15 per cent or $150,000. Basically that pre-1950 undistributed income goes into capital surplus and can get out tax free. This caught some people who were trying to preplan for what the bill might do. I do not think anybody ever expected this would be the result, and some people were taking out their pre-1950 surpluses and paying the tax and I suspect that they will not be very happy when they find out that the tax need not have been paid.

The other feature of these non-taxable dividends out of the 1971 surplus—as we mentioned yesterday—is that the amount of the dividend must be deducted from the cost base and you reduce the cost base of your share by the amount of the dividend. So if the shares are ever sold for an amount in excess of the cost base, you may get taxed on the capital gain.

Senator Connolly: What is the rationale behind paying out the capital surplus tax free? Here I am on the other side and I am being the devil's advocate. Simply because a company before 1950 did not bother to distribute surplus which it had earned, in 1971 it is able to distribute it to its shareholders without any corporate tax of any kind. Presumably they paid the going corporate rate before 1950. I suppose that would be all right. Then when it gets into the hands of the shareholder, he pays at his own rate.

Mr. Scace: No, he has no tax on that.

Senator Connolly: Why should he not have tax on it?

Mr. Scace: I do not know whether I can answer that, but we have double taxation and will continue to have to a certain extent under the new system. There is corporate tax and then again there is taxation when it is distributed to the shareholders. The dividend tax credit is a method of trying to reduce the element of double taxation, and the whole business of section 105 was an effort to allow people to take out the surplus at a lesser tax cost and thereby minimize the double taxation. I do not know if you can rationalize this as anything but a policy to benefit the taxpayer in these particular circumstances. The really important one is the one concerning the pre-1950 surplus. But it is hard to assess what the benefit will be.

Senator Lang: You still have to pay 15 per cent to get out the pre-1950 surplus.

Mr. Scace: No, sir. That is capital surplus. Formerly you would have had to pay 15 per cent, but now you do not.

Senator Lang: But the pre-1970 surplus?

Mr. Scace: Between 1950 and 1971, yes.

Senator Carter: Are there any circumstances where it would be beneficial to move No. 2 up to No. 1?

Mr. Scace: You mean to pay the tax on it?

Senator Carter: Yes.

Mr. Scace: To get it out as a tax-free dividend, what you could do is to pay it out as a straight dividend and then you would be into the normal rules. This is a cheaper way of doing it—by paying the 15 per cent. Take the situation of a company which owns investments and the value of the shares in the company is directly proportionate or commensurate or related to the value of the assets in the company, I think in that case this would be very beneficial. You would pay your 15 per cent tax on the 1971 undistributed income and you would move it up to No. 1 and you would pay it out as a non-taxable dividend and it will reduce the cost base of your shares in the company. But since they are completely related to the assets inside the company, there is really no penalty to it at all. It is very beneficial.

Mr. Smith: There is a penalty where an operating business is valued by capitalizing its earnings. Ordinarily a payment of a dividend by that kind of company would not necessarily reduce the price at which it could sell its shares, unless it were a very large dividend which impaired the working capital and its ability to produce profits. This reduction in the cost base does not really reflect the good will inherent in any capitalization of earnings.

Mr. Scace: Our last point is with respect to section 184, under Part III, headed "Additional Tax on Excessive Election". In order to obtain the special treatment on the 1971 surplus, a company must elect and say it is paying a dividend out of tax-paid undistributed income or capital surplus. Section 184 provides that if that election amount is in excess of the actual amount of tax-paid undistributed income or capital surplus, there is a penalty tax of 100 per cent of the excess. This could be a disaster and I think it has to change.

Assume that by a calculation it is determined that the 1971 surplus is $1 million and an election is made to have it paid out as a tax-free or a non-taxable dividend. It is later discovered that the 1971 surplus is only $500,000 so the tax or, penalty will be $500,000. It is completely unfair that there should be that type of penalty tax on something against which it is almost impossible to guard. Many of you, I am sure, have had dealings in which it was necessary to calculate the undistributed income of a company. It is generally an accounting matter. They are going back a great many years and might be accurate, but might not, and by pure inadvertence could be out by a substantial amount.

I think a provision should be added that if a mistake were made the additional tax may be paid to bring it on side without a terrible penalty such as this. However, the Department of Finance has been informed of this and it may be in the amendments.

Senator Lang: Is the definition of undistributed income in this bill the same as under the old act?

Mr. Scace: Yes, it is essentially the same. However, one major difference is contained in section 196(4). It specifically inserts the year 1950 as being the starting point for the calculation.

The Chairman: Will any problems be presented by the fact that over the years many companies have maintained one surplus account, into which they have added not only income, but capital gains?

Mr. Scace: I think all companies generally have kept one surplus account and probably have not kept a running calculation or account of undistributed income, or anything else. They only considered that when it became necessary to make a calculation for the current tax. Most companies will be in the situation of having it all lumped.

The Chairman: This emphasizes more than ever the disastrous effect of paying an amount in excess of undistributed income and how easily it might develop. I know there has been a great problem in trying to analyze surplus accounts going back over a period of years and identifying capital gains and income items.

Senator Burchill: Should there not be an item on reserve?

The Chairman: No; reserve is something else.

Senator Burchill: What is the difference? I often wondered.

The Chairman: The analysis can be most careful and honest, but the penalty for an error of one dollar, or I suppose even one cent, is pretty severe.

Where does that leave us now, Mr. Scace?

Mr. Scace: Senator, that completes what we were going to do today. If you wish to continue, we can discuss estates.

The Chairman: We have had quite a strenuous morning. There are several items left. We have appointments for hearings for next Wednesday, but so far we have kept Thursday open. On Thursday we might finish the other headings.

I regard the heading of International Taxation as very important, then generally the law relating to estates, real estate and corporate acquisitions. Lastly, we have resource industries.

Certainly, later the following week and thereafter, judging by the number who now have dates for hearings, the presentations will involve international taxation, corporations and distributions to shareholders. I think it would be a good idea if we were educated a little before we start hearing those.

Senator Carter: Do we resume hearings on this bank bill next week?

The Chairman: Yes, on Wednesday; that will not take more than half an hour. They have material which they wish to submit regarding the standing of the people who made the feasibility studies for them.

Senator Walker: Could Mr. Scace start discussing estates this morning?

The Chairman: It is almost ten after twelve now.

Senator Lang: Is it necessary to qualify again by paying out the equivalent in dividends in order to acquire status to elect on the payment out of tax-paid undistributed income?

Mr. Scace: No, the necessity of a dividend record is abolished, which is a great advantage.

Senator Lang: That is quite a change in the ball park.

Mr. Scace: There is no doubt that the Department of Finance has been very, very generous with regard to the distribution provisions. I cannot say as a fact, but I have heard rumours that the Department of National Revenue is not particularly happy with the generosity of the Department of Finance.

The Chairman: There are one or two other things I would like to say. This committee may be sitting tomorrow. I am not at all sure it will be, but it may be sitting earlier than Wednesday of next week. It all depends on Bill C-262 and when it is referred to committee.

Senator Beaubien: The Senate is sitting at 8 o'clock on Monday.

The Chairman: This, I do not know yet.

Senator Burchill: Yes, at 8 o'clock Monday.

The Chairman: It may be that they do not want to wait until Wednesday. It may be that the debate on the bill may go on into Tuesday, in which event it would not come to us until Wednesday. For all these reasons I do not think there would be any time on Wednesday that we could count on having available to continue our study. I think Thursday is a more convenient date for Mr. Scace and Mr. Smith.

Senator Walker: Next Thursday?

The Chairman: Yes, I think perhaps we will deal with that on Thursday.

Senator Beaubien: Thursday morning?

The Chairman: Yes. I would like to make a statement of "instalment credit" and appreciation to both Mr. Scace and Mr. Smith for what they have done to date.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: I would also like to express the appreciation of the committee to our Chief Counsel who is sitting right beside me. I think he might like to say a few words to the committee before we adjourn.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Firstly, I wish to thank the honourable senators for allowing me to be here to deliberate with them on this bill. Naturally, I will have more to say as we continue our study of the bill.

There is only one observation that I would like to make at this time, and that is that we are considering the draft bill without having the benefit of studying the proposed amendments or the regulations, neither of which have come down as yet. I am not speaking of the regulations that have come down to date, of course, but the ones that we are expecting. I think the Chairman is being skilful in getting a so-called money bill before the Senate committee for consideration while it is still being deliberated on in the other house. We are, however, paying a price, in the sense that we are dealing with a draft bill only rather than a bill that has gone through the other house. We are not really dealing with the proposed bill in its final form.

I cannot understand the logic of the Government in having the Committee of the Whole consider the bill without the amendments being brought down in total. I am told, as I am sure other gentlemen have been told, that it is proposed to bring the amendments down as each new section of the bill is passed. It appears to me, and I put this to you gentlemen for consideration, that it would be desirable to have a message conveyed to the other place, through the Leader of the Government in the Senate, stating that this house through its committee is considering the bill and it expresses the view that it would be highly desirable that all of the proposed amendments to the bill be brought down in the other house immediately so that the public of Canada and the legislative body here can consider the entire bill in a little more intelligent fashion than we are able to do now.

The Chairman: There would be a benefit to the Commons members also.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes, it would be a benefit to the House of Commons as well.

I think that we ought to crystalize that, if I may suggest, Mr. Chairman, and if honourable senators agree, in the form of a conclusion of this committee that the Leader of the Government be asked to convey that point of view to the Minister of Finance or, for that matter, to the Prime Minister himself, because I think it is a matter of vital importance in order that we can intelligently study this bill.

Before concluding, Mr. Chairman, I would only like to say that I realize I missed a great deal in not being here yesterday to listen to both Mr. Scace and Mr. Smith. However, they have presented it brilliantly thus far, and it is a promise of what is to come.

Generally speaking, tax lawyers studying a bill are frightened by it. Someone asked me what I thought of the bill and I said it was an avalanche of words juxtaposed to other words that produced unintelligible phrases which, juxtaposed to other unintelligible phrases, produced incomprehensible sentences, and I said only God himself could define its meaning, and, leaving blasphemy aside, I was not even sure about that. I will admit that that is a little bit of literary indulgence.

The Chairman: Hyperbole.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes. It is true, however, that if you study the bill carefully, broadly speaking, there is considerable merit in some of it.

The Chairman: And benefit.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: But you have to go back and attack it and attack it and attack it, until the words begin to have some meaning. In the early stages only the younger men seemed to have the physical and mental fortitude to keep on reading and re-reading it. Those of us of an older generation find it a little harder to go back to the attack, but I suppose what we lose in fortitude we gain in experience and we will catch up with them in understanding the bill.

I look forward, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, to working with you on this bill.

Senator Macnaughton: Mr. Chairman, before we adjourn, should we not have a motion from the floor to instruct you, the chairman of this committee, to advise the Leader of the Government in the Senate along the lines outlined by the Honourable Mr. Phillips?

The Chairman: If there is such a motion, I will be glad to act on it.

Senator Macnaughton: It is so moved.

Senator Beaubien: I second it.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Connolly: We discussed this yesterday, Mr. Chairman, and, of course, it is unusual for us to be sitting here in this fashion, according to parliamentary practice. Now this is a further departure from parliamentary practice. I think it is a desirable one, though, from the point of view not only of this committee but, indeed, of the people who have to consider this bill in the Committee of the Whole in the other place.

The Chairman: Yes, but a request is never out of order, senator.

Senator Connolly: That is right.

The Chairman: And whether the request comes from the Senate to the Government or from another source, it is a part of the function of the Government to deal with requests relating to the laws of the country and certain requests relating to the convenience of the general public. It is not just a matter of convenience to the Senate or to the members of this committee, but it is also a matter of convenience to the general public in order for them to know what the whole thing is going to encompass and what the interpretations are going to be as reflected in the amendments. It will also be beneficial to the members of the other place in their deliberations. I am not embarrassed by the fact that a Senate committee would request that consideration be given to this. We are not passing an order or anything like that.

Senator Connolly: On top of that, I think too that we have used a parliamentary process here that does not stick to the dead letter of the law. In other words, we did not wait until the bill came to us from the other place. The dead letter of the law states that we cannot have these amendments, but if you are going to stick to the dead letter of the law all the time you are not going to have Parliament operating as efficiently as it should.

The Chairman: I do not think there is any dead letter of the law involved here. Parliament makes the rules and it can change the rules and procedures. Certainly the practice in the past may have been that when there are amendments they are usually proposed when you are considering the particular section in the committee as a whole, but I am sure if you went back and analyzed you might find situations where, for various purposes, some indication of the nature of amendments to be proposed has come forth. This has even occurred on second reading.

Senator Macnaughton: Mr. Chairman, we are simply asking that the ordinary parliamentary procedure or precedent be followed. It is as simple as that. There is a tendency now to get away from past parliamentary procedure, and I am not at all sure that it is a wise thing. It is certainly not in the interest of and for the protection of the ordinary taxpayer or the ordinary citizen.

The Chairman: It is not in the interest of the public, and that is whom we are here to serve.

The committee adjourned.

Published under authority of the Senate by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Information Canada, Ottawa, Canada

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

No. 36

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1971

Second Proceedings on:

"Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation"

(Witnesses—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Grosart
Beaubien	Haig
Benidickson	Hayden
Blois	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Lang
Choquette	Macnaughton
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Molson
Cook	Smith
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28)

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, September 14, 1971:

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator Hayden moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Denis, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, tabled this day, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto; and

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Wednesday, October 6, 1971.

(43)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9:30 a.m. to further consider:

"Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Aird, Beaubien, Benidickson, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Desruisseaux, Flynn, Gelinac, Giguere, Haig, Hays, Isnor, Lang, Molson, Smith, Sullivan, Walker and Welch—(21).

Present, not of the Committee: The Honourable Senator Heath—(1).

In attendance: The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel; Mr. C. Albert Poissant, C.A., Tax Consultant.

Upon motion it was Resolved that 1000 copies in English and 400 copies in French of these proceedings be printed instead of the usual 800 English and 300 French copies.

WITNESSES:

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce:

Mr. Neil V. German, Q.C., President;
Mr. Brock Bradley, Chairman, Executive Council;
Mr. H. P. Crawford, Q.C., Chairman, Public Finance and Taxation Committee;
Mr. D. M. Parkinson, member, Public Finance and Taxation Committee;
Mr. C. B. Mitchell, member, Public Finance and Taxation Committee;
Mr. C. Gajewski, member, Public Finance and Taxation Committee;
Mr. E. Newman, member, Public Finance and Taxation Committee;

Secretariat: (C.C.C.)

Mr. C. H. Scoffield, General Manager;
Mr. D. J. Gibson, Manager, Policy Department.

At 11:20 a.m. the Committee proceeded to the next order of business.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Wednesday, October 6, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9.30 a.m. to give consideration to the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions, in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto.

Senator Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I call the meeting to order. This morning we have the representatives from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce to present their brief in connection with our consideration of Bill C-259.

Sometime during the morning, I expect that either the Honourable Mr. Pepin or someone delegated by him will come in to express their views in connection with three amendments to the Employment support bill, which we discussed last evening. When that happens, I suggest we interject it into our proceedings—it may take about ten minutes—so that we can report that bill this afternoon.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Furthermore, we adjourned the consideration of the private bill, S-22, to incorporate United Bank of Canada, until this morning. However, we had given an appointment to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce for 9.30 this morning. Our procedure should be, therefore, to go ahead and hear them and finish their presentation. I suggest that we fix 3 o'clock this afternoon to hear further representations from the United Bank of Canada.

Senator Beaubien: The Senate will sit at 2 p.m.

The Chairman: I do not think it will be a long sitting. Therefore, 3 o'clock would be a good time. The main point is that, having brought the United Bank of Canada representatives here, we should dispose of them today. Is that agreed?

Hon Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I think we should have a motion for the printing of the proceedings.

Upon motion, it was resolved that a verbatim report be made of the proceedings and to recommend that 1,000 copies in English and 400 copies in French be printed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce delegation consists of Mr. Neil V. German, Q.C., President of the Chamber; Mr. Brock Bradley, Chairman of the Executive Council; Mr. H. P. Crawford, Q.C., Chairman of the Public Finance and Taxation Committee; Mr. D. M. Parkinson, Mr. C. B. Mitchell, Mr. C. Gajewski and Mr. E. Newman, members of the Public Finance and Taxation Committee; and two members of the Secretariat; Mr. C. H. Scofield, General Manager; and Mr. D. J. Gibson, Manager, Policy Department.

We have established a practice here that we hear a summation or a statement, rather than hear the brief read. The brief has been in our hands for quite a while and we can enter into a discussion on it a little later. I understand Mr. Crawford will make the opening statement.

Mr. H. P. Crawford, Q.C., Chairman, Public Finance and Taxation Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, when you read the submission you probably noticed, that for the most part it was extremely detailed, in terms of suggesting that the wording of a particular subclause, a particular paragraph of a particular subsection, may be inappropriate. It seems better that I should state what we regard as several of the more important points in the submission.

First of all, I would refer you to the general points made, commencing on page 2. There are four recommendations there. Recommendation 1, in substance, is our suggestion that the procedure of the Department of National Revenue for issuing information bulletins and stamp tax rulings, in the context of tax reform and uncertainty at this time, is even more significant and more important than it has been heretofore under the existing law.

Since that was written there have been one or two developments that make this even more troublesome. For reasons that I think are understandable the Department of National Revenue has indicated that it will be some time before it can issue any interpretation bulletins, because it is going to take the department some time to organize and decide how it is going to interpret various provisions. Moreover, for advance rulings they are reluctant to do so for the same reasons.

It is important, however, particularly in view of the complexity of the various provisions and the inevitable difficulties that will result when particular problems are being worked out by corporations in their planning and because inconsistencies are inevitably discovered in legislation, that the Department of National Revenue be prepared at least to issue on the old basis informal rulings of some sort.

The Chairman: I might say at this point, Mr. Crawford, that before we are through we will very likely invite some of the officials from the Department of National Revenue in order to ask them how they are going to approach the consideration of this matter, because they have a number of problems to settle. They have the fair market value question to settle in a big way. From what I understand they may transpose the present facilities they have in that regard in relation to estate tax and import into this field those men who have had experience. But the best way of finding out how they propose to approach the problem is to get them in here and ask them. We will do that before we finish our hearings.

Mr. Crawford: I agree with that idea, Mr. Chairman. The point that I am making is one that has been made by many others, namely, that they do have a difficult problem. You find, for example, that if you sit down to plan transactions in many areas such as foreign affiliates in terms of putting them together, there is to be no roll-over and you find as a result that there are many areas, including foreign affiliates, where there seem to be inconsistent provisions in the legislation, and to decide which ones will be applied, and so on, is very difficult. That is just one illustration. We certainly agree with the approach that we should find out from the Department of National Revenue what they intend to do, and we would urge that you encourage them to try to come up with a system of at least issuing informal rulings. Indeed, that might be combined with item 4 of our particular recommendations on page 3, that during the early years of this new system there be a certain amount of leniency in the assessing process.

It has been stated to us that there will be this leniency inevitably, but the difficulty with that is that the assessing process sometimes occurs four or five years later, and, when the assessor goes in he practises interpretations which were unclear two or three years previously but have since been formulated and at least in the mind of the departmental officials are fairly clear, and this can present numerous problems.

The Chairman: A few days ago in our consideration of this bill we were discussing the aspect of the bill dealing with the distribution of undistributed income in hand at the 1971 year, and we were informed that there is a very severe penalty in that, if you are one cent over the amount of your 1971 undistributed income, even though you have honestly calculated at that amount and have paid your 15 per cent tax, which then opens the door to let you do this, you would be subject to a 100 per cent penalty. In other words, the whole amount would be subject to tax, I assume.

Mr. Crawford: That point is dealt with on pages 6 and 7 of our submission, Mr. Chairman. Several suggestions are made as to how the resulting possible hardship you refer to could be dealt with.

The Chairman: Would you care to speak to that now?

Mr. Crawford: I would prefer to finish the two introductory points first, if I may.

The Chairman: All right.

Mr. Crawford: I appreciate that it is probably not of direct relevance to your committee, Mr. Chairman, but it would be helpful in our opinion if the minister, or his assistant, in explaining the bill either here or before the Commons could make available at an early date at least the amendments they have drafted up to that time. That would certainly be preferable to waiting until you get to section 248 to find out how it is going to be amended, because that might be pretty far along. Again, we do appreciate that they have a problem if they have not all of the amendments drafted or if they are changing them subsequently, but, certainly, if something could be done in that area it would be a help—certainly, if you could get at least the amendments that have been settled at this time so far as the Department of Finance is concerned.

Senator Connolly: We have made that suggestion already.

The Chairman: I can tell you, Mr. Crawford, that in the course of the discussion at the last meeting there was a resolution in the committee requesting the Government Leader in the Senate to make to the Minister of Finance the request that the amendments which have been settled be tabled in the course of second reading rather than, in accordance with the usual practice, having them presented in relation to particular items in the bill. We have indicated in the supporting material, which is now in the hands of the Minister of Finance, that, if January 1, 1972, is to be a realistic date for the coming into force of this bill, we should have this material early in committee and the people who are going to make representations should have it early. Otherwise there will be inevitable delays. Certainly, our purpose would be defeated if we permitted ourselves to be stamped without having that material and allowed ourselves to be crushed against that deadline of January 1. We are not going to permit that to happen so far as we are concerned—that, at least, is my feeling of the temper of the committee.

Mr. Crawford: I can see that it would be very frustrating for your committee, Mr. Chairman, if you were instructed to see how you could amend a section and found out subsequently, perhaps four weeks later, that they were already amending it in the Department of Finance.

Senator Connolly: Have you made any representations either to the Department of Finance or to the Department of National Revenue, Mr. Crawford?

Mr. Crawford: The Chamber of Commerce had a meeting with the Minister of Finance and one of his assistant deputies.

Senator Connolly: In respect of the material you have given us here?

Mr. Crawford: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Was there any indication that any of the points you have raised here are to be amended?

Mr. Crawford: Yes. The Minister of Finance indicated that his officials were in agreement with a great many of the technical points and that amendments were being drafted.

Senator Connolly: But you have not seen them.

Mr. Crawford: No.

The Chairman: There is a follow-up question there, if Mr. Crawford wishes to answer it; would he care to indicate to us which were the sections to which he got that reaction?

Mr. Crawford: I am afraid the minister was not that specific, Mr. Chairman. He said there would be many amendments. We did ask him if he could indicate the areas, but the only area he indicated was the partnership area, in which he said there were going to be substantial amendments. However, he did not so indicate specifically with respect to any other area. I think a lot of people are assuming there will be many amendments in certain areas, but nobody is being quoted.

The Chairman: Perhaps you could correlate what the minister had in mind with what you were talking about when he made that statement.

Mr. Crawford: It is almost impossible, in the context.

Senator Walker: Was he just being pleasant, making a general statement?

Mr. Crawford: Senator, I have been at several meetings with his officials—

Senator Walker: Before that?

Mr. Crawford: Before that, discussing various aspects with them, and obviously there are going to be many amendments. Many of the items in this submission do not go to policy. They go to technicalities, and in that case I do not see any particular reason why they would not be amended. When we get our work near the end of July and early August, if, according to our interpretation, there were a technical problem that needed to be righted, I do not see why it would not be amended.

The Chairman: What do you include in a technical problem? I understand what you mean by policy, but how broad is the statement of technical problems? Do you mean just the failure to put in a comma, a semi colon or a period or a crossing of a "t"?

Senator Connolly: I suppose it would mean a conflict between sections, such as you describe here under section 24, good will. That is a technical amendment in your opinion.

Mr. Crawford: Yes. Mr. Chairman, you have touched on a very difficult problem, in crossing the line from a technical problem to a policy problem. I suppose in a way it is a matter of judgment for the person dealing with it as to how he regards it. You can approach things as technical matters, but they may turn out to be policy matters. I do not think I can state a general rule as to which side of the line it would fall on.

Senator Connolly: Generally speaking, your technical problems arise out of the draftsmanship of the sections, do they not?

Mr. Crawford: Yes. There is one item we want to speak to here which in a sense is technical and in another sense is very important in terms of policy. I refer to the very limited corporate reorganization role-over provisions. There is a very broad policy aspect here, but there are also, of course, many technical aspects to it.

Finally, in the opening part, Mr. Chairman, we would hope that either here or in the House of Commons the minister or his representatives would make some statements as to the more complicated parts of the statute—not in detail but as to what their general philosophy is and what their approach is in this area. In fact, if we had had that earlier, some of these complex provisions that so many people have criticized might have been much more understandable because in reading them we would have known what their general purpose was.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Crawford, perhaps what I am about to suggest would meet the problems that you are referring to. We would propose in committee to have the departmental officers here and have them give us the objectives of the particular sections that have been discussed.

Mr. Crawford: That would be very helpful, Mr. Chairman, particularly since your proceedings are available and could be distributed to the public.

Coming now to specific points, let me speak first of all on what might appear to be a rather small point but is one which appears to be causing a great deal of concern and anxiety. I am referring now to the so-called departure tax which is dealt with on page 31 of our submission. This is the tax that applies where if you are a resident in Canada and cease to be a resident, you are then deemed to realize any accrued but unrealized capital gains at that time except with respect to property that would be subject to capital gains tax if you were a non-resident. I think many of us in our practice—and I am sure, Mr. Chairman, if you follow this up you will find it to be the case—are receiving perhaps more calls about this problem than any other. There are executives who are reluctant to come to Canada because of what this could mean when they leave, and there are Canadians who are reluctant to leave for a two-year posting in England or Australia or the United States, or Canadian residents who are citizens of foreign countries and who are here now and who are suggesting to their corporate employers that they should leave by or shortly after valuation day so that this provision would not apply to them.

It is also unsatisfactory in several respects in terms of some of the countries with which we have tax treaties, particularly the United States and the United Kingdom—and there may be others—where they prohibit the imposition by Canada of a capital gains tax on residents of, say, the United States. That does not prohibit Canada imposing a capital gains tax on a resident of Canada at the time he ceases to be a resident, but if he makes the election to defer the tax until he realizes on the property, which could be some years later, and puts up the security, then at that later time he is a resident of the United States and not of Canada, presumably under the treaty he is protected from capital gains tax in Canada and will get his deposit back. Then there is also the problem of getting credit.

The Chairman: At that point you are assuming that this exemption in respect of capital gains will be included in any new treaties or amending treaties negotiated.

Mr. Crawford: No, I am assuming that the treaty will not be renegotiated before it becomes a problem for one or two taxpayers—at least that or the assumption you make, one or the other. We find it troublesome, and we have suggested that temporary residents might not be subject to this tax. There are various ways it could be dealt with. We appreciate that no solution can be perfect, but we quarrel with the decision arrived at.

The Chairman: Well, a departing Canadian who is changing his residence from Canada to another country may find himself in the position where for Canadian tax purposes there is a deemed realization, and he has made a profit or a loss, and he can pay taxes on that at that time. But in fact he has not disposed of the asset. At a later period in the country where he becomes a resident, if he disposes of it and they have a capital gains tax, he may be subject to another gains tax without any credit.

Senator Connolly: Then what you are suggesting, Mr. Crawford, is that there should not be any deemed realization if he is going for a period of, say, two years.

Mr. Crawford: You are quite right. If you are here up to two years and then leave again, either you are treated as not having been a resident for the purposes of deemed realization or there should be no deemed realization. There are various solutions to it.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Crawford, did you notice the solution we suggested in our report on the White Paper in paragraph 17 on page 60? There we said:

17. In view of the need of Canada to attract investment capital, the Committee strongly recommends that all of the White Paper doctrines of tax on unrealized appreciation should be eliminated. The Committee, therefore, recommends the removal from the proposed capital gains tax of

(a) the five-year revaluation rule . . .

Now that has been done. And then in the next paragraph it says:

(b) the deemed realization of capital gain or loss on individuals giving up Canadian residence . . .

(c) the deemed realization of capital gain or loss on the value of gifts . . .

So, we were with you at that time. Are you now going so far as to say that deemed realization on departure should be eliminated?

Mr. Crawford: We do not in our submission. I think in this submission we were looking at what we thought was in the realm of possibility in terms of influencing the Minister. I think we probably would go that far. But we might think that by doing so we would have less chance of achieving any results in influencing the process of legislative change, but we could be wrong in that judgment.

The Chairman: Obviously what the bill proposes does not meet your view of what should be in the bill. So if you were asked to rewrite this provision, what would you suggest?

Mr. Crawford: If I had a free hand to rewrite it I would suggest what this committee did in its report that you have referred to.

The Chairman: That is a nice attempt to avoid the effect of my question. But my question was; in the light of your attitude, that is that you wanted to stay within the realm of what was possible, and putting it to you on that basis of staying within the realm of what is possible, and accepting the principle of dealing with people departing from Canada and establishing residence elsewhere, how would you rewrite it so as to cure the objections you have raised?

Mr. Crawford: We would obviously insert in the bill that temporary residence for a period of, perhaps, two years would not be subject to it. We would also look at the basic purpose which to many of us involves Canadian residents who have accrued, but not realized, substantial gains upon going to live in tax-havens. If they go to live in a country with which Canada has a tax treaty, perhaps there should be no deemed realized gain.

Senator Connolly: Can you possibly go that far? Would you not say that if there is a tax treaty between Canada and the country in which they take up residence, presumably they would be saved from the effects of double taxation? Would such a treaty not include that?

Mr. Crawford: Until the treaty could be negotiated, or renegotiated with whatever results might flow from that, which would save it from the effects of double taxation, I would say if you go to a treaty country, most of the treaties, with perhaps one exception, which Canada has today are not with tax-haven countries, or are not with countries that do not levy taxes. Therefore, the person who leaves Canada to go to a country with which we have a treaty today would not ultimately achieve a big tax saving. It is true it might go to a country other than Canada. So, until a treaty could be renegotiated, or until a new treaty could be negotiated, I would exempt it with respect to treaty countries.

Senator Carter: Mr. Chairman, there would not be double taxation if the treaty country did not have a capital gains tax?

Mr. Crawford: That is true.

Senator Carter: What would be the position then?

The Chairman: Are you thinking about tax credits in these circumstances?

Mr. Crawford: Yes.

The Chairman: If a Canadian should establish residence in the United States and he takes his assets with him, and there is a deemed realization and he pays his tax on the gain here when he leaves Canada, and he realizes a capital gain a couple of years later in the United States and is subject to tax on it, how would you apply the tax credit if you say he should be entitled to a tax credit in Canada? Should the bill provide in those circumstances that the Government of Canada should go back and refund him?

Mr. Crawford: If you are negotiating a treaty with the United States, the Canadian approach is perhaps correct, that it would be subject to tax on the gain accrued while a resident in Canada and would be paid to the Government of Canada; and a gain subsequently accrued in the United States would be subject to the United States tax.

The Chairman: There would be no question of applying the tax credit in those circumstances, is that correct?

Senator Connolly: And there would be no double taxation.

The Chairman: No, because he would have paid tax on the accrued gain in Canada up to the time that he leaves; and the only way he would have a further capital gain in the United States would be if he realized a gain on a subsequent sale as against the value at the time he came into the United States.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, what would happen if he had a gain when he left Canada, and then he realized a loss during the time he was in the United States?

The Chairman: If he had other capital gains in the United States, I would think that he would dispose of them in the United States.

Senator Beaubien: But assuming he only had one asset.

Mr. Crawford: Part of the difficulty arises with the United States tax system whereby a person becoming a resident in the United States, or subject to tax in the United States, is considered to have a cost base which relates back to his original acquisition cost even if this were 10 or 15 years earlier.

The gain that had accrued while he was a resident of Canada will be taxed. It is a very complex problem, Mr. Chairman. I am sure the committee wrestled with it when preparing your earlier report and there are no easy answers.

The Chairman: We cannot write the U.S. tax laws; we can only attempt to remedy some of these situations by means of the tax treaty.

Mr. Crawford: In part it is a matter of balancing an imperfect tax system and resultant imperfect situations in that system, with the desirability, to the extent those making the judgments consider it to be desirable, of enabling people to be transferred or moved about between jurisdictions without imposing too many roadblocks.

The Chairman: Your suggestion of granting an exemption or exception to those Canadians who establish residence outside Canada is of a temporary nature, in the sense that it may arise from their employment and at some subsequent time they may return to Canada.

Would there be inherent in that any basis upon which an exemption could be allowed? The two-year period for an exemption may not really deal with the situation.

Mr. Crawford: That is true.

Senator Hays: Mr. Chairman, when persons from the United States, France or these other countries come to Canada, what is the situation with respect to capital gains? Could we consider the situation in reverse?

The Chairman: Have we dealt with the reverse situation?

Mr. Crawford: You make a very good point, senator, which I might have made earlier. It is my understanding that most of the countries which impose a capital gains tax do not in that case.

Mr. D. J. Gibson (Manager, Policy Department, Canadian Chamber of Commerce): It was my understanding that the United States taxes citizens, not just residents. A citizen of the United States who came to Canada would be liable for capital gains tax in the United States.

The Chairman: As long as he remains a United States national, wherever he may be in the world he is liable for United States taxes.

Mr. Gibson: So they still have him in the net.

The Chairman: He does not file a return and pay the tax if he decides he will not return to the United States at any time, because it could not be enforced. However, if he hopes to return to the United States, he had better keep up his income tax returns.

Senator Hays: Are there examples of the various countries who see fit to send people to Canada? Would that not be the best approach? I do not believe we can expect much better than the treatment our people receive in other countries.

Mr. C. Albert Poissant, Tax Consultant to Committee: A very good booklet dealing with capital gains in other countries is contained in the Carter Report. It illustrates the treatment of other countries such as Germany, France, England and the United States. It is true that the citizen rule for which there is no counterpart here exists in the United States. It is an avoidance rule applied in the case of a person moving out of the United States to obtain the capital gain while outside. This will attract capital gain in the States for ten years after the person leaves. In other words, they cannot leave the United States for the purpose of having the capital gain outside, because it is not deemed to be a capital gain realization at the time they leave the States.

The Chairman: I should have announced this earlier, that the speaker was Mr. C. Albert Poissant, who has been retained as tax consultant to the committee.

Senator Isnor: From the Canadian point of view those affected comprise a very small percentage, do they not?

Mr. Crawford: That would be true.

Senator Isnor: You, as the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, are representing to a very large extent Americans who might be affected by this, am I right?

Mr. Crawford: I have to ask how our percentages in the Chamber line up. It is not only U.S.-controlled subsidiaries who transfer employees, and this can be helpful to Canada in terms of learning know-how, new methods, and so on. However, there are Canadian companies with international operations who move their employees abroad from time to time on a temporary basis.

I would certainly concede that you are perfectly right that as a percentage it is very small.

Senator Isnor: Mr. Chairman, I cannot for the life of me see why the Canadian Chamber of Commerce should be involved to this extent.

The Chairman: Well, senator, if the bill deals with the situation in what appears to be a fair and equitable fashion, then I do not suppose there could be any quarrel. There may be a large number of Canadians, which I suspect to be true, who establish residence outside Canada for many reasons, such as health. I think you might be surprised at the numbers. Therefore if they are dealt with fairly in making the change, we are not concerned. If there are unfair aspects, we should consider them.

Senator Lang: Many Canadians of advanced years and very modest means leave the country in the last years of their life for health and climatic reasons. They might be literally prevented from making such a move by this provision. I believe that there are many more people in this category than my colleague suggests. They represent a sizable segment of our population, a segment which is not affluent in any sense of the word and they could be seriously hurt.

Mr. Crawford: If I could speak to this on a note of idealism: in an increasingly interdependent world within which it is becoming important to understand various cultures, it would be in that sense important to have a system which did not prevent the mobility of people between countries.

Mr. C. H. Scoffield, General Manager, Canadian Chamber of Commerce: I am not sure I understand the question, or the point made. I will at least make the comment that the preponderance of companies in the Canadian Chamber of Commerce represented by us today are purely and simply Canadian companies. We are not here speaking for companies that are members of chambers which are largely international, have American operations or are subsidiaries of American companies. The large proportion of the members for whom we speak are purely and simply Canadian companies.

Mr. Crawford: The next area of our submission is page 15, headed: "General Assessment of Provisions Dealing with Acquisitions and Reorganizations." From your earlier studies, you are no doubt aware that one of the difficulties in any tax system that imposes a capital gains tax is in determining when a change in investment should be imposed for tax purposes and when it should not.

Most people would say that any movement of assets or shares between or among wholly-owned subsidiaries are up to the parent company, and, since the basic economic interest remains the same, should result in what is commonly referred to as roll-overs without any gained realization at that time. When I say "most people," that is probably going too far. I should say "many people."

The provisions of the bill are very limited with respect to roll-overs. No doubt you will discover that when you discuss the matter with the Department of Finance officials.

There are very difficult judgment areas involved in determining when you should be entitled to tax-free roll-overs. Once they get the new system under way, I hope that in the course of the next two or three years they will slowly broaden the areas where they can effect tax-free roll-overs.

If it is done that early it should not be serious, because in most cases the gains built up after valuation date will not be substantial.

This is an area which, in our submission, causes difficulty in terms of the efficient operation of a business. It will also create many distortions. Some people will be able to do roll-overs, and other people will not, for reasons that have very little substance.

If you happen to have companies incorporated in one jurisdiction, or in a jurisdiction that permits you to re-incorporate in the area where the other company is incorporated, you can amalgamate in certain instances and get a tax-free roll-over. On the other hand, if you cannot amalgamate the companies, you may not be able to achieve a tax-free roll-over.

There are no roll-over provisions with respect to foreign corporations or foreign affiliates. On the other hand, if your foreign corporation is incorporated in a jurisdiction such as Delaware and can be re-incorporated in Ontario, presumably you can get it re-incorporated in Ontario and amalgamated with your Ontario parent company, or with your other interests in Ontario, and you may perhaps get a tax-free roll-over.

There are provisions for tax-free roll-overs in and out of partnerships. Here, if you happen to be so structured as eventually to achieve, by rather artificial means, the setting up of partnerships, of rolling into partnerships and then rolling out of partnerships and liquidating them into other corporations, this will create a lot of distortions. I realize that it is a difficult area to deal with.

I would remind honourable senators that the bill came out in June.

The Chairman: On June 30.

Mr. Crawford: We were told, in terms of technical matters, that our submissions should be in by late August. Therefore we did most of our work, in terms of the committees involved in putting this together, by the end of the first week of August. In the time that was available to us we did not have sufficient time to work out any positive recommendations in the roll-over area.

One suggestion that has been made is that until the system matures a little, and until more provisions can be developed regarding roll-overs, there should be a roll-over somewhat similar to the system existing in the United States where, in fact, you have to get a ruling; and if you can get that ruling and it does not appear to be avoiding tax, and so on, the minister can authorize you to have a tax-free roll-over.

The Chairman: If consolidated returns are validated for tax purposes, would that assist the situation?

Mr. Crawford: Consolidated returns help a great deal, if in terms of a loss in one company and a profit in another. You do not necessarily help your corporate organization where you have assets in one and you want to amalgamate the operation, or where they are subject to a low-cost base and a fairly high value. It would be of some assistance, but it would not help the problem.

The Chairman: It would not get to the root of the problem. For the purpose of the record, I should point out that in our report on the White Paper on this question of roll-overs we dealt with this question on page 61, paragraph 20. I suggest that honourable senators might like to read that section at their convenience.

Mr. Crawford: I will put the same question to you again: You have called our attention to this problem. What do you suggest should be done?

Mr. Crawford: I am now speaking personally, because the chamber did not have time to formulate any specific recommendations in this area.

I am not familiar with the parliamentary process, but if the minister could announce, either before this committee or in the house, or wherever it is appropriate, that the Government recognizes that the roll-over provisions are very limited, and that they are proceeding to develop and extent the provisions in the first or second amending bill to the tax reform act, that further roll-over provisions will be introduced, then that would be helpful.

I have another suggestion to put forward, which I made earlier. However, the Government might not have time to implement it. By regulation they might see whether they can get roll-overs by application on a discretionary basis, similar to the provisions in the United States Internal Revenue Code. It is a complex matter, and they may not have time to do it at this time.

There are no easy answers. We think that the Government has come down too strongly against roll-overs. We suspect that it was due in part to lack of time to consider further provisions and to study the operation of the bill in this area. It is a problem, particularly when dealing with foreign businesses, where there are no roll-over provisions. You might find, perhaps, that you have operations based in the Netherlands and, for reasons completely unrelated to Canada or unrelated to tax, the centre of your corporate activity abroad should be based in France or in the United Kingdom, or somewhere, and to move that operation is going to involve substantial tax if there are any accrued gains.

The Chairman: We suggested in our report on the White Paper with respect to this question of roll-overs that in so far as foreign companies are concerned the taxation provisions should not apply unless the purpose was tax avoidance. Would you subscribe to that?

Mr. Crawford: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if you would repeat the question?

The Chairman: I will give you the exact wording. At the top of page 62 of our Report on the White Paper we state:

... The Committee recommends, however, that where the roll-over transfer is to a foreign entity, the free roll-over provisions should only apply where the purpose of the transaction is not primarily for the purpose of avoiding Canadian taxes.

Mr. Crawford: Yes, I certainly would subscribe to that. The context of our limited roll-over provisions which we have does not fit because it is more or less built on the assumption of many broader roll-over provisions.

The Chairman: Mr. Poissant, are you prepared to add anything to this discussion?

Mr. Poissant: I would just say that I agree with the points made in the brief, and I do think that the recommendation which was made verbally, that roll-overs be obtained free of tax after a ruling, is a good point.

The Chairman: In other words, the minister would have some discretion in the matter?

Mr. Poissant: Yes, and it would permit some natural roll-over to take place without having to attract taxation.

Senator Connolly: Just to simplify and to use an example, Mr. Chairman, and it may be too crude, but if you take the case of a merger of a Canadian parent company and a subsidiary, and the subsidiary has capital gains which were realized at the time, there would be tax if those assets which are the subject of the capital gains are taken over by the parent company. It is proposed under the law now that capital gains are deemed to be realized at the time of an amalgamation or merger, and, if that is the case, is not the revenue protected just as well by having the parent company or the company that results from the merger held responsible for the gains based on the gain record which was developed by the subsidiary as well as by the parent?

The Chairman: Do you have any comment on that, Mr. Poissant?

Mr. Poissant: No, I have no comment to make on that. You are saying that as it is suggested in the law now there would be this realized gain?

Senator Connolly: I understood the witness to say that once a merger takes place then any gain made by any of the merged companies is deemed to have occurred at the time of the merger.

Mr. Poissant: That is true.

Senator Connolly: I understand this is what he said. If the resulting company is saddled with the gain or loss history compiled by the subsidiary which was merged with the parent, then, there would be no loss to the treasury. When the gain is in fact realized the tax would be exigible.

Mr. Poissant: That is what they are asking. Am I correct, Mr. Crawford, in that what they are asking is that the gain is not realized or deemed to be realized at the time of the merger but that it is realized at the time the gain is actually disposed of by the parent company?

Mr. Crawford: The loss, Mr. Chairman, to the treasury is, of course, in the form of a tax deferral. The treasury may get this tax in year 20 rather than year one, and this does obviously involve a loss.

Mr. Poissant: If the roll-over is permitted the treasury will eventually get this tax if there was any tax.

Senator Connolly: Are you saying, then, that the purpose of the section in the act as we now have it is to get the tax sooner and nothing more?

The Chairman: That is the effect.

Senator Carter: Mr. Chairman, this clause is designed against specific situations where companies buy or acquire assets and never sell them, is it not? In other words, they could go on forever accumulating assets and never paying any capital gains tax as long as they do not sell the assets. My understanding is that this section is aimed at that type of situation.

The Chairman: This is a generalization, senator. Let us take a specific situation. Supposing you have a manufacturing company manufacturing a number of different commercial products and it has acquired subsidiary companies who are in some of these fields, and they then reach the stage where they decide to put them all together, once you look at the picture as being that of a manufacturing company, a manufacturing company does not ordinarily engage in the business of buying and selling its assets. It may have a portfolio of investments which it has to deal with, but if the companies are put altogether they are put together for the purpose of carrying on in a larger or better or more efficient way their manufacturing or processing operations. At that stage there may have been a deemed realization on an accrued gain in value, and it is at this point that we have to look at it and decide whether it is reasonable or not.

Mr. Poissant: In a general way, you are correct. It comes back also to this five-year revaluation provision, and also to the economic implications of locking-in assets and having people reluctant to realize on them, and all that flows from that. You have to look at that philosophy and that problem when you look at this; there is no question about that. But as the chairman has pointed out, when they are all down below as subsidiaries, not being able to move them back and forth does not seem to have much implication, in terms of the lock-in, economically.

Senator Lang: Mr. Chairman, I can conceive that such a corporate organization might be necessary for the purpose of public financing where it is an issue on the market and this might seriously inhibit a company and render it impossible to obtain additional capital which it might require.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, does our legal counsel think that if Company A wholly owns Company B there would be a tax on the capital gains deemed to be realized are on the assets of Company B?

Mr. Crawford: I should speak to that, Mr. Chairman. If Company A wholly owned Company B, there is a roll-over provision where you can liquidate Company B into Company A. If Company A owns companies B and C and you wanted to move assets from B to C, as pointed out on page 6 of our submission you will probably have a realized capital gain; it comes under interaffiliate transfers. There are some roll-over provisions. It is just that they are very limited and will operate accidentally to permit certain types of organizations to do roll-overs where persons who happen to have a slightly different structure will not be able to do this. I appreciate it is easier to criticize than to solve this problem.

Mr. E. Newman, Member, Public Finance and Taxation Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce: I think one of the important points is that if Company A is moving assets down to Company B there is no roll-over; the roll-over is only on the way up.

The Chairman: On the way up, yes.

Mr. Newman: It does not make sense in terms of equity or for any other reason to me.

Mr. Crawford: Perhaps I can illustrate the logic of it in this way. There is a roll-over provision if the sole proprietor incorporates a company, transfers his business to the company and ends up by owning more than 80 per cent of all classes of stock in the company. However, if two or three individuals who may have sole proprietorships or capital to contribute in terms of assets want to move into a corporation, they will all end up with, say, 20 per cent each, or 33 1/3 per cent each in the corporation; there is no roll-over provision, but they could go into a partnership first, have a roll-over into a partnership, and the partnership could have a roll-over into the corporation. There are provisions where you can do indirectly what you cannot do directly. Again, it is very difficult not to do this in structuring a tax system, and I am not saying it is easy.

Another area that I think may have important economic implications is that it is possible in the United States, and other countries I believe, to do a share exchange takeover bid, whereby if there is no cash boot the shareholders of company A can exchange their shares of company A for shares of company B and have a roll-over; that is they keep their original cost base. Whereas, under our system on a share exchange takeover bid I guess the bidder will have to pay more to pay the tax of the shareholders acceptance, because there will be a deemed realization. It can be said that this is where the lock-over implications come into play. In one case it makes the takeover bid more difficult and may frustrate putting together more efficient corporate units. In the other case, however, it forces a realization at that time, and therefore tends to avoid building up big potential gains in the future.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions on that? What is the next point, Mr. Crawford?

Mr. Crawford: I think I have addressed myself to the points of significance that I wanted to speak to. I do not know if any of my colleagues would like to speak to any others. Otherwise, if you have any questions we can deal with them.

The Chairman: I would like to ask you one question. We have dealt with several points that you have developed. There are quite a number more in your brief, and you are only selecting these to deal with. How do we rate the others in importance and the attention we should pay to them?

Mr. Crawford: I think the others are largely technical, but in some cases with important implications. No doubt the committee and your advisors can review them. Some of them are simply a matter of improper references. Take the one on clause 24, good will, on page 3, to illustrate this . . .

The Chairman: I have just picked one in a hurry. On page 22 you deal with moving expenses and you refer to clause 62(3). That says:

... "moving expenses" includes any expense incurred as or on account of . . .

(d) the cost to him of cancelling the lease, if any, by virtue of which he was the lessee of his old residence.

What you have suggested is that he may not cancel the lease, he may be able to negotiate a sub-lease, and therefore the wording should be a little more general; that is, that it should provide not only for the cancelling but should also say, "or otherwise disposing of". To give real meaning to it, the suggestion would appear to be a fair and reasonable one, that however the person incurring moving expenses and has a lease deals with it, whether by cancellation or by negotiating a sub-lease, if it costs him anything to do it it should be an allowable expense.

Mr. Crawford: I would hope that that type of point will be picked up by the amendments that are now being or have been drafted. You can get around it in most cases, if you can get a sub-tenant and you are going to lose your expenses by sub-letting, if you have to sub-let for less than the rental obligation and the landlord co-operates you can make a new lease. The people who will get caught will be those whose landlord will not co-operate. In Ontario, for example, a landlord is not entitled to withhold his consent with respect to sub-letting in the way he heretofore has been. Or it may be the person who is not informed and gets trapped by sub-letting.

The Chairman: A lot of these section references deal with situations for purposes of, I would say, clarification.

Mr. Crawford: Yes.

The Chairman: Is there any other person in your delegation who would care to add anything?

Mr. Newman: I have not spoken to my colleagues about this, and I am not a tax specialist or expert by any means. I have taken a two-day wonder course about it to acquaint myself with the complexities of the legislation. I am struck by some of our adherence to old rules. I am thinking particularly of forward averaging which is offered as equity for a taxpayer whose income bounces up in one year. I notice that the annuity to be deducted for forward averaging must be purchased during the taxation year or within 60 days, which is the symmetry of the registered savings plan and so on. I suspect that a great many taxpayers will not know that it is to their advantage to buy such an annuity within the 60-day period. They will probably be preparing their tax returns in late March or early April. I do not think there could be any loss to the treasury if they gave the taxpayer an opportunity to acquire the equity they are offering. I think that would be a very simple thing.

The Chairman: You mean without any time limitation?

Mr. Newman: No, I would say 120 days from the date of filing the tax returns.

Senator Hays: Taken to April 30.

Mr. Newman: The following year.

The Chairman: There would appear to be sense in that. Is that dealt with specifically in your brief?

Mr. Crawford: I do not believe it is.

The Chairman: We have a note of it on the record now. Is there anything else you want to add?

Mr. Newman: No, that is fine, sir.

The Chairman: What about the other members of your committee? You are here for the purpose of telling us what your problems are as you see them and directing our attention to them.

Mr. Newman: There is one point which I do not believe is covered in the brief. It refers to foreign tax credits.

The Chairman: In which section?

Mr. Newman: I do not believe it is covered. There will be an inability to group foreign tax credits in Canada, by proceeding on a country-by-country basis. In a situation where a company may have operations in many countries and may pay foreign tax in one jurisdiction and is unable to offset that against some loss in another jurisdiction, there may be taxes paid which would not otherwise be payable. The United States system provides an election of either a grouping of countries or of individual countries. This is not provided for in our present system under this bill.

The Chairman: Let us take an illustration. Supposing you have a Canadian company that has operations in the United States through a subsidiary company—this is the sort of thing you are thinking about—then they have operations in Australia through a subsidiary company, and operations in the Netherlands through a subsidiary company. Let us say that in two of them they have earnings and profits and they bring them home in the form of dividends; and in the third one they have a loss so that there is nothing to bring home. Is that the sort of situation you are talking about?

Mr. Newman: Yes. I think it is a clearer situation, sir, if you think in terms of a branch operation. It is much clearer there. Therefore, if you have tax in one country and a loss in another, you will not be able to offset these to get the maximum value in Canada.

The Chairman: The simple answer is that if they are limited companies they do not have to bring the income home.

Mr. Newman: That is true.

The Chairman: On the branch operations, those would be earnings or income of the Canadian company. Is not that right, wherever the operation is?

Mr. Newman: Yes.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, then the loss would be offset.

The Chairman: You would think so. Mr. Poissant, what have you to add there? If you have branch operations of the Canadian company in three or four countries in the world and in one of them you have a loss, the earnings made in those branches are earnings of the Canadian company under the definition of income?

Mr. Poissant: They would be, yes. They are.

Senator Beaubien: The loss would be, too, then.

The Chairman: In those circumstances, I can understand how to deal with the earnings. They would swell the Canadian income. How about the losses? How does the bill deal with the losses in a branch?

Mr. Poissant: If I am right on this, Mr. Chairman, they would be the same; but if you permit me, I do not think that is the point Mr. Newman is raising. Am I right?

Mr. Newman: That is right.

Mr. Poissant: You are raising the point that the tax credit, the tax itself, is to be worked out individually by each country. Is that what you are raising?

Mr. Newman: Yes.

Mr. Poissant: And you say there may be cases, as in the United States, where they have an election, whereby you can pool that as income from various sources, but only for purposes of credit of the tax itself. Am I right?

Mr. Newman: That is right. If you have a situation, Mr. Chairman, where you have a profit in one country and a loss in another, then the profit and the loss would be taken together and offset. But if you have had to pay foreign taxes in the country in which you have made a profit, then in Canada's case you would not be able to offset your foreign source income, which would be positive in one country; and you cannot offset the loss, so you would have no foreign source income and no foreign tax credit in that year, because you cannot merge the two operations for Canadian purposes.

Mr. Poissant: Even, Mr. Chairman, when they are not operating as branches. That is because they are different companies—or it could be different branches too.

Mr. Newman: Yes, or branches.

The Chairman: In looking at the Clarkson, Gordon & Company analysis of this bill, under the title "Tomorrow's Taxes", dealing with this question, on page 198, at the top of the page, section K53, they say:

Under the proposed legislation, income from a business carried on in a foreign country through a branch will continue to be subject to Canadian tax. Similarly, business losses of foreign branches will continue to be deductible against other income of the Canadian taxpayers. However, a number of significant changes have been made relating to the tax credits to be allowed in respect of foreign income taxes imposed on foreign business income.

Your question was addressed to the question of the extent of the tax credit that you might get where you have earnings subject to tax in a branch in a foreign country.

Mr. Newman: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: If you have earnings subject to tax in a branch in the United States, you would be subject to United States tax there.

Mr. Newman: Yes.

The Chairman: If the United States tax were more than the Canadian tax when it is brought home, you would only get a tax credit at the Canadian rate. Is that the point you were making?

Mr. Newman: No, not quite, sir. It is a situation where, in calculating all overseas profits, there may be a situation in which inadvertently your foreign source income, in the calculation for a foreign tax credit, does not give you any relief; whereas if you were able to combine the results, you would get relief. If Canada will insist on treating each country on its own, you do not have the ability to combine this, as in the case of the ability in the United States.

Senator Connolly: Could we take an example. Suppose you made $100 in the Netherlands and $100 in England and you have branches in each of these two countries, and you bring in $200, that becomes taxable in Canada.

Mr. Newman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: But if you have a loss of $100 from the Australian branch, it is ignored. You cannot say that your net income from the three branches is $100; you have to say it is $200 and your loss does not figure in the tax calculation. Is that the point?

Mr. Newman: Yes, part of it, sir.

Senator Isnor: Is that a true picture, to say that you cannot get credit? If the parent body is in Canada and there are branches in three countries and one of those branches has a loss you cannot get credit for it? The Canadian company cannot combine?

Mr. Newman: It would combine.

Senator Isnor: And get credits?

Mr. Newman: The point is this, there are foreign taxes which will exceed Canadian taxes in some situations, either because of the difference in the method of calculating income or rate. If you have two countries and you have income from all sources, you may well find that, if you look at one country in isolation, you will not get full credit from Canada, because the tax rate exceeds the Canadian tax; whereas if you were able to combine countries A and B, the rate would then be less than the Canadian tax and you would get the full credit in Canada.

Senator Beaubien: That is the point the Chairman made.

Mr. Newman: It is quite an important one, in the case of multi-national corporations.

The Chairman: Yes, but, Mr. Newman, if I have a loss in one country and a profit in two countries, the loss is referable to the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Newman: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: And his income overall in Canada would be less by reason of the amount of the loss.

Mr. Newman: That is right, sir.

The Chairman: Then, when you move on to taxable income, he is getting some recognition for the loss. He is bringing it home, is he not?

Mr. Newman: Yes.

The Chairman: All he has to do then is have earnings in Canada.

Mr. Newman: He has to have a foreign income and a tax rate on it, which does not result in any disallowance of that tax in Canada.

The Chairman: Do you mean if he has losses and profits abroad, in branch operations, overall he must come up with income. In other words, the loss in one of the foreign countries could not be used to eat up the income.

Mr. Crawford: Perhaps we could state it this way, Mr. Chairman: if in foreign country A the tax imposed is 53 per cent and in foreign country B the tax imposed is 45 per cent, and our rate is 50 per cent, you will not get any credit in foreign country A for the amount their rate exceeds ours, nor will you get any reduction either in foreign country B, but you will pay 6 per cent extra tax if their rate is lower than ours.

Senator Hays: Does the same situation apply if you are an individual?

The Chairman: How do you mean? An individual in Canada?

Senator Hays: Yes, who has an operation in Australia, for example.

Mr. D. M. Parkinson, Member, Public Finance and Taxation Committee, Canadian Chamber of Commerce: With respect to earnings on a country-by-country basis you end up paying the taxes in the foreign country or the taxes in Canada, whichever is the greater, and this is in toto.

The Chairman: Yes, that is right. You get no credit for the excess over the Canadian rates. Is it your suggestion that you should?

Mr. Parkinson: That was Mr. Newman's point.

The Chairman: Certainly you would if you pooled all the earnings outside of Canada.

Senator Connolly: It is really a matter of averaging rates, is it not?

Mr. Crawford: Maybe it is a policy matter. It depends on how you look at it, really.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, perhaps with the Canadian Chamber of Commerce we should make the point that we in this committee and in the Senate are, and should be, conscious of the fact that more and more Canadians are getting into multi-national organizations, particularly corporate organizations.

The Chairman: We are going to hear people to whom we have given appointments who are carrying on multi-national operations.

Senator Connolly: We want to make it as efficient as we can. We are very conscious of that in the Senate.

Mr. Crawford: The final general point of our submission, Mr. Chairman, is that we did not have time in dealing with this really to deal with the international foreign source income problem. Since then many of us who are in practice realize that there are many problems in this area, and

I am sure that when these other groups come before you they will bring those problems to your attention.

The Chairman: I can tell you, Mr. Crawford, that we realize the importance of the international income aspect and we did deal with that in our report on the White Paper. In addition to that tomorrow morning we are going to become students and be lectured by people who understand this area thoroughly. One of the subjects we will be dealing with will be the international income problem. We do want to be equipped. Certainly, we are grateful to you for bringing this to our attention.

Are there any other points that any member of the Chamber would care to develop?

Mr. Parkinson: If I may speak once more, Mr. Chairman, one of the items I am sure will be brought up by multi-national corporations or international corporations is the question of foreign accrual property income. Ostensibly this is to stop the moving of assets to tax havens and building them up there. I suspect there has been a certain amount of that going on.

The definition of foreign accrual property income includes a dividend received by one foreign subsidiary from another foreign subsidiary, which is merely the passage of the business income within the consolidated group of countries. But by their definition they have suddenly tainted this income, which was untainted when it was first earned, and that creates a flow-through to be taxed in Canada immediately upon the dividend being received by the foreign subsidiary.

The Chairman: Whatever is the sum total of the earnings.

Mr. Parkinson: Yes. It is all business income and it is all untainted, but as it moves from one foreign subsidiary to another it gets the taint. I imagine you will hear quite a bit about that.

The Chairman: I think we have to look at the other aspect as well, that in the so-called tax havens there may very well be an introduction of taxation. I expect that many of them, when they give thought to this, will introduce a system of taxation because they can collect taxes in that country, and then you can get your tax credit here in Canada, and the one who will be the loser will be Canada.

Mr. Crawford: The sad part of that, Mr. Chairman, is not so much with respect to the tax havens as with respect to the developing countries. One or two departments of our Government are trying to encourage investment in and foreign aid to developing countries, and this system is rather rough on such investment in those types of countries.

Senator Connolly: Why?

Mr. Crawford: Because at the present time Canada does not have any tax treaties with developing countries, and those countries, in order to encourage industry, do not for the most part impose any tax or any substantial tax. Many of them do not. So a Canadian company starting operations in one of those countries will only pay tax on its business income in the developing country in accordance with the tax there, say, 10 per cent. To flow its earnings back to Canada it will pay tax on the additional 40 per cent, thereby making a very difficult system for the economics of investing in a country like that.

Senator Connolly: Therefore, there is no encouragement for Canadians to invest in that developing country.

Mr. Crawford: That is true. The answer to that is that we are going to negotiate tax treaties with developing countries and, if that is possible, that will solve the problem because then your earnings could flow back tax-free. If by 1976 they have not negotiated the tax treaties, and if the same policy continues, then they should extend the time. I think it is even the philosophy of the Department of Finance that, where you are not talking about tax havens but are speaking in terms of overall economics, the country where the money is earned should be the jurisdiction that is looked to for the maximum rate of tax. This is just a lever to negotiate foreign tax treaties, primarily.

The Chairman: Our counsel has handed me a memorandum in connection with Bill C-259 dealing with foreign accrual property income, which is referred to as FAPI. Apparently many people lean to the alphabet to describe these things. This very short memorandum does pinpoint the problem:

With respect to foreign accrual property income (FAPI), the appropriate definitions—that is, definitions of the bill—

could result in well over one hundred per cent of FAPI being taxes to resident Canadian shareholders where the foreign affiliate or affiliates concerned have more than once class of shares. This problem is compounded where one or more of the foreign affiliates is a trust with various types of income and capital beneficiaries. Appropriate amendments must be made to ensure that under no circumstances does FAPI income bear a Canadian tax in excess of one hundred per cent of the FAPI income.

Now, I do know from having done some forward reading that at least one of the submissions that will be made to us deals with this very situation where the exposure they estimate will be in excess of 100 per cent of the income. Then, continuing:

In addition, some relief should be given for those situations where, as a practical matter, the FAPI, even though technically taxed to the Canadian resident, will never be received by such resident.

Then in relation to FAPI on capital gains, there is this:

Capital gains are by definition considered part of FAPI and the treatment thereof is misleading since it would appear at first glance that when taxed as FAPI to a Canadian taxpayer, only one-half of the gain will be taxable. Since, however, in the case of individuals there are no appropriate offsets when a dividend out of such capital gain is actually made, the net result is that where a Canadian individual taxpayer has FAPI through a foreign affiliate and such FAPI consists of capital gains, the capital gains will ultimately be taxed to the Canadian individual shareholder in the same manner as though the FAPI was ordinary income. Appropriate amendments should be made to see that individual shareholders of foreign affiliates bear only the capital gains tax rate on that portion of FAPI which is capital gains.

Mr. Crawford: That, Mr. Chairman, well illustrates the problem raised earlier as to whether you are going to get the amendments. These FAPI problems have been brought to the attention of Finance.

Senator Connolly: Could I make a suggestion with respect to that, Mr. Chairman? Might I suggest that not now but perhaps at some future time our counsel might be good enough to take us through that memo together with the appropriate sections and point out the difficulties that arise.

The Chairman: Yes, and I want our counsel to feel that his position here is such that if he has something that he wants to direct our attention to at any time we want him to do so.

Mr. Crawford: Mr. Chairman, the CCH analysis does a very good job of going through those sections.

The Chairman: Is there anything else that any other member of the deputation or even those members who have already spoken wishes to add?

Senator Connolly: I take it that you gentlemen have read a good deal of the literature that has come out on this matter. Is there any one particular publication that you think is superior to the others—without making invidious comparisons?

The Chairman: Well, now, you should be a little hesitant on that, Senator Connolly, because our tax consultant, Mr. Poissant, has been identified with a publication which I have read and copies of which have been furnished to all members of the committee. It deals with corporation taxes and with the treatment of corporate distributions in the hands of Canadian shareholders. Of course I am not suggesting that you should not look at all the others, because I have tried to wade through them with more or less success, but this is going to be basic, I should think, seeing that Mr. Poissant is our advisor but we can make comparisons, and say, "Well, what have you to say about this?"

Mr. Parkinson: Senator Molson has a very nice book, sir.

The Chairman: Senator Molson will make his contribution I expect.

Senator Hays: I wonder if the Chamber of Commerce have now decided that we would be better off without a capital gains tax.

The Chairman: You know, senator, I was wondering when you were going to bring that up. You were really hard shell on that the whole way through. You were utterly, completely and very vocally opposed to capital gains tax.

Senator Hays: It is an estate tax on the living.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Hays: The old one used to be on the dead.

The Chairman: Well, it didn't make way so I think we have to live with it and do the best we can in connection with its application.

Senator Isnor: Mr. Chairman, might I inquire from the President of the Chamber of Commerce if he has any representative from east of Montreal?

Mr. Neil V. German, Q.C., President, The Canadian Chamber of Commerce: No.

Mr. Crawford: Perhaps I might qualify that by saying that although I am from Toronto I spent a great deal of my life quite far east of Montreal.

Hon. Lazarus Phillips, Q.C., Chief Counsel to the Committee: Mr. Chairman, might I, through you and honourable senators, put this question to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. In going through this act it seems to me that the most redundant section and the one most badly drafted is that dealing with partnerships. You have touched on that, Mr. Crawford, in your discussions with the Minister.

Mr. Crawford: Where the deemed amount is not the deemed amount but the actual amount?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Incidentally, as one example, I do not think the word "partnership" is even defined, although we have a special section of the law dealing with it. But to this day we do not even know if a joint venture is a partnership. I mention that as an example of the, shall we say, looseness of the draftsmanship, which is obviously due to lack of time rather than to any particular attitude which does not exist in any department of government. It simply results from the problem of time and draftsmanship.

The second section which is horrendous on account of its consequences is that dealing with foreign source income of Canadians rather than with the income of non-residents, which is also troublesome, from Canadian sources. But particularly the incomes of Canadians from foreign sources is horrendous in some of its consequences in that it is quite possible, I think, from my reading of the act that redemption of shares in the foreign company under certain conditions constitutes taxable income on the total amount, unbelievable as it may be. We will deal with that in due course.

The reason I have asked the Chairman to allow me to say a few words through this committee to the Chamber of Commerce is to see whether they would like to consider a submission to the Minister that in view of the trying problem that is involved, that for the present, aside from the technical amendments which the Minister has offered, relief should be granted to at least (a) the subject matter of roll-overs, which has been dealt with today, (b) the question of reconsideration of consolidated returns, which in my humble opinion will solve a considerable number of problems not dealt with this morning, and (c) the complete suspension by way of deletion from the bill for the present of that part which deals with partnerships and that part which deals with foreign source income. The matters of partnerships and foreign source income of Canadians run right down the line as dealt with in the act under special Chapter K and might well be suspended from the bill for the present until such time as opportunity is given for more detailed study of this very, very important section of the bill in its relationship to international operations in all directions.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Phillips, would you suggest that the present act would apply then?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes, in terms of the deletion of these sections for the present. I feel that the present bill, with these deletions, can be harmonized without too much trouble, particularly since we have trained officials who can work under the pressures of draftsmanship. I am not trying to be facetious about this bill, because we are dealing with serious matters, but we could well delete the entire section dealing with partnerships, the entire section K, press for consolidated returns, press for the vital problem of the extension of roll-over provisions, and harmonize the bill to fit in with what I have just said. If one wanted to be colloquial, I feel we could then live with the bill in some form, and this would give us an opportunity to study more carefully some of the more complicated provisions.

I am asking, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, that the Chamber of Commerce, which is such an important institution, consider this further, even at this late stage, and present supplementary representations to the minister.

The Chairman: If you could find it possible to do this, that would be very much appreciated.

Mr. Crawford: Certainly, the learned gentleman's points are well made. Dealing with partnership, as an example, I do not think that anybody has even looked at some of the problems that are obviously doing to be thrown up. For example, it would appear that you could avoid the thin capitalization rules by having a partnership and avoiding the existing structure. I am sure that the Chamber will give very careful consideration to this and take whatever action they feel is proper.

The Chairman: Mr. Phillips has used the word "delete". Perhaps it would be more appropriate at this time to speak of suspending the operation on the bringing into force for a definite period of time.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that I need not say, through you, that these observations which I have made are purely personal to me, and they obviously do not represent the views of any member of this committee because it has not been discussed in Committee at all. These are purely my observations as an individual, but I take advantage of this situation because you gentlemen are here today representing this important body.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, it would appear that the representations of the Chamber of Commerce have been completed. We may have saddled them with additional work, if they find they are able to take it on, and if they are, we would welcome what they have to submit.

I want to thank you gentlemen very much for coming here today, for the work you have done and the presentation you have made. Thank you very much.

Mr. German: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, we appreciate very much the opportunity of making this presentation and being with you on this occasion. I would point out, for the benefit of one honourable senator, that I have been president only since September 28, and Mr. Gordon Archibald of Halifax was the president previous to that time.

The Chairman: Now, perhaps we have given this the proper eastern flavour. Are you satisfied with that?

Mr. German: Yes. Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, please do not leave yet. There are a few things about which I want to report to you, and then we need to consider the several clauses in Bill C-262, which we were dealing with last evening, which were stood until today. I want to be able to report the bill to the Senate this afternoon, so we should complete our consideration of it this morning. This committee is sitting at 9.30 tomorrow morning, and we will be continuing with our witnesses of last week, Mr. Scace and Mr. Stephen Smith in this room. We have several very interesting and important subjects to be dealt with—for instance, general matters relating to estates, real estate, and corporate acquisitions. I can tell you that inherent in this problem so far as the United States is concerned are some very important and complex questions that need to be considered. Then we have international taxation, which we have been talking about this morning, which is a very important consideration in Canada now.

We then have international taxation, which we have been discussing this morning, and which is a very important consideration at present in Canada. We also have resource industries. We would hope to complete all that by 1 o'clock tomorrow.

The other point I wish to make is that we have fixed appointments for succeeding weeks, having made definite arrangements with organizations to October 28.

Senator Beaubien: Could we have a list?

The Chairman: Yes, I will arrange for you to receive a list. However, I am more concerned now with regard to next week. We have confirmed appointments for Wednesday of next week to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Canadian Construction Association. For Thursday, October 14, we have confirmed appointments for the National Association of Canadian Credit Unions, the Cooperative Union of Canada, and the Allstate Insurance Company of Canada.

Now, that is just for next week. I stress this particularly now, because I have heard rumours that it is possible that the Senate may not be sitting next week. Against that possibility, having confirmed these appointments and this subject matter being very important, will I have a quorum for the meetings next week in the event the Senate is not sitting? Yes; I can see by your response that we will have a quorum. Thank you on that point.

You might be interested in knowing of some of the other appointments. During the week of October 20, on the Wednesday we have the Canadian Jewish Congress, Massey-Fergusson Limited, which is multinational with international income, and The Canadian Mutual Funds Association. On Thursday, October 21, the Canadian Bar Association and the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada will appear. On the 27th we will have ALCAN, which will be international income, Bethlehem Copper Corporation Limited, The Canadian Gas Association and, tentatively, the Canadian Export Association. On October 28 we have the Canadian Petroleum Association and the Mining Association of Canada.

The volume of requests to appear at hearings indicates that it may be necessary at the beginning of November, or even in the last week of October, to add another day of hearings per week, maybe Tuesday. We should endeavour to conclude our hearings by the middle of November, as we will need some time to prepare our conclusions, after which they will be discussed with the committee. I certainly do not consider two weeks to be too long a period for that.

Senator Connolly: Hopefully we will have the amendments by that time.

The Chairman: I believe I informed you earlier that I had submitted in writing to the Government Leader in the Senate the substance of the resolution passed by the committee last time. That submission stressed the importance of having this information as early as possible, in order that the hearings may be expedited.

The Committee adjourned.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-1971

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

No. 37

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1971

Second and Final Proceedings on Bill S-22,

intituled:

"An Act to incorporate United Bank of Canada"

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE

(Witnesses—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Grosart
Beaubien	Haig
Benidickson	Hayden
Blois	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Lang
Choquette	Macnaughton
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Molson
Cook	Smith
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28)

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, June 15, 1971:

"Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Honourable Senator Robichaud, P.C., moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macnaughton, P.C., that the Bill S-22, intituled: "An Act to incorporate United Bank of Canada", be read the second time.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Honourable Senator Robichaud, P.C., moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macnaughton, P.C., that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Wednesday, October 6, 1971

(45)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 3:00 p.m. to further consider the following Bill:

Bill S-22 "An Act to incorporate United Bank of Canada".

Present: The Honourable Senator Hayden (Chairman), Beaubien, Benidickson, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Desruisseaux, Gelinas, Haig, Hays, Isnor, Lang, Molson, Smith, Sullivan, Welch and White—(18).

Present, not of the Committee: The Honourable Senators McNamara and Robichaud—(2).

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel.

WITNESSES:

United Bank of Canada:

Mr. B.V. Levinter, Q.C., Counsel;
Mr. Dennis Dwyer, President, Chartec Limited;
Mr. Robert Wilson, member, Chartec Limited;
Mr. Bernard Charest, member, Chartec Limited.

Upon motion it was Resolved to report the said Bill without amendment.

At 4:40 p.m. the Committee adjourned until Thursday, October 7 at 9:30 a.m.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

Report of the Committee

Wednesday, October 6, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill S-22, intituled: "An Act to incorporate United Bank of Canada", has in obedience to the order of reference of June 15, 1971, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted.

Salter S. Hayden,
Chairman.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Wednesday, October 6, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill S-22, to incorporate United Bank of Canada, met this day at 3 p.m. to give further consideration to the bill.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I call the meeting to order.

You will recall that on the last occasion we were considering this bill we requested the feasibility studies, and so forth, and I understand these are available today.

Mr. Levinter, are you ready to continue?

Mr. B. V. Levinter, Q.C., Counsel: Mr. Chairman, I understand that there were two facets which the Senate was interested in: The first was with regard to the financing, and the second was with regard to the projections which I would prefer calling our goals over a five-year period.

If I may, Mr. Chairman, I would like now to call upon Mr. Dennis Dwyer, the President of Chartec Limited, who has done our financial study and who is perhaps in the best position to give you an outline as to what Chartec Limited has done. He can then answer any questions that might be in the minds of the honourable senators.

The Chairman: Has this been developed in any statement?

Mr. Levinter: Mr. Dwyer has a short statement. In order to get to the meat of the matter so that we are aware of the questions you want answered I would suggest that he give you this brief outline, and then any questions can be asked.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, this is Mr. Dennis Dwyer, the President of Chartec Limited. Chartec Limited is the organization that was referred to in our previous hearing as having conducted certain studies in connection with the feasibility or the practicability of a bank of this kind and its operations having regard to the present state of the market, and so forth.

Mr. Dwyer, I have identified you to the committee. If you want to add anything further to your identification, go ahead.

Mr. Dennis Dwyer, President, Chartec Limited: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Chairman, honourable senators, I am appearing before you today along with Mr. Robert Wilson, C.F.A. and Mr. Bernard Charest, both of whom are my partners. We appear before you as independent financial counsel retained by the provisional board of the United Bank of Canada to assist them in making the proper arrangements for the raising of the bank's capital.

Let me introduce the members of our firm. Mr. Bernard Charest joined us in 1969. He has been in the investment business since 1955. His major role in our firm is as an investment manager for client's security portfolios. He is also retained as an investment adviser to outside institutions.

Mr. Robert Wilson joined me in 1968. He has been actively engaged as a security analyst and portfolio manager since 1948. His responsibilities in our firm involve the management of funds entrusted to our care, advising our institutional clients, and using his past expertise in specific financial counselling assignments, such as our present one.

My background in the investment business began with Greenshields Incorporated in Montreal in 1959. I became sales manager in 1963 and held that position until 1966. I then spent some time with Hodgson, Robertson, Laing & Co. investment counsel, of the same city. By 1967 I went into business for myself as a financial consultant.

Mr. Wilson, Mr. Charest and myself bring to the provisional board of the United Bank a total of some 50 years' experience in dealing with the investment house, the stockbroker, the investing institution and the investing public.

Our mandate from the board was quite clear. One, the ownership of the bank was to be as widely held, by as many Canadians as possible. Two, the bank was to have an initial capitalization of at least $20 million. Three, the provisional directors were in no way to control the bank financially. Four, our firm and its own members, were to have no financial interest in the actual sale of the shares.

Also, the board was interested to know if the bank would receive broad investor support, in view of its socio-economic policies. We discussed our mandate with 71 people representing 28 investment houses, brokers, and 18 institutions. We considered that this group represented a good cross-section of the most responsible people in the investment field. A few were negative, many more were positive, and of these a substantial number were very enthusiastic.

The comments made by those who were positive may be summarized as follows: One, investor interest in Canadian chartered bank shares in general is high, in view of the high return on capital investment. Investor interest in the United Bank, solely on the grounds of the provisional board's responsible and deliberate actions to date, has given the impression that the investor believes that the basic policies of the bank will ensure a profitable operation.

Two, one crucial factor in investor interest has been the desire expressed by the provisional board that no one group, or small combinations, will control this particular bank. Our mandate specifically stated this objective and this met with great acceptance and enthusiasm amongst the people whom we saw.

Three, institutional investors, brokers and dealers are particularly conscious of the role that they can play in realizing what so many Canadians want at this point in our history, that is, a broader genesis and control of emerging Canadian industry. With their leadership, a public issue will be successful.

Four, the deliberate attempt by the founders to involve a group of Canadians from all walks of life, to ensure the bank's particular responsiveness to the changing Canada of the seventies was fully endorsed.

Finally, the regional concept of the bank found great acceptance.

Honourable senators, I believe it is important that I stress that the great body of investment people viewed the policy of the United Bank in this regard as a strength and not a weakness, as this policy is particularly in tune with the general socio-economic views now being expressed widely across our country. These many meetings with investors suggested a logical step by step process, so as to enable the bank to raise the required funds.

The following is a summary of that plan:

One, after the granting of the charter, management will make itself known to the investment community and will meet with them individually and collectively to explain the actual operations of the new bank.

Two, following this, investment dealers who have already indicated a desire to be major underwriters will be selected by the provisional board.

Three, subscriptions from investing institutions will be accepted and, following this, subscriptions from private individuals will be accepted.

It must be appreciated that because the bank does not yet have a charter, specific commitments cannot be obtained. The result of our survey indicates, however, that $20 million can be raised.

Mr. Chairman, I shall be pleased to answer any questions which may be put.

The Chairman: Mr. Dwyer, you said there was a general acceptance of the regional concept of the bank. What do you mean by that?

Mr. Dwyer: I mean, sir, that the investing people that we saw, and more particularly the institutions than the dealers, were very conscious of the necessity for very close development ties between the granters of credit and the people who wish to borrow. And they felt that the policy was a rather deliberate policy as expressed by the provisional board, that this was a very key part of the operations of the bank, to be very sure they are aware of the concerns of their particular areas. The investment people viewed this very positively.

The Chairman: But, Mr. Dwyer, let us get down to cases. You have been talking about a regional concept. When Mr. Levinter was talking, he was talking about a regional concept in relation to the receipt of deposits and the making of loans.

Mr. Dwyer: That is right, sir.

The Chairman: You are talking about a regional concept being attractive to investors. I did not ask you about the investors. I asked what makes a regional concept. First of all, is the regional concept of the bank such as Mr. Levinter has said—that is, you accept deposits in a region and you make your loans in the area from which you have received the deposit. Is that your concept, too?

Mr. Dwyer: Yes, it is.

The Chairman: That is why I asked Mr. Levinter on the last occasion whether this was a new philosophy in banking—that is, that you collect money in an area and you loan it in that area even though there are better opportunities to make money in other areas. He said no to that.

Mr. Dwyer: No, sir, I think he said that, wherever possible, as a deliberate act, given a good and a responsible banking practice, that the bank would exhaust, as it were, every effort to ensure that the money was returned to the area from whence it came. Why the investors are interested in this is because this should engender deposit loyalty. And a bank grows because of its ability to attract deposits. One of the questions I was repeatedly asked was: Where are the deposits to come from? Our answer was to explain that particular policy.

The Chairman: When I asked Mr. Levinter he expounded on the concept of the Provisional Board of Management and he said:

— we have considered that if deposits are made in, let us say, Nova Scotia, the money raised in Nova Scotia by way of deposit should first be made available—again, within guidelines—to people who need loans there and for the development of the Province of Nova Scotia, instead of bringing it down here for the development only of Ontario or only of Quebec.

Now that was his pronouncement of principle. So then I said to him:

The directors of this bank will be dealing with money that has been invested by shareholders. Do you subscribe to the principle that they should follow the regional theory of investment, even though investment opportunities and earning capacity are greater in another area than where the money was raised?

His answer was:

No, sir. I was talking strictly about deposits. We must remember that the overall concept must be the success of our bank.

I have a question which bothers me—and I can ask Mr. Levinter later, of course—but it is whether he was drawing a line between money that comes in from shareholders for investment, and you will be free to invest that anywhere, and money that you collect by way of deposits which you would loan out only in the area where you collect deposits. Is that your concept of regional investment?

Mr. Dwyer: Well, I would like Mr. Levinter to answer that question because it is a question of board policy.

The Chairman: No, I want you to answer.

Mr. Dwyer: I am not trying to avoid it, sir.

The Chairman: You have just expressed an opinion and I want to know what is behind it.

Mr. Dwyer: The people that we saw were concerned that the policy not override profitable banking. But at the same time they were very interested that the policy existed and they did not, and I do not think that I do and I do not think that any investment person would try to artificially divide between the capital of the bank and the deposits. I think that would be a very, very difficult thing for management to try to do. But I think the intent, and the very strong intent, that the bank make every effort to employ these funds in the area from which they came is a very positive thing.

The Chairman: Senator Cook the other day said, and I am wondering whether you investigated this:

I think the history of banking will show that most banks which tried the regional theory either failed or merged.

Have you made a study of the operations of banking and its development throughout Canada to be able to express any view in relation to what Senator Cook said?

Mr. Dwyer: My partners and I as security analysts have naturally looked at banking, and I think when that remark was made, it was probably intended to isolate those banks that only dealt in a certain region. This bank will be a national bank with a strong regional flavour. I think this is rather a different thing.

The Chairman: What do you mean by "a strong regional flavour"?

Senator Beaubien: What region are you contemplating?

Mr. Dwyer: The head office of the bank as proposed is in the City of Toronto, but I believe our Provisional Board expressed the thought that in the first year of operation there would hopefully be a branch in Halifax, in Montreal, in Toronto, in Winnipeg and Vancouver.

Senator Beaubien: That is quite a big region, from Halifax to Vancouver.

Mr. Dwyer: Well, the Halifax area would be considered in this sense to be a region as would the Vancouver area be considered a region.

The Chairman: You see, Mr. Dwyer, from what has been said so far, from what you have said and from what Mr. Levinter has said, the regional concept is dictated to you. You do not choose it because the regional concept, according to Mr. Levinter and you support it, is where you get the deposits; that is where you will loan the money. You accept that as the definition and surely this is the way we have to look at it, and see whether it is practicable or not. If you meld this regional concept of collecting deposits in an area and loaning in that area with what is also said—that is that the bank has a national concept—what money would be used for that national concept? Are you going to rob the regional area? What are you going to do?

Mr. Dwyer: No, sir. I think it is not only possible but it will in fact happen that in any one area and perhaps especially in certain wealthier areas, the amount of deposit money coming in will probably be able to be used all in that area because of the amount of industry that exists there. But I think at the same time the amounts of money coming from, shall we say, less-developed areas would require harder work for its investment. There will always be an extra pool. It will always exist. But I think it is the intention—and I think that is the important thing here, that when we saw the investment people, we never for a moment suggested that for every dollar of deposit coming from region X, that same dollar plus a multiple will go back to that particular area.

Senator Molson: Mr. Chairman, I think the philosophy is excellent, but I would like the witness to explain to us in what way this differs from the practice of the existing chartered banks, because I fail to find any material difference.

Mr. Dwyer: Initially, sir, it will be a difference in size, right from the start, I think it is fair to say that a smaller organization just by its very nature tends to move more quickly. I think one possibility is that you may find that your limits may not be as different as they are, for example, if you had a head office, say, here in Toronto. I suggest that this is a matter not for us but for management, but the loan limit in Toronto may not be two or three times the loan limit for management in Winnipeg. That may be a difference. As I understand the present chartered banks, the loan limits in different areas tend to be different.

Senator Molson: Not because of the areas, but because of the different circumstances and size and so on. I am talking not about the size of limits and so on, but about the philosophy you have expressed that this bank is going to make a new move in that it is going to try to relate deposits to loans. I have been led to believe that this is a fairly general practice in banks, and so I asked you what the difference is and you did not answer my question so far.

Mr. Dwyer: Let me try again, sir. I think it is a fairly general practice, and as you know some statements have been made in the press by other provinces about the amounts of money that were supposed to have been taken out, and these have been questioned by some of the chartered banks, and I think rightly so. The only thing I am trying to say here is that this policy has been enunciated as a policy. Now I do not think the other chartered banks have as yet enunciated that as a policy. I think it happens perhaps a lot more than is publicly believed.

The Chairman: What is the difference? If this happens, what is the difference whether they enunciate it as policy or not?

Mr. Dwyer: Sir, if I may, the reason for enunciating it is because these people have not normally been involved in banking at the board and management level, as Mr. Levinter has said. The communities which they represent wanted to know what the policy of the bank was in this regard. Therefore, it was reasonable for the provisional board to make such a statement of policy.

Senator Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, we have several experienced directors of banks on this committee. From their experience, when these banks are as old and as large as they are, and with as many branches as they have, can they determine a relationship between where they lend money and where they get their deposits?

The Chairman: I would assume that you lend where the advantage is.

Senator Benidickson: Yes, I would agree, and where you get the interest and the loan repayments.

The Chairman: When I asked Mr. Levinter that question he agreed with the statement I made, that you go where you make the money; and if you have any other policy, you are going to fall flat on your face ultimately.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, would the witness say that so far as the lending policy of this bank would be concerned that basically the bank would follow the normal banking practice, looking first to such things as the prospects of the borrower, the security that he offers, and the kind of covenant that he can give. And, assuming for the sake of argument that there are applications for loans from British Columbia, Ontario, and from Nova Scotia, and all of these applications satisfy the general banking criteria—which I may not have exhausted, but which are reasonably representative perhaps—then the policy would be to say, "Since we have a greater volume of deposits from the Toronto branch than from the Nova Scotia branch, we should first of all, favour those Toronto applications." They might then say, "Even though we have not sufficient deposits to justify a loan to a proposed borrower from Nova Scotia, we are pretty short on loans in Nova Scotia. Perhaps we had better pay some attention to the geographic factor and make a loan there." Is that the way it is going to work?

Mr. Dwyer: I would think so, yes.

Senator Connolly: In other words, geography is a secondary consideration for the granting of a loan?

Mr. Dwyer: That is right, a loan has to stand on its own two feet.

Senator Connolly: I do not use the word in any objectionable sense, or in a sinister sense, but, in a sense, that will be a political decision as to whether you should approve a loan in Nova Scotia rather than Ontario—political because of the geographic factor perhaps. I think we mentioned also the other day that the ethnic factor comes into play here.

The Chairman: I was going to come to that later.

Senator Connolly: All right, we will stick with the geographic factor.

The Chairman: I was wondering, Mr. Dwyer, supposing the first branch of this bank is opened in Toronto and they get substantial deposits. Following the principle of lending does that mean that most of your loans would be made in Toronto? If there is no question of the quantity of money you have to lend, would you not find good loans in the Toronto area? Then supposing you open up the next branch in Halifax —

Senator Benidickson: Let us give ethnic consideration to this also, and let us say Sudbury instead of Halifax. I do not see how you can separate discussion of new emphases of a geographical or ethnic nature if they are new emphases.

The Chairman: Let us go along with free-wheeling. The first question that we have to settle on the ethnic matter is how we are going to achieve ethnic representation.

Senator Molson previously asked the question as to how they were going to maintain that in their solicitation of investment.

Senator Benidickson: There are two sections of the community who feel, rightly or wrongly, that they have been rather neglected in the banking system of this country on regional and ethnic bases. Have people been approached as possible investors on the basis that certain ethnic groups are inadequately represented on the boards of directors of our banking system at the present time? Has that been part of the approach for capital funds?

Mr. Levinter: We are not making any direct effort to appeal to any of the ethnic groups, with regard to either financing or loans. It is not an ethnic approach. It is a cosmopolitan approach. In other words, it is a blending of all the people in banking, both in a financial way and in the operations of the bank.

I can say that there will be no favouritism given to the ethnic group as opposed to another ethnic group with regard to loans. The only value attached to a cosmopolitan approach lies in a board of directors, which sets policy, understanding the needs of the various people it represents and of which it is a part. I am totally against, favouritism being given because someone is Polish or is Italian. Nor it is a fact that any individual will become president by reason of his ethnic background. But by reason of his ethnic background, nothing shall hinder him from becoming president. In other words, we want to involve everybody.

Senator Benidickson: It may have hindered them in the past.

Mr. Levinter: I would prefer not to make a comment on this.

Senator Benidickson: But I would.

The Chairman: On the last occasion Senator Molson asked the following question:

Might I ask whether it is proposed in your by-laws, or through any other way, to limit the ethnic makeup of your board or management? How do you expect to perpetuate this situation which you are now starting with a provisional board, which no one can quarrel with? How do you expect that it will continue? Where do you think you will be in five or ten years, or in the future? Do you think you will be able to continue in this way?

And Mr. Levinter replied:

I do, from a practical point of view. Firstly, our goal is to have mass distribution of stock so that nobody has control of the bank.

So far as I am concerned, that is a very indefinite and inconclusive answer. How do you maintain the ethnic complexion unless you have participants in the form of bankers, shareholders and directors who have various ethnic origins?

I am not criticizing whether or not they have ethnic origins. This has been put forward as a basis as to why the charter should be granted. Therefore I want to know what value there is in that representation. The same thing applies when we talk about a reasonable concept of operating a bank. I am not criticizing it one way or the other. I want to know its value in terms of assessing the possible success of the bank. That is all.

I want to see whether it is a practical thing. If not, ultimately we may have to look at this as an application by a certain group of people, and consider whether they should be granted a charter or not, not leaning on the regional concept at all, not leaning on the ethnic group concept at all, because on close analysis they may not stand up, and it would not appear that they do stand up. I am sorry that I am intruding.

There is one question I wanted to ask, if I may. You talk about the investment in such a bank being attracted up to $40 million. As we said the other day, the Bank of British Columbia finally ended up with $12½ million. They had the Premier of the Province of British Columbia behind them. Here he told us, when they were applying for a charter, that they would have no trouble getting $400 million. There is a big gap between $400 million and $12½ million. What makes you so sure that you can get $20 million?

Mr. Dwyer: First of all, we have spent a great deal of time talking privately to a very large number of people, whom we have known over a long period of time, explaining very carefully the aims and objectives of this bank, and the desire to broaden the Canadian banking system in general. We have not made any extravagant claims about $400 million, or $100 million. Anybody who was in the investment business at the time of the issue of the Bank of British Columbia would have their own ideas as to why the money was not raised.

The Chairman: I was not asking you why it was not raised.

Mr. Dwyer: I am just saying that we have done this very quietly and, we hope, responsibly. We found among a lot of people in this country, a lot of investment people, a desire to see a broadening of the banking system, and, to answer your question to Mr. Levinter if I may, to see how the complex of people at the management and board level will be maintained. I think one only has to look at the States to see how certain institutions that were started there have become great big companies, by the very nature of the initial board and policies of these companies, which have continued to attract people from a wider spectrum than other companies.

I think those looking at this bank and seeing the sort of people who are founding it, will say, "These men are prepared to commit themselves. I would like to be involved." Believe me, that will happen, because many of the investment houses that we saw have very large clientele in certain areas, and a number of them have had people actually phone in. We have not been out trying to sell bank stock. We have merely been telling the story of the bank and saying why we think it would be good for the country.

The Chairman: I assume part of the story you have been telling has been singing the virtue of the regional concept.

Mr. Dwyer: That is one thing.

Senator Benidickson: And perhaps the ethnic concept.

The Chairman: And singing the virtues of the ethnic concept.

Mr. Dwyer: Certainly, sir.

Senator Benidickson: I was going to ask a question. There are people more knowledgeable than I about this, but am I right in my thought that perhaps the largest bank in the United States today is the Bank of America, away from New York and organized by an Italo-American?

Mr. Dwyer: Yes, and that is an ethnic bank.

Senator Benidickson: That is on the west coast, in California.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions on this aspect?

Senator Molson: I would like to follow up a little more on the regional aspect. I do not quarrel with this. As a matter of fact, I think it is very desirable in this country under the circumstances. I question how far it is possible, how far it is to go. I also repeat that I believe this is in very large measure a practice of the banks today. I would point out the wheat trade gets loans aggregating at times $800 million. Is it suggested that that money comes from the Prairies? I suggest to you that that is money from elsewhere; the deposits do not match the loans in this case. The CPR would have ended up in Westmount if there had been a completely regional practice in banking a long time ago. I think that to a large degree this applies today. I believe it is a very valid objective. I hope it can be worked out by this group.

The same thing applies to the question that I raised and which you have just mentioned about the ability to continue an ethnic character in relationship and proportion as time goes on.

Quite frankly, I have to question in my own mind whether some of these quite laudible objectives will be diluted and will disappear as the bank gets underway. However, that is not sufficient in my mind to say that there is anything wrong with the proposition that is put forward by these gentlemen.

The Chairman: No, all it means is that you may have to look at the application in the light of an application from the people who are making it and the feasibility of it, forgetting the other things that they are urging, even about ethnic participation and about matching deposits with loans, which certainly has not proven to be a good banking theory.

Senator Benidickson: Perhaps in the past there has been regional under-lending, or at least the feeling of that in certain regions.

Senator Cook: Mr. Chairman, I do not oppose the application in any way, but I do agree with your remarks and those of Senator Molson in that, after all, a bank is a custodian for its depositors. It is not the money of the shareholders which the bank lends but it is the money of the depositors. If the bank adopts any principle other than making a loan which is a sound risk, if the bank operates on a regional basis or an ethnic basis and gives loans that are not sound risks, then that bank is going to be in trouble as sure as we are sitting here.

Senator Burchill: Mr. Chairman, in the region I come from in the Maritimes people tend to feel and complain that banks do not look after them very well. Although two of the biggest banks had their beginnings in Halifax, their head offices are now located in Montreal and Toronto and the people of the Maritimes have a feeling that these banks have moved away from them. Their complaint is that the banks do not know enough, or seem to know enough, about the economy of the regions which are far distant from them. In other words, they measure us by the tempo of the economy in which they live. I have spent many hours talking to bank officials at their head offices, pleading with them to become more familiar with the life style and way of life in the Maritimes. I have done so because we feel that sometimes we are at a disadvantage owing to the fact that we are too far away from those who make the policies of the banks.

The Chairman: Senator Burchill, are you suggesting that the policy of the banks that are in existence today is not to make good loans in every area where they can possibly make those loans?

Senator Benidickson: I am glad you and a previous speaker with banking knowledge used the word "today", Mr. Chairman. I am old enough to recall, and you have spent enough time in western Canada to know, that there has been in my time in the west this feeling such as Senator Burchill describes for the Maritimes. It may be that that is not the feeling today, but it was the feeling in recent years, and not too long ago at that. Rightly or wrongly, there was a very strong feeling in western Canada in cities like Winnipeg and Vancouver, where bank charters have been applied for in recent years, that if money was scarce it was because the borrowers were looked at first in the regions where the national banks had their head offices—in Toronto and Montreal.

The Chairman: Well, that is just what we heard when the Bank of Western Canada applied for its charter.

Senator Benidickson: With Toronto money, unfortunately. But the Bank of British Columbia has a little different record.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Dwyer, you are familiar with the provisions of the Bank Act.

Mr. Dwyer: Not entirely, sir, although I was brought up on it.

Senator Connolly: I assume in undertaking this investigation for this group you became reasonably familiar with its provisions.

Mr. Dwyer: Yes, sir.

Senator Connolly: You know what is required of a bank in order to meet the statutory demands.

Mr. Dwyer: Yes, sir.

Senator Connolly: What you have told us is that you made investigations in the financial and commercial communities. Are you satisfied, first of all, that this bank will be operated in a manner which will meet the requirements of the statute?

Mr. Dwyer: Yes sir, I am.

Senator Connolly: Are you satisfied also that the investing public and the depositing public will be served in the manner in which banking institutions should serve?

Mr. Dwyer: Yes sir. Particularly on that point I refer to Senator Hayden's remarks with regard to the bank charter passed on the basis of the people, rather than any of the concepts. One of the things that seemed to convince the people that we saw that this was an honest, if you will, straightforward, no nonsense undertaking, was that the sponsors have in no way attempted to control the bank, either politically or financially. I have checked the testimony of some of the previous hearings before this committee where it expressed very great concern regarding the control factor in some previous applications. In this application there is no such control desire.

This is one of the reasons why investors look upon this kind of bank which, after all, will have a professional management and a board which would be deliberately representative of all sections of the public, as being something which will attract investors.

Senator Gélinas: When you mention investors, do you mean institutions, or investment dealers with whom you have been in contact?

Mr. Dwyer: Both, sir.

Senator Gélinas: Some people have told you, I suppose that the banking system could be enlarged and it would be very beneficial?

Mr. Dwyer: Yes sir.

Senator Gélinas: Is that for the two reasons you mentioned, both the regional concept and the ethnic concept?

Mr. Dwyer: Also to generally broaden the credit-granting base. Many investment people who are concerned with the development of industry in this country feel that any responsible broadening of the credit-granting base is good for the country, that any innovation will raise the general level of excellence of banking in Canada.

Senator Gélinas: Is there a language barrier involved in the ethnic concept?

Mr. Dwyer: No sir; as a matter of fact, as you know, the provisional board is made up of persons speaking a number of languages. In fact, one could say this, that in the future one would hope that the language attitude would be one of at least being able to bring in perhaps newer Canadians who will not speak either one of the official languages, but will be able to train themselves.

Senator Gélinas: I think they can get along with the present system as far as language is concerned.

Mr. Dwyer: I do not think there is any implicit policy that the board has taken with respect to language.

The Chairman: I would think you would have to acknowledge that no one would suffer as a result of a lack of communication due to language if he went into any existing branch of any existing bank.

Mr. Dwyer: All of the existing banks have people on their staff who speak Italian and German.

Senator Benidickson: Many of the big banks have directors who are not resident in Canada. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. Dwyer: I believe so, yes.

The Chairman: Some directors.

Mr. Dwyer: Not very many.

Senator Molson: There would be very few.

Mr. Dwyer: Would these not normally represent overseas correspondent connections and that type of thing?

Senator Molson: No. Most banks have the odd overseas director. I have not looked at any of them recently, but I think if you do you will find that 90 or 95 per cent of the members of the boards of the chartered banks are Canadian, pure and simple.

Senator Benidickson: I would agree with that. I just simply said that many of the banks have non-resident directors.

The Chairman: And all I said was "some non-resident directors".

Senator Connolly: From your investigations —

The Chairman: Wait a minute, senator; Senator Hays asked to be heard a short time ago.

Senator Connolly: I am just finishing my question.

The Chairman: Senator Hays?

Senator Hays: Mr. Chairman, if this particular area has been exhausted I would like to ask some questions. These questions have probably been asked already, but I was not present at the last meeting.

If Senator Hayden, Senator Molson and Senator Beaubien were to start a bank and they applied for a charter I would take a flyer on it. I would be particularly interested to know the principals behind this, as to who is going to start this bank. In the first place, I think management and direction are the most important factors, and also the confidence that you have in these people if this bank is ever going to get off the ground.

The Chairman: Mr. Levinter is here. Ask him the questions.

Senator Hays: These people should have supporting evidence to let us know exactly what their methods are; how involved they are going to be personally; and what they have done in the past.

I realize that small acorns into great oaks grow, but it seems to me that this is the most important aspect of any group that is starting any organization. Who are the principals? How is it going to be managed? Is it going to get off the ground?

The Chairman: Who is going to run it?

Senator Hays: Who is going to run it, yes, and I think this philosophy can change. I would hope that it would if they found they were making errors. In other words, if it was found that one venture was not profitable, then they would move their money into another venture. How safe is the money going to be? Are they going to lend it? Will it be a money-making proposition for those involved in the bank and for those using the bank? It seems to me these are very important questions to be asked of anyone who is asking for a bank charter.

The Chairman: Mr. Levinter?

Mr. Levinter: I appreciate your concern, senator. Without proper management the bank will not get off the ground. However, I am in a difficult position. One can only take my word for the fact that I have a gentleman who is a senior man in Canadian banking and who is intimately familiar with, not only operating a bank but who is also equipped to set up a bank. Naturally, I cannot disclose the identity of this man, but as soon as the charter is granted his identity will be made known. Bear in mind that no one can cause any harm to the public until Mr. Scott's department and the Governor in Council give their approval to the charter.

This is not a question of a cat-and-mouse game; this gentleman has an extremely responsible position in banking and you can well understand that if something should happen here or in Parliament it could ruin a man's career in Canadian banking. We have assessed this man. Mr. Dwyer has met this man, as have both Mr. Lasalle and Mr. Scott. Mr. Scott saw him yesterday.

I have Mr. Ryley present today. He is a partner in the firm of McDonald Currie & Co., and he has been an accountant for some 20 years. He has met our management and he has looked over our proforma goals, our objectives, our proforma balance sheet, and our profit and loss statements. He is available here to give you an opinion as to his views with respect to how our management is going about this. I can unequivocally say to you that I am very lucky to have such a man. It was a great stroke of luck, a great experience. He has great know-how and is very methodical.

I can also say that we have commitments for senior accountant, and so on. I may say that they are all coming from the present banking system—and I do not mean from the lower echelons, I am talking about the upper echelon.

We have commitments, I believe, from consumers. The manager has set out an organizational chart for me, so that I would be able to discuss this to some degree. We have, I believe, a consumer credit man available to the bank. We have a chief accountant now available to the bank and, remember, this is even before we get a charter.

We are not through the Senate, yet we have these commitments.

We have a president who is topnotch; we have a vice-president in charge of administration already. I am advised by the president that there should be no difficulty in getting an investments man, a money man, an international manager, personnel manager and so on. My management knows how to get these people. I do not. I am not intimate with the system.

The Chairman: Mr. Levinter, may I interrupt you for a moment? Do I understand you to say that the Inspector General, Mr. Scott, has met the person you contemplate to be either the president or the general manager? Is that right?

Mr. Levinter: Yes. I took the liberty of introducing him to Mr. Scott.

The Chairman: So it will be open to us, in our own right, to have the Inspector General come here and express a view. We have had him here once already, but I believe that was before he met this man.

Mr. Levinter: Yes, but the Inspector General was king enough to indicate that he would not discuss the identity of the individual.

The Chairman: Quite apart from disclosing it, if he is ready to say he has met this man, that he knows this man and that the business ability, the banking experience and training of this man is such that he can do a good job—with all due respect, that is even stronger than when you say it, because you are promoting this.

Senator Cook: What is the opinion of the proposed president on these regional and ethnic objectives? Have you discussed that with the proposed president, how far you are going to carry out the regional concept?

Mr. Levinter: I discussed the regional concept. The president is of the view that regional loyalty is a plus in obtaining deposits, in having people generally deal with the bank—consumer credit, commercial loans, deposits, various things of that sort. He considers it as a plus.

Perhaps I did give the wrong impression at the last hearing. I did not want to give the impression that all the deposits obtained in British Columbia were going to be available for British Columbia. This has to be worked out on a ratio, naturally; but the best banking practice must be considered. A ratio of the deposits obtained in British Columbia should be available for development there, a ratio of the deposits obtained in Nova Scotia should be available for development there; but one can never overlook the overall concept that it is one bank, and that this one bank must operate and be successful.

I am not suggesting, again on a regional concept, that if 40 per cent of the deposits are made in Nova Scotia, 40 per cent should be made available there; but if there is not as good a loan available in Nova Scotia, unfortunately it cannot go to Nova Scotia.

Senator Hays: You are not going to have much to do with this. This is your philosophy now, which might completely change when this gentleman, whose name you do not wish to disclose, takes over. Am I right in this?

Mr. Levinter: No, sir. Our views do not conflict. When I first met this gentleman I explained my views, and I am trying to get away from the word "ethnic", because I was tagged with that word by the Financial Post when the first notice was put in the Canada Gazette. The squib came in as soon as they heard that it was I who was promoting it and they called it an "ethnic" bank. I am trying to get away from that because I do not like the word. It is a cosmopolitan bank; it is a Canadian bank, and inasmuch as Canada is made up of a great number of ethnic groups, I suppose one could call it an ethnic bank. But I refer to it as a Canadian or a cosmopolitan bank. That is why I qualified what I said before. Because a man is an Italian, it will not guarantee his loan in any way. But I would like to have an Italian on that board who knows the needs of his community so that we can better serve and service his community. That is what I mean by a cosmopolitan bank. If a man is a bright young man and he may be Polish or he may be German or he may be Italian, but if he wants to come into the banking business, I would like to be able to say to him, "Young man, it does not matter whether you are white, blue, green or purple, you do the job and you will get somewhere some day." That is all I want.

The Chairman: After all, the word "ethnic" has a broad application; everybody is ethnic.

Senator Hays: But I go back to my original question. I think before we vote on it and consider it, we should know exactly the principals behind the bank, who they are and what they have done and what sort of confidence we can put in them, because, after all, this is what it is all about. To me the most important thing about the whole charter is the people behind it.

Mr. Levinter: Sir, the five provisional directors are behind it and I can tell you that they are: my father, Dr. LaSalle, a gentleman who is a Polish accountant by the name of Mr. Gutkowski, a gentleman by the name of Pianosi from Sudbury and myself. The board will certainly be enlarged because we want to have an excellent board.

Senator Hays: You are all nice-looking people and you look intelligent and bright, but I would just like to see it all down.

The Chairman: You want a chart?

Senator Hays: Yes.

Mr. Levinter: I gave this last week, sir.

The Chairman: No, you gave the history of the provisional directors from almost their original birthday down to date. But what we are talking about here, if I understand Senator Hays correctly, is a chart in relation to the personnel who would be the senior operating officials of the bank. Granted you will have to put Mr. X as president because you do not want to disclose his name, but what about the others?

Mr. Levinter: But, sir, these are all people in the banking institution.

Senator Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, we do not ask this normally if we are incorporating an insurance company which eventually has vast sums of money to administer. Often we are only shown a list of provisional directors.

The Chairman: Senator, this may be your view, but Senator Hays has asked the question and certainly it is relevant. If he asks it, it is relevant.

Senator Benidickson: But I should say it has not been a universal precedent or practice in this committee to ask, before a charter is granted, who the eventual directors are going to be. Maybe it is desirable and I am not objecting to the question.

The Chairman: What Senator Hays has asked, as I understand it, is who will be the senior personnel who will be operating the bank.

Senator Benidickson: If they are coming from important jobs in the present banking system and these applicants do not get their charter, in many instances it may be very embarrassing, even catastrophic, to those people and they will lose their jobs in the existing banking system.

The Chairman: Is that the answer Mr. Levinter makes?

Mr. Levinter: Oh, yes. I am equivocal and I cannot disclose their names.

Senator Hays: It seems to me that if you are granting a charter, it is reasonable to want to know whether it is going to be a success or a failure. I do not have all that much money to invest, but when I do I look at the management first to see if my money will be safe and if it is going to be used wisely.

Mr. Levinter: Before a dollar's worth of shares are sold, yes, the management will be disclosed, but we have to have our charter first. That is all I can say. The management, of course, is very important, but I would point out that Mr. Hall was not employed by the Bank of British Columbia and they did not have a president until they had been open for six months. I am sorry, sir, I cannot give you that. I can give you our organizational structure.

Senator Benidickson: The Inspector General would not let you operate unless there was a certain amount of capital paid up which he felt was sufficient to protect the public.

The Chairman: It does not read that way. It says:

When, at the time of the application for the approval of the Governor in Council, a sum of less than one-half of the authorized capital stock has been subscribed, the Governor in Council shall, when granting the approval, reduce the authorized capital stock to the largest multiple of one million dollars that is not greater than twice the amount so subscribed, Schedule A is thereupon amended accordingly . . .

When these people apply and indicate the quantity of capital they have subscribed, and the Inspector General compares that with what is authorized or stated to be the authorized capital, then if it does not bear a certain relationship, the authorized capital is reduced accordingly.

Senator Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, you are one of our best lawyers. I am glad you have quoted this from the Bank Act for us. That is really what I meant. The public is protected through investigations and inquiries subsequent to the issue of the charter by the Inspector General of Banks.

Mr. Dwyer: And the money is held in trust until such time as the licence is granted. So there is no way the provisional board can use these funds until such time.

Senator Benidickson: Does the cabinet itself have to come in after Parliament grants the charter?

Mr. Levinter: It is the Governor in Council.

Senator Benidickson: Yes, the same personnel.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, I feel that the Senate's job is to look into the past histories of the provisional directors so that this committee can ensure that they are perfectly honest, respectable citizens, that they have very good histories in business, and so on and so forth. If we are satisfied with the investigation which has been made, I feel the Bank Act can look after the rest of it; but I feel that this is the Committee's real purpose.

Senator Connolly: The only thing that I would like to add to that, Senator Beaubien, is that we have asked that Mr. Dwyer, who did the investigation for this board, come here and give us an account of his investigation.

The Chairman: And he is here.

Senator Connolly: And of his own responsibility, he has said, "Yes, I am a financial consultant, and I think this is a valid proposition."

The Chairman: We asked the sponsors to bring in their financial representative to indicate the studies and projections he had made with regard to this matter. Is it the desire of the committee to hear the representative?

Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Cook: Who certifies the chartered analyst? Is it a degree from a university?

Mr. Dwyer: In the investment community there has been a professional designation for some time. Such an institute was started in the United States some years ago, and it was introduced into Canada in 1964. It involves having had a certain number of years' experience in other business and taking hours of courses and examinations over a three-year period.

It is the hope of the International Federation of Chartered Analysts that it will be accepted as a designation just as, say, a C.A. is. In the community this is the top analytical designation that a man can obtain.

Senator Burchill: If this gentleman meets all the requirements of the Bank Act, then I do not think that we need sit here any longer, and I move that the bill be passed.

The Chairman: The committee has already indicated that it would like to hear the auditor or the accountant.

Senator Lang: How long, on your projections, will this bank be in a loss position? Where is your turn-around point? How much of your capital is going to be eroded before you start making a profit?

Mr. Levinter: We have projected, in line with the Bank of British Columbia for the first three years. After the first three years we have no past precedent upon which to draw. Therefore we can only set our goals for the fourth and fifth years based on management experience, taking into consideration the amount of capital raised and the base which will have been obtained after that first three-year period.

After taking into consideration an appropriation for losses of $300,000, and after paying $50,000 into a rest account, there should be a profit of $12,177 in the first year. That is on earning assets as opposed to total assets. Total assets after the first year are anticipated at $75 million.

The Chairman: What capital are you referring to?

Mr. Levinter: Twenty million dollars will be raised in the first instance. The earning assets of the bank, to come to that net profit, would be $63 million. The earning assets are made up of treasury bills, securities, day call and short loans to investment dealers which are secured, loans which include business and personal, consumer credit, mortgages, and other currencies. That is the earning assets. For the second year, which follows right in line with the Bank of British Columbia, the net would be $25,600; that is after an appropriation for losses of $850,000; plus a further $50,000 in the rest account. The net then of undivided profit would be $25,600. In the third year, after an appropriation for losses of $1 million and a further $50,000 into the rest account, the profit would be $34,409. In the fourth year, with appropriation for losses of $1,500,000 and in the rest account $225,000—

Senator Benidickson: Why does the "rest account" provision go up almost five times in that fourth year?

Mr. Levinter: As I understand it, this is a method putting away profit so that you are not taxed; you are building up the capitalization of the bank. At this point they thought $225,000, and they would have a $35,603 profit; that would be undivided profits.

The Chairman: Would this be a good place to interject? Perhaps Mr. Ryley could tell us on what basis you calculated the losses in each year.

Mr. Patrick Ryley: I think I should explain that these are the projections made by the proposed management of the bank. Our role is to review these, and really to try to determine whether they are based on reasonable assumptions, so that the appropriation for losses is the appropriation over and above, as you know, the actual losses that we expect to incur. When Mr. Levinter is quoting the balance of profits, I think most in the banking business feel the balance of revenue is more appropriately the profit of the bank. Of course, that is expressed before appropriation for losses and income taxes. I hope those remarks might clarify the position.

Senator Molson: That figure you say is expressed before appropriation for losses, but there is the appropriation to come in from the five-year experience, which would come on to administration and other charges up above.

Mr. Ryley: That is correct.

Senator Molson: So you are speaking about non-specific reserves.

Mr. Ryley: These are the appropriations for losses that banks make after this determination has been made, yes. It is a contingency appropriation.

Senator Benidickson: That has something to do with income tax?

Mr. Ryley: Not in its entirety, no.

Senator Molson: This is all done in accordance with the requirements of the Inspector General of Banks. That is what you are saying.

The Chairman: And the provisions of the Bank Act. Mr. Levinter, in making these calculations were there available the experiences of the Bank of British Columbia in those years, to see how it did in relation to its build-up?

Mr. Levinter: Yes, sir. As I say, for the first three years our projections and goals are the same as the Bank of British Columbia. What I have just indicated to you follows their pattern almost exactly, except in 1975, which is the third year, as I understand it, as of July 1, the Bank of British Columbia had $162 million in assets. We anticipate having $7½ million more in capital, which would mean that we would have $167½ million, but by reason of our anticipated mix and our anticipated national character, instead of the $162 million which the Bank of British Columbia had as of July 1, our total assets were $180 million. This is $10 million more after the third year than the Bank of British Columbia. That is a projection of $10 million more than the Bank of British Columbia.

Senator Benidickson: Although you propose to start with 50 per cent more capital than the Bank of British Columbia eventually started with?

Mr. Levinter: Yes, but we have tried to be conservative to the nth degree in making these projections, because we want to set goals for management which are good goals. We do not want to set impossible goals. Moreover, the goals we set must be credible. So this is what management has taken into consideration. We have kept lower limits all the way down. For example, I understand that in the accumulated appropriations for losses basically they put 25 per cent more than the average banks do.

I heard a comment that you are allowed the five-year experience; but in fact we have no experience. So as a percentage of total expenses we have taken 25 per cent more, again just to be conservative all the way down the line.

The Chairman: Mr. Levinter, suppose you do not get the $20 million of authorized capital, have you looked at this on the basis of other amounts—for instance, $10 million?

Mr. Levinter: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: Would you throw up a profit figure in each year with $10 million?

Mr. Levinter: In view of the fact that I am advised by management that our first two years fall right in line with the Bank of British Columbia, regardless of the fact that we have more capital, and we still show a profit of $12,177, I would say, yes. I would say that with $10 million, of course, the bank is feasible. It is not as comfortable as I should like to have had, because with the $20 million you can get off that much more quickly. If we were to get only $10 million, we would not put in as many branches. You cut your cloth to suit your pocketbook.

The Chairman: Have you set an objective of an amount that you must have subscribed before you would apply for your charter? You realize that under the Bank Act you may start with a minimum capital of $1 million. Have you set any amount below which you would not pursue the matter? If you got $1 million subscribed, would that mean that you would go ahead?

Mr. Levinter: No, sir. In my view it would be utterly impractical with $1 million. I would think that the break-away point would be higher than that. However, again in view of the investigations that were made there was not great consideration given to this. We considered that if we had $12 12 million there would be no problem. At $10 million I do not think there are any problems, but if we got below $10 million it would certainly have to be considered very, very carefully. This, again, would depend on what management advised us, what our financial consultants advised us, what our accountants advised us. If it were below $10 million and they in their wisdom considered that it would not be feasible, then we would have to accept their advice. That is all.

Senator Hays: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could get Mr. Scott, the Inspector General of Banks, to answer the question that I asked.

The Chairman: Certainly, Senator Hays, but first I believe Senator Lang has a supplementary on this same point.

Senator Lang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Levinter, do you use the Bank of British Columbia experience to make your assumptions as to your rate of intake of deposits?

Mr. Levinter: Yes, sir, except that in our fifth year again in considering prognostications we use the general industry average. I can say that in using the general industry average, the percentage of deposits of total capital is 54.9 per cent. That is personal savings. At the end of five years we considered only 40 per cent of our total assets being personal savings. There were two reasons. The first was that we have to build up our deposits to the general industry average as experienced for many years. Secondly, management has indicated to us that personal savings deposits, in their opinion, as the years go by will form less and less of the total assets of banks. This is because of the general public's present knowledge of the value and interest rates which they can obtain on, for example, certificates. The general public is becoming more and more aware of the fact that it is not a very profitable proposition to keep money in personal savings in banks. Therefore, management is of the view that the trend will decline in this regard. Therefore, again in an effort to be conservative, while the industry average was 54.9 per cent in 1969, after we have been in operation for five years we believe we will have only 40 per cent of our assets in this category.

Senator Hays: Mr. Scott, in discussing the United Bank of Canada with the principal who are here today, are you satisfied with all the investigations you have carried out to this point in so far as personnel and that sort of thing are concerned?

Mr. W. E. Scott, Inspector General of Banks: At this point, Senator Hays, it is difficult and unusual to be able to carry out a full investigation; all the plans are tentative. After the act is passed, if it is, there will presumably be a period in which these people can, as they have indicated, make firm engagements and firm up their plans. There will be an opportunity later, when they apply for their certificate, to obtain a much better picture of the situation than is possible for any group applying for a charter at this point.

Senator Hays: If at that point in your investigation you are not satisfied, then the deal is off?

Mr. Scott: I do not have that power in my hands; I can only recommend to my minister.

Senator Benidickson: Do you recommend to the Governor in Council?

The Chairman: It is the Governor in Council who issues the certificate.

Senator Hays: On the recommendation of the minister, I suppose.

Mr. Scott: Yes.

The Chairman: Yes. Do you feel that you have authority under the Bank Act to carry out these investigations after a charter has been issued and before a certificate has been issued, or are you studying what money they have collected and what their authorized capital is in order to recommend to your minister on that basis?

Mr. Scott: It is usual, sir, to be in touch with the management of all new banks in that period, following the plans quite closely. Therefore one would hope to have a reasonable picture of their ability to do what they are planning by the time they ask for the certificate to open their doors.

The Chairman: I just wonder what authority you have to do that.

Mr. Scott: To keep in touch with them?

The Chairman: Yes?

Mr. Scott: I think the authority is in the act to require information, if necessary.

Senator Benidickson: Assuming that a charter is granted, Mr. Scott, then between that time and your recommendation to the minister, and also from the point of your recommendation to the minister to the point of a granting a certificate from the Governor in Council, what control is there over the funds that have been put forward by investors in the capital of this bank?

Mr. Scott: In a sense they are trust funds in the hands of the provisional directors.

Senator Benidickson: Would you periodically look and see if that trust fund is there intact?

Mr. Scott: It can be done, yes, but they would have no authority to make loans or accept deposits.

Senator Benidickson: It would be an illegal act if they encroached on that capital before the certificate was issued?

The Chairman: It would be illegal for them to do anything of a banking nature before they had their licence.

Any other questions?

Senator Benidickson: What if they pay organizational expenses out of the funds?

Mr. Scott: They may incur a liability for these expenses, but they are quite limited under the act with respect to the extent that they can pay them.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions you wish to ask Mr. Scott?

Senator Lang: Are the powers vested in either you or the minister under the Bank Act with respect to the operation of a bank comparable to those under the Trust Companies Act? Can you put in a comptroller or supervisor, if you wish, and operate it yourself, if necessary?

Mr. Scott: Within quite wide limits. The management of banks, like the management of trust companies, is responsible—

Senator Lang: Yes, I know that, but there are great powers conferred under the Trust Companies Act. I am just wondering if there are comparable powers conferred under the Bank Act.

Mr. Scott: Under the Bank Act the minister's power to put in a curator is limited to the circumstances under which he deemed the bank to have become insolvent. There is no authority for him to step into management before that situation is reached. He can express views, but he cannot act.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Senator Hays: Mr. Scott, you really do not make a thorough investigation until after the charter has been issued, is that right? Your responsibility starts at that point, does it, or do you examine the principals before that point?

Mr. Scott: I believe the statutory responsibility that is laid down in the act does not start until after they have received the certificate, but, as a matter of practice, the Inspector General of Banks has been the official on whom the minister relies to keep in touch with the progress of things in the bank before the certificate is issued.

Senator Hays: Before the charter is granted?

Mr. Scott: Before and after the certificate is granted.

Senator Hays: Then you do look at those who may be applying for a charter at this point?

Mr. Scott: I would assume that would be one of the things.

Senator Hays: Have you done this?

Mr. Scott: I do not believe I know more about these people than has been stated in this committee.

The Chairman: It has been said that you have talked to the person who may be the head of this bank. Is that right?

Mr. Scott: Yes.

The Chairman: And without asking you to disclose his name, is he a man of banking experience and ability and integrity?

Mr. Scott: I have no reason to doubt that.

Senator Cook: Would it be fair to say that your department would pay particular attention to a bank in its formative years, more so than you would to a well established bank?

Mr. Scott: Yes.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions? Are you ready for the motion? Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: The committee meets again tomorrow morning at 9.30, at which time we will discuss the tax bill.

The committee adjourned.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT
1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS
OF THE
STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

No. 38

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1971

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1971

Complete Proceedings on Bill C-262

intituled:

“An Act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect”

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE

(Witnesses—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Grosart
Beaubien	Haig
Benidickson	Hayden
Blois	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Lang
Choquette	Macnaughton
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Molson
Cook	Smith
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28)

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Orders of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate,
October 5, 1971.

"Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Forsey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lafond, for the second reading of the Bill C-262, intituled: "An Act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect".

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

The Bill was then read the second time.

The Honourable Senator Forsey moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Heath, that the Bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Tuesday, October 5, 1971
(42)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 8:00 p.m. to consider the following Bill:

Bill C-262, "An Act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Aird, Beaubien, Benidickson, Burchill, Gelinas, Grosart, Isnor, Molson, Smith, Sullivan, Walker and Welch—(13).

Present, but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senators Forsey, Heath, McNamara and Molgat—(4).

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel and Pierre Godbout, Director of Committees, Assistant Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel.

WITNESSES:

Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce:

The Honourable J.L. Pepin, Minister;

Mr. L.F. Drahotsky, General Director, Office of Industrial Policy Advisor;

Mr. R.E. Latimer, General Director, Office of Area Relations.

Amendments to Clause 6(1) and Clause 7(2) and the possibility of inserting a review procedure in the Bill was discussed.

At 10:00 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

Wednesday, October 6, 1971.

(44)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 11:20 a.m. to further consider:

Bill C-262, "Employment Support Act".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Aird, Beaubien, Benidickson, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Desruisseaux, Flynn, Gelinas, Giguere, Haig, Hays, Isnor, Lang, Molson, Smith, Sullivan, Walker and Welch—(21).

Present, but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senators Heath and Laird—(2).

In attendance: E. Russell Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel and Pierre Godbout, Director of Committees, Assistant Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel.

WITNESSES:

Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce:

The Honourable J.L. Pepin, Minister;

Mr. L.F. Drahotsky, General Director, Office of Industrial Policy Advisor.

Upon motion it was Resolved that Clause 6(2) be amended, Clause 7 be amended by adding thereto a new sub-clause (3) and that amendments be made to Clause 21.

NOTE: The full text of the amendments appears by reference to Report of the Committee immediately following these Minutes.

Upon motion it was Resolved to report the said Bill as amended.

At 12:20 p.m. the Committee adjourned until 3:00 p.m. this day.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson
Clerk of the Committee.

Report of the Committee

Wednesday, October 6, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill C-262, intituled: "An Act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect", has in obedience to the order of reference of October 5, 1971, examined the said Bill and now reports the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 3: Strike out subclause (2) of clause 6 and substitute therefor the following:

"(2) Not more than two-thirds of the members of the Board at any time may be members of the Public Service within the meaning of the Public Service Employment Act but a vacancy occurring in the membership of the Board that has the effect of temporarily reducing the number of members of the Board who are not members of the Public Service below one-third of the members of the Board does not invalidate the constitution of the Board or impair the right of the members to act if the number of members is not less than a quorum."

2. Page 3: Immediately after subclause (2) of clause 7, add the following as new subclause (3):

"(3) The Chairman shall preside at any sittings of the Board at which he is present and shall designate one of the other members to preside at any sittings of the Board at which he is not present."

3. Page 8, clause 21: In lines 9 and 11 strike out the words "fiscal year" and substitute therefor the words "annual quarter".

Respectfully submitted.

Salter A. Hayden,
Chairman.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Tuesday, October 5, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect, met this day at 8 p.m. to give consideration to the bill.

Senator Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we have one bill for consideration this evening, Bill C-262.

We have with us the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin; Mr. L. F. Drahotsky, General Director, Office of Industrial Policy Advisor, and Mr. R. E. Latimer, General Director, Office of Area Relations.

Following our usual practice, I think we should first ask the Minister to make a statement.

Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, my statement will be rather short, Senator Forsey having done a remarkable job in introducing the bill, a bill which is slightly complicated and is introduced in, I will admit, rather complex circumstances. I am sure that all honourable senators have read the bill, that they have listened to those who spoke in the debate, that they have read the debates in the other place and, no doubt, the reports of the committee of the other place which considered the bill.

If I were to introduce it now very rapidly I would simply remind honourable senators of the permanent character of the bill itself, which character Senator Forsey emphasized extremely well. I would also remind honourable senators that even if the bill is of a permanent nature, it is not temporary application, to deal with the current crisis. As soon as the surcharge disappears, obviously the bill will no longer apply.

I would emphasize that its purpose is to maintain employment. In view of some of the things that have been said, I would point out that it applies equally to all parts of Canada. It may very well be that because of the concentration of industry in Ontario and Quebec the actual benefits will be higher, on a provincial basis, in Quebec and Ontario than they would be in, for example, Western Canada.

However, I can assure you that when the provincial ministers of industry and commerce attended a meeting that I called for the purpose of discussing the U.S. surcharge they were very keen to see this bill apply in their respective provinces. Despite, what might seem to an Ontarian, its rather small size, the benefits of this bill to, for example, Prince Edward Island, will be very important in Prince Edward Island terms. I think one has to bear all these things in mind. The effects in Prince Edward Island, though immensely smaller in dollars than the effects in Ontario, will be quite large, for Prince Edward Island. All the provinces were most interested in seeing this bill passed. Mr. Evans from Manitoba, for example, expressed dissatisfaction with some aspects of the bill, but he has not called for their non-application in Manitoba; you may be sure of that.

I repeat that it is not a profit maintenance measure. If there is no likelihood of significant export dislocation at a plant, assistance will not be provided simply for the purpose of making up the reduced profitability of a company on account of the import surcharge. The profits of a company is not the preoccupation of this bill.

Senator Forsey emphasized, as both I and my Parliamentary Secretary did, that this is not an export subsidy measure. A company receiving assistance is not obliged to maintain its level of exports for the purpose of this program. It does not matter where the products are sold, whether abroad or in Canada. In the other place I indicated that there were six or seven possibilities opened to a company receiving assistance under this bill. A company can use the money to effect a change of products. A company can simply add to inventories. A company can develop markets elsewhere. A company can do a number of things.

Senator Forsey: Faire de la peinture.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Faire de la peinture si elle le préfère.

The Chairman: On that point, Mr. Minister, the purpose of the bill is to maintain employment, but if a company is going to change various products, it will have to spend money to do so. The money that it will spend will have to be its own money, because the only maintenance it gets out of this fund is the grant to maintain employment.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I will come back to that in a moment. Senator Manning was emphasizing the difficulties of implementing this bill. Some of us have thought of that, too. It is not news. I will come to that in a moment, if you do not mind. Let me try to finish first the few ideas I wish to express.

Obviously, as Senator Forsey also said, this will not solve all the problems faced by Canadian industry in general—not even the problems arising out of the wide-ranging economic measures recently announced by the United States. Senator Forsey emphasized the word “mitigate”—in good English and in good French, too, “mitiger”.

Already damage is being created, particularly in terms of the uncertainty which exists in Canada-United States trade relations, because of these U.S. measures. A number of companies are possibly not pushing as hard their exports to the United States as they would have otherwise. A number of people in the United States may very well feel that this is a great message to them, from high above, that a new psychology has to be implemented. So, damage is actually being done. The only thing the bill can do is try to limit the damage done to employment in Canada.

Senator Isnor: Should it not be the other way, that they should be putting a special effort into it?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes, but when you do not think that the benefits will be as high as they have been in the past, or were expected to be, it is human for people to tone down a bit on the efforts they were making.

Senator Walker: I missed what you said. I understood you to say "when the surtax was withdrawn". What effect will that have? You said something about that earlier.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: As the bill concerns the surtax, when the surtax is withdrawn the implementation of the bill will stop.

Senator Walker: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I cannot tell you that implementation will stop on the very hour the surcharge is removed because there probably will be a cleaning up job to do, but that is the general idea. If a similar bill is to be invoked again, the Government will have to demonstrate that there is another crisis, that there are circumstances similar to this, as indicated in the long title of the bill.

The Chairman: And most likely provide money.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes. I presume that on that occasion it would be done, as the bill exists, by special estimates.

Senator Walker: Would it be by order in council or would you have to go to Parliament?

The Chairman: I am not sure. Would you develop that, Mr. Minister? I am not sure whether it can be done by estimates, because the bill statutorily limits the amount to $80 million and limits it to 1971-72.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: The difficulty we had here was perhaps to pass this as general legislation and not mention money and go for supplementary Estimates to get the money. We thought that it would be more democratic to put that particular amount of money needed for the next six months in the bill, with the clear understanding that when that period of time is over, or even if not enough money is being provided by this bill, the Government would have to go the supplementary Estimates way to get more money.

Senator Walker: You would have to go before Parliament for more?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes.

The Chairman: There is a question we can settle at that time, whether you can go by way of Estimates at that time, where there is a statutory limit in the bill; but that is not the subject-matter tonight.

Senator Benidickson: No, but the Government Leader referred to a ruling in the other place, in the House of Commons last year, about limiting the power of legislation by limiting the amount which can be voted. I have not checked to find out what he meant by that, but that is what he said.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Senator Benidickson, this bill will obviously be used in very extraordinary circumstances. As you cannot anticipate extraordinary circumstances as you do for ordinary circumstances, for which you anticipate in departmental budgets, obviously you must have a supplementary Estimate to cover these extraordinary, abnormal situations.

Senator Forsey: That is what I suggested, in answer to a question by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate; and the Leader of the Government said that on account of this ruling last year in the House of Commons, that I was not aware of, it would not be possible to proceed by way of putting something in the Estimates, and I was rather surprised.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: If the chairman is right in what he has just said, or in what he has said as being a possibility—which is, if it is true that the Government cannot vote extra money for the period of time which is covered by the bill, then obviously we would have to come back to Parliament to get extra money—

Senator Walker: You would just amend the act. In the case of the National Housing Act—I was the minister responsible for several years—if we wanted more money, we amended the act and increased the amount.

The Chairman: I only interjected the question when the minister said that this was permanent legislation. Parliament retains control by virtue of the fact that they may have to come back for money from time to time—and that is a good feature.

Senator Benidickson: Even within the current year.

The Chairman: Yes, and that is a good feature.

Senator Benidickson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I would have thought that, even for the six months coming, even with the amount of money allocated to it by the bill, if things should turn worse than we have anticipated, and the possibility of getting more money through supplementary Estimates was still open, it would be done in that way—but if I am not right, we will do what the law says, obviously.

Senator Walker: It is a question of the way to do it and that is not our task now.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I do not want to state again what the three eligibility criteria are. You remember these.

Senator Benidickson: No. That was referred to. Someone said in our debates that you recited in committee, for the House of Commons, that there were three basic principles, but they are not stated in the bill. Can you put them on record here?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I will read them. The first criterion for eligibility is that the surtax has caused or is likely to cause a significant reduction in employment at the plant. The word "significant" there is the important word. As I said in the House, and it was repeated here, the size of the plant has no relevance. What is "significant" in a plant employing ten people may be one or two; and what is "significant" in a plant employing a thousand people may be fifty less or more. We have given a lot of discretion to the board in these matters, because it is not always easy to define these things. I will come back to the discretionary aspect of the bill, if you wish, later on.

The second criterion for eligibility is that no less than 20 per cent of the plant's 1970 output must have been exported to the country imposing the surtax and was of a class that would now be subject to the surtax. As was explained, section 15 of the bill foresees the possibility that exceptions might be made, even to that 20 per cent rule or to the other criteria.

The Chairman: Where is the 70 per cent provided? Is that by regulation?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: The 20 per cent is in the regulations. We have to establish a difference here between what is in the bill and what is in the regulations. We tried to put as much in the bill as could be covered by the bill; but this 20 per cent basis is bound to change from one situation to the other, so we kept that for the regulations.

Senator Aird: You think that 15 gives you sufficient flexibility?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: 20 per cent.

Senator Aird: No. Section 15 of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes. As matter of fact, some people have said this gave the board and the Government too much flexibility. What we are saying is that there may be hardship cases. There may be a company exporting 15 or 18 per cent in Cornwall, or in some place where unemployment is very high, and in these circumstances we wanted to keep the possibility of intervening, to help it maintain employment.

Senator Walker: You are going to be swamped with applications, are you not?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: We expect over a thousand. Mr. Drahtsky and his group have a list of all the companies that would be or could be eligible. They have tried to bring it down to what is expected. It would be 1,300 in the first 90-day period, so Mr. Drahtsky tells me.

Senator Isnor: What is that 1,300 based on—previous business?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: On a survey that we conducted in the first few days following the announcement of the surcharge.

Senator Isnor: Is it on the basis of the previous business?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes, on the 1970 performance. Mr. Drahtsky may explain, if you are curious, the "base period" and to the "assistance period". It is a bit complicated and I would prefer not to try it.

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, may I interject a question here? It appears to me that, the object of this bill being to maintain employment, if employment is reduced because the product no longer finds a market in the United States by reason of the surcharge, that means that those people who worked on the production of that product would have no work to do, because the company obviously would not go on manufacturing a product, if they had no market. Then the grant is supposed to maintain those people in employment.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes.

The Chairman: Does it determine in what kind of employment?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: No. That is exactly the flexibility which is given to the employer.

The Chairman: But there are limits to the way you can shift employees, as I understand it, in these days of unions.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes.

The Chairman: There is a limit to where you can direct employees to work.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: This point was raised in the House by the member from Kent, if I remember correctly, and my answer was that these being extraordinary circumstances, I would hope and expect that unions and employers alike would show a bit of flexibility. I suggest that this will be done.

The only case where a company will be allowed to benefit, notwithstanding the fact that the company would not maintain employment at the level of previous times, is when something rather extraordinary takes place and when the board may be asked to fix a level. I presume you are aware of the possibility of circumstances that we anticipate, such as, for example, there being a fire in a plant and only half the plant being in production as a result. Obviously, in such circumstances, you would not want to keep the company at the level of employment it had before. If the company is going through a rationalization or a modernization program, and if under this rationalization program, they need only 75 per cent of the level of employment they had previously, then in such circumstances the board has the power to fix the level at which employment must be maintained. That is, again, common sense.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interject, but I was looking at section 12. Section 12 provides for the amount of the grant, and it would appear that the measuring stick provided there is the amount which in the opinion of the board would be adequate to maintain employment by the manufacturer throughout the prescribed assistance period at such levels as those prescribed or specified by the board, as the case may be.

It says, "maintain employment by the manufacturer". So that would appear to me at the moment to limit the direction of the expenditure of this money and the employment to the manufacturing operations of the company at that time.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is taken in a very broad sense. The company, as I said, can do a number of things. The company can produce for the domestic market or for markets other than the US market. The company can stockpile. It can develop new products. It can paint its sheds. It can do all kinds of things.

The Chairman: I am not sure about painting the sheds or raking the leaves. You might run into trouble with the unions in that regard. As to stockpiling, well, that may be, but, if we are going to get into that issue, the stockpiling should be considered by the Government.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Well, we still hope, and have some reason to hope, that the surcharge will be temporary. Consequently, this is not a uranium type of operation, if you know what I mean.

The Chairman: I know that. I am trying to figure out how you can suggest that the company should carry on manufacturing a product with the grant and maintain its employment when it would be necessary to stockpile because there is no market.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: If they do not consider that this is a good thing to do, then they will do something else. One has to round corners a little bit at the moment, I feel.

The Chairman: Except that we are spending a lot of money.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes. You bring up the point of the behaviour of unions and I must bring up the point of the behaviour of employers. It is necessary to be intelligent. We had a good demonstration of that here from Senator Blois the other day. There was a good Canadian reaction. He said quite openly that he thought that his company could have had other ways and means to cope with the surcharge than the use of Bill C-262. So much the better, in my opinion. When I read that I applauded. I was the only plum in the room!

The Chairman: That is the old stalwartism that we like.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may finish my remarks, I will be open to questions.

I have read most of what has been said in the Senate, and I notice that the point was raised that the administration of this bill would be very difficult. That point of view implied that the Government was passing the buck by throwing this to a bureaucratic board, if I remember well.

Senator Benidickson: With no appeal, apparently.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I will come back to that particular point in a minute, if you do not mind, but my answer to the other part is that we are not passing the buck at all. We are passing a bill! Also, we have regulations attached to that bill, and the board is probably less bureaucratic than most boards. It is less, because there is an input from the outside of three members to that seven member board.

Senator Forsey: It could be more.

Senator Benidickson: Where do you find that? As I read the section, and this bothers me, there will not be any more than four technocrats or bureaucrats; the only mandatory thing there is to put on the board one outsider as chairman. You could omit having two of the three outsiders, in other words.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I could clarify that simply by saying that we are going to have three outsiders and four officials to start with.

Senator Benidickson: But it is not mandatory. It is simply your pledge.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is what we intend to do.

Senator Benidickson: I would hope you would utilize the full powers here and have at least three outsiders so that we would not run into the kind of criticism that President Nixon is receiving in the United States with respect to certain aids to industry in the emergency which labour says is not benefitting them. I would hope that labour would be represented on your board.

Senator Forsey: I was going to raise that very point.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Bill C-262 is a typical Canadian compromise; it has some officials and some outsiders. The chairman will be an outsider. The Government has experimented in the past with this mix. We have the GAAP program, which is run that way, and it has been running well. So we are doing the same thing now. I repeat that the chairman would be the outsider.

Senator Benidickson: Am I not correct in saying that if this bill is passed you would be obliged by the law to appoint only one outsider, who would be the chairman. He would be the only one you would be obliged to appoint.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I am afraid I had not really concentrated on this fine point, a point which Senator Forsey raised in his introduction. Concentrating on what I was trying to do, which was to get three outsiders and four officials, I did not find time to dedicate to this particular, very sophisticated point. But Mr. Drahotsky might have something further to say on that.

Mr. L. F. Drahotsky, General Director, Office of Industrial Policy Advisor, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce: Mr. Chairman, the way I read the bill there will have to be three outsiders in the seven member board.

Senator Benidickson: Where does it say that there has to be . It only says that the chairman must be from the outside.

Mr. Drahotsky: I am sorry, sir, but it also says that not more than four members may be members of the Public Service.

Senator Benidickson: My point is that it could be five. The chairman, who must be an outsider, and four bureaucrats. That still is within the bill.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: You may have a good point, but what I am saying is that I am trying to get three outsiders, one of whom will be the chairman. So that is the way it is going to look.

Senator Burchill: There is another point. It says that there is to be a quorum of three. Would that mean that the three bureaucrats could meet without anybody from outside?

The Chairman: You would have to assume that notice would be given. I cannot imagine a meeting being held without notice. No, we must assume that.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: The point raised is a good one. We have seven members on that board and the quorum is three.

Senator Benidickson: You do not have to have seven.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I am talking facts, not legislation. You may suppose that we will have seven, because that is our intention. It may be that the three who are going to meet at a particular moment at seven o'clock on a Wednesday morning will be three officials, because they will be the only ones available at that particular moment.

Senator Aird: Mr. Chairman, I think it would meet the point raised by Senator Benidickson and be in line with the Department's thinking if the words "not more than" were changed to "at least".

Senator Benidickson: That is what I had in mind. In addition, in section 6, subsection (3) I was proposing to put in an amendment. That subsection now reads:

The Chairman of the Board shall be appointed by the Governor in Council from among those members of the Board who are not members of the Public Service.

Now that refers to the Chairman, but I do not see anything that would make it obligatory for you to appoint three members, at least, who are not members of the public service. Therefore I was going to propose that subsection 3 of section 6 should be amended to read that the Chairman of the board and at least two other members shall be appointed from those who are not members of the public service.

The Chairman: Well, Senator Benidickson, in subsection 2, it says that not more than four members of the Board may be members of the public service. Obviously one would then assume that the other members would not be members of the public service, and one of them would be the Chairman.

Senator Beaubien: But he only has to appoint five in all.

The Chairman: No, seven.

Senator Benidickson: Not more than seven.

The Chairman: That's right.

Senator Aird: I think, Mr. Chairman, it would meet the situation if you were to change the words in subsection 2 which now read "not more than four members . . ." to, "at least . . .".

The Chairman: That would remove all difficulty.

Senator Beaubien: Why not just say seven and be done with it.

Senator Benidickson: I have had a suggestion from Senator Forsey, speaking on behalf of you, Mr. Minister, that you are going to have a flood of applications, as you have indicated tonight,—1,300 in 90 days. I also think it was Senator Forsey who suggested during the debate that the board may have to divide itself into panels. Therefore I see no objection to the words "at least" because you may find that you will need more than seven to constitute three panels rather than two. If you are to deal with 1,300 applications, I would not want to restrict you to seven.

The Chairman: Well, Senator Benidickson, the point you raise would be dealt with if instead of the words "not more" in section 6, subsection 1 there were substituted "at least seven . . .".

Senator Benidickson: I would be satisfied with that.

Senator Forsey: I should like to raise another point, Mr. Chairman. Quite a number of remarks have been made by you and by others about possible difficulties with unions. I might remark parenthetically that unfortunately not all workers are organized. I should like to ask the Minister first of all whether in view of the fact that there might well be difficulties with unions in some cases and in view of the importance of this whole matter to organized labour, the Government is considering appointing competent and experienced labour representatives on this board? It seems to me to be highly desirable to do so if such persons can be found, and I am inclined to think that it is not impossible to find them.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Well, we have three questions in front of us now and I want to be sure we remember them. I am talking now about the difficulty of administration. We are also talking about the composition of the board and Senator Forsey is asking me if one of the members will be appointed from labour.

On the last question, we are trying to do that. Fortunately or unfortunately I am also trying to get a good distribution by region and whatnot in the composition of the three outside members of the board. To be absolutely frank, one of the "labour" names I have clashes with another name I have for the same region. So I shall see Senator Forsey afterwards to find out if he has any names to suggest to me, and if anybody has some names to suggest, I shall gladly consider them. The former "Liberal-Labour" member or the House of Commons from Kenora-Rainy River may have some ideas on that subject.

Senator Benidickson: I pointed out the criticism that President Nixon is getting about his August 15 statement from labour who feel that his legislation provides hand-outs, as this does, to industry but that that does not necessarily flow through to labour.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I am very much aware of it, and I have a Minister of Labour who reminds me of it every day.

We were talking about the composition. Do you want to come back to that later?

Senator Benidickson: No, but I should like your comments on Senator Aird's suggestion in due course.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Can we leave it then in suspended animation and come back to it?

I was talking about the difficulties and I recognize that there will be some. I have also implied that every board in the country be it at the provincial or the federal level, has all kinds of difficulties. I just wanted to tell Senator Manning that I am quite sure that the National Energy Board and the Alberta Energy Board when they have to decide what is surplus to Canadian needs in gas or oil, also have some difficulties. So I take it for granted that this board is going to have a rather difficult task and will have to carry it out in a relatively short period of time. The only way we can solve this is by appointing good people and paying them adequately so that they will stay with us for the duration which I would hope would be very short. I want to make it clear that I have taken note of the remarks made on the difficulties of administering this bill.

Remarks have been made also on the good relations that we should maintain with the United States. This is a question of judgment, is it not?

Senator Grosart: Mr. Chairman, before we leave the particular issue we were discussing, I should like to draw attention to subclause (2) of clause 7. It says:

(2) Three members of the Board constitute a quorum.

In the discussions on the bill, it has been pointed out that the board may sit in two parts. Presumably this means that as long as there are three members of the board available, the board could sit contemporaneously in two parts. This raises the question as to whether the chairman of each board or each panel would be somebody other than a member of the Public Service of Canada. We are discussing a bill where two-thirds of what the Minister described as the basic criteria are in the regulations and not in the bill itself.

The Chairman: Senator Grosart, in connection with the point that you have raised, Senator Forsey has suggested that due to the number of applications the board may find it necessary to divide itself. There is nothing in the bill to indicate that it will sit in panels.

Senator Grosart: No, Mr. Chairman, but if I may speak to my point, the Minister said that this may happen, and his parliamentary secretary who piloted the bill through the committee stage said it would happen.

Senator Forsey: It was not original on my part.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: You are absolutely right.

Senator Grosart: This is the way the committee would function, and I am now raising the point as to whether with the committee sitting in two parts it could have three members of the public service and no member who is not a member of the public service as a chairman of one of the sections of the board. This to me is very important.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: The answer is that the Department at this time with the knowledge they have of industry and the knowledge of the number of cases that might come up feel that a board of seven members is sufficient, but that the board, however, might have to sit in panels for a short period of time. We have left it to the chairman, who is going to be an outsider, as everybody knows, to decide on who should chair the other panel.

The Chairman: There is nothing in the bill on that.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: There is nothing in the bill on that.

Senator Grosart: You may have left it to the chairman, but the chairman does not have authority under the bill.

The Chairman: Senator Grosart, a very simple change in the bill could accomplish that. You could provide that the chairman of the board shall preside at meetings of the board, or a member of the board designated by him.

Senator Grosart: I quite agree. I am not saying that this is not a situation that requires other than a minor change, but that that change ought to be made.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Let us keep this in suspension again because I am not a legal expert; I am one of those non-practising lawyers. I will see if we can obtain a good answer to the question you raised, senator.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Minister, I seem to be raising more than one point in connection with the viability of the bill. I would like to say that I am fully aware of the problems in drafting the bill due to the urgency of the situation, and anything I say is not meant to be in any way critical. It is merely a suggestion as to how it might be improved.

Senator Benidickson: And in an emergency situation a fair amount of flexibility is required.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: This is the way I took it. I do not agree with all the remarks Senator Grosart made in his speech, but I do agree with him on that one point.

Senator Grosart: There is a difference in what one might say in the Senate and what one might say in committee.

The Chairman: You are not through with your statement, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I would like to comment on the good-relations-with-the-United-States concept. I think these relations are quite good. I was not too clear on what the criticism was, and I stand here to be enlightened. Was it because we have cut our troops in NATO, or because I went to China, or because the Prime Minister went to the Soviet Union? When one analyzes the situation one realizes that the Americans are doing now a number of the things we have done a few months ago. So it is difficult to accept blame, firstly, for something which seemed to be supported by the Canadian population, and, secondly, for something that the Americans themselves have decided to do on second thought. It is as difficult for me to accept the blame for what we have done in our relations with the United States. I agree with you that there is always room for improvement. Then the question is: What is it that we should have done? Should we have abandoned unconditionally the safeguards of the automotive agreement? Should we have made it possible for them to sell more military equipment in Canada? Should we have let them run our industrial policy? What is it that we should have done to make our relations with the United States better than they are?

I stand here to be enlightened. I do not think we should panic and decide to accept "political union" just because of what is happening now. This is a difficult time and I feel we must keep our cool. We must have healthy, strong, virile negotiations with the United States. That is still very much possible, and that is what we are going to do now.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Chairman, the minister seems to be directing his remarks to some remarks which I made. I assure you I did not make that suggestion. As to the suggestion that we might have brought some of this on ourselves, I do not feel that this is what is before the committee. The bill is what is before the committee. Whether we might have avoided the bill or the surcharges is another matter.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I cannot help it, I am a politician too!

Senator Grosart: I do not feel it is necessary to enter into discussions with you on that aspect. I would like to confine my concern this evening to the bill as it is presented here.

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, two questions have been raised. One is to amend section 6 by changing "not more than" to "at least seven"; and the other one is to provide that when they sit in panels, the chairman shall preside, or some member of the board designated by him.

Section 7(2), relating to the quorum. The words would be added that the Chairman or a member of the Board designated by him shall preside at any meeting.

Senator Forsey: Would that be a third subsection?

The Chairman: No, it would be just an added sentence to section 2. It would read: "The Chairman or a member of the Board designated by him shall preside".

Hon. Mr. Pepin: May we take this under advisement?

The Chairman: Yes; how long would you like? We are meeting again tomorrow morning. Would you like to think overnight?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: What time are you meeting tomorrow morning?

The Chairman: The committee is meeting at 9.30 and will sit the whole morning. If you, Mr. Drahotsky or Mr. Latimer wish to interject it will be in order.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I am not a great authority on parliamentary procedure, as is well known. What would be the formula? We would have to return it to the House of Commons.

The Chairman: Yes; the bill would have to go back.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I am rather keen to get this going.

Senator Benidickson: We are discussing possible amendments, and I do know there is reluctance to impose the delay involved by a Senate amendment. I have been a little disturbed by the fact that "manufacturer" is defined in the interpretation section. We have listened to the debate and the proceedings in the House of Commons committee. "Manufacturer" is wisely defined there, because the bill is really for the benefit of manufacturers although in other sections, section 3, for example, the word "industry" is used twice.

In ordinary parliamentary parlance agriculture and fishing are referred to as industries, yet there have been complaints in the press, and it was Senator Manning's point, that there is a possibility of discriminations in the regions because manufacturing is not prominent in certain areas. We were told, I think by Senator Forsey, without detail, which he is not expected to have, that there is provision to aid that section of the agricultural industry and that section of the fishing industry which do not export to the United States duty-free and are therefore subject to the surcharge.

I wonder if the minister would enlighten us, first of all as to the percentage of the agricultural industry as a whole whose exports to the United States will be subject to surcharge; similarly with regard to what is known as the fishing industry, the percentage of fishing exports subject to surcharge? Could he very briefly outline the legislation that Senator Forsey reminded us exists to enable the Government, in some parallel manner, to assist those two industries, which may have a fall-off in employment by reason of the imposition of surcharge? What portion of fishing and agricultural products is subject to duty?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I will take one-half of the answer and leave the other half to Mr. Drahotsky. The concept of manufactured in the bill is borrowed from the General Adjustment Assistance Program. It has worked well there and is expected to work well here. Mr. Drahotsky can read it, but I believe Senator Forsey put it on the record.

Senator Grosart: No, Senator Forsey mentioned only one act, the Agricultural Stabilization Act. There are other acts involved in agriculture and, presumably, others in fisheries and perhaps in other primary products.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I have established that the word "manufactured" is borrowed from the General Adjustment Assistance Program, with which some of you are familiar. It has worked well there and is expected to work well here.

The second fact I wish to place on the record is that, using this definition, it is estimated that approximately 85 per cent of agricultural products subject to the surcharge will be covered by this bill, which is a very important point to bear in mind.

Senator Benidickson: Because it is considered to be manufactured.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Because it is processed.

Senator Benidickson: Yes, that phrase was used in our debate, processed and unprocessed goods in these primary industries.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is the main idea, that if 85 per cent of the agricultural products subject to the surcharge are covered by this bill, by far the major part is covered.

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, would you not say that all phases in the fishing industry, other than the actual catching and sale of the fish as such, are processing operations, which would come within the definition "industrial operations"?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I would say that.

The Chairman: And would not that apply with relation to agricultural products?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Let us leave that to Mr. Drahotsky; he is fairly well paid, so he must work also!

Senator Grosart: May I ask the minister, for clarification: I believe he said 85 per cent of agricultural products?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes, subject to the surcharge.

Senator Grosart: Would be covered by the act, to simplify it. My question is: is the minister saying that 85 per cent of all primary products that might be affected by the surcharge would be covered, or is he referring only to agricultural products?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I am referring only to agricultural products.

Senator Grosart: Would the minister enlighten us as to the situation with respect to other primary products?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is the part I am leaving to Mr. Drahotsky. Mr. Olson, on a number of occasions, has stated that he will be taking care of what is not covered by the agricultural products, by other means and other existing legislation.

Senator Benidickson: Was that statement made last Friday in the house?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes, it is page 8345 of Hansard of last Friday, October 1, 1971.

Senator Benidickson: That was also referred to this afternoon in our debate.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: So now we have a number of questions left from Senator Grosart and Senator Benidickson. Mr. Drahotsky will endeavour to remember them and give the answers.

Senator Heath: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question? As we are considering this bill at the moment it might be helpful if we got this information. As I understand it this is a temporary measure. I wonder if it is part of what will become the law later to cope with more difficult problems which we have not yet felt? I think of the United States being such a big buyer of our exports, the American job incentive program and DISC, which the American manufacturers themselves are heavily underwritten by the American taxpayer. Will this be an initial part of the Government's policy to assist our manufacturing exporters, or are we just looking at it as a narrow stop-gap for the present?

An answer to that would certainly help me in considering the bill, if you could give me a little help in that direction.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Let me answer that question in a cautious way. The bill is of general permanent nature, as we have established.

Other actions "of a like effect"—that is part of the title of the bill, can be covered by the bill. That is the general proposition.

Will the job creation investment credit, or whatever the name is, be covered by this in future? It is too early to say. As you know, these two programs, that one and DISC, have evolved almost on a daily basis in the United States.

Will it be what comes out of Congress at the end of the day? Will it have "a like effect"? That will be for the Government to decide when these things come out of the US Congress.

This is the sort of situation that would have to be assessed to find out if it is "of a like effect" and consequently can be brought within the provisions of the bill.

Senator Benidickson: I am glad that question was raised, because a little earlier you said that if not within hours, then very soon after the removal of the surcharge — you did not refer to any other possible American legislation, so I assume that you were talking about the American surcharge — this bill would become unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: With respect, I did not say that.

Senator Benidickson: Did you not say that it would not apply?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I said the application of the bill to that particular situation, being the surcharge, would come to an end.

Senator Benidickson: I was thinking of the question that was raised regarding the effects of DISC, which might be much worse than the surcharge, if they withdraw manufacturing from branch plants in Canada and divert it to the United States, because of the incentives that they offer if the DISC program is approved. I also wanted to make sure that when you said "the surcharge," you were talking about the United States. However, this bill might continue to take effect, perhaps by reason of the United Kingdom putting on a surcharge.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes, indeed. But in this case there would have to be a decision by the Government, by an Order in Council, to apply this bill to that particular situation which you are now contemplating. It is not automatic. We would have to decide if the situation is the same or "of a like effect", and consequently could be dealt with by this bill.

Regarding the job creation investment credit, when this bill comes out of Congress, and if it is approved by the President, the Government of Canada will have to decide whether it is "of a like effect" and whether the implementation of Bill C-262 is a proper approach to that particular injury.

If the answer is yes, then an Order in Council will have to be passed and the bill would apply to that particular US decision.

The Chairman: I am not sure that it is that easy. The words "a like effect" appear also, in section 3. The primary purpose is to impose temporary import surtaxes, or to take alternative action on anything having "a like effect" or an adverse effect on Canadian industry.

You have to say what is the area affected. Here is manufacturing. Therefore, when it is by way of surtax or anything of that nature, or by way of levy or restriction, there is a limitation. The limitation is the manufacturing industry.

Senator Benidickson: That is why I wanted an answer regarding fish. I was recently travelling in an aeroplane with my friend the member for Churchill, who remembered that I came from Manitoba. Since moving to Ontario, to The Lake of the Woods, I have had a considerable interest in the export of fresh water fish.

He said, "What is the narrowness of the word "industry," because it is really for manufacturers?" He, of course, has put up a strong plea for fishermen in the other place.

Perhaps the minister could tell me whether the export of fresh fish from Manitoba lakes and the Lake of the Woods, which are filleted, frozen, or sometimes sent fresh, is now subject to duty and therefore subject to surcharge?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I will let Mr. Drahotsky answer that question. However, regarding the previous question, the decision that the Government will have to make is whether this is the same or of "a like effect", does this apply to manufacturing according to the way it is defined here; and do we cope with it by an employment maintenance program?

If the answer to those three points is "yes", we can use this bill. If it does not fit, then we must try to find other ways. Mr. Drahotsky, Senator Benidickson would like to know what will be the effect of the surcharge on the fishing industry and how is it to be taken into account.

Senator Burchill: Senator Grosart asked about other national products.

Mr. Drahotsky: I have to deal with agricultural products and fish products together, because they are covered under the same commodity classification which we use in order to establish the impact of the surcharge on these sectors.

The commodity classification or group is known as the animal and vegetable products category. It includes a wide range of commodities, including live animals, meat, fish and shellfish, dairy products, hide and skins, live plants, cereal grains, vegetables, coffee, beverages, including whiskey, and other animal and vegetable products.

In looking at this category, our analysis shows that in 1970 some 63 per cent of our exports to the United States will attract the surcharge—that is slightly over one-half.

Senator Benidickson: Have the words "processed" or "unprocessed" anything to do with that wide recital of commodities which you have given?

Mr. Drahotsky: Let me proceed to break it down as much as I can. As a rough guess, of the 63.5 per cent that will be affected in the animal and vegetable products category, close to 85 per cent are processed; in other words, are past the raw stage, and hence would be covered by this bill.

Senator Benidickson: Because there will be a surcharge imposed on that processed product?

Mr. Drahotsky: Because they are surchargeable and are at a stage of manufacture past the raw stage. The 85 per cent is the figure the minister referred to.

Senator Benidickson: Does the fileting of fish constitute processing?

Mr. Drahotsky: Yes, it does. Any manufacturing or processing operation, whether by hand or machinery, including fileting.

Senator Benidickson: Does gutting constitute processing?

Mr. Drahotsky: Gutting presumably for the purpose of the canning operation.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Minister, I do not deny for a minute that it is the intention of the Department of Agriculture to do this. What concerns me is that this bill, which deals with employment jeopardized by this surcharge, does not cover all employment. It seems to me that the bill should cover all employment and that we should not divide our GNP producers into sheep and goats. Why do we say we are going to cover manufactured products but not all products where employment is affected? I have some objection to the definition.

Senator Benidickson: Not all industries.

Senator Grosart: I would suggest to you that you may be on dangerous ground when we come to this retaliation business. I believe you would improve your position if you were to include all employment under this one bill. We are fully aware that there may be damage done to employment by the surcharge other than to those directly in the export business. These things could be taken care of by other acts, but I would suggest to you quite strongly—and I am not suggesting it is necessary to make the amendment now—that you give serious consideration to making this bill all-inclusive by covering all employment affected by the surcharge and not to take refuge, as I think has been done, in the fact that there had to be haste and so on.

I suggest to you that the definition of "manufacturer" is not a very good one. The definition excludes change by growth or decay. This means, as I understand it, that if someone processed a product in such a way as to lengthen its life, for example, or in such a way as to inhibit its growth they would not qualify. We all know the Japanese have a marvellous product which is now on the Canadian market and which has the effect of inhibiting the growth of a plant. Why is this excluded? We know why it is excluded under GAAP act, but the GAAP definition has been brought in holus-bolus, and I suggest to you without any careful consideration as to whether it applies to the specific circumstances here.

If you will look at clause 2 the definition of "manufacturer" definitely excludes change by growth or decay. Why? Does this mean that someone who has processed a product to inhibit decay is not a manufacturer? Surely, this is not so.

I understand why you may have brought this definition in holus-bolus, but I would suggest to you that it does not apply here. I realize you had to do these things in a hurry.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: The reason why we did bring it in, as I said before . . .

Senator Grosart: You said it worked very well in that situation.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: It did work very well.

Senator Grosart: That is the poorest reason in the world, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: It worked in GAAP.

Senator Grosart: To say that it worked in GAAP is one thing, and even to say that it will work in this situation without a careful examination of the circumstances is understandable, but it is something that perhaps we as members of this committee should question.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I simply felt that we should try to cover as much of the area affected by the surcharge with this bill. When I was informed that 85 per cent was being covered and when Mr. Olson assured me that he was taking care of the other 15 per cent, I felt justifiably relaxed. I do not think you can chastise me too much for that.

Senator Grosart: I am not criticizing you, Mr. Minister. I agree with you that under the circumstances this may well have been necessary. I would not be making these suggestions if there had not been the stress made by yourself and others as to the permanence of this bill and the fact that once this bill is passed, then by Order in Council you could make regulations to bring anything of a so-called "like effect" under it, and also the fact that there is no appeal whatsoever from this board.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: If we are to have another situation "of a like effect," obviously we can amend the regulations to take better care of that set of circumstances.

Senator Grosart: You will have to because these regulations refer to time limits, and so on.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: You are right. My answer to that in the House was that a number of other important matters were and are dealt with in that way.

Senator Grosart: It is not a good way.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: It is not a bad one. If you are willing to bring back to the house every Order in Council that is of substantial importance I will agree with you, but in that event we may disagree quite strongly amongst ourselves as to what constitutes "substantial importance." If we were to bring back everything which, according to one person in the Senate or the House of Commons, is of substantial importance, the house of Commons and the Senate would not be able to do anything else than approve orders in council. That is a "raisonnement par absurdité."

Senator Grosart: Mr. Minister, you have made an excellent beginning in bringing the draft regulations before the committee.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes, I thought this was a good start. We could have done it the way other countries are doing it—that is, by the side door—but we thought that this was a great event in Canada's recent history and we thought that we would share with the House of Commons and the Senate the difficulties involved. I did more than that; I brought the regulations into committee. This is not always done, as members know. I have the best possible record!

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, we have cross-fired on this point for a while now. The simple question is: Are you prepared to strike out the clause which excludes change by growth or decay or not, and if not, tell us why and that will settle the question.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I am quite sure Mr. Drahotsky and Mr. Latimer together can answer that question.

Mr. Drahotsky: All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that I am unaware and cannot conceive of an operation which would be confined solely to producing marketable products by means of growth or decay, nor am I aware of such operations constituting a sizeable or significant sector of our economy. If they do exist, I am not aware of them.

The Chairman: Can I put the next question to you, then? If that is your conclusion then we can safely say we can leave it out because we could not establish processing in relation to that.

Mr. Drahotsky: If I were the minister, Mr. Chairman, I would have answered...

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Pretend for a while!

Mr. Drahotsky: I am flattered that the only omission in this definition...

Senator Grosart: I did not say that.

Mr. Drahotsky: The only shortcoming in this definition is that...

Senator Grosart: I did not say that either.

The Chairman: Are you inviting us to find more? I should think you would try to get along with what we have been dealing with.

Senator Grosart: Mr. Chairman, I would like to oblige, but I just picked out one example.

The Chairman: We have really shaken this one, and the minister has to make a decision. Personally, in view of the answer Mr. Drahotsky made, I think that even if there were an exclusion there, what is excluded specifically would be excluded because it would not be processing; you could not have a processing operation of that kind.

Senator Grosart: It excludes the whole technological innovations of rust-proofing and methods of resisting metal fatigue, which is a very important scientific innovation, in which Canada is highly involved. Under this, if you process metals to prevent metal fatigue, that is to prevent decay, you do not qualify.

The Chairman: I do not know; it might be arguable.

Senator Grosart: Well, that is to prevent decay. What is preventing metal fatigue except to prevent decay? Just as it is with us senators!

Senator Forsey: What about:

...change including change that preserves or improves the keeping qualities of that raw material?

Surely that covers something.

The Chairman: Certainly it covers the things Senator Grosart has been talking about.

Senator Forsey: I should have thought so.

Senator Grosart: This could be well interpreted, and probably would be by the courts I suggest, as excluding freezing, which we have been told is included. Freezing is to prevent decay.

Senator Forsey: It says "improves the keeping qualities".

Senator Grosart: According to this it excludes any process that is intended to prevent a "change by growth or decay".

Senator Forsey: Are you thinking of the aging of whisky?

Senator Grosart: Oh no, that improves it; that would meet my point.

The Chairman: It seems to me from the explanation we have that striking out these exclusions would not alter the extent or scope of the definition at all. With all the other things that we say may relate, for instance change by growth, we have to look at the other language, such as:

... a physical change including change that preserves or improves the keeping qualities.

We know that if you do not improve the keeping qualities you get deterioration and decay, so they are already covered.

Senator Grosart: That is what I say, it is contradictory. You allow a manufacturing process that improves the keeping qualities but you do not include one that prevents decay. It does not make sense.

Senator Burchill: Are we finished with that?

The Chairman: I think so.

Senator Benidickson: No, Mr. Chairman. I raised the general question of industry, and said that in ordinary parlance we talk about the agricultural industry and the fishing industry. I was frankly surprised that such a high percentage of our exports of agricultural and fishery products are subject to the surcharge and duty. With respect to agricultural products, the Minister of Agriculture made a statement last Friday, which I read and thought I had with me but find I have not. It was a relatively short statement, and I think it should either be read or put in the record so that people who read our record know what we are talking about. That would deal with agriculture.

Nobody has told us what help will be given to the exporters of fish that has been processed and has been subject to duty on entering the United States, and is now subject to the surcharge. I am thinking particularly of the fresh water fish from Western Canada and Northern Ontario, but I am sure the Atlantic senators will have a problem there too.

Mr. Drahotsky: Of our exports of fish and shellfish in 1970 to the United States, about 35 per cent would have attracted the surcharge had it been in effect in 1970. Practically all of these products that would be affected by the surcharge, or are affected, are processed fish products: filleted, frozen, and chilled. It is our view that practically all—we are not aware of any exceptions—would fall under the purview of this legislation and would benefit from it.

Senator Welch: You have discussed fish. Now would you tell us about fruit?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: With respect to fish, I was going to say that at the moment the prices are particularly good.

Senator Benidickson: You are not suggesting they are good just because we have had a recent Jewish holiday, are you? I am told by the fish industry that that has a great effect on fish prices.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I can say that frozen cod, I think it is, has gone up in price from 19 cents to 44 or 45 cents in the short period I have been minister. There is no cause-effect relationship between the two facts; it is just that market conditions are much better now.

Senator Smith: Processed salt cod on the New York market is 64 cents.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: You see, it could also be understood that the exporters are in a position to absorb the surcharge on this particular item.

Senator Benidickson: For the record I want the other fact to appear, that the fishermen, by a very high majority vote, those that are organized—the Indians are not organized but approve—have gone on record as saying that they would like to be exempted from the marketing board that operates for the Prairie provinces. That must be because of price, that the net return to them is not what they thought they got prior to the institution of the marketing board.

The Chairman: This is not part of this bill senator.

Senator Benidickson: They are exporters; practically all their products are exported to the United States, and they are processed products.

The Chairman: But they want not to be subject to the marketing board.

Senator Benidickson: That is a different question.

The Chairman: That is an entirely different question.

Senator Benidickson: When it comes to price betterment currently that the minister describes, that apparently cannot apply to freshwater fish of Northern Ontario, because those in the industry are not satisfied with the prices they are getting now under this new arbitrary marketing board compared with what they were getting two or three years ago, before the marketing board was in operation. I do not know what goes on with the Atlantic exporters.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: We have established that they are covered under this bill.

Senator Welch: Now may I have an answer?

The Chairman: Now let us have an answer on fruit.

Mr. Drahotsky: Perhaps I might give the information on the type of products in the fruit category that may be affected: fresh apples, which would be taken care of under the programs of the Department of Agriculture; frozen blueberries, which would be covered under this legislation; fresh grapes other than hothouse grapes, which presumably would be covered by the programs of the Department of Agriculture.

Senator Welch: Processed apples?

Mr. Drahotsky: Processed apples do not appear to be affected by the surcharge. There may be another answer. Either they are not affected or they are not a big item in our overall export sales to the United States, but they would be eligible under the bill.

Senator Benidickson: Inasmuch as the statement by the Minister of Agriculture last Friday was not in answer to a question but was a formal statement, which if my recollection is correct was not long, could it be agreed that it either be read or be made an appendix to our minutes?

The Chairman: Is that the wish of the committee?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

See Appendix "A"

Senator Burchill: We have heard about fish, agriculture and food.

The Chairman: And fruit.

Senator Burchill: Now, what about lumber?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: If I can establish first that pulp and newsprint are not surchargeable, consequently, the bill does not apply.

The Chairman: Does that answer your question, Senator?

Senator Burchill: No.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Indeed, you want to know about other forest products.

Senator Burchill: Yes, because I have an inquiry from the Canadian Lumbermen's Association.

Mr. R. E. Latimer, General Director, Office of Area Relations, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce: On lumber, most of the lumber we sell in the United States, there will be a reduction in the United States tariff, we expect, under the final implementation of the Kennedy Round cuts; and on the assumption they go ahead with that, they would then be duty free and not subject to the surcharge, as of January 1, 1972.

Senator Molgat: Would there be a reduction or an elimination?

Mr. Latimer: An elimination of the tariff; and with the elimination of the tariff the surcharge does not apply to these free items. That is the expectation.

Senator Burchill: A manufacturer told me the other day, who had a plant shipping 65 million feet, the production of that plant, to the United States, that they will be subject to $4 a thousand under this.

Mr. Latimer: Precisely so, as long as there is a duty in the United States on lumber. If the United States does what we expect it to do, which is to eliminate the remaining U.S. tariff in accordance with their obligations under the Kennedy Round, on January 1st of 1972, they will then be duty free and because they are duty free they will thereby be exempt from the surtax.

Senator Burchill: You expect that to happen on January 1, 1972?

Mr. Latimer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: In the meantime, what you have in mind is eligible under the bill, because obviously it is processed. I might add to this, that the surcharge in this particular instance is not as high as 10 per cent. As a matter of fact, it is more in the area of 4 per cent, because the surcharge can never be higher than U.S. tariff "column 2", which in this particular case limits the surcharge to 4 per cent. So it is eligible, it is only 4 per cent, and the prices are fairly good at this time.

The Chairman: We have had quite a run at this bill. If we think in terms of putting all this together, we have two questions outstanding, which the minister wants to think about overnight. They would involve an amendment to section 6, where we substitute "not more than" where we say "at least 7" members of the board; and in section 7(2) where we add to the sentence by saying that the chairman or a member of the board designated by him shall preside at such meeting. The minister is going to think about those. Subject to that, is the committee ready to approve the bill?

Some hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Grosart: No, sir. Before the motion is put, I would like to raise one other point.

The Chairman: Very well. Which section is involved?

Senator Grosart: Perhaps it might involve section 17. It involves the whole series of sections which deal with a manufacturer making an application. There is provision for the board, under certain circumstances and in certain situations, to go outside the act. The board may waive the three basic criteria, if it so wishes. The board may, in effect, appeal from the provisions of the act. I suggest there should be an appeal permitted to a manufacturer who is refused payment. At the present time, he would be subject to a decision by a board, the majority of whom almost certainly will be public servants. He may disagree with the decision of the board and he at the moment has no right of appeal. The minister was right to call attention to the section of the bill which says that the board shall operate under the direction of the minister. This would presumably mean, and the minister has said so, that a manufacturer could appeal to him, and he would give sympathetic consideration. At the same time, I think the minister weakened his case when he said he had never given directions to a board and, by implication, he never would. My suggestion is that there should be a right of appeal. Perhaps the minister would put in a right of appeal, perhaps to a board, perhaps to a federal court, perhaps to a judge designated by the federal court.

I suggest to the minister that it is terribly important that a right of appeal be written into the bill. A manufacturer may disagree entirely with the decision of this board—which, I say, again may be dominated by civil servants. The manufacturer feels he has been badly treated. Where does he go? The minister says he may come to him and that he could deal with the board. I suggest that in an act as sweeping as this, which gives tremendous power to the board—not only temporarily but permanently, if orders in council so expand it—that there should be written into the act a right of appeal.

I am going to ask the minister to consider this.

The Chairman: Are you suggesting a right of appeal from any decision of the board, with due regard for pretty strict time limits?

Senator Grosart: Those are details.

The Chairman: Say, to the president of the Federal Court or a judge designated by him? If the minister will not take the responsibility, it should go outside.

Senator Grosart: May I expand a little on this? I am fully aware of some of the problems. I am fully aware of the fact that this board will have a fantastic number of applications, that it must have authority to act with expedition. But this applies to the highest court in the land, it applies to divorce courts and to any other court. On the argument that the board will have a lot of work to do, that it will mean that some promptness to its decisions will be requisite, applies to any decision of any court or of any body corporately known.

In putting forward this suggestion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to go a little beyond this, because we have the suggestion to the minister that he consider certain amendments to the bill. I see some problems, problems of expedition and other problems, if we were to insist on an amendment, or on some amendments to the bill here, so that this bill would have to go back to the House of Commons. The minister might think that this could open up the whole kettle of fish again.

The Chairman: A can of worms.

Senator Grosart: I say a kettle of fish and not a can of worms. The fish would be covered here but the can of worms would not.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: The can of worms is eligible!

The Chairman: The can would be processed.

Senator Grosart: The can would be processed, but the can of worms that I am speaking of is a raw product.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Uncanned. You are being candid!

Senator Grosart: If the Minister feels he can accept the suggested amendments, he could simply give assurance to the committee that the act would be administered in conformity with the suggestions and that in due course—and by that I mean if the act was invoked again—in due course consideration would be given to these amendments. I personally would be satisfied with that. I should like, if I could, to get acceptance from the Minister of some of the suggestions we have put forward without putting him to the long process of taking the act back to the Commons, even if he agrees with some of the suggestions that have been made. I put that forward in connection with my suggestion, which is very fundamental and with which I think, on reflection, the Minister might find himself in some agreement.

Senator Benidickson: It does not have to be long in process.

Senator Grosart: If I were the Minister, I would not want to take this bill back to the Commons, even with a small amendment.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Perhaps I could make a few comments on that. On the first point you make, I think article 15 dealing with special cases says that the board recommends to the Governor in Council. So the recommendation to cabinet will have to come from the board; not from me. The board studies the particular situation, and if the situation does not meet with one of the criteria, or with two or three of them, then the board makes its recommendation accordingly to the Governor in Council. I have not any authority to do that. The board will do that.

Senator Grosart: I am afraid that I do not get that point.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I mean to say that the company which feels that it has a special case to make will not make it to me. Some members of the house were afraid that I would be the recipient of claims from companies. This is not the way it is going to be. It is going to come to the board and from the board it will go to the Governor in Council. It will go as a recommendation.

Senator Forsey: That applies only under section 15.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes, sir. I just wanted to straighten that out.

Senator Grosart: If I may point out, Mr. Minister, this is the section where the board is of the opinion that a grant to the manufacturer would be outside the purpose of the act.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is it. I was just wondering if that was clear enough in your mind.

Senator Grosart: Oh, of course.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: All right.

Senator Grosart: What I object to very strongly, if I may say so, is the fact that this board can now say that in its opinion the particular grant it wants to make is not outside the act, notwithstanding the act. This board could say in effect, if I may say so, that it could not care less about the act. It could decide that, in its "opinion"—and that is the explicit word in section 15—in its opinion the application is not outside the act.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is it.

Senator Grosart: I might say that the draftsmanship in sections 8 and 9 is rather more careful. In section 8(2), the draftsman has said, "to the extent deemed necessary by the Board." This is a legitimate case because he is only talking about internal arrangements. And when you come to section 9, "the Board may make such rules as may be necessary," with this I agree also. It is not what the board thinks is necessary but what actually may be necessary. Therefore, the courts may decide whether it was necessary or not. Later on in section 9 it says, "may do all things that are necessary," and that again is not what the board thinks is necessary or the minister thinks is necessary but what is in fact necessary. Therefore, it is subject to review by the courts.

On the other hand, when we come to section 15 and it says that the board "is of the opinion that a grant to the manufacturer would not be outside the purpose of the act—"

Hon. Mr. Pepin: If it is not outside, it is inside.

Senator Grosart: So, regardless of anything in the act, regardless of the 17 sections or anything else, the board decides that it can say that this application is not outside the act, and that is the end of it.

Senator Forsey: No.

The Chairman: You are not reading the whole section, senator. You must realize the limitations. If they decide that it is not without the purposes of the act, then they can go ahead and give a benefit to the manufacturer. That is beneficial.

Senator Grosart: Of course it is.

The Chairman: Well, to whom do you want to give an appeal in these circumstances?

Senator Grosart: I am not speaking of an appeal here. I am saying that in this particular case I object to any board being able to say what is inside or outside the act.

Senator Forsey: May I point out, Mr. Chairman, if I read this section correctly, that it says when the board is of the opinion it may recommend to the Governor in Council that a grant be authorized. Surely the Governor in Council has then to decide. The board does not say so and so and that is the end of it.

The Chairman: That is right. The Governor in Council will make the decision.

Senator Grosart: But this board can say to the Governor in Council, "We have decided that this is not outside the act." In the natural course of events the Governor in Council or cabinet is going to take that recommendation and I say that the board should not be put into the position of being judge.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Who should do it, then, the minister?

Senator Grosart: The board should not interpret the act by saying that this is not outside the act.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: The board makes a recommendation to the cabinet suggesting that this is within the purposes of the act.

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, what Senator Grosart is overlooking is that, where an application is made to a board, the board has to determine whether it has any power or authority under the act to hear it. All that means is that they decide they have power to hear it. That is within the scope of the authority the board has. That is certainly the primary consideration. If you want to wipe that out, then you wipe out the whole bill. No board could function unless it could assume that it had authority.

Senator Grosart: Of course, but why then do you give it under one section specific authority to decide that this is not outside the act? It is obvious from any general reading of the bill that this is designed to allow the board to say, "Look, the act says so and so but we want to say this is not outside the act." If you read the whole bill, that is clear.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I think you exaggerate.

Senator Grosart: I do not think I do exaggerate, because I have never seen a bill with this kind of phraseology, and I have studied a lot of bills.

The Chairman: I have seen many such bills. If I had a little time I could pick them out for you. There are laws where the first function of the board is to determine whether they have authority. I think one example is the anti-dumping tribunal. They have to decide whether they have authority.

Senator Grosart: Every board has to decide that.

The Chairman: Of course. Exactly.

Senator Grosart: Well, every decision of the board is that it is not outside the act, but I will not argue that point.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Senator, section 15 is really there to take care of cases of the type I have indicated, for example, where the company is exporting 19.2 per cent. It is not to bring in all kinds of situations that are irrelevant to the purposes of the bill.

Senator Grosart: Let us get back to the appeal.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: The appeal, of course, is a matter that was raised, as you know, either in committee or in the house. I recall at the time what was said seemed to be so reasonable that I regretted being on the side of Caesar instead of on the side of Caesar's wife, on which side Senator Grosart is at this time. The question really is who should be the authority to whom somebody would appeal from the board. You mentioned the courts. Well, the courts may receive this sort of appeal on legal grounds to interpret the law and that sort of thing, but certainly not to interpret the factual situation that exists. The honourable judge knows ten times less about the realities of the situation in which the company is than the members of the board would. I do not see why you should appeal on factual matters.

Senator Grosart: You would wipe out 90 per cent of corporate law, if that were true. The courts do decide facts.

The Chairman: Of course, you are practising law tonight too, Senator.

Senator Grosart: I am not practising law.

The Chairman: You are having a fist at it. Not a very good one, but a fist.

Senator Grosart: I am simply trying to do my job here as a member of the committee.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Grosart: It is quite irrelevant whether I am a practising lawyer or otherwise.

The Chairman: Well, I am not interfering with what you are saying; I am simply pointing out certain things.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: This is certainly a very lively committee. I am enjoying it.

Senator Grosart: It does not matter whether I am a lawyer or not. I am perfectly entitled, as a member of this committee, to ask the minister questions.

The Chairman: No one has challenged your right. You are getting excited unnecessarily.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: There is obviously something arbitrary about the board's having full authority to make decisions in this case. But I do not see to whom one could appeal, and I am saying that there is a de facto possibility of "appealing" to the Minister. I have responsibility in Parliament for a number of these boards, and I can only recite my own experience on the subject, and I have not run into too many difficulties. If a company feels that it has not received total justice from one of the boards for which I am responsible, they come to see me and I say, "Well, I shall make very, very sure that all the facts that you bring to my attention are brought to the attention of the board; I will organize meetings and I will ask somebody from my department to support the claimant in these matters if there is reason to do so." The choice I have really is between having confidence in what the board has decided, making sure that all the facts are before the board, or substituting from my own knowledge my own decision for what the board has to decided. Now, I am not that pretentious, yet. Perhaps I shall be in the future, and if that should happen, then it will be time for you to get rid of me! But I really think that the reason governments appoint boards is to make just that kind of decision.

Senator Grosart: But, Mr. Minister, there is an appeal from many boards, and what I am suggesting to you is minimal; I am suggesting that it should be written into the act that an appeal can be made to the Minister. What you are suggesting is that when a board rules against a manufacturer, he then starts to use some kind of political persuasion rather than being able to appeal as of right. I suggest it would help you if there was written into the act a clear short statement that an appeal shall lie to the Minister, so that any representations will come to you as an appeal and as of right, and not as some kind of backdoor political persuasion. My suggestion is that simple.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Well here I am caught between two fires.

Senator Grosart: Speaking to your second point, this does not mean that you are destroying the effectiveness of the board. It merely means that an appeal can be brought to you as of right, and then you can dispose of it in the manner which you are describing.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: But then it is not a real appeal. As I understand an appeal, it means that you have the right to go to a higher authority which is going to make a decision. I think what you are talking about is another line of communication. It is not, I suggest, a real appeal, unless my understanding of the word "appeal" does not make sense. My understanding of an appeal is that when a client is not satisfied with a decision rendered, for example, by a lower court or a lower tribunal, he can go to a higher one to get a decision. So, as I say, I think what you are talking about is another line of communication. But this already exists, and businessmen know that it exists. Let me say that every so often—every month or so—I have a personal visit from some company official unsatisfied, for one reason or another, with a decision rendered by one of the boards for which I am responsible, asking me to see to it that a second look is given to the particular matter that has been decided by this board.

Senator Grosart: But my suggestion is quite simply that they be permitted under the act to come to you as of right.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I regret that I am, as I have already said, caught between two fires. There are some people in the house and I presume there are some here who would be tempted to say that the Minister should not be given too much authority to interfere in these matters. So I have to play safe in between the two opinions. Clause 8 of the bill says, "Subject to the regulations and direction of the Minister,..." so I presume I could give that type of recommendation.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Minister, suppose we put it in this way and you can think about it. Where a board decides against an applicant—and I think that is the case Senator Grosart is talking about—the person who is affected by that decision has a right to go to the Minister to have that decision reviewed. Let us get away from the word "appeal."

Senator Grosart: That is an excellent suggestion.

The Chairman: Will you think that over and deal with it when you are giving us the answers to the other questions?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Irrespective of the fact that it could be in the bill, I am saying that this is the way it is now being done and this is the way I expect it to be done again. Maybe that is not as good as having it specified in a clause in the bill, but bearing in mind the timetable that you have been referring to so kindly, I suggest that this probably would be good enough for the interested parties in industry.

The Chairman: Now, honourable senators, we have three points that the minister is going to look at, and the third one is the question of review of an adverse decision by the board. The minister is going to consider these three points and let us have his answer in the morning. In the meantime is it the wish of the committee that all the other sections of the bill be approved?

Senator Benidickson: Before we come to that, Mr. Chairman, the minister has indicated, and I appreciate it, that he has read our Debates. I am sure he will recall that Senator Grosart said he was going to concentrate on four questions. I think his fourth question was — were better alternatives available than this bill and so on. Then Senator Martin, the Leader of the Government and a member of the cabinet said he thought there were; that the United States could have used other measures other than the surcharges, and that they would have been better employed. Now my notes say, and I have not yet read Hansard, that Senator Martin did not state what in his opinion these other better measures were on the part of the United States. Would the minister care to make any comment on that?

The Chairman: Before the minister comments, senator, and I am not going to say that he should not, I should point out that we have the bill before us.

Senator Benidickson: Yes, but the bill is the result of an action taken by the United States.

The Chairman: It arises by reason of that action.

Senator Benidickson: Yes, it arises by reason of that action. Now a member of the Government has suggested that from our point of view and even from their point of view they could have done this in a better way.

The Chairman: Maybe the minister does not know what Mr. Martin was thinking about.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I really do not care to comment on this. I assume that Senator Martin may have had in mind—and I do not know this but am merely assuming it—that the Americans could have gone the way of devaluation or something like that.

Senator Benidickson: I accept that answer.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: They could also have fought inflation the way we did in Canada.

Senator Benidickson: Now, Mr. Minister, referring to clause 21, my recollection is that you made a verbal commitment to the House of Commons that you would report more frequently than the bill requires.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: On a quarterly basis.

Senator Benidickson: I can see the situation arising, if you were to report only as infrequently as this bill requires, that the board might extend aid to an employer or the owner of a business and it would be a long time before the people whom this bill is supposed to help—namely the employees—would know that that industry had been assisted and they might feel that the assistance has not gone to them in the spirit of the bill. It would not be very effective if you only reported once a year, so I would like you to repeat that undertaking.

The Chairman: Senator Benidickson, if that is the issue, the quickest and best way of obtaining the information would be publication of board decisions.

Senator Benidickson: Some members of the House of Commons requested that be done. The minister compromised and said that he would not publish each and every decision, but that he would do better than clause 21 requires. Members of Parliament, as well as the employees of the industry assisted, would receive information more promptly than is provided in clause 21.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I must be very clear on that, because I did not promise to give detailed, industry by industry, amounts of money by amounts of money, reports. I said, after a long discussion, that I would give quarterly reports covering sectors of industry.

Senator Benidickson: That means they would be anonymous, or group reports.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes, I added to this, as I have done on previous occasions with other boards for which I am responsible, that I would entertain questions, written or oral, by members of the house or the Senate and on each occasion I would go to see the company, as I have done on a number of occasions, and attempt to obtain their consent to my revealing that they have received the assistance.

Senator Benidickson: Notwithstanding that, grants to industries under, shall we say the legislation of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, are practically individually advertised and publicized.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: You are right; there is a different situation.

Senator Benidickson: There is full publicity if an industry receives a grant to encourage it to locate in an underdeveloped area, or for other reasons receives a governmental capital grant. The community knows it, the potential employees and everyone else know of it. I remember that you were cautious in that regard and did not make that full commitment.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: My feeling is simply that that would be publicizing that industry "X" is having difficulties, which may not be the right thing to do. These are very special circumstances.

Secondly, I am afraid that if we start along this line now, the next step would be for me to have to publicize all research and development grants and all that is done in my department for industry. I do not think this would be in the best interests of anyone.

The Chairman: Senator Benidickson has indicated that he accepts the minister's explanation.

Are you prepared to approve the bill with the exception of the three points which the minister will consider overnight? Mr. Minister, you could have Mr. Drahotsky come in to advise us tomorrow morning.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: In the case of the amendments suggested by Mr. Grosart, I have extended myself to the fullest, short of accepting the amendment; I do not think I will be accepting it.

I will report on the other two points tomorrow, that is with respect to the quorum and the seven members.

It is a matter of being courteous enough to consult the people who conducted the drafting of these provisions.

The Chairman: What did you say with respect to Senator Grosart's amendment?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Clause 8(1), which provides:

Subject to the regulations and the direction of the Minister, . . .

Might for all practical purposes include the possibility of a company which is dissatisfied with the decision of the Board to ask the minister for a review.

Senator Benidickson: It has been your practice then to ask the Board to reconsider, if there is new evidence.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: For the reasons brought up by Senator Grosart.

In the case of the other two suggested amendments, I hope the House of Commons will gladly agree to them.

Senator Grosart: I am not clear, because one of the others was suggested by me. However, I would ask you to reflect on the suggestion made by the Chairman, that you write the right of a request for review right into the act. I ask you to think carefully of the very wide powers given under this act and its possible extension by Order in Council to situations we cannot even contemplate at the moment. The fact that this is a board consisting of a majority of public servants should be borne in mind. I would ask you to reflect very carefully before you reject that. I particularly ask, if you accept my way out, if you like, that you give us an assurance with respect to these matters if you feel that for reasons of urgency, among others, this should be passed without further delay.

The Chairman: As I understand it, the minister will let us know his views on these three points tomorrow.

Senator Grosart: I just hope that at this point he will not rule out consideration of the three points.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: As a matter of fact, I am accepting your own recommendation de facto.

Senator Grosart: I started with that particular aspect by pointing out that you had said that "and the direction of the Minister" appeared to be a saving clause. However, this does not, I suggest, now include the right to ask for a review.

The Chairman: We must have some end to discussion. The committee has approved all the clauses of the bill except these three points, on which you can speak tomorrow, Mr. Minister.

The meeting is adjourned until 9.30 tomorrow morning.

The committee adjourned.

---

Ottawa, Wednesday, October 6, 1971.

Upon resuming at 11.20 a.m.

The Chairman: We now have several amendments to consider in relation to Bill C-262. Some senators present today were not here last night, so I will briefly review what took place.

The committee approved all clauses of the bill except clauses 6, 7 and 8. Certain points raised for particular consideration were indicated to the minister, who agreed to express his views to us this morning. We expect him shortly, and I will prepare you by outlining the proposals.

With respect to clause 6(1), the proposal was to strike out the words "not more than" in the third line and insert "at least". The feeling of the committee was that the wording "not more than seven" would allow four, five, six or seven to be appointed.

Subclause 2 of the same section provides that "Not more than four members of the Board may be members of the Public Service". Unless the full seven were appointed there might not exist a reasonable balance between the Public Service representation and others. The proposal, therefore, is to substitute the words "At least" for "Not more than".

It was indicated by the minister that in the course of the operations of the board it might very well sit in panels. The question then arose as to who would be the chairman of each panel. Clause 6(3) provides that:

The Chairman of the Board shall be appointed by the Governor in Council from among those members of the Board who are not members of the Public Service.

The Chairman, if there are two panels, cannot subdivide himself and act as chairman of each meeting. Therefore our proposal was that clause 7(2) be continued to add:

"and the chairman of the Board or a member of the Board designated by him shall be the presiding officer".

I see the minister has arrived. I have informed the committee of the proposal to amend clause 6(1) by substituting for "Not more than", "At least seven . . .".

Senator Flynn: Would there be no limit? Is it at least seven?

The Chairman: At least seven; yes.

Senator Flynn: There would be no limit?

The Chairman: That is correct.

Senator Connolly: It would be a matter of judgment for the Government to decide.

Senator Flynn: Twenty members could be appointed and if some were not suitable an attempt could be made to arrange with the chairman to dispense with the services of those members. Perhaps it should be at least seven and not more than ten.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I am grateful for Senator Flynn's intervention. I agree with him that the words "at least seven" would be open to all kinds of other possibilities.

We do not want to have more than seven, for the very simple reason that to do so would make it very unwieldy and difficult to operate.

If honourable senators do not object, we will state "not more than seven", and we will concentrate on other changes that can be brought about.

The Chairman: The words "nor more than seven" will not cure the difficulty that we see here.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is what I intend to deal with. The bill says "not more than seven". We felt that more than seven would make it difficult for the board to operate efficiently. We were however looking for a board membership sufficiently numerous to have, in effect, two panels. That is achieved by the words "not more than seven".

However, it may be that at other times five would be enough, and five is "nor more than seven", if I might sound a little complicated.

The main preoccupation of the committee last night was that of the "mix" between outsiders and officials.

I think we should devote our attention to clause 6(2) which says:

Not more than four members of the Board may be members of the Public Service within the meaning of the Public Service Employment Act.

The significance of that is that on a five-member panel, four would be officials. Under clause 6(3), the chairman would be an outsider. On a board of five members you would then have four officials, and one outsider, who would be the chairman.

I understand that honourable senators do not like that provision, that they would prefer to have three outsiders on a seven-man board, and, presumably, at least two outsiders on a five-man board.

The Chairman: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That can be accommodated by the following amendment to clause 6(2):

Not more than two-thirds of the members of the Board at any time may be members of the Public Service within the meaning of the Public Service Employment Act.

That would cover it. If we say that not more than two-thirds should be officials, public servants, we would have two outsiders on a five-man board.

The Chairman: Two-thirds of seven would be four, because you would have an excess over three and you cannot fractionalize that.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: On a seven-man board we would have four officials; on a six-man board, four officials; on a five-man board, three officials; and on a three-man board, two officials. I repeat my suggestion, that "not more than two-thirds of the members of the board at any time may be members of the Public Service within the meaning of the Public Service Employment Act."

The Chairman: Senator Aird, you made a similar proposal last night. How does the suggestion strike you?

Senator Aird: I think it meets the consensus expressed last night. We were concerned primarily about the mix.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: If Senator Aird will allow me to continue, I think that for reasons of safety we should add to what I have read the following words:

... but a vacancy occurring in the membership of the board, that has the effect of temporarily reducing the number of members of the Board who are not members of the Public Service below one-third of the members of the Board does not invalidate the constitution of the Board or impair the right of the members to act if the number of members is not less than a quorum.

An outside member might resign because he has insufficient time to do the job, or because he thought it was easy and he finds that it is tougher than he expected. The board would then be unable to operate until another member was appointed.

The Chairman: A few more words should be included in the suggested amendment, that when there is a resignation the Government should act within a reasonable time to find a successor.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is the sort of difficulty we find ourselves in when we make changes.

Senator Flynn: The solution to the problem might lie in saying "at least seven and not more than ten".

Hon. Mr. Pepin: But that does not solve my problem, because at times I might want less than seven. If you say "at least seven", you will be ordering me to have at least seven.

Senator Flynn: It is possible that their appointment might be on a temporary basis.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: All these appointments will be on a temporary basis.

Senator Flynn: If you have "at least seven and not more than ten" you will always be able to maintain a balance between members of the Public Service and outsiders. Furthermore, it will solve the problem in clause 7(2) where three members of the board constitute a quorum, in that you may be able to have an outsider and a member of the Public Service.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: If you say "at least seven", you are telling me to appoint at least seven members. If I do not need seven and five or three are able to do the job, you are suggesting in effect that I should spend money unnecessarily, which I am sure is not your intention.

Senator Flynn: If they are paid so much per day that they work, the problem does not arise.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I would have to appoint someone and then say to him, "I am sorry, we do not need you; stay at home."! I would suggest that honourable senators leave me the flexibility of having seven, five or three. I would also suggest that the amendment I have proposed takes care of the Committee's main preoccupation, which is to have a better "mix" between officials and outsiders.

The Chairman: Yes, I think it does; except that I should like to have some assurance in the bill that vacancies on the board will be filled with reasonable despatch.

Senator Walker: A minister might wish to control the thinking of the board, as to what province they should give it to and what amount.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I think the honourable senator is unnecessarily cautious. In such a situation there would be all kinds of things happening. There would be questions in the house and there would be newspaper men reporting any abnormality. And if I tried to control the thinking of the board, the members would resign.

One day it was suggested that I was exercising an influence on Mr. Duffett of Statistics Canada. He said openly that if a minister ever did what someone had suggested I was doing, he would resign. I suggest to honourable senators that this applies also to the board.

Senator Carter: The minister said that he might want seven or at times only five. Will appointments be made for special problems, and what will he do if only five are needed?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Let us bear in mind what Senator Forsey said on the first day, that this is permanent legislation, but is temporarily applied to a temporary situation, namely, the US surcharge. Therefore it would not be a permanent board attached to permanent legislation. It will be a temporary board attached to the temporary application of this bill.

Senator Flynn: You mentioned the statement made by Senator Forsey, but he was contradicted by the Leader of the Government yesterday. I put the question to the Leader of the Government and he said that you could continue with this legislation after the present fiscal year and after you have exhausted the $80 million by different methods. The Leader of the Government in the Senate stated it would require an amendment to this legislation in order to continue afterwards.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes, he is right.

Senator Flynn: Who is right?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Whoever said the right thing with respect to the provision of further money after the duration of the occasion of the application of this bill. In order to have it continue beyond the present year I would have to return to Parliament to get further money. I could do that in two ways; by way of supplementary Estimates or alternatively by an amendment to the bill. I suggest that I would take the way of supplementary Estimates.

Senator Flynn: You are in contradiction with the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: No, because in both cases I would return to Parliament.

Senator Flynn: You would come back to Parliament by way of supplementary Estimates?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: It is legal.

Senator Flynn: It seems very curious anyway, as far as this is concerned, that you would leave sections 4 and 5 as they are and by way of an item in the Estimates continue this legislation. These sections have to be read with the rest of the bill, and it seems to me that the limit on the amount and the period of application of the bill...

Hon. Mr. Pepin: One does not know what the periods or amounts are going to be. That is the point of departure.

Senator Flynn: I have no objection to your purpose, but I do say that it is badly expressed. If you had said in section 6, for instance, that after the expiration of the present fiscal year the amount required to continue this legislation will be appropriated each year, if that was the case, we would know that this would be the method, but as it is presented now it looks as if you are hopeful that you would not need this legislation after April 30.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is it.

Senator Flynn: Well, all right, but do not play on both sides.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I admit to that. I could have said in the bill that moneys for the implementation of this bill will be provided for by supplementary Estimates.

I think this is a moment of great importance in Canada's history and we were trying to ask Parliament to do as much in these circumstances as could be done by way of Parliamentary action, and this is why, perhaps wrongly, we put the $80 million provision in the bill. It might have been cleaner to do it the other way.

The Chairman: Senator Flynn, notwithstanding the fact that the minister has said he could do it by way of supplementary Estimates, I do not think he can in this bill, the way it is drawn, because there is a limit of $80 million. That is statutory.

Senator Flynn: That is my way of thinking also.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: If I need more money I have to go to Parliament, but I can go to Parliament in two ways: either by asking for an amendment to the bill; or by asking for further funds by way of supplementary Estimates.

The Chairman: I think you can only go one way, Mr. Minister, and that is by way of an amendment to the bill.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Well, let us hope we do not have to go at all!

Senator Flynn: In any event, you can resolve your difference of opinion with the Leader of the Government in the Senate because he assured us yesterday that it would be through the normal channels of legislation.

The Chairman: That can be a private exercise between the two of them.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

The Chairman: What is the objection, Mr. Minister, to providing for expedition in the filling of vacancies?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I would suggest that this is taken for granted. This applies to all boards. Is there a clause in the National Energy Board Act saying that the Government should act rapidly in the appointment of members to the board? I suggest this is part of the democratic process.

The Chairman: In that event, Mr. Minister, the British North America Act provides for 102 senators. We are short 20 now.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Let us amend the Senate Act, then! I am just saying it is always difficult to put in a bill something which should be in all bills. If it makes sense in one bill it makes sense to put it in all bills. I suggest if it is not in other bills it should not be in this one. Perhaps my logic is too Cartesian.

The Chairman: I do not think the logic holds together, Mr. Minister, to be quite frank. What you are saying is, "trust me as minister". We have to look beyond that.

Senator Walker: You may be promoted and then we may have some minister in whom we do not have the same confidence.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Anywhere I go from here will not be a promotion!

The Chairman: How does the committee feel about the minister's proposal? I think it satisfies the chief concern which we had.

Senator Molson: Mr. Chairman, might I ask a question? Last night there was some talk about panels of the board. This does not cure that at all.

The Chairman: There is another amendment to cover that.

Senator Flynn: That is section 7(2).

The Chairman: Yes. Is the form of the amendment proposed by the minister acceptable in relation to subsection 2 of section 6 of the bill? Is that agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: What about the next one, Mr. Minister, with relation to clause 7?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: The next one has to do with meetings and quorum. The main preoccupation yesterday was that the chairman, when he is not presiding over the board or over a panel of the board, should appoint a presiding officer. That was the main preoccupation of the committee last night. At that time I said that this was again taken for granted, but since then I have been informed that such a clause is in the Tariff Board Act, so I cannot do the same pirouetteing as I was doing a moment ago! I am willing to give you the same thing as is in the Tariff Board Act, and that shall become section 7(3). It shall read:

The Chairman shall preside at any sittings of the Board at which he is present and shall designate one of the other members to preside at any sittings of the Board at which he is not present.

That would apply to sittings of the full board or a panel.

The Chairman: That will be subsection (3) of section 7?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Senator Molson: Where does it give authority to call a meeting of a panel of the board? How does it call less than the board? Section 7(1) states:

The Board shall meet at such times and conduct its proceedings in such manner as may seem to it most convenient for the speedy despatch of business.

Does that give authority to call part of the board?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: There is no reference in the bill to panels. We get this indirectly by saying that the quorum will be at least three. In other words, if the quorum is at least three and if there are seven members, then, you can have two panels sitting.

Senator Flynn: It would be by establishing rules of practice.

Senator Beaubien: It would be at the discretion of the chairman.

Senator Molson: You could have one panel of three sitting?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Molson: He should have authority to call less than a board, then. How does he call a meeting of a panel?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: He could have a meeting of the board with a quorum of three.

Senator Molson: How does he designate who the three members are?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: The chairman has to be there himself and he will preside over the meeting, but if he is not present he will have to appoint one of the other members to preside over the meeting.

The Chairman: Section 7(1) states:

The Board shall meet at such times and conduct its proceedings in such a manner as may seem to it most convenient for the speedy despatch of business.

It should also be provided there that the board may meet in panels.

Senator Flynn: It would be much more clear to me.

The Chairman: Suppose you said, "The Board shall meet as the whole Board or in panels".

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I am in a very conciliatory mood this morning. I want this bill to go through as rapidly as possible, so I will accept whatever you say. We can add: "at any sittings of the Board, in whole or in panels, at which he is not present". I think that will cover it.

The Chairman: No. In subsection 1 you need the authority; that is: "the Board shall meet as the whole Board or in panels at such times and conduct its proceedings in such manner as may seem to it most convenient". That would appear to cure the problem.

Senator Flynn: You would need a consequential amendment to subsection 2 to say that three members constitute a quorum of the board or of a panel.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: You are just explicating.

Senator Flynn: It is obvious the minister is not a lawyer.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: He is a lawyer but a non-practising one.

Senator Flynn: I did not know that. I knew you had been in the press.

The Chairman: First of all, is the proposed amendment to add subsection 3 acceptable?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Flynn: "Three members shall constitute a quorum of the board or of a panel".

The Chairman: That would be the addition in subsection 2. Then in subsection 1 it should say: "The Board shall meet as a whole Board or in panels at such times" etc. We add those words. Is that agreeable to the committee?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Flynn: There is one question left that was raised by Senator Molson.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I have to make a correction to what I said to Senator Flynn a moment ago. I am not a lawyer. I have a diploma in law. Apparently there is a difference, and I want to correct myself at the earliest opportunity!

Senator Flynn: A licence in law.

The Chairman: What is the other point.

Senator Flynn: The point is that when you have a panel of three members, the rule being that you should never have only members of the Public Service, you should provide that at least one member of the panel is an outsider.

Senator Beaubien: We have dealt with that with the two-thirds, have we not?

Senator Flynn: No.

The Chairman: The bill in its present form provides that the chairman must be an outsider, so that as long as there is to be a meeting of the whole board or of a panel at which he is present the chairman must preside. If there are two panels meeting he cannot preside at both, so we require in the amendment the minister submitted that the chairman shall be a member of the board designated by him. All we have to do is to add a word or so to say "an outside member of the board".

Senator Flynn: In the appointment of the deputy chairman.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Flynn: You have to do it just the same.

The Chairman: You add "who is not a member of the Public Service".

Senator Flynn: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: You are complicating matters.

The Chairman: No, we are making it easier for you.

Senator Molson: In effect, Mr. Chairman, you are saying that a panel of this board composed solely of civil servants may not meet?

The Chairman: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is what you are saying. I suggest that the presence of three members from the outside will have a permeating influence on the way the board, either as a board or as a panel, will operate. I suggest you should leave the board the possibility of making decisions exceptionally with only officials there. I am quite sure that if officials take a different philosophical line than the outsiders, this will very easily come out and will be reconciled.

The Chairman: If we did that the trouble would be that we would be defeating the purpose of the amendment we originally proposed, which was to ensure a proper mix. If you can have a panel composed of three members of the Public Service and operate, then we have defeated our purpose.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I suggest this is not entirely true, with respect, Mr. Chairman, as they say at these meetings.

The Chairman: And in court.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I suggest that the presence of outsiders on the board will help develop what I call the philosophy of the board. I suggest that the philosophy as determined by the board with the presence of outsiders will be implemented even if occasionally there are no outsiders on a panel to make up the quorum.

Senator Molson: Would not clause 8, which establishes the responsibility of the board to administer the grants and so on, perhaps mean that even though a panel was composed of civil servants, in fact the board will administer the provisions of the act, and therefore the whole board, composed of outsiders and members of the civil service, will be taking the action, even though the consideration was given by a panel perhaps composed entirely of civil servants.

The Chairman: I would expect—and I think there are lots of precedents for it—that where there is a board and the board sitting in panels the regulations might well provide that where a panel sits it reports to the board. What would you think of that, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is a good suggestion.

The Chairman: They could do it by regulation.

Senator Molson: As far as I am concerned, that would sound reasonable.

The Chairman: It is the board that approves the grant, and therefore while the panel sits and makes decisions, it reports to the board. It is like an executive committee of a board of directors; they report their conclusions to the board and the board either accepts them or does not. I think that is a matter that can be dealt with by regulation.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: If that were in the regulations you would not need it in the legislation.

The Chairman: No, you would not need to touch that.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Mr. Drahotsky brings to my attention that the difficulty is that there is no legal status for "panels."

Senator Carter: There will be if we have the amendment.

The Chairman: The amendment we are proposing would provide for panels, but the panels can hear and make recommendations; it is the board that must make the decision of approving a grant.

Senator Burchill: They have to approve what the panel decides.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Lang: If you call the panels committees you get around it.

The Chairman: Yes, you could call them committees.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: How would the amendments read?

The Chairman: Would you go through them, Mr. Hopkins?

Mr. E. Russel Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel: It would read:

The Board shall meet as a whole Board or in panels at such times and conduct its proceedings in such manner as may,

and so on. Then subsection 2:

Three members of the Board or of a panel . . .

I suppose of the board, so it would read:

. . . or of a panel of the Board constitute a quorum.

Senator Flynn: My suggestion was that three members shall constitute a quorum of the board or of a panel. I think it is clearer this way, but it is as you wish.

Mr. Hopkins: I think this is the standard Justice drafting.

Senator Flynn: That does not impress me too much.

Mr. Hopkins: The say, "three members of the Board or a panel constitute a quorum". I do not think it could be misunderstood. That would be the end of subsection 2. Subsection 3 would read:

The Chairman shall preside at any sittings of the Board at which he is present.

I think it should be:

... At any sittings of the Board or of a panel of the Board at which he is present, and shall designate one of the other members to preside at any sittings of the Board or of a panel of the Board at which he is not present.

The Chairman: There is one question there. In order to ensure that there is at least one outsider present at a panel meeting, I think the chairman of the panel that may be appointed should be limited to an outside member of the board.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I will resist that, if you will allow me. I am very eager to accommodate, but I will resist that one, because it may very well be that circumstances do not permit the coming to Ottawa of three outsiders when an urgent decision has to be made, and consequently I want to keep that flexibility, of having a quorum made up of three officials.

Senator Flynn: That would not be too bad if we were sure that you cannot continue with this legislation beyond April 30 next year, and that you will have to come back to Parliament, because probably you will at that time be able to prepare other amendments. It is quite obvious that this legislation has been prepared in a hurry, which in the circumstances is understandable.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I do not think that time should be a criterion there. I have seen legislation that was prepared over a long period of time, that was faulty also.

Senator Flynn: There are contradictions in the bill, which are not important, it may be, at this time; but if you have to come back to us in about five or six months...

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Really, I have no intention of doing that. The bill, as Senator Forsey has said, is a permanent bill. The regulations will have to cover a particular situation justifying the invocation of the bill.

The Chairman: I want to point out to you, Mr. Minister, that if we accede to what you have said, and if you have three public servants constituting the panel, because you want to do something quickly, you still must have a meeting of the board in order that you may get the direction of the board as to the grant.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I am quite eager to suggest to the board that they operate in the way you see fit, which is that the decision made in the panels are to be subject to ratification by the full board. I am quite willing to suggest to the board that because it would be according to the spirit of the bill; but I am not too keen to tie myself to the board to the obligation of having one outsider member on each panel when a panel is formed. I think you should leave a bit of flexibility there.

The Chairman: All right. We are trying to do so. Section 8 gives the authority to administer a grant to the board. The question then is, what is the authority of the panel? The panel can conduct hearings and I am sure the regulations will provide as to what the panel can do. But the panel cannot administer the grants. It could make recommendations, but the board will have to say it adopts what the panel recommends.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: In some ways the panel, if it meets the quorum requirement, operates as the board, in some circumstances.

Senator Molson: Surely there is no reason why a panel should operate as the board for more than a hearing or an investigation? Surely a panel of the board should not administer, for say 60 days or 90 days, the provisions of this bill?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: The purpose of the panel is that there might be a lot of work, especially in the beginning.

The Chairman: Many hearings.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Hearings, meetings, for analysis, for discussion of a case. That is the reason for the panel. I take as very logical and very valid the observations that you have made on the usefulness of referring the recommendation or decision of the panel to the full board. I will recommend accordingly.

The Chairman: I do not think we need to amend section 8, because section 8 gives the authority to the board to administer the grants. That remains. We have not given the panel the authority to administer the grants.

Senator Flynn: That is right.

The Chairman: I think the regulations, Mr. Minister, should spell out the functions of the panel. I am trying to help you on that.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I recognize that.

The Chairman: Because that will involve an amendment of the bill. Have we got the question of the panel covered well enough there, do you think?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I imagine it is too well covered.

Senator Carter: Must the panel consist of three persons, or can the panel consist of less than three?

Mr. Hopkins: Three members of the board or of the panel.

The Chairman: Section 7, as amended, says that the board shall meet as the whole board or in panels at such times, and so on. If the board meets as a panel, you may be getting yourself in a position where it is the board, even as a panel of the board.

Mr. Hopkins: I would agree with the minister.

The Chairman: Yes. Then we have not accomplished what Senator Molson was talking about.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Senator Molson presented it to me as a suggestion I should make to the board, in drafting its own rules and procedures.

Senator Molson: Surely the board can never get away from the responsibility of carrying out what is defined in the act. It can have panels, it can do what it likes, but in the end surely the board is responsible, and that is all the members of the board. It is not some of them, is that not right?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Let us try to anticipate on the unpredictable. If the board has the practice, let us say hypothetically, of operating as panels made up only of civil servants, I would suggest that the chairman of the board, an outsider, would resent that very much; and he has all the capacity to prevent it. The chairman of the board, I suggest, will allow a meeting of a panel made exclusively of officials, only in extraordinary circumstances. He, being an outsider, will not want the responsibilities of outsiders on the board to be eroded by the development of a practice of panels meeting including only officials.

The Chairman: Here is the rationalization of it, Mr. Minister. It strikes me like this. The board is the top. What we say here in the amendment is that the board shall meet as a whole board or in panels. That is fine. That is providing authority. But who determines when they meet in a panel? It will be the board that will determine that. And when the board determines that they are meeting in panel, the board will provide the procedures, and your regulations will deal with that. I think we have it covered.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I am being very frank, I am not sure if the regulations will cover that part of it; but the board has the right to select its own modus operandi.

The Chairman: Each time.

Senator Molson: Mr. Chairman, at the end of the year, the board will make a report to the minister. At that stage you are not going to get a report from a panel. You will get a report from the board. Therefore, what I am saying is that the board is responsible for all that has happened during the year, whether it did it in panel or by the whole board.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is so.

The Chairman: Is what we have done satisfactory?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: You have explicitated really what was in our minds, what would have been done, anyway.

The Chairman: We have not tortured the bill beyond recognition. Are these amendments agreed to?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I have another amendment to suggest to you. It has to do with the reporting under clause 21 of the bill. Last evening the view was expressed that reporting once every year was not good enough. The same suggestion was made in the house. I stood up in the house and put my hand on the invisible bible and said I would report on a quarterly basis. Because of circumstances there was no time to go into it, I was unable to present it as an amendment, since the procedure did not allow me to do that. You will remember that we were at the report stage.

Therefore, if you want to help me in getting your two amendments through the house, where members of the house may very well say that I was not flexible enough to accept an amendment to clause 21 but flexible enough to accept amendments to clauses 6 and 7—they may ask why I did not accept their amendment!—I am suggesting that you explicit the suggestion made last evening and amend clause 21 so that in place of the words "fiscal year", the bill would say "annual quarter", to put reporting on a quarterly basis. The Department of Justice recommends the word "annual quarter", which is synonymous with three months.

The Chairman: We have to strike out "fiscal year". It occurs twice.

Senator Beaubien: If in March you get the report on the March 31, it does not give much time.

Senator Flynn: The idea would be to make the first report at the end of the calendar year. It could be the quarter terminating on December 31, 1971.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the previous amendment on the subject of panels, because it is likely to cause legal difficulties my adviser is checking with the Department of Justice. He should be back in a moment or two.

The Chairman: Last night another question was raised which the minister answered immediately but was asked to reflect upon. That point is that where the board makes a decision (a) that it has not the authority to deal with the matter, or (b) that the board is against granting any benefit or relief, there should be a right in the person affected to go to the minister, as of right, for a review.

Senator Flynn: If it is beyond the powers of the board I suppose the Federal Court would have jurisdiction to annul the decision.

The Chairman: If the board exceeds its jurisdiction, of course you can go to the court. In fact, you can leave that phase of it and deal only with the phase where the applicant is aggrieved by a decision of the board, in which case he would have the right to go to the minister for a review.

Senator Lang: What is a review?

The Chairman: The minister did not like the word "appeal" and I was inclined to agree with him.

Senator Flynn: Even if the minister makes a review, he cannot impose a new decision on the board.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: Right. The minister can only ask for a review. I wish to emphasize that point.

Senator Flynn: He can review the case, but he would have to ask the board to change its mind. The board would not be obliged to do so.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is my understanding also.

Senator Flynn: We do not need to legislate on that score. We might as well leave it as it is. Anybody can appeal to the minister.

The Chairman: I raised the point because I was asked to last night, but my own view is that the minister, in the position he occupies now under the bill, can at any time ask the board to be kind enough to review a decision. But the board is the authority.

Senator Flynn: Otherwise we would have to establish a mechanism to enable the minister to change a decision of the board.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: If you are looking for justification of the approach, which we seem to agree on, it is clause 8(1), "subject to the regulations and the direction of the Minister". Presumably the direction of the minister would include the right to ask the board to review its decision on a case in the light of circumstances, events and facts brought to the attention of the minister.

The Chairman: We have raised the subject as we said we would. The feeling of the committee is that it is not practicable and is unnecessary in the circumstances.

Senator Molson: On the question of a split board, what does the term "panel" mean? Do we know what a panel is? Is it defined? We have had committees and subcommittees, but we have not had panels before, to my knowledge.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That was Mr. Drahotsky's concern.

The Chairman: When referring to a board it might be more appropriate to use the word "committee" — a committee of the board.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: My first information was that this does not have to be covered owing to the fact that it is the normal practice of boards, for example, the National Energy Board and the Tariff Board, to sit in committee, but when the decision is made it is made by the board. The board cannot say that the decision was made by a committee and consequently the board has not taken a decision. If the board does not take it, there is no decision of the board, or there is a contrary decision of the board.

Senator Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the Transport Board sometimes sends out a single representative and when he comes back he gets the approval of his colleagues.

Senator Flynn: The Appeal Court of Quebec sits with two panels in Montreal at one time.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: That is what is intended here.

The Chairman: Then we had better stay with the word "panel". What have you to report, Mr. Drahotsky?

Mr. Drahotsky: I have tried to clarify these points with the Department of Justice. I am told that the term "panel" has no legal meaning, unless so defined in one way or another. I have also been reminded that this question arose on a number of occasions when the bill was being considered in cabinet committees. The consensus reached, including the agreement reached in the Cabinet Committee on Legislation, was that clause 7 should be taken in conjunction with clause 9, empowering the board to make such rules as may be necessary for the conduct of its meetings, the management of its affairs and the performance of its duties and functions, and that those two clauses do provide adequate authority to the board to operate on a two-panel basis, and to organize its activities and its deliberations in any way it would consider most expeditious. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, the Companies Act lays down that notice has to be given to directors. That means all directors. All directors are invited to meetings. If that procedure were followed here there would be no real problem. If all directors are told that the meeting is going to take place and are advised in time, then they are going to turn up.

Senator Flynn: But if everybody wants to sit on the same panel, what will happen then?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: They will be directed by the chairman which panel they are to sit on, and I would suggest that the chairman would try to get in his panels the same kind of mix he gets on the board. That stands to reason.

Senator Molson: According to section 9 it sounds to me as if the rules that the board operates under with respect to panels, in other words, how the panels are made up and how they are called to meetings and things of that sort, would have to be set out in the board's own rules.

The Chairman: Senator Molson, we only got on to this question of panels because the minister introduced the subject by saying he would want the board to sit in panels, and we were trying to find some way whereby he could have authority to do that. If he does not want that, but feels he has enough authority under section 9, then that becomes his job. I think that under that section, the board can make any rules it wants to make. The board can simply say, "You, you and you shall act as a section of the board to deal with this matter." But then that section must go back and report to the board.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I suggested that very strongly at the time.

Senator Lang: I should like to move that the bill be reported without amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: But we have agreed to some amendments.

Is it the wish of the committee that in the amendments we delete all reference to panels?

Senator Flynn: I am very happy the Minister has found the Senate useful in proposing the amendment he had no time to push through in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I think that the discussion has been helpful to me in the sense that I will suggest to the Chairman when I meet him after he is appointed that he should try to develop in the panels when they meet the same kind of mix that he has in the board itself. I will suggest that, but I did not want him to be tied to the obligation of doing that in exceptional cases.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill as amended?

Senator Benidickson: What amendment was agreed on?

The Chairman: The amendments we talked about last evening to section 6, section 7 and section 21. In section 21 we are changing the fiscal year to each annual quarter.

Hon. Mr. Pepin: And in section 7 a new paragraph 3 has been added.

The Chairman: I will read it for you.

Senator Benidickson: Has the committee agreed to Senator Aird's suggestion that the words "at least" should be included in section 6 sub-section 1?

The Chairman: No, but subsection 2 has been amended. The Minister has furnished us with a form of amendment which would read:

Not more than two-thirds of the members of the Board at any time may be members of the Public Service within the meaning of the Public Service Employment Act, but a vacancy occurring in the membership of the Board that has the effect of temporarily reducing the number of members of the Board who are not members of the Public Service below one-third of the members of the Board does not invalidate the constitution of the Board or impair the right of the members to act if the number of members is not less than a quorum.

Believe me, it does make sense.

Senator Benidickson: It is fairly easy for it to follow the principle in the original bill.

The Chairman: Except if the board of directors decide that the board is going to sit in sections, for instance, and they designate three members who are public servants, whatever decisions or recommendations they are going to make, it will still be the board itself which must afterwards administer the grant. We have not changed that. Is that clear?

Hon. Mr. Pepin: I agree, and I thank the committee for a very good hearing.

The Chairman: We will struggle to report the bill this afternoon, and we can say that the amendments made have been made with the consent and approval of the minister.

We will adjourn now until 3 o'clock this afternoon, when we will continue our hearing in connection with the private bill to establish the United Bank.

The committee adjourned.

APPENDIX "A"

Statement of Minister of Agriculture,
October 1, 1971.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief statement providing further information on agricultural assistance programs designed to cover unprocessed agricultural products which will not be eligible for assistance under Bill C-262, the Employment Support Act. You will recall that I gave notice of this assistance when I spoke on second reading of Bill C-262 on September 7, 1971.

I can advise that the Agricultural Stabilization Board and the Agricultural Products Board have been authorized to come forward with individual commodity programs designed to help producers adversely affected by the surtax. The programs will take any one of several forms, namely, purchase of the product, deficiency payments or payment to distributors for the benefit of producers. In this latter connection distributors to be eligible must have been exporters of the unprocessed product to the United States in the base period, must demonstrate that the price paid to farmers for raw products was maintained at a level consistent with that which would have been expected in the absence of surtax, that distribution volume and employment were maintained. I say the latter because employment in the agricultural distributing industry is important as well as in the agricultural processing industry.

As with processed products there will be no requirement that exports to the United States be maintained.

I am issuing a press release today inviting applications from the agricultural industry both from producer groups and distributors. Applicants are asked to provide basic data relative to the criteria and on the impact of the surtax on their operations to supplement the information already accumulated by the department.

In conclusion, I want to say that I am very conscious of the need to put these programs in place promptly and consistent with the need of those affected and the international situation.

---

Published under authority of the Senate by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Information Canada, Ottawa, Canada.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

No. 39

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1971

Third Proceedings on:

“Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation”

(Witnesses—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Grosart
Beaubien	Haig
Benidickson	Hayden
Blois	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Lang
Choquette	Macnaughton
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Molson
Cook	Smith
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28)

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, September 14, 1971:

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator Hayden moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Denis, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, tabled this day, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto; and

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Thursday, October 7, 1971.

(46)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9.30 a.m. to further consider:

"Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation".

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Aird, Beaubien, Benidickson, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Desruisseaux, Flynn, Gélinas, Giguère, Haig, Hays, Isnor, Lang, Molson, Smith, Sullivan, Walker and Welch. (21).

Present, but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senator Heath.

In attendance: The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel; Mr. C. Albert Poissant, C.A., Tax Consultant.

WITNESSES:

Mr. Arthur A.R. Scace, Partner,
Law Firm of McCarthy and McCarthy.

Mr. Stephen C. Smith, Partner,
Law Firm of McCarthy and McCarthy.

At 12.30 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Thursday, October 7, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9.30 a.m. to give consideration to the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: With respect to the order we intend to follow this morning, we will first take general matters relating to estates, real estate and corporate acquisitions, and Mr. Scace is going to deal with that. Following that we are going to deal with international taxation, and Mr. Smith will handle that.

You will recall that yesterday we had a fairly extensive discussion on the question of multi-national and international income, and over the next three weeks we shall be having several briefs on that aspect. Therefore, it will be important this morning to get as good a grounding in this as we can.

Mr. Scace, would you care to take over now?

Mr. Arthur R. A. Scace, Partner in the Law Firm of McCarthy & McCarthy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the programs which we have given we have parcelled out estate planning or matters relating to estates as a separate item, and last week we touched on a number of things which are important in that particular area so that to the extent we have already done that I think I will gloss over it unless you would like to go back and delve into it in somewhat greater detail.

The Chairman: You mean we should have a refresher course this morning.

Mr. Scace: If you like.

Senator Benidickson: Some of us need it.

Mr. Scace: When we did capital gains we started off with a summary. Perhaps we might do the same thing this morning. The basic changes, so far as estates and death duties are concerned, are as follows: First, estate and gift tax are to be abolished, and we will have more to say about that as it is clearly the most important aspect of this area. Second, with the exception that in the case of distributions to a spouse or to a qualifying trust in favour of a spouse, there is a deemed realization of all capital assets on death and when a gift is made, and this is the substitution for the gift tax and the estate tax. Third, the attribution rules are altered in order to take account of the imposition of the capital gains tax. Fourth, as we mentioned last time, there is a deemed realization when you cease to be a resident of Canada. In other words, when you emigrate from Canada there is a deemed realization at fair market value. There are, of course, certain exclusions from that and it will not cover taxable Canadian property. Finally, and I think this is an area where you may be receiving a number of briefs, the law concerning the taxation of trusts is now much more extensive and much more complicated, and a number of people in the trust field think that it is possibly quite inadequate.

If I may, I will go through these items. First there is the abolition of estate tax. The provision abolishing it is found in Part II of Bill C-259, and it says that the Estate Tax Act does not apply in the case of the death of any person whose death will have occurred after 1971. So if you can make it to January 1, 1972, there will be no estate tax.

Senator Molson: If we pass the bill.

Mr. Scace: In its place we get a deemed realization on death, as I said. You find that provision in section 70(5) of the bill.

As a review of what we looked at last time, there are two aspects of the deemed realization. First, if you are dealing with non-depreciable capital property, the deemed realization is at fair market value. Similarly, the beneficiary acquires at fair market value. Second, if you are dealing with depreciable capital property, you have the midway point rule. In the legislation the deemed realization price, or the deemed disposition price, is undepreciated capital cost plus one-half of the difference between fair market value and undepreciated capital cost. Similarly, you get an acquisition at that same price.

Senator Connolly: Will you say that again?

Mr. Scace: Yes, sir. In the case of depreciable capital property, it is undepreciated capital cost plus one-half of fair market value minus undepreciated capital cost.

Senator Connolly: It is the old story, isn't it, adding it in and then subtracting it?

Mr. Scace: Well, if you had an asset which had cost $100 and an undepreciated capital cost of $80, and on death the fair market value was $200, your calculation would be $80 plus one-half of $200 minus $80 which is $120, so then it would be $80 plus $60 which is $140.

I think we had examples of this calculation last week, but what you would get here is recapture between undepreciated capital cost and original cost, so there would be recapture between $80 and $100, and between the $100 and the deemed realization price of $140, that would be a capital gain and applying your normal rule, one-half of that would be a taxable capital gain and you would include it in your income.

The Chairman: So that $20 would go into income?

Mr. Scace: Twenty dollars would be the taxable capital gain, that is right.

The Chairman: And $20 would go into income by virtue of recapture at full income rates.

Mr. Scace: At full income rates, that is right.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Just to make it crystal-clear, that undepreciated asset could for example be a share of stock or a bond that had been purchased for $100 and then dropped to $80.

Mr. Scace: No, sir. Here we are talking about depreciable capital property, that is property upon which you are entitled to take capital cost allowance. In the case you are talking about of non-depreciable capital property, you do not have to go through this calculation, there is a deemed realization at fair market value.

Senator Connolly: That makes it abundantly clear.

Mr. Scace: So you would not have this item here of undepreciated capital cost and the deemed realization would take place at $200 if this were not depreciable capital property and that would be the acquisition price, and in that case there would be a $100 capital gain and a $50 taxable capital gain.

Senator Lang: Mr. Scace, taking the fair market value less the undepreciated capital cost, does the person acquiring the asset have to take into account the undepreciated capital cost?

Mr. Scace: No, sir. There is a different rule where you have that situation, but the formula is much the same. Where your fair market value is less than undepreciated capital cost, the rule is fair market value plus one-half undepreciated cost minus fair market value. They just switched it around. Let me just show you how that would look. In that case you have an asset with a cost of $100, an undepreciated capital cost of $80 and a fair market value on the day of death of $50, so you would have $50 plus one-half of undepreciated capital cost of $80, minus fair market value so you would end up with $50 plus $15 which would equal $65.

Senator Lang: I do not see the equity in that. Do you?

Mr. Scace: That may be a common complaint, senator.

Senator Beaubien: If a man were not feeling very well and he had some property, it would be a great thing for him to get out of it before valuation day and leave nothing but cash.

Mr. Scace: It would be a good idea. I think the rationale to this—if we complicate it just a little more—is that under the present law if you hold a depreciable capital asset, then on death if the asset passes by will, there is no recapture and the donee acquires a fair market value. Now because of that treatment, I think they decided that somehow they had to make a compromise which was somewhat less than the rigour of a fair market value realization, and for that reason you get the midway point rule, I think, which is merely a compromise.

Now this does create a problem, and I think we mentioned this last week too. As I said, if you have a depreciable asset now and $100 is the cost and $80 is the undepreciated capital cost, when you die and leave that asset by will, then the fair market value is $200. There is no recapture on your death of this $20 in capital cost allowance that has been taken—that is the difference between which the beneficiary acquires, $200, which is fair market value, and that becomes his base for capital cost purposes. With these new rules you can get, as I have shown, recapture and that recapture will be retroactive. As I said last time there are methods of avoiding that retroactive recapture, but it still requires reorganization of your affairs.

Senator Burchill: How do you get at the undepreciated capital cost? You know the capital cost but how do you get at the undepreciated capital cost?

Mr. Scace: The undepreciated capital cost is a book figure or an historical figure. Say you bought an apartment building for $100, you are entitled to take capital cost allowance on that apartment building at 5 per cent. So in year number 1 with 5 per cent of $100 being $5, the undepreciated capital cost would be $95.

Senator Burchill: You would have to figure out all that?

Mr. Scace: Yes, but you would know it because you would have been taking it every year. That would be no problem.

Senator Connolly: So that $80 in that example is what would be left after you have taken your depreciation?

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Senator Burchill: But what about an art collection?

Mr. Scace: An art collection would not be depreciable property. To be entitled to capital cost allowance, the property must be purchased for the purpose of producing income. I suppose it might be possible to acquire a piece of art for that purpose, but I think that in most situations it is unlikely.

Now if we can give you a comparison of the rates of tax between the Estate Tax Act as it was and what we will get under Bill C-259 with the deemed realization on death. Under the Estate Tax Act the rates started at 15 per cent on the estate sum if it exceeded $20,000, and it went up to a top rate of 50 per cent where the estate exceeded $300,000.

For Ontario purposes—and my calculations have been based on Ontario—because you had a 50 per cent provincial credit to give account to the Ontario succession duty, you could view the Estate Tax Act rate as being halved, so the top rate—for an Ontario estate at least—would have been 25 per cent under the Estate Tax Act. Now you turn to Bill C-259 and with the combined federal and provincial rates of tax, the top marginal rate is approximately 61.1 per cent. Now with the deemed realization on death, you are only taxing capital gains and therefore you may view that top rate as being halved, because there is only half recognition of a gain and therefore the top rate on death would be 30.55 per cent of one-half of 61.1 per cent. So if you stop there it appears that the maximum rate has gone up by approximately 5½ per cent, but it is based on the capital gains which have accrued but which have not been realized. Theoretically, the tax base under the bill must be considerably smaller than the tax base under the Estate Tax Act. The only situation in which the base might be the same would be where you started off with no assets, or your whole assets had been invested and you never realized a gain. So you are starting from zero and upon death, in effect, all of your assets would represent unrealized capital gains. The other possibility, which is equally unlikely, is that if the tax base on property received by bequest or gifts prior to 1972 is nil, that is, if all of your property had been inherited or received by gifts prior to 1972, your whole estate might be subject to deemed realization on death.

Senator Hays: Would not all farms be in this situation where a farmer starts with zero and goes through his entire lifetime ...

Mr. Scace: Many farmers inherit their farms.

Senator Hays: No, starting from zero with the Farm Credit Corporation and a small downpayment and working for 40 years which many farmers do; his whole assets are subject to capital gain. I would suggest that perhaps 90 per cent of the farmers are in this situation.

Mr. Scace: That could be correct, senator. I am not very familiar with farms. He would be entitled to deduct his costs.

Senator Hays: Yes, he would do that on income tax.

The Chairman: His operating costs.

Senator Cook: That would only apply after the valuation date of the farm.

Mr. Scace: Yes.

Senator Hays: And he goes through his entire lifetime and then he dies. He is starting from zero. If you checked the percentage of all farmers, I think you would probably find 90 per cent are in this category.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Scace, anyone who owns any kind of property today, if no change has occurred between the value at the date of his death and the valuation date, there is no tax.

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Senator Beaubien: It does not matter how you have obtained it. If you should die round the end of January and your property is worth $100,000, and on the valuation date it was worth roughly $100,000, there is no tax.

Mr. Scace: That is right.

The Chairman: It is deemed realization gain. It is attached to the deemed realization and your starting point is as of January 1, 1972.

Senator Hays: Hon. Mr. Phillips said that he did not feel that farms should be subject to the capital gains tax. This is probably what he had in mind. They start from zero and they face this inflation their whole lifetime.

The Chairman: This is what we were saying.

Senator Hays: This would be a good opportunity to back up that statement.

The Chairman: Yes, to reinforce what we have already said. Apparently, they did not hear us the first time.

Senator Beaubien: I think this is a point we ought to stress very heavily. We look at the capital gains tax and we are not very much afraid of it because, after all, we are not going to live that much longer. We are dealing with a change in valuation between some time before the end of the year and whenever a person dies. We are leaving a terrible legacy for the poor people who are starting to earn money now and have to battle through their lives and who turn out to be successful and are able to leave money to their children; and because they are successful they are going to get clobbered by this bill.

The Chairman: Senator Beaubien, "clobbered" is a relative term. As I understood Mr. Scace, the clobbering might consist of a difference in rates, as compared to the estate tax if it continued, of the order of 5½ per cent.

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Senator Beaubien: Except in the case of the inheritance of money where it all has to be paid.

The Chairman: Do you mean by will?

Senator Beaubien: Yes.

Mr. Scace: There is no problem after we get into the system. Once someone inherits something, or receives something by gift after the system starts the acquisition price is fair market value or there is this mid-way point rule in the case of depreciable capital property. However, it starts with a base so I do not think there is a problem.

We have made some calculations, which clearly show that the federal tax cost of dying on most reasonable assumptions will be much less under the new system. There is just some concern during the transition, but you have pinpointed it correctly, that if you are worth $100,000 on December 31 and die on January 1 there is zero tax to the federal Government. If you do that, your beneficiary acquires the property at $100,000 and moves on.

Senator Molson: I thought you said, though, that there was a stage where property acquired by will would attract tax on the whole amount.

Mr. Scace: That is right, senator; I said if we are right with respect to gifted and inherited property acquired prior to 1972 a situation could exist in which the tax base would be almost equal to that under the old Estate Tax Act. In that case, if the rate is 5½ per cent higher, there could be a higher tax.

There are three considerations: one, as I have indicated, we may be wrong in our conclusion; I hope we are. Secondly, the amendments may cure this particular difficulty; we hope they will. Certainly the Department of Finance is aware of it. Thirdly, it is open to anyone to take the fairmarket value election and cure the deficiency.

This is an interesting area, because although we may discuss what the federal Government says it intends to do, the $64,000 question is what the provinces intend to do. That is the real issue.

Senator Cook: This is perhaps just a practical question, but now if someone dies the executor files a return, values the assets and so on. How will it work practically on his deemed realization? Does that put the onus on the department? Who reports the transfer of the property?

The Chairman: I expect they would check the values as they do now for an estate.

Mr. Scace: You would be required to file an income tax return, as opposed to an estate tax return, senator. Therefore you would have to show what assets you had, what the costs were and what their values were at the date of death.

The Chairman: I expect also, Senator Cook, that the staff presently in National Revenue, in the Estate Tax Section dealing with valuations, etcetera, would simply be transferred to this phase of administration.

Senator Cook: Who files the deemed realization? The legatee, I suppose.

Senator Molson: It will be much simpler to die before valuation day.

Mr. Scace: Senator, I suggest that if you are considering it, you wait until January 1.

We have made calculations, in which we had to adopt a number of assumptions. However, assuming these provisions are implemented on a federal level and assuming, for instance, that Ontario does not change its statute and on the reasonable and fairly realistic assumptions on an estate of $300,000 there is a saving of $32,000 in tax; on an estate of $500 million, there is a saving of $77,000; on an estate of $1 million, there is a saving of $179,000. That illustrates the order of magnitude, assuming the federal Government does what it says and the provinces do not make any change.

The Chairman: Have you assumed some kind of mix in those $300,000, $500,000 and $1 million estates?

Mr. Scace: We have assumed it is all non-depreciable capital assets. The assumptions are quite complicated but, I think, fairly realistic given a normal estate.

Senator Cook: That is assuming no deemed realization, is it not?

Mr. Scace: We are comparing what would happen under the old system and what would happen under the new system, given certain assumptions. These assumptions result in a considerable saving in tax; the federal tax cost of dying is much reduced under the bill and the total tax cost of dying is considerably reduced.

The Chairman: Are you comparing the estate tax and the income tax at deemed realization on the gains?

Mr. Scace: That is right.

Senator Cook: We will pass that section.

The Chairman: I should think everyone would be in favour of that.

Mr. Scace: There is one interesting twist to the deemed realization on death. Clause 70(5) appears to apply only to capital properties, that is non-depreciable capital properties and depreciable capital properties. It does not appear to apply to inventory or trading assets. A common example of an inventory or trading asset would be a piece of land, the profit from the sale of which would be taxed in full. Since it is not included in clause 70(5) it does not appear to be subject to the deemed realization at death. Consequently there could be the anomaly that at death it would be argued that a particular asset is a trading asset and would have been taxed in full on sale, as opposed to the normal asset, where it would be said it is a capital asset and the receiver is entitled to capital gains treatment rather than full inclusion. Again the department is aware of this; I do not know if they will do anything about it.

The Chairman: Are you recommending that everyone seek to develop a trading asset position about the time they discover they are soon to die, or have a pretty good idea they are in the terminal stage?

Mr. Scace: I am not making any recommendation, senator; I think you can draw your own conclusions.

The Chairman: It might be good to have some trading assets though.

Mr. Scace: It would not hurt.

The Chairman: No.

Mr. Scace: As I have said, the abolition of the estate tax and the substitution of the deemed realization on death is really a political question. The reason it came about was that essentially an estate tax is an unpopular tax. The federal Government was collecting it and then in most instances remitting 75 per cent of the amount collected to the provinces.

I do not have the up-to-date figures, but if we said the net return to the federal Government was $100 million per year, we would not be too far out.

So for a relatively small amount of money, the federal Government was taking the blame for what was a very unpopular tax. The Government therefore decided to get out of the field, as it was not worth the candle. Certainly the abolition ran counter to what everybody expected.

If we look at the House of Commons report—and I do not know whether it is wise to bring it up in this forum . . .

The Chairman: Oh, yes.

Mr. Scace: The House of Commons, for instance, said that the estate tax exemption should be increased significantly. There should be no estate tax on estates less than $150,000 and, at the top rate of 50 per cent, should only bite in at $800,000.

I think everybody expected some compromise along those lines, but clearly we were not ready for the abolition.

There is a little story on the subject of abolition. Perhaps the man most surprised by it was a friend of mine, a professor at one of the Toronto law schools, who had the misfortune two or three days before June 18 of completing a definitive manuscript on estate tax. On the night of June 18 he phoned me and said, "Tell me it is not so."; and I had to tell him that unfortunately it was.

Apparently the story has a happy ending. He is a very resourceful man and is now offering a course at the law school in legal history and using the manuscript.

Addressing myself to Senator Beaubien and Senator Molson, this may be a real political issue if it ever comes out. There has been surprisingly little comment on it. If a man who is worth $100 million today should have the misfortune to die, or if his beneficiaries should be so unfortunate, his family would be looking at a federal estate tax of approximately $25 million. If he should die on January 1, that $25 million would be completely obliterated. There would be no tax whatsoever.

If he lives for a period of time into the new system, then some tax will be exigible on one-half of his post 1972 capital gains, but certainly a lot less than $25 million.

Senator Cook: Has Ontario come up in favour of abolition of succession duties?

Mr. Scace: It is hard to know what Ontario is going to do. From reading their publications and budgets over the last two or three years, most readers have interpreted them as meaning that they intended to get out of the field.

It seemed clear, when Mr. McKeough was commenting after June 18, that he was very surprised. I think that Ontario's position now is that they still want to get out of the succession duty field, but they will wait until the capital gains tax on the deemed realization at death gets fully on stream. So it is taking a bite at estates.

Certainly I think it has slowed down their timetable for getting out of the succession duty field.

The Chairman: I think we can assume that if they do, they may follow the lead of the federal authority and find another way. The federal authority has found that deemed realization is a way of producing income. I do not think that if Ontario gets out of the succession duty it means that it is a plus for the taxpayer in the sense that there will not be any tax on dying in Ontario. I think they will find something else for part of it or perhaps all of it, because they have to have money.

Mr. Scace: With Ontario it is not too much of a problem. They already have a succession duty administration. If they want to increase their rates, it is simply a matter of passing a bill. The procedures are there.

I do not think it is too much of a problem with most of the wealthy provinces. But if we take a province like Prince Edward Island, it is impossible to see them imposing a succession duty. The cost of administering it would far outweigh any tax collected. It would merely impose a social tax, and would clearly be a loss leader from a revenue point of view.

Senator Cook: Would you include Newfoundland?

Mr. Scace: I was speaking of the smallest province. I did not want to get into details. Certainly there are some provinces that cannot afford a full-blown succession duty and collection procedure. They might pay for it and undergo the cost, but it would not make any economic sense. It might make some social sense.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Scace said that in the event of death, after the system comes into effect, instead of filing an estate tax return, a special modified income tax return would be filed showing the situation in respect of a decedent's estate on the date of his death and giving the market value of all his assets. I take it that the simple process after that would be for the department to assess a gift tax?

Mr. Scace: They would assess an income tax.

Senator Connolly: Yes, they would assess an income tax. Would it be income deemed to have been realized in the year that he died?

The Chairman: Deemed realization.

Senator Connolly: Assuming that it was a very substantial increase over his normal income, would there be any alleviation?

The Chairman: You mean, could they apply the averaging?

The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel to the Committee: You have to relate that to the values at valuation date and tie it into the valuation date.

Senator Connolly: I would like Mr. Scace to summarize what he has detailed for us here. Could we direct our attention firstly to this question of a great increase in, a doubling of, the income in the year in which he died?

Mr. Scace: Let us take an example and let us make it one that fits entirely into the new system. Let us assume that in 1973 a man buys an asset for $1 million. That is his cost. He had cash, he buys the asset, and dies in 1980. That is the year of his death. That asset would then be worth $2 million. That is the fair market value.

His gain is $1 million, and his taxable capital gain is $500,000. The tax on that, if we assume a marginal rate of tax of 60 per cent, would be $300,000.

Let us assume that we continued under the old system, and the man died with property worth $2 million. If the federal estate tax on that $2 million was 25 per cent, the estate tax would be $500,000. So he is, in fact, $200,000 better off.

The Chairman: His estate is.

Mr. Scace: Yes, his estate is; his beneficiaries will be. He does not really care any more.

There is a liquidity problem on death, but there always was a liquidity problem on death. You either have to pay the taxes on the assets realized or you purchase insurance to meet the tax cost.

Senator Connolly: So that in the year 1980 there will be a tax of $300,000 to pay?

Mr. Scace: Yes, in 1980.

Senator Connolly: In other words, he has income in that year or a taxable capital in the amount of half a million dollars?

The Chairman: Plus whatever income his estate may have.

Senator Connolly: Plus whatever income he had. This is an enormous increase in income, even for a man in that category, I should think. Is there any alleviation for it under the act?

Senator Lang: He has the same problem under the Estate Tax Act now.

Senator Connolly: I realize that.

Mr. Scace: Mr. Smith and I were just conferring as you were asking the question, senator. We will try to get you an answer. I am not sure whether the general averaging provisions under Section 118, or the ability to purchase an income averaging annuity contract under Section 61 would apply under those circumstances.

Senator Connolly: You have a liquidity problem here and you have to solve it somehow. That is the normal thing; you have that under the present system, but under the new system you still have a tax of $300,000.

Senator Lang: He would have had $500,000 under the old act.

Senator Connolly: I know that, but there is an enormous increase in his income.

The Chairman: Senator Connolly, perhaps Mr. Poissant can make some comments in relation to this.

Mr. C. Albert Poissant, Tax Consultant to the Committee: I think the general averaging provisions apply. If I remember correctly, in the year of death the requirement would be 100 per cent of the previous year's averaging and not 110 per cent. It is 100 per cent in the year of death, so the general averaging provisions would apply. The general averaging provisions apply in certain instances, and one of them is that your income for the year must be at least 110 per cent of the previous year's average, but for the year of death they have removed this requirement of 110 per cent and instead it has to be 100 per cent.

The Chairman: You find that in section 118(3).

Mr. Poissant: Yes.

The Chairman: We have answered your question, Senator Connolly, as best we can.

Senator Connolly: I am very grateful.

Mr. Scace: The problem with the general averaging provision is that we have never done a calculation based on figures of this size. Certainly with more normal income figures the general averaging provision does not produce much of a tax saving. If I had to guess I would think you were only talking about a tax saving of about $20,000. I do not believe it would be a great saving.

The Chairman: The income as a result of death would be the normal income of the person who died up to the date of death, plus the capital gains realized on death. The sum total of those would really have to explode or balloon in order to produce a substantial excess of income for that year in order for the general averaging provisions to apply. In how many estates is that likely to occur? Whenever it does occur it is quite important.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, we are not aware of what the provinces are going to do, so that really we are looking at only half of the equation.

Senator Molson: From that point of view anyway.

The Chairman: So far as the provinces are concerned, all we can do is what we did before, and that is state in our report that we seem to be starting at the wrong end and that really some agreement should be reached with the provinces before the legislation can proceed.

Senator Beaubien: The provinces have been getting 75 per cent, have they not, of all of the death duties collected? The provinces that have no estate tax or gift tax will be wanting to get something back.

The Chairman: The revenue that might come from the imposition of succession duties, less the cost of administration, might be reasonably negligible. Those provinces have an economic problem, and I doubt if they are going to solve it by taxation.

Senator Connolly: They probably have to solve it by transferring payments from the federal treasury.

The Chairman: I would think that would be so. However, it is not part of our job at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: The deemed realization on capital gains could offset succession duties. You are dealing with the poorer provinces and they may never reach the replacement and, in any event, if they do it will take some years. That is why the provinces have already indicated to the federal Government that they feel there should be a postponement of the cancellation of succession duties until the deemed realization on capital gains is in full flight. No one seems to be paying any attention to the payments.

The Chairman: They may get transfer payments in relation to the amount of the deemed realization and the tax thereon. However, that is not a problem we can speculate on at this time. We may decide that we should say something about it as being one of the questions still hovering around, which will be bothersome and for which some solution should be found.

Senator Connolly: Presumably, that kind of thing is going to be dealt with at the federal-provincial meeting or at the ministers of finance meeting.

The Chairman: I am glad you added the word "presumably," because I do not know and I would not want to speculate on what conclusions might be reached.

Senator Cook: If they are worried about the revenue, perhaps it could be done by bringing down the scale year by year. It would only take ten years, if the scale was reduced by 10 per cent a year.

The Chairman: Can we get down to our more immediate problems? Mr. Scace, what is the next area?

Mr. Scace: The next area is gift tax and gifts. Rule 14 of the Income Tax Application Rules apparently abolishes gift tax. It states that Part IV of the former Income Tax Act is continued in force but does not apply in respect of gifts made after 1971. Reading that alone it is clear that gift taxes will apparently be abolished.

Senator Connolly: What page are you reading from?

Mr. Scace: Transitional Rule 14 at page 412. Part IV states that the former act is continued in force but does not apply in respect of gifts made after 1971.

I have used the word "apparently" because if you turn to page 384 and particularly Section 245(2), that particular section was in the old act as section 137(2) and in addition it had subparagraph (c) which has been deleted.

Senator Connolly: I missed your reference.

Mr. Scace: Page 384, Senator Connolly, Section 245(2). That section used to be Section 137(2) of the existing act, and the only change that has been made is the deletion of subparagraph (c). It is a purely inadvertent technical drafting error by deleting subparagraph (c). If you leave section 245(2) in the way it is now and you make a gift, the amount of the gift must be brought into the income of the beneficiary.

If you care to read it through, it seems reasonably clear that that result would apply. It is not intended. The Department of Finance is aware of the problem and we understand they are going to clear it up. It is essential that that matter be rectified before passage.

The abolition of gift tax in many ways is more significant than the abolition of estate tax. If a man is worth $10 million on January 1, there will be no estate tax, no deemed realization on death, but there will be succession duty when he dies. On the other hand, if there is no gift tax, he can give the whole of his estate away to his intended beneficiaries and, provided that he survives the recapture period, in the various provincial succession duty statutes—in Ontario and Quebec it is five years—all death duties can be entirely avoided.

This raises another interesting matter with respect to the federal Government and the provinces. Clearly, if the provinces are going to stay in the succession duty field in some fashion, they must have a gift tax, in order to preserve the integrity of the succession duty. Otherwise, one could just walk through the succession duty, except in those circumstances where the donor does not survive the recapture period.

It seems to me that at least in the case of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia, the three succession duty provinces, it would not be an unwise bet that they will bring in a gift tax before January 1, 1972.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: And subsequently they could make it retroactive.

The Chairman: You mean, abolish the five-year period?

Senator Molson: Do not give them ideas!

Mr. Scace: If they abolished the five-year recapture period, that would open it up even further. Without the five-year recapture period, if you did not have it when you die there would be no succession duty, but the recapture period would be a sort of going back to net it in. That would not do it; that would be worse.

The Chairman: Then they should make it ten years?

Mr. Scace: Ten years, or indefinite.

Senator Burchill: If the provinces retained the succession duty and the federal gift tax is done away with, how will that affect it? Then you would be able to give your whole estate away, according to that.

Senator Beaubien: You have to live five years, at least.

The Chairman: The amount might be included in your estate if you did not survive the period that they have provided for. In Ontario, it is five years. But if they made that ten years, they would surely catch more people.

Mr. Scace: One could make the period the whole lifetime.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Burchill: Some provinces have their own succession duties. For instance, New Brunswick has.

Mr. Scace: It has none.

Senator Heath: May I ask Mr. Scace about the British Columbia legislation on this? Is it not possible that the British Columbia government have made their gift tax retroactive just recently? I think they tried to do this, if it was for a charitable institution, just to get a bite out of a very large estate that was left, as in the case of a donor to a medical school.

Mr. Scace: It is about a year since I went through the British Columbia succession duty act completely, but I think it was a year or a year and a half ago that they did change their law on charitable bequests on death. It had to be a charity within the province, I think. They restricted the ambit of charitable gifts. Whether that was done deliberately against one particular estate I do not know but certainly there was legislation in that area.

Senator Heath: Was it retroactive?

Mr. Scace: It might have been made retroactive. It could very well have been. I know that was one particular amendment generally that they did bring in.

Senator Heath: I see why our chairman is concerned that we should look at the provincial actions before we move.

Mr. Scace: The provinces are a very important factor in this issue. There is no question about that. It makes planning very difficult. All you can do is assume that the federal Government will go through with it, make your plans on that basis, but keeping a very close eye on the provinces. If, as you suggest, and as Hon. Mr. Phillips suggested, they make their legislation retroactive, you could end up having done something on January 1 and find that, with retroactive provincial legislation, it was either of no effect or it resulted in a position that was completely undesirable from your point of view. I can foresee somebody with a large estate giving a substantial part of it to his children, with the thought that he would avoid all death duties and gift taxes; but if they made it retroactive so that there was a substantial tax bill involved, he never would have done that. I would hope that if they make it retroactive they will at least give you the opportunity of being able to unwind it, but that may be somewhat hopeful.

Continuing on, if gift tax is abolished, there will be a deemed realization at fair market value of all gifts. That is in section 69(1)(b) (ii). In that case, there is no distinction between depreciable property and non-depreciable capital property.

In the case of both the deemed realization on the making of a gift and the deemed realization on death, there is an exemption if the property is transferred to a spouse. The transfer may be either absolute to the spouse or to a qualifying trust for the spouse. In order to qualify, the spouse must be entitled to receive all of the income of the trust that arises before his or her death. No person except the spouse can obtain any of the capital of the trust prior to the spouse's death. In those cases, on death there is a tax-free exemption on the transfer. In the case of non-depreciable capital property, the property goes over at its adjusted cost base. In the case of depreciable capital property, the transfer is at undepreciated capital cost.

On that case, I think we went through a number of examples on the last occasion, as to how it would operate. The reference there is section 70(6) in the case of death and section 73 in the case of gift.

Where you have a gift to a qualifying trust, on the death of the spouse there is a deemed disposition at fair market value. This is very much like the present exemption under section 71(b) of the Estate Tax Act, where you get an exemption going in but on the spouse's death there is a realization at fair market value.

The Chairman: Who pays the tax on that deemed realization at the spouse's death?

Mr. Scace: I think it is the spouse's estate.

The Chairman: I would think so, because otherwise it would make a mess of the original estate, would it not?

Mr. Scace: We are really into the same old problem we had with the Estate Tax Act, where very complicated exoneration clauses were required in the will. The same will continue under the new bill.

The next topic is the attribution rules. We have had the attribution rules on the statutes for many years. These you will find in sections 20, 21 and 22 of the present act.

Senator Isnor: Before you go on with that, would you briefly give us the situation in respect to gift taxes at the present time?

Mr. Scace: Yes, sir. The gift tax at the present time is found in Part IV of the Income Tax Act. If you make a gift, unless you fall within certain exemptions, there will be a tax payable. In addition, it is a cumulative calculation so that if you make a $10,000 gift, for example, in year one you pay tax on that, and if you make another $10,000 gift in year two the tax is computed on the $20,000 less the tax on the $10,000 for the prior year. So you are always moving up the rate schedule. The most important exemptions under the present gift tax provisions are that there is an exemption on the transfer to a spouse, either absolutely or by means of a qualifying trust; there is a $2,000 exemption in the case of a gift to an individual or specific kind of trust for an individual; and, in addition, there is a $10,000 gift of an interest in real property where that property is a farm and it is given to a child for farming. Essentially, those are the main aspects of the present gift tax.

The Chairman: Senator Isnor, the effect is that if you are accumulative in your gifting, for instance $5,000 this year, $10,000 next year and $20,000 the year after, then they accumulate them to determine the rate in each year. For example, if you make a gift of $5,000 in the first year the rate is 10 per cent, I believe. If you make a gift of $10,000 the following year, where the rate would normally be, say, 12 per cent, the rate is determined on the basis of adding the $5,000 and $10,000 together, so that you would look at what the rate would be on $15,000, and that is what you would pay on the $10,000 on the next year.

Senator Isnor: How many gifts of $2,000 each can you give at the present time?

Mr. Scace: On the exemption of $2,000 you can make any number of gifts. You could make a $2,000 gift to everybody in this room.

Senator Beaubien: Hear, hear.

Mr. Scace: I would recommend that, senator.

You cannot give two $2,000 gifts to the same person in one year and get the deduction. You would end up by paying tax on $2,000.

Senator Isnor: But there is no limit to the number of $2,000 gifts you can make in a year.

Mr. Scace: That is right.

The Chairman: Keep that in mind, senator.

Mr. Scace: We were just dealing with the attribution rules. Under the present act, if you transfer property to your spouse or to a person under the age of 19 the income on the transferred property is attributed back to the transferor. The income belongs to the transferee, but for the tax purposes the transferor must include that income in his income and pay tax at his rate. That is the present situation. Those rates, looking at straight income, are included in the bill.

In addition, however, there are certain complications which are necessary because of the capital gains tax. The first complication is in relation to a transfer to a spouse and is found in section 74(2). Thereby, if a person transfers property to a spouse after 1971, then any capital gains on the transferred property will be attributed back to the transferor. I stress that it is after 1971. If you transfer property today, although the normal income would be attributed back, capital gains will not be attributed back. They only start picking up the capital gains on transfers after 1971.

The Chairman: You had better start gifting right away, if you want to get the benefit of that.

Mr. Scace: Secondly, for some unknown reason there is no capital gains attribution where a gift is made to a person under the age of 19. All you will get is the normal income attribution. I don't know why that was left out. Perhaps it was left out by mistake, or one possibility is that because tax might be payable on the transfer, whether it was a sale or deemed realization, they don't have to attribute back capital gains on the transferred property. I just do not know. In any event, it is not dissimilar to the situation where the transfer is to a spouse.

The Chairman: Well, it is not a specific exclusion, is it? It is just that they do not cover it.

Mr. Scace: They do not cover it, that is right.

Senator Hays: Suppose a person makes a down payment on a house for a one-year old child. The house belongs to the child. It is amortized over 25 years. It can be rentable and paid out in the 25th year. How is this earning handled in so far as the child is concerned?

The Chairman: You mean the rental income?

Senator Hays: Yes.

The Chairman: It is the father's.

Senator Connolly: It is the donor's.

Senator Beaubien: If the child is not related to the donor...

Mr. Scace: It does not matter whether the child is related or not. So long as the person is under 19 years of age no relationship is required.

In the circumstances you indicate, Senator Hays, where there is an absolute transfer to the child there will be attribution. What you would undoubtedly do in that case is transfer to a trust so that if you ever wanted to sell the property you would not have the problem of the child not being able to give title on a conveyance. So you would put it into a trust and there would be attribution again. There are methods of avoiding attribution by using both a trust and a corporation, but that gets somewhat complicated.

Senator Hays: So this has not changed.

Mr. Scace: No, sir.

The Chairman: Senator, I thought you were going to suggest a gift of $2,000 each year from age 1 to age 21.

Senator Benidickson: That would be quite normal.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Hays: But the earnings would not build up capital for the child.

The Chairman: The earnings would be the earnings of the donor.

Senator Cook: They would be taxable.

The Chairman: Yes. They would be taxable as the earnings of the donor, although they could go into the account of the donee.

Senator Hays: Well, does inflation change the original capital cost? Would the capital gain also be the responsibility of the donor? If so, suppose the donor dies?

Mr. Scace: No, sir. Under the present statute there is no capital gains tax so there is no problem. As I have just said, with transfers to infants or to persons under the age of 19 there is no attribution of the capital gain. There is only the ordinary income, and we don't know why that is so.

Senator Connolly: But there is attribution for gifts, even the exempted gifts, for people over 19.

Mr. Scace: If the person is over 19 there will be no attribution at all.

Senator Connolly: Of capital gain?

Mr. Scace: Of ordinary income or capital gain. It is only when a person is under 19 that there is attribution. So if you gave it to your one-year old child there would be attribution until the child reached the age of 19, and then the attribution would cease.

Senator Connolly: Just to be clear, Mr. Scace, under the new system, if a gift is made to a child, a son or daughter, who is over the age of 19, the income earned on that gift is not attributable to the donor.

Mr. Scace: You are referring just to a child over 19?

Senator Connolly: Yes.

Mr. Scace: That is right. Under the present act and under the new act there is no attribution over 19.

Senator Connolly: But when the gift is to a spouse there is attribution of income?

Mr. Scace: Right, so long as they remain husband and wife.

Senator Connolly: So if a husband makes a gift to his wife, the income earned on that gift is attributable to the donor and is included in his income indefinitely.

The Chairman: So long as the asset remains in existence.

Senator Connolly: Now, under the new rules, what is the situation?

Mr. Scace: Under the new rules what you have just said remains, plus if a capital gain is made on the property it is attributable to the donor as well.

The Chairman: That is in relation to the spouse?

Mr. Scace: That is right. You are now allowed to split income. You can split assets but not income.

Senator Hays: But there is an exemption of $1,000.

Senator Connolly: You get a lot of people asking about these things, and I suppose there is a heavier onus on a donor under the new system because the donor increases his income by the capital.

The Chairman: By the attribution of the capital gain.

Senator Hays: If you go back to the same example I gave and if you give the child $2,000, and the parent is the custodian and he decides in his wisdom to put a down payment on some real property that he thinks is a good investment, then the earnings of this real property is computed in the donor.

The Chairman: But if the donor sold that property and made a capital gain, the capital gain would not be included.

Senator Hays: If he was under 19.

Mr. Scace: That is the point. They have not attributed capital gains under 19. One thing they also have not done is to allow the attribution of capital losses in the spouse situation, and I think all you can do is query that.

Turning now to trusts, the law on trusts has been made extremely complicated but perhaps not complicated enough. As I indicated those people working daily in the trust field feel there are a number of matters not covered that should be covered. This becomes extremely complicated and I do not know if you would just like me to pick out the problem areas.

The Chairman: Let us have the general incidence and then the problem areas.

Mr. Scace: All right. The taxation on trusts will remain much the way it is now in that income will come into the trust and be taxed, although if it is payable to a beneficiary there is a deduction to the trust. The same will be true for capital gains. The imposition of the capital gains tax does not complicate that aspect too much. However, one very serious problem relates to what they call the taxation of accumulating income on an inter vivos trust. Where you have accumulating income in an inter vivos trust, that income will be taxed at the greater of the personal rates of tax or at 50.7 per cent.

Senator Connolly: The personal rates of tax of the beneficiary?

Mr. Scace: Of the personal rates schedule. The trust is considered to be an individual and the personal rates apply to the trust. So the minimum rate of tax is 50.7 per cent and it could go up to 61.1 per cent which is the maximum personal tax rate.

This is a clear penalty on many existing inter vivos trusts. They had to try to alleviate the penalty in some fashion, and they state that it will not apply to a trust established before June 18, 1971, if it was resident in Canada on June 18, 1971 and without interruption from there on, but did not carry on in active business and, most important, has not received any property by way of gift since June 18, 1971. This may be a trap for many people because trusts were established under the Gift Tax Legislation so that you could take advantage of the $2,000 exemption and in a gift to an individual where the individual was a minor and you established a qualifying trust under section 112(3) of the Income Tax Act. Many of those trusts provide for accumulating the income with vesting before age 40. They will be exempted so long as no contribution is made to them after June 18, 1971, so people should have stopped making contributions and should not make any more contributions this year or in the future.

Senator Benidickson: But was that not subject in many jurisdictions to the donor living for a certain period of time after the gift to the trust?

Mr. Scace: To avoid estate tax and succession duties, that is right, sir. But this is looking at the income tax consequences of it.

The Chairman: But you said in most trusts to which you referred that to avoid this you should not make more contributions to the trust this year, next year or any succeeding year. But supposing in the period from 1871 down to this year there have been contributions?

Mr. Scace: That is no problem, because contributions will remain as trust assets. The accumulating income on those contributions or the trust corpus will continue to be income of the trust and will be taxable at normal personal rates. It will not be subject to this penalty. Now it is conceivable that the normal rates will get up as high as the personal tax, but then again they may not. But there is this trap.

Senator Lang: If you make a contribution after June 18, do you destroy the whole trust?

Mr. Scace: That is right. The accumulating income of the trust will then, starting on January 1, 1971, be subject to this minimum 50.7 per cent tax.

Senator Benidickson: So if instead of giving $2,000, or whatever the non-taxable gift may have been over the year, to a minor under the age of 19, you had been giving it to a trust, an individual trust for each child, do you say that from June 18, 1971, there is a danger in continuing to make a similar gift to that trust—that you should give the cash to the individual?

Mr. Scace: That is right. The trust income is accumulating. If the trust income is distributed annually, there is no problem.

Senator Benidickson: That is a real trap. I have not read very much about it in the financial papers.

Mr. Scace: If you read the "raspberry books", the Government's summary, you will find a mention of it, but it is a trap.

The Chairman: Let us move on.

Mr. Scace: There are a number of new definitions in the trust area. You should be receiving many briefs on this. There is a new concept of a "preferred beneficiary". A preferred beneficiary is someone who is closely related to the settlor, the spouse of the settlor, or a grandchild of the settlor. The importance of the preferred beneficiary is that an election may be filed whereby the accumulated income of the trust can be taxed to the beneficiary. You will find it in section 104, subsections 14 and 15. The purpose of this is to avoid high tax rates on accumulating income while in the trust. Unfortunately, the law concerning this election is very imprecise. The total amount upon which an election can be made is defined at great length and, perhaps, inadequately in section 104(15). There are a great many problems involved in this particular area. You should be receiving a special submission, if not from the Canadian Bar Association, then from a certain group of lawyers on that particular topic. It is a problem area.

In relation to the capital gains and trusts, the most important aspect is the 21-year deemed realization on non-depreciable capital assets in a trust. This is a corollary or an adjunct to the deemed realization on death of a spouse where you have a qualifying trust. If the assets are transferred to a qualifying trust for a spouse, upon her death there is a deemed realization at fair market value. If there is a succeeding life interest, or any other trust, there will be a deemed realization every 21 years of the non-depreciable capital assets. I suppose that this is somewhat similar to the five-year re-valuation rule for shares of widely-held Canadian companies which you found in the White Paper; although, it is certainly for a longer period of time. It may not be an unfair provision.

Senator Connolly: And it is a rule against perpetuities.

Mr. Scace: The rule against perpetuities could have an effect here, yes.

The Chairman: What section is that?

Mr. Scace: Section 104, subsections 4 and 5.

Senator Connolly: The only difference between this and the rule against perpetuities is that there is a revaluation.

The Chairman: Let us not get into a discussion on the rule against perpetuities.

Mr. Scace: For the 21-year deemed realization for non-depreciable capital properties at fair market value, and for depreciable capital properties, the calculation is the mid-way point rule, as it is at death. It is the same thing. I think you may have problems of liquidity when this deemed realization occurs. You will also have difficulties where established trusts are already in existence and will extend beyond the period of 21 years after the implementation date. I think that all you can do there is perhaps to wind the trust up, or make an application under the various provincial statutes to vary the trust in order to change the provisions so that this 21-year rule cannot apply.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would assume the 21-year rule creates problems for the younger lawyers rather than the older lawyers.

Mr. Scace: I guess that is correct, sir.

The Chairman: Only to the extent that the younger lawyers would have a longer space of time in which to look at the problem.

Mr. Scace: And to look at it again.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes, and to attempt to solve it.

The Chairman: I expect the older ones would still have to look at these problems.

Mr. Scace: There are also very complicated rules in relation to the beneficiary of the trust. There are two new terms brought into the bill—one is income beneficiary, the other capital beneficiary. There are very detailed provisions for determining the costs of the various interests. In the case of capital beneficiary, you have to determine the capital gain if the capital interest is sold.

However, those are the most serious problem areas in relation to trusts. The law concerning deceased persons is more or less the same as it was under the current act with one interesting addition, allowable capital losses—that is, one-half of a capital loss—may be deducted in full against any other income in the year of death. Therefore, if there are substantial capital losses in the year of death on the deemed realization they can be adjusted against any other income, as provided in section 71. In addition, net capital losses may be deducted against any other income in the year of death and the immediately preceding year, as provided in section 111(2).

The Chairman: That means that capital losses which it was not possible to take care of otherwise cannot be accumulated.

Mr. Scace: If there were enormous capital loss, or a net capital loss position, it is conceivable that the income in the year of death or the immediately preceding year would not be sufficient. However, it is hard to know; we have not seen this in practice. I think that in most circumstances the net capital loss position would probably be eradicated at death. It may not, but I would hope that if an inequity does result and it appears that this is not the case, the application of these rules will be liberalized, and perhaps extended for some years.

The Chairman: What are you thinking of when you say "liberalized"?

Mr. Scace: In particular that the net capital losses could be deducted against other income, not only in the year of death and the immediately preceding year, but possibly in the preceding five years. There could be a provision to allow the total to be adjusted against other income.

Senator Connolly: Before they finally put your file away.

Mr. Scace: That is right. Mr. Smith last Wednesday discussed registered retirement savings plan.

If you have any particular interest in tax havens I think generally it can be said that they will not be as useful under the new system. If the tax cost of dying is reduced there will not be as much advantage in moving to a tax haven. Section 48, which is the departure tax imposes a penalty for moving to a tax haven. Therefore, depending on the amount of accrued gains, you may decide not to move. However, right now may be a very propitious time to move, or early in the new system, before capital gains have started to accrue.

In relation to insurance, this is all in the estates area, as we mentioned last week, insurance is not subject to capital gains tax. Therefore it is now probably a more interesting investment vehicle. However, if the tax cost of dying is reduced there is probably less need for insurance to cover Senator Connolly's problem of liquidity when the tax is due on death. So these aspects apply both ways.

There is also a problem in relation to key-man insurance. Under the present statute, if a corporation has taken out key-man insurance it goes into capital and can be withdrawn from the corporation tax-free, provided that the undistributed income in the company has been first taken out. However, under the new bill it appears that the only way to take out the proceeds of key-man insurance is by way of taxable dividend. Therefore this is a disadvantage under the new bill, as opposed to the old act. The department is aware of it; we do not know whether they plan to do anything about it.

The Chairman: By "taxable dividend", do you mean that the whole amount would be income?

Mr. Scace: Income to the shareholder, as opposed to its now being a tax-free receipt.

The Chairman: Income to the person receiving, not to the company?

Mr. Scace: No, not to the company. It merely relates to getting the money out of the company.

Estate freezing will continue to exist under the new law. However, it will be freezing against provincial succession duty, if any, plus the tax on capital gains accrued on the assets rather than against federal estate tax. It will be an attempt to avoid the capital appreciation and deemed realization on death. Freezing will be less attractive under the new bill, since the very act of freezing will trigger the capital gains tax to the extent there is any appreciation. The assets must be transferred at fair market value and if that value exceeds the cost there will be a capital gain tax, whereas now they can be transferred without fear of capital gains tax.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Scace, this may not be relevant for the committee with respect to this bill as such, but very relevant in relation to its overall duties.

Are you aware of any studies with respect to the issue of the very point you have discussed—that is the consequences of individuals or corporations building up cash positions, rather than buying equity or securities in Canadian companies and thereby stopping investment by Canadians in Canada, which would bring about the suffocation of our economy or an invitation to outside capital?

You are touching on a very crucial point. When people invest in securities at large in Canada, they are facing deemed realization on death. If they put investment in money as such, there is simply no further increase; money is money, whatever its purchasing power.

The Chairman: Or if they put it in bonds.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes; money being money and bonds being equivalent to money. That is one thing.

By buying into the equity of the company this problem is invited, thereby stifling the economy and inviting foreign capital.

I am only putting the question to have it on the record to indicate the seriousness of the point, and as an indication that this committee may well wish to consider that whole question in relation to certain bills, when it becomes the subject of legitimate study.

Senator Beaubien: Putting it into equities would only attract cash, if it were capital gain.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Exactly.

Senator Beaubien: So the money is not taxed if there is no capital gain.

The Chairman: If it is kept in money it is guarded against the capital gains problem. If it is in bonds it is substantially guarded against the capital gains problem. If it is put into equities the same guard is not up.

Senator Beaubien: Maybe I am a little stupid, but supposing I have half a million dollars and keep it in cash, there is no capital gain. If I put the half-million dollars in stock and it increase to $600,000, there is a capital gain on $100,000. However, I am still better off than if I had the cash. The $500,000 is worth $600,000; sure, there is capital gains tax on $100,000, but if I keep it in cash, when I die it is worth half a million.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: But you are taking the risk on your half a million dollars, and you do not know if you will have the capital gain. You relate your ultimate tax consequences on death; whereas, if you put it in equity stocks, you do not know where you are going. You take a risk, and you are deliberately, through deemed realization, bringing about a situation where you are cooling off equity investment by Canadians.

The Chairman: Senator Beaubien, all that you are illustrating is that, depending upon the amounts available, you may have a substantial problem or you may have a problem that you relate to keeping the cash even after paying taxes, so that it would still leave you a little more money.

I think Senator Phillips was talking about an investment company which had accumulated cash and put it into equities or gains in volume in the course of ordinary operation. With regard to the $500,000 that you are talking about and limiting the capital gains to $100,000, if you put it into securities, shares, and have a capital gain on death of $100,000, then obviously, even by paying tax on the capital gain, you would have more money than if you just kept the cash.

Senator Cook: Is not the only answer to Senator Phillips' problem that of no capital gains?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Either no capital gains or no capital gains other than on a true realization by disposition at arm's length, other than relationship to trusts, where legitimately the question of perpetuity of rule should apply within reason.

In our Senate report on the White Paper we took the fundamental position that there should be no tax other than on actual realization. We succeeded up to a point. We are now talking about deemed realization.

Senator Beaubien: Deemed on death.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes. We succeeded up to a point. I am making the point before this very important committee that on this very crucial issue we are inviting a situation in Canada where we are deliberately discouraging equity investment and at the same time are inviting foreign capital to penetrate further.

Senator Cook: Does not that situation apply to any country that has capital gains?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I think I would prefer not to go into that today. It is important enough to record the point.

Mr. Stephen C. Smith, Partner in the Law Firm of McCarthy & McCarthy: What Senator Cook is saying, I think, is that if at the present time you make a capital gain in an equity investment you pay zero tax. If you receive interest income you pay tax at full personal rates.

The tax bill changes that. Instead of being zero tax, your capital gain is at half tax. The incentive has gone from being the whole of the tax to being only half of the tax.

Senator Hays: If interest rates are high, you more or less have to put it into a 9 per cent bond, because you will be paying 46 per cent profit . . .

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Or sit on the bank deposit.

Mr. Scace: That more or less closes the general area of estates. There are many problems facing the legal community, but I think that many of them are soluble.

The Chairman: The second item is international taxation. Mr. Stephen Smith will develop that.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Chairman, in the subject of international taxation, there are really two quite separate topics. On the one hand you have taxation of Canadian residents on their incomes derived from foreign sources, and on the other hand you have taxation by Canada of people who do not reside here. Those are two different topics.

I must apologize if my outline is a little sketchy. I will try to avoid becoming mired in some of the drafting complexities, and will give you what I think is the general effect of it, rather than becoming too involved in the detailed provisions.

The best place to start is probably the Government's summary—this red book—which accomplished the summarizing of it in three pages. It took CCH 56 pages to deal with it in their detailed analysis; so honourable senators will see the difference between a summary treatment and a detailed one.

In broad outline, the main features of the system remain the same, although some details have been changed. Canadian residents will still be taxed on their world incomes. There is no change in that as a basic principle. Non-residents will still be taxed on their income from business and employment in Canada, and Canada will continue to impose a withholding tax on various kinds of payments to non-residents, the most notable of which are dividends, interest, royalties, and payments of that sort.

The red book summarizes the main changes. As you know, under the present act you have a credit—I am now talking about the foreign income of Canadian residents—for taxes that you pay to a foreign country when you receive income from that country in Canada. There have been some modifications to that credit which improve it for Canadian residents. Firstly, foreign taxes that are paid on business income, which are in excess of the available credit in any year, because of disparities in the rates between countries, will be available to be carried forward for up to five years, and deducted later from business income from that country. That is a change in the direction improved equity for the Canadian taxpayer.

The second main change is that after 1975 the foreign tax credit on investment income of individuals will be limited to 15 per cent. If any country should impose a greater withholding tax—that is, on a payment out of their country to a resident in Canada—that excess will be treated as a deductible expense to the Canadian investor, which is not such generous treatment as giving him the full credit.

The third major change is that under the present foreign tax credit, the credit is for taxes paid to a foreign sovereign country. For example, in the case of the United States it is for taxes paid to the US federal Government. No credit is given for state taxes. If you pay an income tax to New York State, the present credit does not pick that up.

The new legislation gives credit for such taxes. It will be recognized either as a deductible expense or as income tax subject to the credit, depending on their treatment in the foreign country.

For example, the United States allows state taxes as a deductible expense to its residents and such taxes will get the same treatment here.

Those are the main changes in the foreign tax credit. I will come back to them later.

The next major area for Canadian residents involves a concept which the summary deals with under the heading "Foreign Affiliate".

As honourable senators probably know, under section 28 of our present act, Canadian residents have for many years been able to get a deduction for dividends received from a foreign company, when they own more than 25 per cent of the voting shares. That would enable someone in Canada to set up a company abroad and earn either investment income or active business income abroad, perhaps pay no tax on it abroad in the foreign subsidiary and bring it home, claim a deduction for the full amount of the dividend and pay no tax. The Government obviously feels that that is unfair. It would enable someone who happened to be able to do that to pay no tax whereas another Canadian resident who earned the same type of income in Canada would be subject to the full rates of tax. The way the Government got at that in the bill was to introduce the concept of a foreign affiliate. A foreign affiliate's income, to the extent that it is investment income, is going to be attributed to the Canadian shareholders and be taxed to them. There are other changes with respect to active business income.

A foreign affiliate will be defined as a company that is controlled by a Canadian taxpayer either by himself or together with a related group of people, or one where a Canadian taxpayer owns 25 per cent of the voting shares or 50 per cent of any particular class of shares; also, where a Canadian taxpayer owns 10 per cent of the voting shares, he may elect to have it treated as his foreign affiliate.

Senator Molson: Would you repeat that, please?

Mr. Smith: If a Canadian taxpayer owns 10 per cent of the voting interest he may, if he wishes, elect to have it treated as his foreign affiliate; it is not automatic.

Senator Molson: That is a change from the 25 per cent.

Mr. Smith: Yes. There are several changes.

Senator Molson: That is a decided change.

Mr. Smith: Yes, that is right. Under the new legislation dividends received by a Canadian corporation from a foreign affiliate will be exempt from tax if they are paid out of profits earned before 1976. The point of that is to give Canada a chance to renegotiate its foreign tax treaties; that is the purpose for the five-year period of exemption.

Senator Gélinas: Would you mind repeating that, please?

Mr. Smith: Any dividends received before 1976 will be exempt from tax provided that they are paid out of profits of the foreign affiliate which it earned prior to 1976. That is a transitional period in order to give the new tax treaty system a chance to be built up.

After the transitional period, dividends will also be exempt if they come out of a country with which Canada has a tax treaty. Where they do not come out of a tax treaty country, then they will be exempt from taxation to the extent of the level of tax they bore abroad.

Another matter is the problem of tax sharing.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question to Mr. Smith?

Do you not find that treatment rather strange under two headings? For example, compare it with a dividend income received by a Canadian corporation from another Canadian corporation. If the recipient corporation is a private corporation it is subject to a 33½ per cent payment immediately as against the receipt of income from an affiliate where you have five years without being subject to any tax whatsoever before you are obliged to distribute.

Mr. Smith: Yes. I will come back to that.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: And do we not find a further extraordinary situation with respect to the taxable income under heading 2—that is, when a Canadian company in due course gets a dividend from an affiliate in a treaty country the recipient company is free of tax whereas in Canada the recipient company of a dividend from another Canadian company is subject to an automatic tax of 33½ per cent provided it is a private company? Am I right in my comparison, and do you not find it strange?

Mr. Smith: There are a number of extraordinary results and they come, I think, from the direction in which the Government started. I will work through the details in a moment.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I apologize; I may have interrupted.

Mr. Smith: There is also a transitional period designed to give relief where a Canadian investor has gone into a developing country on the basis of getting tax concessions from that foreign country; that foreign country, in other words, is not levying any tax. The transitional rule which will be enacted by regulation at a later date will enable dividends from such a project to be brought back tax-free as they would now, provided that they are in respect of projects which one fully committed before the end of 1975.

Senator Connolly: We had this yesterday, Mr. Chairman, from the Chamber of Commerce delegation, as I recall.

Mr. Smith: I will just run through the other changes in outline fashion and I will come back to them.

Foreign business corporations, as you know, are being phased out over five years. The general rate of withholding tax is going to remain at 15 per cent until the end of 1975 and then it will increase to 25 per cent unless it is reduced by treaty. The existing exemptions from withholding tax on Government bonds are continued where they were issued before 1976, and also the exemption on interest payable to certain foreign charitable organizations that register will continue, generally speaking.

The idea that a degree of Canadian ownership will reduce non-resident withholding tax is preserved, and it gets reduced by 5 per cent from what the withholding tax would otherwise be. In other words, if you have a withholding tax of 15 per cent it becomes 10 per cent, and if you have a withholding tax of 25 per cent because there is no treaty, it becomes 20 per cent.

Senator Connolly: What are those circumstances again? There is a 25 per cent withholding tax on dividends paid into a country with which we have no treaty?

Mr. Smith: That is correct.

Senator Connolly: And you say there is an automatic reduction by 5 per cent?

Mr. Smith: Yes, where you have a degree of Canadian ownership in the company paying the dividend. That was brought in by Mr. Gordon, the former Finance Minister, in 1963. You had to have at least a 25 per cent Canadian equity interest in the corporation. That was the time that several United States companies went public in Canada and sold 25 per cent of the stock to the Canadian public and hence had their withholding tax rate reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent.

Senator Connolly: It is reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent?

Mr. Smith: Yes. If the withholding tax, because there is no treaty, is 25 per cent it will be reduced to 20 per cent, but otherwise it will continue to be a reduction from 15 per cent to 10 per cent.

Senator Connolly: This is to increase Canadian ownership?

Mr. Smith: It increases Canadian ownership in the foreign-controlled company.

Senator Connolly: Yes, in the Canadian company paying the dividends.

Mr. Smith: That is right, the Canadian company paying the dividend. The dividend is being paid to the non-resident from the Canadian company. It is a Canadian company as well as having a Canadian ownership interest. Certain pensions will be subject to withholding tax that have not been subject up to now. There is some revision in the branch tax, to have it follow the treaty rate. There is a provision called the thin capitalization rules, to prevent a Canadian corporation which is foreign-owned from reducing its taxable income in Canada by the payment of foreign interest charges to its foreign parent. The rule there is that, to the extent that the interest is paid on debt which exceeds three times the share equity of the non-resident, the interest will be proportionately disallowed as an expense to the Canadian corporation.

The Chairman: It will be treated as a dividend.

Mr. Smith: That is right. The final change—going through it in a summary way—is that non-resident owned investment corporations will now be subject to tax at 25 per cent, starting in 1976 and the income of the NRO would include capital gains to the same extent as if the NRO were a non-resident person. That is, just certain types of capital gains. The tax on those capital gains will be refunded when dividends are paid out to the non-resident shareholder. There is also a requirement that the NRO'S must be 100 per cent owned by non-residents.

If I may go back and look at some of the details, the most difficult concept is the foreign affiliate. As I said, there is a multiple definition of a foreign affiliate. You find it in section 95(1)(b). Basically, you have three ways in which a company can be a foreign affiliate of a Canadian taxpayer. Where the Canadian taxpayer controls it directly, or through a group of people who are related to him, then the foreign company becomes his foreign affiliate.

Where he has at least a 25 per cent voting percentage, which is a defined term in section 95, or if he elects, where he has a 10 per cent voting percentage, it becomes his foreign affiliate. Similarly where the taxpayer and other non-arm'slength residents have a 50 per cent "equity percentage", which is again a defined term, the company becomes his foreign affiliate.

"Voting percentage", as it implies, merely looks at the number of votes that are available. If you control something through a chain of companies, it will look down through the chain. For example, if you own half of the subsidiary and that subsidiary owns half of another company, you follow those percentages down and finally you have got 25 per cent at the bottom.

Senator Molson: May I ask what the object of subsection 4 is there, the election of 10 per cent?

Mr. Smith: I think that is to give someone an option of having it treated as a foreign affiliate, where that turns out to be more advantageous to him.

Senator Molson: Is it possible it would not be more advantageous than his getting the dividends without tax?

Mr. Smith: It depends on the nature of the foreign affiliate's income. I will get to that. There are some places where it is difficult to pick up the foreign tax credit for the foreign withholding tax, and you might want to have it treated as a foreign affiliate for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: May I interrupt Mr. Smith, through the chair? And for the first five years, Senator Molson, exempt. As long as you distribute at the end of the five year period, it cannot be touched on.

Mr. Smith: The "equity percentage", which is defined in section 95(4), looks at the percentage you have of any particular class of shares you have in the foreign affiliate. It takes the portion you have of the class, of each class, and you take the highest percentage. The effect of it is that you may find, in a foreign affiliate where there are a number of different classes of shares and a number of different Canadian residents, holding different classes of shares in varying proportions, they may each end up with a participating percentage which is greater than 100, all told, when added up.

Many honourable senators have the Commerce Clearing House (CCH) analysis of the bill. You will find an example of that at page 225, where they worked out a complicated example and end up with that result.

The result of that is that you could find more than 100 per cent of the foreign affiliates' income had been attributed to various Canadian taxpayers, which is an extraordinary result. It can hardly be intended, unless it is intended merely as a deterrent to using foreign affiliates at all—which could hardly be the government's intention. One has to think that it is probably just a drafting error and that the section would have to be re-worded.

It should also be noted that not only can a corporation be a foreign affiliate; a foreign trust can be a foreign affiliate, too. The obvious intention of that rule is to prevent Canadian taxpayers using a foreign trust as a convenient place to put foreign investment income and avoid Canadian taxes. So such trusts are treated as a foreign affiliate corporation, and you look at the beneficiary's interest. It can either be an income interest or a capital interest. Again, you can find that, where you have a life tenant and a remainder man, they are each deemed to have 100 per cent of the foreign affiliate—which again produces an anomalous result.

Senator Connolly: You will look for an amendment, presumably?

Mr. Smith: Yes. Getting away from the definition, and looking at the result of the definition, once you have a foreign affiliate, the Canadian shareholder must include in his income his equity percentage of all the foreign corporation's passive income. That is basically income of an investment nature or income that could not be characterized as an active business. That income is included in the Canadian shareholder's income, regardless of whether or not it has been distributed. It is deemed to have been distributed to him.

There is a notch provision, or, rather, there is a deduction of $500, so that people who have small amounts of income from such companies will not be bothered with the complexities of it. When I referred to "passive income," that is a short form for "foreign accrual property income" and it is defined in section 95(1)(a). As I said, basically it is the net income from investments in property other than active businesses, and net capital gains except on property used in the active business.

There is no definition of "active business" in the bill, but there is a fair amount of jurisprudence in Canada now under the personal corporation sections as to what is an active business, so presumably that will be of some help.

Now, you get a deduction for the underlying foreign income taxes. That is given under section 113(3).

The Chairman: So there would be no benefit of having a foreign affiliate in a tax-free country.

Mr. Smith: No. That is right as it regards passive income, and it is even worse than that. To get the foreign tax credit, when you later pay out a dividend from the foreign affiliate, if the dividend is paid out in the same year as the passive income was attributed, you get the credit. If it is paid in a later year it appears that you do not. The result would be that the total taxes, both foreign and Canadian, that are paid are greater than if you had merely received that foreign investment income directly as an individual instead of through your foreign affiliate.

That is really a problem of timing, but it will be quite serious where you do not control the foreign affiliate, but it is controlled by people who are not Canadian residents and who do not care when the dividend is paid. It could prove expensive for you.

The Chairman: The foreign tax credit is only available to the Canadian shareholder in relation to the earnings of the particular year, which may be paid out, or, if they are not paid out, if they are held, it would still be his income for that year.

Mr. Smith: Right.

Senator Molson: Without tax credit.

The Chairman: Yes. He would have a tax credit. As I understand it, if you pay out in the year in which the earnings are made, you would get a tax credit.

Mr. Smith: Yes.

The Chairman: But if they are not paid out in that year, then the Canadian shareholder is taxed as though he had received the income less the tax credit.

Mr. Smith: Right.

Senator Molson: There is no tax credit.

Mr. Smith: No, it is just included in his income.

Senator Connolly: Not less the tax credit!

The Chairman: It is an off-set of the tax credit.

Senator Connolly: The tax credit is not going to be available to him until the year in which the tax is paid.

The Chairman: I am talking about the tax this foreign affiliate would pay on its earnings in that foreign jurisdiction. If it pays out those earnings in the year in which they are made the Canadian recipient would be entitled to a tax credit, but the position I am citing is that, if they are not paid out in that year, nevertheless, the percentage of earnings of that company related to the shareholding of the Canadian shareholder would be deemed to have been received by him. Now, what happens to the tax credit then that represents taxes paid by the foreign affiliate? Is the credit still available, even if the dividend is not received in that year?

Mr. Smith: No, it really is not. You have to get it in the same year in order to pick it up.

Senator Connolly: You cannot get the credit, I suppose, until you know how much the tax is.

The Chairman: But what I am pointing out is that, if the foreign affiliate has earnings in a year, it pays taxes. I assume that the earnings then that are attributed to the Canadian shareholder in that year, if no dividends are paid, would be a percentage of the net earnings after taxes in the foreign jurisdiction.

Mr. Smith: Perhaps it might help if I gave you an example. Suppose you have a foreign affiliate that earns $100 from investments. Suppose in the foreign country there is a 25 per cent tax on that investment income earned by the foreign affiliate taxed to the foreign affiliate so that you have $25 coming off. That leaves $75. You pay that $75 as a dividend to the Canadian shareholder. Suppose there is a withholding tax of 15 per cent, which would be roughly $11, which would leave the Canadian shareholder roughly $64. Now that is the cash that he has. Under the foreign affiliate rules you have again the $100 income earned by the foreign affiliate, and under section 113(3)(a) you take off the $25 tax that the foreign affiliate pays, and again you have the $75 available as a dividend. Now, section 90(2) says that you have a dividend, when paid out of that $75, which has already been included in your income so we will not tax you on that. We will give you zero tax.

The Chairman: If we stop right there, what you are saying is that, since the Canadian shareholder is taxed on the amount still in the hands of the foreign affiliate, then when it is actually paid out to him there is no tax.

Mr. Smith: Yes, that is right.

The Chairman: Are there any questions on that point?

Senator Carter: Does that mean he gets the $75 dividend instead of the $64 as in the previous example, because there is zero tax as against $11 tax?

The Chairman: No. The foreign country may have a withholding tax as well. Therefore, whatever is paid out in dividends, when it reaches the Canadian shareholder, is less by the amount of the withholding tax. If it is paid out in the year in which the earnings are made, the tax credit provision applies.

Senator Lang: Mr. Chairman, in that example if the tax on $64 in Canada was 15 per cent, or equivalent to $11, then there would be zero tax. In other words, if the Canadian tax on the $64 was $11, then there would be zero Canadian tax. Is that right?

The Chairman: In Canada, no.

Senator Molson: What about the refund of the withholding tax?

Mr. Smith: I think perhaps I misled you in the first place. The foreign income of the affiliate which is attributable to the taxpayer, the $75, is already taxed at the shareholder's marginal rate in Canada.

Senator Connolly: Whether he gets it or not, the year in which it is earned abroad he pays tax on it at his own marginal rate.

Mr. Smith: That is right.

Senator Connolly: And he gets no credit for that $25 foreign tax paid?

Mr. Smith: He gets that; it is the foreign withholding tax for which he does not get credit at that point.

Senator Connolly: He gets credit for the $25 foreign tax paid?

Mr. Smith: Yes, he does. The underlying foreign tax is in the foreign affiliate. It is the foreign affiliate's after-tax income that is being attributed to him. Say his marginal rate is 50 per cent, then he would pay half of that $75.

Senator Cook: From what you say he pays the marginal rate on the $75 whether he gets it or not, but when he does get it, he does not pay any more tax.

Mr. Smith: That is right, but neither does he get the credit for the foreign withholding tax—the $11 that I had in that example—unless that is paid in the same year. But if he has different years, he does not pick it up.

Senator Connolly: You are saying there is a trap here and there is an anomaly here.

Mr. Smith: Yes, there is a timing problem.

Senator Connolly: But the amendments should pick this up.

Mr. Smith: Yes. The trouble is that the more you try to do with these foreign affiliate rules, the more complex they become, and they are as complex as they are because they are trying to look through a chain of foreign companies and tax the money here to the same extent that they would be taxed had the money been earned here. But it is more easily said than done.

The Chairman: The way the government proceeds now in relation to these situations where you have passive income in the hands of a foreign affiliate is that they have been taxing the Canadian owner on the basis that there is an agency relationship, and that the foreign affiliate is an agent of the Canadian company, and therefore they have been attributing all the income of the foreign affiliate to the Canadian company and have been making reassessments on that basis.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: We are back to the question that when you play around with deemed-to-be-income and deemed-to-be-realization, we become involved in all kinds of complexities.

Senator Connolly: But in the case that you, Mr. Chairman, and honourable Mr. Phillips have been discussing, the Canadian taxpayer gets credit, does he not, for the foreign tax paid?

Mr. Smith: By the foreign affiliate.

The Chairman: He gets that because it is only the net that is attributed to his income. The net is whatever the income is less the tax paid in the foreign jurisdiction.

Mr. Scace: Mr. Chairman, one of the interesting points here—apart from the mechanics of how this is done—is the intention of the legislation and the intention of assessments which are currently being issued, and the whole philosophy appears to become completely contrary to the US philosophy in their DISC Program—Domestic International Sales Companies—and that bill is currently, I understand, before the US Congress. It is strange to me and to many of us—and the Chairman and honourable Mr. Phillips and I have discussed this—that Canada should be going one way when our major trading partner appears to be going the other way.

The Chairman: Under the DISC Program in the United States it was turned down a year ago by Congress, but I understand it is coming up again and the implications are that it may succeed this time. Therefore domestic companies operating outside the United States and generating income get a tax reduction on that income in their domestic returns.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I should like to remind you, Mr. Chairman, and all honourable senators that we went into this whole thing in our examination of the White Paper and we brought up the tax expert who had previously been the head, I think, of the Internal Revenue in the United States to explain the handling of this so-called offshore and permissive income and the abandonment by the United States of the originally proposed rigorous rules and the treatment presently given to which Mr. Scace refers. We went to the trouble of explaining all that in the proceedings of this committee and now it has been ignored.

Senator Cook: Is the only reason that a taxpayer would not get credit for the withholding tax in a subsequent year because it would be administratively difficult?

Mr. Smith: It is just the way the bill is drafted. It gives it to him in the same year as a part of the foreign tax. But if it is in a subsequent year, it just says the dividend is tax free but meanwhile he has paid the foreign withholding tax which is lost.

The Chairman: If you look at it broadly and if you need any simplification, surely if they need any statutory support for the present method they are following, that is that they establish what they regard as an agency relationship, and you do not like it, then you can make a contest in court, and it would appear that in a lot of the cases of passive income in a foreign affiliate, it might very well be concluded as a matter of law that this is an agency. If you look at how the operations are carried on, it may well be that in many of them the Canadian company really operates the foreign affiliate and all the management and direction and everything else comes from Canada. It might in those circumstances be regarded as an agent. Presently the department is assessing the income or the earnings of that agency as being the earnings of the Canadian company which has established this and which is giving all the management and direction to the operation. Some of them may even just have a bookkeeper or a trust company office or something like that. So they do not need this legislation in order to deal with that situation. This is what we said in our report on the White Paper. We said that there is ample provision in the present law to deal with that kind of situation.

Senator Cook: I may be somewhat slow but how does that justify not giving credit for the withholding tax paid in other years?

The Chairman: It does not justify it.

Mr. Smith: I think that is just an anomaly in the legislation which might be corrected.

Senator Connolly: May I ask a question in connection with the DISC Program? In the example the net income to the Canadian would be $64.

Mr. Smith: Unless he gets credit for the $11 by getting the dividend in the same year.

Senator Connolly: Perhaps I am under a misapprehension, but let me do it my way and then you can correct me.

Let us assume that the net income is $64 to the Canadian parent. Under this program would that $64 be reduced by $25 plus $11, and his net income reduced by $36?

The Chairman: I do not know whether you can use those figures or not. The idea is that income that comes in from the off-shore operations is subjected to a lower rate of taxes in the United States than domestic income of the same company.

Mr. Scace: Could I illustrate this?

The Chairman: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Scace: Let us take as an example a Canadian company that manufactures pencils, and it has a cost per pencil of $1, and a selling price of $2. You have a profit of $1 and, let us assume a 50 per cent tax, of 50 cents. So you have a net per pencil of 50 cents. What a number of Canadian companies have been doing is to set up an international sales company in a tax haven country. You have a Canadian parent company and an affiliate in a tax-haven country. They would still manufacture the pencil here for $1. It would be transferred to that tax-haven country, let us say, at $1.20 or whatever would be a fair market value at that level of commerce. You have a profit of 20 cents in Canada plus a 10-cent tax. The international sales company in the tax haven country would sell the pencil on the foreign market at the prevailing price in that market. It has a $1.20 tax cost, a $2 selling price, which is the same as the selling price in Canada, and an 80-cent profit. Now, under the present situation, that 80-cent profit can be paid back as a dividend tax-free. The net profit in this case to the Canadian company is 80 cents plus 10 cents, or 90 cents as opposed to having the whole operation in Canada where the net profit would be 50 cents. As the Chairman has stated, the Department of National Revenue is endeavouring to assess this, although I do not think we have had one litigated to this date.

The Chairman: They are in the process now.

Mr. Scace: Yes, there may be an agency relationship here and that may be the net result. There are two ways of looking at this. It reduces the Canadian tax, and there is more after tax brought into the Canadian company. The reduced taxes may permit the foreign affiliate company to sell at a lower rate and more competitively on the foreign market. If that is the achieved result, then this is very useful.

What Mr. Smith has been talking about is that this 80 cent income from the foreign affiliate company in the tax haven country will be distributed when earned in the tax haven country; and you will eventually get it back subject to the technicalities which you find in this type of situation. So, while we were more competitive in the foreign market under the present system, we will be less competitive under the new system.

We do not know what the United States law will be in the future. I understand it is even better than the particular situation we are talking about because you do not have to set up a non-resident company. You merely set up another U.S. company and this company handles your foreign sales. You get reduced taxes on the foreign sales. So you achieve the same, if not better, results without these complexities. To the extent that this makes a United States company more competitive on the foreign market, we are at a disadvantage either with the assessments that are being issued now, or with having to set up a foreign affiliate company.

Senator Connolly: Certainly we should draw this very clearly to the attention of the officials in the Department of Finance.

Mr. Scace: The problem is, senator, this may also be an illegitimate device. Companies established in tax haven countries have been used merely as holding companies for assets which would otherwise be situated in Canada. All they are trying to do is to reduce Canadian taxes. The difficulty is to provide something that would permit a legitimate sales organization to exist where it would be better off in a foreign market. That is a very tough thing to do.

Mr. Smith: The tax bill attempts to be neutral as to source of income, whether it is Canadian or foreign, whether earned in a tax haven or in a high tax jurisdiction. The answer of the Department of Finance would probably be that if the Government considers an export subsidy program is required it would design something that did just that, without all the side ramifications such as those involving portfolio investors.

It could be said that the present system is broad-brush and inefficient in that it provides subsidies for exporters to foreign markets, but also in other cases, where it is not desired to subsidize.

The Chairman: The answer is that the difference between those two cases should be recognized. We dealt with this in our report on the White Paper, at page 76, paragraph 7.

Senator Connolly: Would you read it.

The Chairman: Yes. It states:

Your Committee rejects in their entirety paragraphs 6.20 and 6.21 of the White Paper and concludes that the introduction of equivalent provisions to Subpart F of the United States Internal Revenue Code would be a grave error.

This was the old U.S. legislation. We are not referring to the DISC program.

... The Committee has concluded on the basis of the briefs presented to it that Subpart F has proven to be an inordinately complicated and inefficient tool in the United States, and that current legislation is being directed to substantially reduce or eliminate many of its effects.

This is the DISC program.

... The Committee recommends that rather than the enactment of new legislation to control so-called tax avoidance on passive income (which the Committee is convinced can be controlled under the present legislation by stricter administration) legislation be introduced, such as that now contemplated by the United States for Domestic International Sales corporations, ...

That is the DISC.

... in order to aid Canadian exporters to compete adequately with their counterparts in foreign countries.

The trouble is that under the method of dealing with it a bigger stick has been used, or a wider sweep is being made. I illustrated to you some of the cases they are aiming at. For instance, a Canadian company might establish a foreign affiliate, in which it invests. That affiliate might be operating in a jurisdiction where there is no tax. In that case a tax-free dividend would be received by the Canadian company from the foreign affiliate in respect of that investment income. That is termed passive income. This, undoubtedly, is the type of situation that may have spurred the proposed changes in the law. However, it does not distinguish between the deserving—shall I put it that way?—and the undeserving.

We consider this to be an error and thought that these situations could be dealt with within the limits of the present law and its actual administration, which is carried on by the department.

Mr. Smith: A distinction must be made between the two cases. Under this bill, income from the foreign affiliate which is of the general character of investment income becomes attributed automatically to the Canadian resident, whether or not it is distributed. Where it is active business income it is not attributed, but when it is paid out as dividends the foreign tax credit provisions in effect tax it to the extent that it has not borne tax abroad. It has to be raised to the level of the Canadian tax. That is the obstruction to the foreign sales subsidiary. It is that taxing it in Canada on the payment of the dividend to the extent that it has not been taxed abroad. Of course, there is not too much scope for just accumulating it abroad, because if there is no business in which to invest it it would have to be invested in portfolio investments, producing passive income which would be attributed.

The distinction is between an export subsidy arrangement and a taxing statute which ignores that and attempts to treat all Canadian resident taxpayers in the same way, regardless of the source of their income.

The Chairman: The net result of this may be that the so-called tax havens abroad, such as Nassau in the Bahamas and others where there is no income tax, which are looking for income, might very well now introduce income taxes because if the operation earns income there and pays taxes here, it will receive a credit.

The only difference is that if the tax imposed in the tax haven is lower than the Canadian rate, the credit will be only what is paid there. In those circumstances the income would be subjected to the excess, being the difference between the foreign rate and the Canadian rate.

Senator Desruisseaux: We would then be at a disadvantage with the American companies operating offshore.

The Chairman: This is your competitor in the foreign market. It certainly looks this year, according to the assessments which have been made, that some steps will be taken to increase the efficiency, operations and earning power of domestic companies operating entirely outside the United States. It is planned to assist them in their selling. The income derived from these operations will be subject to a lower rate of tax than will their domestic income. How are we to meet that competitively? One way would be to do likewise; another would be by way of an export subsidy, which is a long and involved process and may create problems in the foreign jurisdictions.

Senator Molson: Is there not also a complication with respect to GATT?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Molson: So that it enters other fields, so to speak?

Mr. Smith: Nothing need be done before the end of 1975. This transitional period, in essence, preserves the present treatment. Therefore nothing disastrous will happen in 1972 and there will be three years to see what happens to Canadian exports.

The Chairman: You know the difficulties in removing it once it is in the statute. This is the time to sound the alarm.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Scace reminds me that my remarks assume that the activities of the foreign sales company produce "active business income". Maybe there is room for debate as to whether they are in fact active business income.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would like to make one point to the senators: it is with respect to the section we handled on foreign source. We insisted that the department had authority under various sections of the Income Tax Act, which we quoted chapter and verse at page 75 of our report, to institute proceedings against offshore companies where the issue involved tax avoidance or tax minimization. We pointed out that we had heard of a number of companies who were obliged to form corporations in foreign jurisdictions because of the law of that particular country.

All these sections having been quoted, we believe that this committee has convinced at least the Department of National Revenue that it has the authority, because it has in fact instituted proceedings by way of assessment against a substantial number of Canadian companies which have offshore companies. The presumption is that the assessments would not have been issued without the support of the legal section that there was authority so to do, which is the very position that we took in our report in chapter 6 on taxing international income.

Mr. Smith: The whole field of foreign affiliates is very complex. Perhaps, by way of relief, I could turn to another topic and look at Canadian income of non-residents. There have been some minor changes in the definition of non-residents in the sense that there is an expansion of the deemed residence rule to include any corporation incorporated in Canada which becomes resident or carries on business in Canada at any time after 1971.

There is a big change in the income that is taxed to a non-resident in that certain capital gains are pulled into the tax base.

The key there is whether the taxable capital gains are in respect of what the act terms "taxable Canadian property". That is defined in section 115(1)(b). Basically it is real estate situate in Canada, capital property used in a business in Canada carried on by the non-resident, shares or interests in Canada private companies, shares in a public Canadian company if the non-resident, within a five-year period, owned 25 per cent of the shares in any class, an interest in certain Canadian partnerships, and an interest of 25 per cent in certain mutual fund trusts.

The big exception, obviously, is shares of public Canadian companies where there is less than 25 per cent interest in a class. The reason for that is one could not police it.

Obviously they have included in the tax base those kinds of property where they think they can make a capital gains tax on a non-resident stick.

I have already pointed out the change in the withholding tax rates. There are really two topics that are of greater importance than the others. One is the thin capitalization rule which I mentioned a little while ago, where the ratio of non-resident equity to debt exceeds one to three—that is, the debt cannot be more than three times the equity. The equity is the capital plus the surplus that the non-resident has an interest in.

It is designed to prevent an artificial or unwarranted reduction in the income of the Canadian subsidiary of a foreign parent. It would be easy to capitalize your Canadian subsidiary so that no income is earned in Canada by that subsidiary, merely by putting in all of the capital required by way of debt, charging a high rate of interest on it, and hence wiping out the subsidiary's profit.

The thin capitalization rules are intended to obtain for Canada a fair share of the income generated by the subsidiary.

The other topic that I wish to mention is the non-resident-owned investment corporation. In the past they have been used largely by foreign investors who wished to have some presence in Canada and yet did not wish to pay a tax penalty for having some presence here.

For example, if a European manufacturer wishes to set up a joint venture in Canada to exploit some natural resource, it requires some debt capital. He could merely buy the bonds from a Canadian company and would suffer a 15 per cent withholding tax on interest payments to him.

The non-resident-owned investment corporation concept allows him to put those bonds in a Canadian company which is taxed at 15 per cent, the same as the withholding rate, and, when the dividend is paid out, to get the interest out of the Canadian NRO and back to his country. There is no further tax, no withholding tax, at that point.

The changes affecting the non-resident-owned investment corporation are contained in section 133. We should also look at section 59 of the transitional rules.

The rate for NROs will remain at 15 per cent until 1976. There is a minor change in the qualification. It used to be that 95 per cent of the shares had to be owned by non-residents. Now it will be 100 per cent. However, that is not really of any consequence.

One change is that in future, in order to comply, the NRO must always have been an NRO. Under the new system you will not be able to take an existing Canadian company and change it into an NRO merely by selling shares to a non-resident and having that company lapse. It must be incorporated and start out business by electing as an NRO. You can create an NRO if you amalgamate a group of companies, but only if each of the amalgamated companies is an NRO.

The big change is that the NRO will have to include in its income capital gains on taxable Canadian property. Those will be taxed initially at a rate of 25 per cent, with a refund when the money is paid out later as a dividend. However, only one half of the tax is refunded and the shareholder will pay withholding tax on the balance.

The changes are significant enough to have scared off many non-residents who own NROs. In our own practice many European investors having NROs have already made plans to move them out of the country. It is not so much the rules themselves, as the fact that they fear it is the first step to taxing them in full on their capital gains.

Portfolio investors worldwide who are investing not to control or exploit natural resources but merely to get a return on their money are easily stampeded, and that stampede seems to have started.

The Chairman: It does represent a loss of revenue to Canada.

Mr. Smith: I am not sure to what extent the changes may have been motivated by a feeling in some other countries that the NRO was an avenue for tax avoidance by, say, a UK or European resident. It may be that Canada felt that it had to cut down the advantage. But it does seem to be slightly less generous treatment and possibly enough to discourage the use of NROs by that kind of portfolio investor.

That is a very rough and brief treatment of some of the highlights of the treatment of non-resident Canadians with respect to their foreign companies.

Are there any questions on that?

Senator Lang: Mr. Smith, could you compare the treatment of non-residents by Canada with, say, the United Kingdom's treatment of non-residents and the United States' treatment of non-residents?

Mr. Smith: I believe the United States has treated non-residents less generously than we have for quite some time. I am not sure what the treatment is in the United Kingdom. I do not think the NRO concept, for example, is paralleled in other high tax jurisdictions. It has been a vehicle of convenience for foreign investors where Canada was not losing anything, but it enabled the foreign investor to exploit Canada's tax treaties in a way that perhaps the country in which he is ultimately investing may not have intended. Once you had an NRO in Canada then it was a Canadian taxpayer and entitled to the benefit of our treaties. It did not hurt us but it may have been resented by some of our trading partners.

The Chairman: Foreign investment in Canada might not otherwise have come in. It did attract substantial foreign investments in Canada.

Senator Lang: Does the United Kingdom or the United States attempt to tax Canadians on capital gains made in their respective countries?

Mr. Smith: All these provisions are subject to treaties, but in the case of an NRO . . .

Senator Lang: Apart from NROs altogether, it seems to me to be a highly artificial operation to attempt to tax capital gains on a non-resident person. Is there reciprocal legislation in the United States?

Mr. Smith: Most of our treaties contain a provision that capital gains will only be taxed in the country in which the taxpayer is resident. For example, the Canada-United States tax treaty states that it is the right of the United States to tax a United States taxpayer who is earning capital gains in Canada, and, similarly, a Canadian taxpayer earning capital gains in the United States pays his tax in Canada.

Taxing a resident of the United States on his Canadian property is required in this bill, so it would require an amendment to that treaty. I cannot imagine why the United States would agree to such an amendment, but that may not be what the Government is concerned about. They may be trying to tax the non-resident who is sitting off in a tax haven some place.

The Chairman: Before we adjourn I would like to put a reference on the record. We deal with this question in our report. You will find it at page 60, paragraph 16. I will not read it because I presume that every senator is familiar with it.

The only subject matter we have not dealt with is the resource industries. I think that is something which we can postpone consideration on until we get closer to the date when there will be some submissions.

Senator Burchill: Or until we get the amendments.

The Chairman: We do not know what the amendments may be. I do not feel that the amendments in relation to the mining industry will vary the thrust of the bill to any extent. I think the aspects that the mining companies operating internationally are concerned with are the ones having to do with the earnings that they make there and how they will be treated if they bring them home. I know that is the thrust of Alcan who are coming in towards the end of October. Their main concern is the impact on their income available in Canada after the taxation bite under this bill has taken place; that is a substantial matter for them. The Massey-Ferguson Company will also be making submissions and I am satisfied that that will be the thrust of their submissions. These companies are faced with a situation where they may, in many of these foreign jurisdictions, have companies that are national, so it hardly relates to the business of deliberately setting up a business for certain tax purposes.

I would like to express our appreciation to both Mr. Scace and Mr. Smith for what they have done.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: We have sittings for next Wednesday and Thursday. On Wednesday of next week we will have the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Canadian Construction Association. On Thursday of next week we will have the National Association of Canadian Credit Unions, the Co-operative Union of Canada and the All State Insurance Company of Canada.

We may increase the number for next Wednesday because we have only two down. When we dealt with the White Paper we were able to do six and sometimes eight in a day; we ran from 9 o'clock until 5 or 5:30. I see no reason yet for sitting at 9 o'clock—but, we may!

Senator Cook: A number of them will have points that are repetitions, will they not?

The Chairman: Yes. What I find is that if you have the other people sitting here during the submissions by the first people, then, they will find that most of the points in their representations are covered in the earlier ones and, as a result, they do not take very long with their submissions.

We are preparing studies. We still have not given up hope that we will get the proposed amendments earlier than having to wait until the section-by-section consideration in the committee of the whole. If we do not receive them in good time it may imperil the coming into force date of the bill. We are not going to be stampeded into dealing with a tremendous number of things that are dumped in our laps. If we do not get them in advance the purpose of setting up this committee at this time will have been defeated. The purpose of having the committee sit at this time was to expedite the consideration, so that we could meet the effective date of the bill. I believe the committee's feeling is that it is not going to be stampeded into rushing through a bill such as this.

Senator Cook: I agree. In any event, they will make it retroactive.

The Chairman: We will now adjourn until next Wednesday morning at 9:30.

The committee adjourned.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

Banking, Trade and Commerce

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

---

No. 40

---

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1971

---

Fourth Proceedings on:

"Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation"

---

---

(Witnesses:—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Grosart
Beaubien	Haig
Benidickson	Hayden
Blois	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Lang
Choquette	Macnaughton
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Molson
Cook	Smith
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28)

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, September 14, 1971:

“With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator Hayden moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Denis, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, tabled this day, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto; and

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as many be necessary for the purpose of the said examination.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.”

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Wednesday, October 13, 1971

(47)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9.30 a.m. to further consider:

"Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation"

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Beaubien, Benidickson, Blois, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Desruisseaux, Flynn, Haig, Isnor, Lang, Macnaughton, Molson, Walker and Welch. (17)

In attendance: The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel; Mr. C. Albert Poissant, C.A., Tax Consultant.

WITNESSES:

Canadian Federation of Agriculture:

Mr. Charles Munro, President.

Mr. David Kirk, Executive Secretary.

At 11.40 a.m. the witnesses were excused and the Committee proceeded to the consideration of Returns, Assessments and Appeals, as prepared by Mr. Poissant.

At 12.15 p.m. the Committee adjourned.

---

(48)

At 2.15 p.m. the Committee resumed.

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Beaubien, Blois, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Croll, Desruisseaux, Haig, Isnor, Lang, Macnaughton, Molson and Welch. (15)

In attendance: The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel; Mr. C. Albert Poissant, C.A., Tax Consultant.

WITNESSES:

Canadian Construction Association:

Mr. Robert C. T. Stewart, P. Eng., President, and President, Cameron Contracting Limited.

Mr. S. D. C. Chutter, General Manager.

Mr. K. V. Sandford, Taxation Officer.

At 3.40 p.m. the Committee adjourned until Thursday, October 14, 1971, at 9.30 a.m.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Wednesday, October 13, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9.30 a.m. to give consideration to the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, our program for today is as follows: we shall hear the Canadian Federation of Agriculture this morning, and if there is any time left over, Mr. Poissant is going to make a short presentation on some points. Then this afternoon at 2.15 we shall hear from the Canadian Construction Association.

We have with us, representing the Canadian Federation of Agriculture: Mr. Charles Munro, President; and Mr. David Kirk, Executive Secretary.

Mr. Charles Munro, President, Canadian Federation of Agriculture: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has been concerned on a number of points in the tax reform proposals as proposed by the Minister of Finance, although in general terms we found many of his proposals acceptable. However, in reviewing the legislation we did make a final submission to the minister on August 30, and I assume that you have received copies of the submission that we made. I do not know whether you desire us to read that submission or not.

The Chairman: Well, it is not very long and I think you will want to be sure of covering all the points raised, so perhaps it would be better for you to read it.

Mr. Munro: The only other alternative would be to take the brief and go through it point by point. I would accept your judgment on the matter, but certainly, when dealing with a document as massive as the tax legislation I do not think that we can really summarize it adequately, and in fact I think it is summarized fairly precisely in the document.

This submission consists of three parts, the first one dealing with farm business taxation.

May we make the following representations for changes or clarification in the tax proposals as contained in Bill C-259:

The Family Farm Corporation. One general point we would like to make is that all provisions applicable to farmers as individuals should in principle be applicable to family-held farming corporations. We suggest there be some general provision in the law providing for this. This requires definition of what a family farm corporation is.

We would suggest perhaps that 80 per cent of all shares require to be held by members of the family, and 80 per cent of the income to the corporation be from the farming operation. This can be important in many connections.

Transfer of a Farm within a Family, whether by Sale or Inheritance, without Realization of Capital Gains. There is, as we understand it, absolutely no provision for farms to be transferred within a family, except to a spouse, whether by sale or inheritance, without immediate realization of capital gains. This would be true of the sale or transfer of a farm to a son, or inheritance by the son of the farmer. We have been informed that this problem can be avoided in many cases by good estate planning through incorporation of the farm, and this may well be so. Even in such a case the death of the son, the holder of common shares in an incorporation, prior to that of the father, could result in realization of taxable capital gains while the father was still in active charge of the running of the farm, creating severe financial problems.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the witness?

The Chairman: Certainly.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Munro, why would a man who owns a farm and desires to turn it over to his son not have to pay tax, while the man who owns a small business and turns it over to his son or desires to leave it to his family would? What is the difference here? Surely, if you own a business and want to leave it to your son, that is a good idea. Why would one get off tax free in this situation and the other person have to pay tax?

Mr. Munro: We are not suggesting that.

Senator Beaubien: You are suggesting there would be no capital gains, or no tax if it is turned over to his son.

Mr. David Kirk, Secretary, Canadian Federation of Agriculture: The incorporation arrangements we are referring to, as we understand it, are available in any situation for general incorporation. These are not special farm provisions. These are forms of incorporation, as I understand the general principle, where the owner of the farm, or the owner of the small business can incorporate that business, and the owner of the farm or of the small corporation would, in fact, take his equity in the form of voting preference shares. The capital gain would accrue to the common shares which would be held by the son. In that way, when the father disposes of his assets, there would be no capital gain on those assets. We are informed that this is common practice in business; and we are not referring to special farm provisions.

Senator Beaubien: Is there a provision where you can turn over the shares of your business to your son without any tax?

The Chairman: Mr. Poissant.

Mr. C. Albert Poissant, Tax Consultant to the Committee: Are you suggesting that if a farm was held by the family farm corporation it would not attract tax? The shares given to the son at the time of the death of the father would attract capital gains tax, as Senator Beaubien has suggested, and the shares that were given to the son, in the place of the farm or in the place of the grocery store, do attract tax.

Mr. Kirk: I am not a corporation tax expert, but the information that we received from a very competent gentleman whom we consulted with and who has been involved in estate planning for farms and other businesses is that if a farmer or a grocery store owner owns a business and he wants his son to go into business with him, he can incorporate that business and he can issue shares which the son would hold which, initially, would have little or no value because he would have issued the full equity value in that business and that will be represented by fixed value preference shares which would also be voting shares. Therefore, the equity holding of the farmer or the businessman would, in fact, not appreciate in value because they are fixed value shares and the capital gains will not be realized until, of course, the common shares are sold. I am not sure how this would work at the time the son would wish to hand it down to his son. I am informed that it can be done, but I do not know how.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, may I ask Mr. Poissant if there is anything that would prohibit a farmer incorporating, just as a small businessman can incorporate?

Mr. Kirk: There are possible disadvantages in the farming corporation. One disadvantage is that it is a complicated and difficult procedure with obligations that many farmers do not want to undertake. They do not want to run a corporation. The second point is the problem that can be created even if you have incorporation in terms of the capital gains tax prior to the death of the father; and the third problem, of course, is that the equity of the father is, in fact, fixed. This limits, under certain conditions, obviously, the retirement position of the father.

Senator Connolly: How does the father's interest become fixed? Is he taking a debt security?

Mr. Kirk: He takes preferred shares.

Senator Connolly: Well, they could vary.

Mr. Poissant: They would not normally vary unless they are redeemable at a premium. In this case, the common shares would vary, but very little, because the bulk of the assets transferred to the corporation were given by way of preferred shares to the father. It is true in such a case that at the time of death of the father there would be no realization because the common shares are held by the son.

Senator Connolly: They are held by the son.

Mr. Poissant: Yes.

Senator Cook: Mr. Chairman, is this the point that Senator Beaubien is making, that in the case of the small businessman who, in fact, does carry out this procedure and does take the preference shares and gives the common shares to his son, and in the other case where you have the farmer who does exactly the same thing, he incorporates the farm and takes the preference shares and gives the common shares to his son—are you suggesting that in both cases if the son should die before the father, that is the son of the small businessman or the son of the farmer, there should be any difference in the treatment of the two sons respectively?

Senator Beaubien: I wonder if there is any difference.

Mr. Kirk: When we said there was no difference, we meant that this incorporation provision is a generally prevailing position. Our position is that a transfer, without incorporation, without realization of capital gains, in a family should be permitted. That has been our position throughout. We feel that it should be permitted in the case of farms for reasons which we feel are sound for the maintenance of the family farm. If a case can be made for a small grocery store owner, fine. We are making a case for the farms.

The Chairman: Let us assume that the father decides that he is going to incorporate and he turns his farming assets into this company and takes the preferred shares. Let us also assume that the son buys the common shares. At that time, I would assume the farming assets would go into the company at their fair market value. The equity would be represented by the common shares; but the equity is something that would have to develop at that stage. There would have to be incremental increases. But at the moment, I would say, the value of the common shares that the son would buy and own outright would be very nominal. The son would really be getting in on the ground floor of the operation, if there is any increase in value. As the father's shares are redeemed, of course, there would be more opportunity for that value to develop.

Senator Connolly: I think that this is a wonderful example. Would you follow it right through? In the event that the preferred shares are redeemed, and thereby increase the value of the common shares, until the preferred shares have been completely redeemed—what does the witness have to say in regard to this situation?

The Chairman: The son owns and controls the company?

Senator Connolly: Yes, but I am thinking of the capital gains.

Mr. Kirk: No, the son would simply have to find the money to buy these shares or receive them as a gift. I am talking about the preferred shares. There would be no capital gain on the preferred shares.

Senator Connolly: No, I would like to stick to the Chairman's example. The preferred shares have now been redeemed and the common shares are owned by the son. In other words, he owns the farm and the company. What is the capital gains situation which the son would face regarding those shares?

The Chairman: On disposal?

Senator Connolly: Yes, that is what we are concerned about.

Mr. Kirk: That is right. No, we are not concerned about the avoidance of the payment of capital gains tax should the farm go outside of the family. We are not concerned about the permanent avoidance of the capital gains tax. We are concerned about the realization of capital gains during the operation of the farm while it is within the family and the maintaining of the farming business as an on-going business without being completely disrupted by this transaction.

Mr. Munro: And the maintaining of farming as an on-going business, without being completely disrupted in the transaction.

Senator Cook: Capital gains on death?

Mr. Munro: No, capital gains on the business passed out of the family into other hands.

Senator Cook: You are not objecting to that?

Mr. Munro: No.

Senator Cook: You are objecting to capital gains on death in the family?

Mr. Munro: Yes, we want a deferral.

Senator Connolly: After the shares are regained, the son is in the same position as was his father when he incorporated. Therefore, in fact, he owns the farm. Do you want to carry it another generation and issue preferred shares to him?

Mr. Munro: I am personally a major shareholder in an incorporated farm. I understand from my legal counsel that this can go on for generations if the family wishes to continue farming.

Senator Connolly: The company can continue; it has an indefinite life. What is the situation when the preferred shares have all been paid off and the farmer, who now owns all the common shares, wishes his son to take over? The grandson would then be involved.

Senator Cook: He just sells to another company.

Senator Connolly: That is precisely what I wish to hear from the witnesses; another company must be incorporated which would repeat the exercise originated by the farmer.

Senator Beaubien: Is a farmer now in any way at a comparative disadvantage to a grocer if he incorporates?

Mr. Munro: No; not as against the grocer.

Senator Beaubien: Then you are against this new tax; do you think the farmer should have a special deal?

Mr. Munro: We have not asked for a special deal; we have only asked that Canadian farmers can retain the equity, for the various reasons set out in this brief. We ask that they be allowed to continue, not that they should have any different position from that of a grocer. We are arguing our position and have not taken up the cry on behalf of the grocer; we think he should look after himself.

Senator Cook: Can you advance any reasons why your position is different, or should receive consideration over that given the small family business? I just wish to be helpful. You say that the small family business can look after itself, which is true enough; I am not asking you to argue their case. However, what is the philosophy behind the contention that you in fact should escape and they possibly pay, as the situation now prevails?

Mr. Kirk: There are two aspects: the philosophy, about which farmers feel rather strongly is, first of all that there is a very strong case on social in addition to economic grounds for making it possible for families to continue farming their land. We do not make any apologies for that case.

The second point is that with the typically low returns and very high rate of technological development involving continually increasing capital requirements it can be extremely disruptive to the farm business if capital gains must be realized by the family and withdrawn from the farm. It means that they must dispose of farm assets or incur a large debt load.

Were a similar type of case to be made in a city context we consider it would be the responsibility of those involved to make the case. We make it on grounds of the nature of farming and the desirability, socially in addition to economically, of a stable farming structure. This structure is unstable enough as it is and we do not wish to increase its present instability.

Senator Cook: Capital gains tax is not much of a hardship in cases of farms and farm equipment which do not increase much in value, because there is little on which to pay the tax. However, what is your solution to the situation in which a farm passes from father to son and becomes more and more valuable, with more and more equipment? The son may become a millionaire several times over by reason of the increased value of the land and equipment and yet pay no capital gains tax.

Mr. Kirk: He cannot realize that million dollars without paying capital gains on it; that is definite.

Senator Cook: That is true, yes.

Mr. Kirk: The other reply is that exceedingly few people arrive in that position.

Senator Connolly: As I understand the witnesses, they say that there is more to the problem of a family farm than economics. Their argument is that in addition to tax considerations there is the social aspect of the maintenance of the family farm, as opposed to the maintenance of the family business referred to by Senator Beaubien. They state that it is more desirable to maintain a family farm and for social reasons, therefore, the rules for the family farm should not be the same as those for the family business. Is that a reasonable summary of your position?

Mr. Poissant: The point made by the witnesses is really that the incorporated farm presents no problem. At the top of page 2 of their brief it is stated that if by any chance the son were to die before the father, then to a certain extent there is a return to the father and there should be no deemed realization in that case.

The other point flows through normally, because it has already been given some time previously by way of the common shares. However, it would return to the father if the son were to die first. The witnesses are really asking that the flow back be free of capital gain, which is something new. The first part was solved through the incorporation but now they ask that what was done 10 or five years previously be undone and the farm flow back to the farmer, if he is still active on it, free of deemed realization.

Mr. Kirk: That is part of our request. We also say, in the remainder of page 2 of the brief, that we indeed think that the principle of deferring deemed realization as long as the farm remains in the family should be followed even if there is no incorporation. There will be farmers who simply do not wish, or neglect to incorporate.

The Chairman: We are talking about two things. One is incorporation, what flows from that, and what they would like to have happen there; and then, as I understand it, they are also talking about the situation, "Well, if we do not want or do not like to incorporate, we should have these benefits as individuals." If the benefits are available to the same extent that they are to anybody else if you incorporate a farm, then that is one situation.

What Mr. Kirk seems to be concerned about is that the son may hold the common shares and the father, who has turned the assets into a limited company, may hold the preferred shares. If the son dies, the common shares will represent the ownership of the farm. But the father, if there is any quantity of preference shares still outstanding, has a pretty strong toehold in relation to his financial interest in the farm.

It is felt that if the son dies first, those common shares should be able to go back to the father without attracting any deemed realization.

Unless a lot of the preferred shares have been redeemed, I doubt if in most cases there would be any substantial value attached to the common shares at that time.

They may represent the equity, but equity is a variable thing. It depends what you can get for it after you pay off the preferred shares.

It is hard to make a ruling of that kind, because you are really granting an exemption from capital gains tax.

I am not saying that it is not possible to do so. Parliament can write the law in any way it wishes, but it has to have good grounds for doing so.

Mr. Kirk suggests that the farm is a kind of entity and is an asset in a way that has value to the country more than simply the value of the piece of property. Keeping people on the farms and keeping farms operating leads to a healthy community.

Senator Connolly: And social conditions.

The Chairman: Yes, and social conditions would urge it. Senators may recall that we made a recommendation in our report on the White Paper. On page 59, paragraph 7 we said:

Your Committee recommends exemption from capital gains tax to the extent of the first $75,000 of aggregate net lifetime gains derived from the sale or exchange by an individual or his spouse (or by a corporation where such individual or spouse, because of statutory provisions, is obliged to operate through corporate ownership) of farms and orchards where the principal occupation of the transferor is farming.

We said you can make lifetime gains up to $75,000 without attracting capital gains tax.

This is a different concept. Firstly, you do not want any limitation. You want the son to have an unqualified right, if he dies, to have the ownership of the farm turned back to the father.

However, that interjects other problems. The son may be married and have a family. If the son makes a will in which he disposes of the property in the interests of his family, we are wasting time here saying that we should give the son the right to turn the property back to the father without attracting capital gains tax.

The son is the only one who can say that.

The Honourable Lazarus Phillips (Chief Counsel to the Committee): Mr. Chairman, generally speaking, the committee took the position that small-type farming was entitled to special consideration.

I personally still hold that view. Those speaking on behalf of the Federation would make a much better case if they took the simple position, without confusing it with corporate structures as against individuals, that so long as a small farm operation—and the definition of a small farm operation would have to be made—were transferred within the family, no matter which blood member of the family, and the operation of the transferred unit was for farming purposes generally, there should be exemptions in respect of the application of the capital gains tax until its disposition outside the family or its transfer.

The Chairman: That would be a deferral.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes. If I may be permitted to express an opinion other than being counsel—

Senator Flynn: How far would you go in relation to the family?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would go to direct blood descendants.

Senator Flynn: Or back?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes, or even upstream as distinguished from downstream. I disagree with the simple statement that a small agricultural unit is a special unit related to the vital operation of our system. With respect to Senator Beaubien, I do not agree with his analogy of a small business in relation to a farm. There is a market for a commercial unit, even a small business unit, or the liquidation of an inventory which is liquid or accounts receivable. The circumstances are entirely different.

There is no market for a farm in Saskatchewan in a section of a drought area in terms of some years. I may be speaking out of my depth, because I have no status other than that of a lawyer.

I remind the committee that in our Senate report on the White Paper we accepted the principle that a distinction had to be drawn between persons engaged bona fide in farming and those engaged in commerce.

Regarding the simple principles of postponement, or, as our chairman said, deferral of capital gains, when there is a transfer of a small-type farm within a family, up or down—the reference was made to upstream as well as downstream—as long as it is so used, the capital gains tax should be deferred. That would strike a more responsive chord than the complicated submission we have had thus far.

Senator Cook: And it would cost very little in terms of tax.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes, it would cost very little indeed.

Senator Beaubien: In the case of a small farm, a small operation, what kind of a capital gains tax would we have on an operation where there is no market?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: That is all the more reason for a deferral.

Senator Beaubien: But I do not think that is what the submission refers to.

The Chairman: Well, let us find out. Mr. Munro, you have heard the discussion. Is the presentation that you are making being made on behalf of what we call the small farmer, or is it for farmers generally; that if a farmer has a windfall and his property becomes valuable, he should be able to realize its creation into a real estate subdivision and make a profit, non-taxable as to capital gains?

Mr. Kirk: That is not our submission.

The Chairman: Tell us your viewpoint in relation to our discussion here of small farm businesses.

Mr. Kirk: In the first place, we are not distinguishing between small farms and large farms; that is the first point. However, the first paragraph of our brief notes that it would be useful to define a family farm corporation; this means that it essentially has to be family held and the profits have to be essentially from the farm operation.

I should emphasize, first of all, that we are not asking for exemption from taxes; we are asking for a deferral of taxes. I think that is quite important.

Senator Cook: For how long a period?

The Chairman: You mean until the farm ceases to be a farming operation?

Mr. Kirk: Yes, until it ceases to be a farming operation.

Except for that one point with respect to the son dying first, we are not asking for special recommendations for farmers on an incorporated basis. We just referred to this because we thought it would be in the thinking of you gentlemen and also in the thinking of the Government. We thought it would be in the picture that this option is in fact open; it is open now under the present law and it would be open under the new law to any corporation. What we are asking for is that, incorporated or not, a family farm not have realization for capital gains until it ceases to be a family farm and the assets are sold off. If it is sold for a subdivision, then capital gains are immediately realized under our recommendations. It is not a question of avoiding taxes or exemption from taxes; it is a question of not realizing the capital gain on that land as long as it continues as an integral operating farming unit, because otherwise you would either have to sell off part of it in order to pay the capital gains tax or undertake a debt in order to pay the capital gains tax. That is our point.

Senator Flynn: How does the provision concerning principal residence affect farms? There is no provision specifically designed to cover farms. You would have to use the provision concerning the exemption for principal residence.

Mr. Kirk: We discuss this in some detail later on in the brief.

The Chairman: It is referred to on page 3 of the brief. You are thinking of the fact that the farmer can make an election under section 40(2)(c).

The small farmer would benefit by this election whereby he can deduct $1,000 a year for each year that he has occupied the principal residence on the farm, can he not? If he spent a life time there he would be deducting quite a few $1,000, would he not?

Mr. Kirk: Yes, indeed, and we value that provision a great deal.

Senator Flynn: Is the definition of principal residence applicable to the whole farm, or is it only applicable to the main residence and one acre around the main residence?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Flynn: They could not benefit, then, by this deduction of $1,000 a year. If it is a farm, they could not deduct $1,000 from the increased value of the land because it only applies to the one acre around the main residence.

The Chairman: Section 40(2)(c) states:

where the taxpayer is an individual, his gain for a taxation year from the disposition of land used in a farming business carried on by him that includes property that was at any time his principal residence is

(i) His gain for the year, otherwise determined, from the disposition of the portion of the land that does not include the property that was his principal residence, plus his gain for the year, if any, determined under paragraph (b) from the disposition of the property that was his principal residence, or

Senator Flynn: This means, then, that the provision respecting principal residence would be applicable to the whole farm.

The Chairman: That is right. Section 40(2)(c)(ii) states:

If the taxpayer so elects in prescribed manner in respect of the land, his gain for the year from the disposition of the land including the property that was his principal residence, determined without regard to paragraph (b) or subparagraph (i) of this paragraph, minus $1,000 for each year for which the residence was his principal residence and during which he was resident in Canada;

Senator Burchill: Without defining a small farm, Mr. Munro, how many small farms would be incorporated? What size farm ordinarily would be incorporated?

Mr. Munro: That would be difficult to quantify, but I would suggest that there must be a sizeable business within the farm in order to go to the expense of incorporation and the ensuing expense year by year of maintaining books that meet the requirements of the laws of the land. I am not familiar with the provincial laws in other provinces, but certainly here in Ontario a farmer would have two sets of laws pursuant to which he would be required to submit his books, and these books have to be kept in a prescribed manner. It does become an expensive operation to incorporate, and it also adds another dimension to the farming operation, and that is the bookkeeping aspect. Generally speaking, farmers in this country—and this is a fact; it is not a criticism or an excuse or anything else—have had little training in bookkeeping, and if you are going to maintain an incorporated farm you have to keep proper books. This means that people either have to be employed to maintain those books or the farmer has to find that type of person within his own organization.

A small farm means different things to different people, but, relatively speaking, if it is a one-man operation or even a father and son operation, in some instances, they will not have the desire nor the amount of money available to go to the extra expense of incorporating. It is expensive to set up an incorporated farm.

Senator Burchill: So when we talk about small farms and incorporated farms we are talking about two different things?

The Chairman: Yes, and with all due respect to Mr. Munro, I think this presentation is intended to be weighted on the side of the individual and not on the side of the corporate farm.

Mr. Munro: That is right.

The Chairman: So we should look at it as the individual. Some of these benefits in the bill are benefits to the individual who is carrying on a farming operation.

Mr. Munro: The major portion of our concern lies with the individual. Incorporated farms in Canada are quite few in number and we suggest will remain that way for some considerable time to come.

Senator Connolly: Is the principal residence deduction available to the farmer who incorporates?

Mr. Kirk: No, and that is one of our complaints.

Mr. Poissant: In other words, they would like this word "individual" to read as well "a family farm corporation" and to extend the same rules applicable—

Mr. Kirk: To a defined family farm operation.

Senator Connolly: Have you suggested any particular section to be changed? You do not have a draft of the amendments you propose, do you?

The Chairman: No, Senator Connolly, although with the information we now have as a result of our study it would not be difficult to determine, firstly, where the changes should be made, and, secondly, settle the language of the changes.

The question is what we wish to do in that regard. I do not think we can answer "yes" or "no". Our review in relation to the treatment of farms is expressed in our report on the White Paper, and I do not suppose that that view has changed. What we have to assess is whether the treatment that is accorded in the bill is fair in the circumstances.

Senator Cook: I was going to come back to what we said in our report, Mr. Chairman.

Assuming that you could not get total blanket exemption, Mr. Munro, what do you think of the $75,000 figure suggested by the Senate as a definition of a small farm which would be exempt? What figure do you suggest it should be? What do you think of $75,000?

Mr. Munro: It sounds interesting. We really have not quantified this within our organization or discussed it at all. I do not think we went in this direction in our discussion.

Senator Connolly: I wonder where we got the $75,000.

The Chairman: We had quite a lot of discussion here with some of the farming groups. There was some criticism because we limited the qualification to, as it were, the principal occupation of the transferor, his farming. We felt it had to be limited in that way.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: May I remind the members of the committee that we were bothered about how to define a small farming operation, so we came to the conclusion that we were better off by asking for an exemption of capital gains to the extent of the first $75,000 of aggregate net lifetime gains. Obviously, lifetime gains are related to an individual rather than a corporation, which clearly is another matter. We just did not seize ourselves of the problem of corporate structures in relation to farming operations. We came to the conclusion that rather than struggle with the definition of a small farming operation as to acreage, yield, moneys received and that sort of thing on an annual basis, or over a five-year or ten-year basis, the simplest approach would be to recommend the exemption from capital gains of a lifetime amount realized by an individual farmer up to $75,000. That is the history behind our recommendation, as I recollect it.

Mr. Kirk: I would observe that we realize you made that recommendation, and we appreciate it very much. We have to say frankly that this brief is drafted in the light of the tax bill; that is to say, we deliberately did not go back to square one; we attempted to make a recommendation that we thought was, as closely as we could make it, within the context of government thinking, on the grounds that you had made the recommendation, for example, and it was not accepted. We tried to make recommendations that we thought might meet with Mr. Benson's definition of "technical" in his offer for further representations; he said he would welcome further technical representations. These are not altogether technical, but we did try to be reasonable from the point of view of the practicabilities of government decision-making, rightly or wrongly.

The Chairman: It may be that what the Government is proposing in this bill is not too far away from what we recommended. We recommended that there be an exemption for net lifetime gains derived from the sale or exchange of farming property of $75,000. In the bill, the net lifetime gain is limited by the number of years the farmer has used the residence on the farm as his principal residence. If he was there for a lifetime, maybe 40 or 50 years, in all he has accumulated a net lifetime gain of 40 or 50 times $1,000.

Senator Flynn: Plus the original value. Our $75,000 included the original value and the value at the time of the deemed realization, or the realization.

The Chairman: The difference between the two would be the gain.

Senator Flynn: But there was an exemption up to $75,000. To the $1,000 a year you have to add the original value. If at the time of valuation day a farm was worth $50,000, you can add $1,000 a year at the time of the transfer.

Senator Cook: It would be worth over $125,000 before liability.

Senator Flynn: I think the $75,000 was the total value.

The Chairman: No, net aggregate capital gain.

Senator Flynn: Gain?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Flynn: That goes much further.

The Chairman: The deduction of the $1,000 is $1,000 a year from the gain.

Senator Flynn: When the property is transferred to the wife, at present there is no estate tax, but would there be a deemed realization when a transfer is made under the new tax bill? Will the estate of the deceased have to pay a capital gains tax on deemed realization when there is a transfer to the wife?

Senator Connolly: You mean on the death of the husband?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

The Chairman: There is nothing I see that takes away from the right of either spouse to make a gift without deemed realization to the other.

Mr. Poissant: These are roll-overs between spouses.

Mr. Kirk: There is no realization on the inheritance by a wife.

Mr. Poissant: That is right, to the wife from the husband, or vice versa.

Senator Flynn: There is no estate tax.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: No deemed realization.

The Chairman: There is no taxable gain.

Mr. Poissant: No deemed realization.

Senator Flynn: Between husband and wife?

The Chairman: No, not in this bill.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Roll-overs.

Senator Flynn: It follows the same principle as the estate tax?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes.

The Chairman: I was making the point that the provisions in the bill recognize a principle of deduction in relation to gain; they arrive at it in a different way on this $1,000 a year of occupation of the residence as a principal residence. The net result does not produce as many dollars of exemption, because to produce $75,000 the taxpayer would have to have his principal residence on the farm for 75 years. It does go some distance, and I take it that you are certainly not looking a gift-horse in the mouth and saying, "No, we don't want it."

Mr. Kirk: No. Perhaps I might review some of the problems. There are a few problems with that $1,000. Would it be all right to just review those?

The Chairman: Yes, you go ahead.

Mr. Kirk: The first problem is that it does not apply to an incorporated farm. It should be pointed out that if the principal residence is in the incorporation, then the exemption for the residence, which everybody has, is not available to the farmer.

The Chairman: That every individual has.

Mr. Kirk: That every individual has. One would say that you should separate these in the incorporation, but in fact there are a good many provincial laws on land use that make it impossible to separate them in the incorporation, because they do not permit that. You have to keep that unit. They do this for purposes of land use planning. That is a definite disadvantage and it should be corrected, in our view.

The other point is that you get the $1,000 only in the years when you are in principal residence on the farm. For example, a farmer may be in a rather remote position in, say, Saskatchewan. As you know, the small towns are declining there and many farmers find it highly advantageous to buy, often very cheaply, a house in town, because then they can educate their children adequately, and they do not have the same type of isolation. But if he does that, he loses immediately the $1,000 a year. Or, if the son is working the farm and the father retires to the village, perhaps does some of the work but retains the ownership of the farm, then that $1,000 a year is lost for those years. We do not think that that is reasonable, that he has to be actually on the farm in all cases in that way.

Senator Flynn: He would be able to claim exemption from it, too, if you were to correct the situation as suggested, because the residence that he has bought in town will benefit by the exemption.

The Chairman: Under the general law.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Mr. Kirk: He could not claim both, of course.

Senator Flynn: Then he would have to have an option between the two, in a case like that.

Mr. Kirk: The option is there, in any case, but often these alternate houses in the town are not going to appreciate very much. This is a convenience. The town is not a major centre and it is not going to be a growing centre, in most of these cases.

Senator Flynn: Is the farm more likely to be growing in value, as an asset?

Mr. Kirk: In many cases, in the Prairie Provinces, yes, it would be much more likely, because what we are getting is a surplus of houses.

Senator Flynn: Even if it remains a farm?

Mr. Kirk: Yes, even if it remains a farm.

The Chairman: Yes, it must be a farm used in the farming business.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Chairman, it would apply now, if the father were in the town and the son were occupying the farm residence. They could both have a principal residence, under the proposed scheme, because the father has a house and the son has a house.

The Chairman: They both have to be owners.

Mr. Poissant: Yes, but it could happen, if they are owners.

Mr. Kirk: The son would have to be an owner.

Mr. Poissant: Except in the corporation.

Senator Flynn: We are worried about the son acquiring a house and dying before the father.

Senator Cook: You are also saying it is sometimes not possible to split the house and the farm, because of the law? Do you not say that?

Mr. Munro: Yes. This is a definite problem.

The Chairman: The principal residence does not necessarily mean that one lives there every day in the year.

Senator Flynn: It is question of fact.

The Chairman: It must be your home base.

Mr. Kirk: Essentially, what we are saying is that the farm should have the $1,000 a year exemption, or the option of principal residence. It is that simple. The residence requirement on the farm should not be so restricted.

Mr. Poissant: What you are asking here really is—and this prompted the question—that there be perpetual roll-overs, if a man can give the farm to his son, and his son to his son, and his son to his son, and there is never a capital gain in the case of the farmer. Furthermore, in the case of the corporation, where 80 per cent of the shares are held by the family and 80 per cent of the income is from farming, we would have to put additional restrictions to the effect that this family corporation should not have anything else—that is, because the shares could again be transferred ad infinitum, in your example here. If 20 per cent of the assets were something else, were shares in Bell Telephone, they would qualify as part of the family farm corporation under this definition.

Senator Flynn: That is what they are asking. I think they want the definition of the farm to apply to a farm that is owned by a corporation. Then this would be an asset of the corporation.

Mr. Poissant: Then the exclusive assets should only be farming, and we should define further that not only 80 per cent of the shares are held by them—

Senator Flynn: All the shares would be exempt.

The Chairman: This is what they are asking, that a family corporation would be a corporation where 80 per cent of the shares were held by the family and where 80 per cent of the income came from a farming operation.

Senator Flynn: It would open the door to abuses.

Mr. Poissant: Yes, unless you define it further, that no other assets but farming land, farm houses and farming equipment are allowed. It would be very restricted.

Senator Cook: And employed in farming.

Mr. Poissant: Yes, employed in farming, and nothing else, no investments. Otherwise this would be a fair and proper channel to get all the capital gains through by this type of corporation. One can see the complication that could arise.

The Chairman: I think we have given this fairly complete consideration. Can we move on to other points that you have?

Mr. Munro: Yes. I would ask Mr. Kirk to pick up the basic herd concept and deal with that.

Mr. Kirk: Yes. I will read this, if I may, as it is a fairly complicated subject. It is on page 4, item 4, basic herd.

In connection with the provisions for termination of a basic herd system as regards increases in basic herds established by 1971, and establishment of basic herds by further farmers after 1971, we feel strongly a serious error of policy is being made here. That is to say, there will be no expansion of basic herds after 1971 establishment now, and the law says there will be no additions to basic herds. Any farmer can establish a basic herd as of January 1, 1971. Then that herd is valued and on disposition of the herd, according to certain rules, the value of the dispositions is compared to the original value, and capital gains is charged on the difference. Presently it is a unit system and it makes no difference what you sell it for, compared to what you bought it for. One cow is one cow and there is no capital gain. We are not quarrelling with that change. We are not quarrelling with the change to actual valuation of the animals sold from the basic herd and charging a capital gain on the appreciation in value. We accept that. What we are quarrelling with is the termination of the basic herd system, and its freezing. We say:

The basic issue is this: there is a real, valid need to have some system by which the farmer can treat this capital investment in livestock as a capital investment. Consider, for example, the problem of the farmer who wishes to take money out of capital to acquire a herd or a major addition to an existing herd. From his standpoint, he now has a capital asset which cannot be depreciated. His cost of acquisition of the cattle is an expense to him, if he is on a cash basis of accounting, giving him a number of years of severe losses that will not be corrected by the five-year averaging provision. To go on an accrual basis with annual valuation of the herd is often impractical and undesirable. A much better answer is to establish a basic herd.

The same consideration in a less extreme way applies to farmers who wish to build up their herd year by year, reporting the cost of acquisition as income—as they do now—and enlarging their capital base of animals.

If this is not provided for, the farmer builds up a large sum which will be realized as income immediately on dispersal of the herd.

Farming requires increasing capital investment. It has been Canadian public policy for more than two decades to assist farmers in obtaining the capital requisite for a viable farming operation that alone can satisfy the twin objectives of a decent income for the farmer and reasonably-priced food for the consumer. One effect of the basic herd has been to create capital in livestock operations without the necessity of outside money investment: i.e. an ongoing farm business on basic herd is able to show a balance sheet that includes part of the livestock as a capital asset, rather than entirely in inventory. The effect is that the financial strength of the operation is automatically increased. To phase out the basic herd will have the mischievous side effect of weakening the capital structures of thousands of farming operations without producing a significant gain in tax revenues.

We recognize that with the introduction of a capital gains tax the unit system, whereby proceeds from reduction in basic herd are treated as non-taxable, has less validity. However, the recognition of the basic herd as capital has validity, and there is no reason why proceeds of dispersal should not be assessed by treating the gain on disposal over initial cost on valuation day value as a capital gain rather than as ordinary income, and tax levied accordingly on only half of such gain.

The failure to treat this unique capital asset of the farmer, i.e. animals, as a real form of capital, subject to the same rules on taxation of capital gains is, in our view, discriminatory.

There is a special point which should be dealt with in connection with valuation of basic herd on valuation day. This is not of widespread application, but it could be important to some people.

Much valuable breeding stock will be, on valuation day, in fact under test. This applies for example to young bulls whose semen is being used by insemination stations. The breeding results alone will prove the real value of that animal. There should be provision for later determination of valuation day value based on the results of testing out of animals which is in process on valuation day.

In short, on valuation day you do not know what the animals are worth, because the tests are not in.

Senator Connolly: Just on that point, without seeing the specific wording of the section, I should think that the value does not necessarily have to be determined on valuation day. For a number of reasons it may have to be determined a long time after valuation day. For example, if I own a very valuable painting, I may not know precisely what its value is on valuation day, but, if I get in an expert to assess its value two months later, that is the value that will attach to the painting so far as valuation day is concerned. Would that not be true in connection with cattle?

Mr. Kirk: It might be dealt with by regulation, I suppose. On the other hand, if the department said that the value of a breeding animal is the average value as of that day and then it turns out that that is an exceptionally valuable animal, then they would say, no, that that is not it, it is the average value.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Chairman, I think the point made with respect to a herd being a capital asset rather than being inventory is a pretty forceful argument. But the question of applying a special rule of determination of value other than valuation day opens up the door to the complete destruction of the whole concept of value and valuation date. Private investors might very well take the position that their inventory is securities. They might take the position that the value of the securities listed on the exchange may have a value greater than that of the "bid and ask" column, because certain discoveries, for example in the natural resources like mining and so on, have not yet been disclosed to the public by management.

In an effort to solve a minor problem which may have validity, you would destroy the whole concept of value on valuation day. I do not think there would be much chance either of that being accepted as a valid argument for all people, or that it would be accepted, even if valid. But with respect to the first point, if I may be permitted to make an observation, I think it has considerable validity.

The Chairman: Well, with respect to paintings, we know that it sometimes takes a considerable period of time before artists acquire such a standing that the value of their paintings goes up. Some entirely fortuitous event may bring about that rise in value. Therefore, the person who has a painting may object to valuation day as being the proper date for valuation because he does not know at that date the fortuitous circumstance which may alter the value of his painting, either by depreciating it or by increasing it. I do not know how you can shift from a date on which, whatever the conditions are, that is the value because that is the value in the marketplace at that date. If there are conditions that still have to be assessed which might affect the value, I do not know how you can give effect to those.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the example of the security tradeable on the exchange, that security has a determinable value as of valuation day, but in the case of the painting, or in the case of the animal, although there is an intrinsic value on valuation day, that value may not be known. Perhaps the knowledge of what that value is on valuation day only comes to you later. In the case of the stock market you have something tangible. Is there not a difference there?

Mr. Poissant: I might say to Mr. Munro and Mr. Kirk, and, therefore, to their association or federation, that the Minister of National Revenue is now publishing approximately 15 pamphlets, one of which will be concerned with valuation day problems. Perhaps I could recommend to them that they should ask for this particular paragraph of their brief to be inserted in that pamphlet, dealing with this problem that the farmers would have, and then there could be a corresponding set of recommendations with respect to the valuation that could be taken into account in this very particular case. I am sure that, although the booklets are in the process of being printed, there would still be time for such an insertion to be made.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, perhaps through our staff we could ask the tax department to issue a ruling on this and we could cite what was given to us.

The Chairman: In other words, in the valuation of an article you would make a distinction between the article, the value of which is either black or white, and the article in this case, where there are factors preventing you from getting at the basic value until you know about the product or whatever the article might be. It still presents quite a problem.

Senator Connolly: The determining factors not turning up until later is really the problem. Perhaps if we write to the tax department and inform them of this situation they could put out a bulletin that would cover this one issue. That might clear up the problem.

Mr. Kirk: What we are really talking about here is not acquisitions of animals. We are talking about animals that have been bred by farmers, where the results of the farmers' efforts are simply not known. That is all we are talking about. We are not talking about speculative acquisitions.

Senator Cook: There is a paragraph on page 4 which I do not understand:

The same consideration in a less extreme way applies to farmers who wish to build up their herd year by year, reporting the cost of acquisition as income and enlarging their capital base of animals.

How do they report the cost of acquisition as income? They pay for it. What does that mean?

Mr. Kirk: We are saying that we wish they would be able to do so. But what you have to do now, and as we are recommending for the future, is, if you add an animal to your basic herd, you have to put into income the cost of that animal.

Senator Cook: You mean you pay for it yourself and you put it into your income?

Mr. Kirk: If you are on a cash basis of accounting, then the way it works, generally, is that your expenses are what you pay out and your income is what you take in. And in that process you might pay out the cost, in fact, of raising an animal which you did not sell.

Senator Connolly: Let us say, for example, that you paid $100 for a calf—

Mr. Kirk: And if you kept that calf—

Senator Cook: Let us stick to the $100 first. You mean that you report that $100 as income?

Mr. Kirk: No.

Senator Cook: Well, this is what it says here.

Mr. Kirk: Well, if you had a capital gain as we are recommending, then when you total your year's operation on a cash basis—so much outgo and so much income—you would have a certain income. But if you wanted to take one of the animals you had in your herd and add that animal to your basic herd, then you would have to add the value of that animal to your income, because you would be transferring it to capital in that year. That is what a farmer with a basic herd does now.

Senator Connolly: He is allowed a deduction for capital investment.

Mr. Kirk: No, he has to put the value in as income if he puts the animal in as basic herd.

The Chairman: But then it is on a cash basis. In dollars or the equivalent of dollars, the inventory has a value, and that comes into his assessment of income at that value, but he has a deduction for his expenses on the other side.

Senator Cook: It does not change his expense picture; it only changes his income picture.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions on this business of basic herd? You say that this concept of a basic herd certainly existed in our income tax law for a number of years. Do you say that there are definite advantages to the farmer in that system and that the changes in the law as proposed do not compensate for that benefit?

Mr. Kirk: Well, I do not know about the compensation, but what we are saying is that the capability of building up a capital asset in livestock is eliminated. That means that if you build up a herd, the day you sell it, it comes into income in that year. It is much better to have brought it into income gradually over the years, and the basic herd makes it possible to do that as you build up your herd.

Mr. Munro: With this exception, Mr. Chairman. In order to establish a herd of an ongoing nature that is of any use to you, and you have $10,000 to invest, then you must invest it in one year because you cannot set up a business on a very gradual basis under present systems today. Then you have a $10,000 expenditure, whereas we could put the $10,000 under the system we have as capital, and then in 15 years' time if the equity—only using figures—is then increased to $15,000 in that herd, it also shows as income in that year. But under present conditions he would still have his original $10,000 of capital being considered as $10,000 of capital under the system which we had before.

Senator Cook: But we have that now, surely.

Mr. Munro: Yes, we have it now.

Senator Cook: And we have it in the bill. Will you not have it under the amendment? I mean if you take $10,000 and you invest it in a herd, will you not still have it?

Mr. Munro: No, this is what we are complaining about. We cannot do that any more, and for five years we are going to have a very serious loss position which we cannot recoup under averaging.

Senator Connolly: You say it is to be phased out at December 31, 1971 under the bill?

Mr. Munro: People can have a basic herd if they are now in farming, but there will be no further additions to the basic herd permitted after January 1, and new farmers cannot establish a basic herd. Even though a young man may walk into the Farm Credit Corporation and borrow $40,000 of which he puts $10,000 into establishing a herd, immediately he has for those five years plus all his other starting expenses, a loss position which he can never recoup.

Senator Connolly: I suppose another way of putting it is this; from now on where a man is starting in farming and he establishes a herd, it is like setting up his inventory, and when he sells that inventory the proceeds go into his income for the year in which he sells it.

The Chairman: Well, the proceeds go into income and for his taxable income you deduct the other goods sold.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Chairman, may I ask this question? When you say that there might be a loss in your example, Mr. Munro, to the farmer starting in operation, you say that loss would not be applicable in the future against farming income for the next five years?

Mr. Munro: Well, in starting a business I expect he is going to go through in the normal way a heavy loss period during which he would not be taxable and with depreciation on machinery and other assets there is some way in which he can depreciate, so that he can pick it up and choose, if necessary, the amount of depreciation he wants to take. But then if there is no depreciation schedule on the $10,000 investment in cattle, and it shows completely as an expenditure, which over the five-year period could very well be the factor that would put him in a loss position—although he may gain two-thirds of the $10,000 in the loss position—he is still going to lose in the averaging position a portion of that loss.

Mr. Poissant: Yes, but if at the end of the year having started with $10,000 he were to take an inventory of his animals, like in any other trade, and that is only the difference between his beginning inventory and the closing inventory, it will be charged to his operation.

Mr. Kirk: We are talking about people on a cash basis of accounting and not on an accrual basis. On an accrual basis it would work differently, of course.

Mr. Poissant: That is, if the farmer should choose to remain on the cash basis.

Mr. Kirk: You see, they are leaving the option for the farmer to go on a cash basis in the law, but they are making it extraordinarily difficult to use it, by not having the basic herd provisions.

Mr. Poissant: You are quite right and under that condition he should go on an accrual basis for the first year until he has caught up the loss and then revert.

Mr. Munro: But I do not think that is possible. As I understand the law once you go on the accrual basis, that is it.

The Chairman: You have to get the permission of the minister. There is no return from accrual as of right. Maybe that is where you should put your finger on it. If, going on an accrual basis, farmers were to begin to carry on business on the January 1, 1972—if the right to do it on an accrual basis is the beneficial way of doing it, that is the way they should start out and perhaps the law should permit them to shift to a cash basis once they have established themselves.

Senator Cook: Consent should not be unreasonably withheld.

Senator Connolly: Is it suggested then that we should consider an amendment to the bill as introduced to bring about the right of the farmer to have this option?

The Chairman: This is what we are discussing. We are not to the stage where we are thinking in terms of what amendments should be made, if any. We are discussing a possible remedy to the position that this brief complains about. This is what we are asking Mr. Kirk and Mr. Munro. If a farmer started out on January 1, 1972 on an accrual basis, and then when it became beneficial for him to change over to a cash basis he would have the option of doing that, would that not deal with the complaint they are making? and I understood him to say "yes".

Mr. Kirk: I do not know. I do not see through the complexities of this clearly enough to give an answer.

Senator Cook: You are not the only one!

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Chairman, that was provided in the old section 85F and it has been carried forward under section 28(1) of the act whereby if you are on an accrual basis you can elect to change over to a cash basis later on. However, once you have elected, that is the end.

Senator Connolly: In other words, it is up to the Federation to alert the farmers to chose the accrual basis.

Mr. Kirk: There is an option right now whereby you can convert to a cash basis?

Mr. Poissant: You have always had that right, under section 85F.

Mr. Kirk: No, but to return to one.

Mr. Poissant: No, when you are on an accrual basis you can switch over to a cash basis.

Mr. Kirk: You cannot?

Mr. Poissant: You can under section 85F. I do not know whether it reads word for word, but I think you can also under section 28(1). I think it is the same thing. It says in section 28(1):

For the purpose of computing the income of a taxpayer for a taxation year from a farming business, the income from the business for that year may, if the taxpayer so elects, be computed in accordance with a method (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "cash" method) whereby the income therefrom for that year shall be deemed to be an amount equal to

(a) the aggregate of all amounts that . . .

and minus any deductions for the year permitted by paragraphs 20(1)(a) and (b).

That is the depreciation.

Senator Cook: Is your election lost once you have made it?

Mr. Poissant: Section 28(3) reads as follows:

Where a taxpayer has filed a return of income under this Part for a taxation year wherein his income for that year from a farming business has been computed in accordance with the method authorized by subsection (1), income from the business for a subsequent taxation year shall, subject to the other provisions of this Part, be computed in accordance with that method unless the taxpayer, with the concurrence of the Minister and upon such terms and conditions as are specified by the Minister, adopts some other method.

I am sorry. You can elect to be on a cash basis, and if you want to change from a cash basis to an accrual basis you can do so under section 28(3), but you can make only one change. I would like to correct myself. It does not appear that you can start on an accrual basis and go to a cash basis.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Even then, you need the consent of the minister.

The Chairman: If Mr. Kirk and Mr. Munro are able to answer the question which I put to them regarding commencement on an accrual basis on January 1, 1972, and then switching to a cash basis, at their option, when it would become beneficial to them, if that deals with the problem, perhaps that is one of the areas of the problem to which we can look.

Senator Cook: They do not have to answer the question now. They can think it over and let us know. They are not bound by anything they would say now.

The Chairman: Yes. Is there anything else, Mr. Munro?

Mr. Munro: I do not think there is anything else under that section. Perhaps Mr. Kirk could give us a review of item 5, Straight Line Depreciation.

Mr. Kirk: As we mention on page 6 under item 5, Straight Line Depreciation, the option now open to farmers to depreciate assets on a straight line basis should be retained, and recovered depreciation be not included in income. This is the present situation.

We believe this is a very reasonable request. The fact is that in farming income is typically low in relation to investment, obsolescence is rapid, inflation of farmers costs continues year after year, and more expensive and sophisticated machinery, equipment and structures have to be constantly introduced into the business. Often of course there will be no recovery of depreciation, but where there is this should be allowed tax-free as a limited but much needed means of easing the problems of replacement and the necessity of incurring a steadily increasing debt load to keep technologically abreast of the business. We do not view this request as a concession, but as a sensible and realistic recognition and adaptation to the very real problems faced by farmers in their rapidly changing, highly competitive, and inherently very risky business.

The summary of the 1971 tax reform legislation, issued by the Minister of Finance with the new bill states:

Straight-line depreciation will continue to be available for assets acquired before the new system starts. Depreciation will be calculated on the diminishing balance system for assets acquired after December 31, 1971. If the assets depreciated on a straight-line basis are subsequently sold for more than original cost or Valuation Day value, the difference will be a capital gain. As at present there is no recapture of straight-line depreciation.

In the event that the extension of the straight-line system with freedom from tax on recovered depreciation is not retained, we would like to be sure that the provisions of the bill do in fact meet the full intent of this paragraph. This is referring to the paragraph I have just quoted.

By this we mean that farmers must:

1. Be able to maintain a separate bookkeeping on assets acquired up to December 31, 1971, on the present straight-line basis, with assets subsequently purchased separately set up on a diminishing balance basis.

We were not totally clear whether this was a possibility.

2. That capital gains if any, be calculated on the difference between disposition price and original cost or valuation day value whichever is the higher.

There are occasional cases, they are not frequent, where a machine, perhaps because of inflation, is worth more at valuation day than the amount you originally paid for it. That is not a typical case.

We have had difficulty in satisfying ourselves that the bill fully provides for this, and would like it ensured that this is so if, we repeat, the Government does not meet our very sound and reasonable overall request.

Senator Connolly: This may become a subject matter for our consideration based on a comment in the department's bulletin. It is a question of interpretation.

The Chairman: I am not sure, Senator Connolly, in view of the fact that the minister has made a pretty positive statement that based on any assets you presently own and have owned before January 1, 1972, you continue on your straight-line depreciation. But on those subsequently acquired, you are on a diminishing balance basis, which is the usual basis for capital cost allowances now. I would doubt, in the face of that statement, whether you could expect any different regulation to evolve, unless there were pretty strong recommendations made.

Mr. Kirk: We are not questioning the intention of the minister. We could not find those assurances in the bill whereby these two systems could be set up.

Mr. Poissant: It is not in the bill because it is part of the regulations. That is why it is provided in section 20 which refers to the regulations being issued. That is where it should be. Let us hope it will be there.

Mr. Kirk: That deals with the legislative question, which we did not understand.

Mr. Poissant: It is not in the act as such.

Senator Connolly: Unless we see the regulations, we will not know either.

The Chairman: I am sure that when we have the representatives here from the Department of Finance we can specifically ask that question and we are entitled to an answer.

In the event it is indicated that it will be contained in the regulations, I suppose we should insist on an immediate answer for our consideration, suggesting that if we have to wait for the regulations maybe they will have to wait for the bill.

Senator Cook: Or they should indicate on what authority they say it will be contained in the regulations. Such a statement does not mean a thing without authority.

The Chairman: On previous occasions, for instance in connection with the estate tax bill, the departmental officers gave certain interpretations, which the minister undertook would be applied in the department. That is contained in our proceedings of that day.

In the event, for instance, that law courts in their decisions interpret something differently, the minister would be prepared to amend. I agree that there are limitations in enforcing any such undertaking, but I cannot conceive of a minister giving an undertaking and the Government not being prepared to honour it.

Senator Cook: I said that because I thought it would be departmental officials speaking.

The Chairman: The minister should appear with respect to some of these points.

Mr. Kirk: We are not particularly concerned with the technicalities; our main submission is to maintain the present straight-line system.

The Chairman: It gives you a little more annual write-off than the diminishing balance.

Mr. Kirk: That is correct.

The Chairman: After the first year.

Mr. Kirk: It is also a little help in the rather desperate problem of keeping up with capital investment requirements; we would have more tax-free recovery.

The Chairman: There is a big "if" underlying all this: The capital cost allowances do not mean anything unless there is income.

Mr. Kirk: That is correct.

The Chairman: Of course, if you go for a period of time without income you will cease to operate.

Are there any other points on this section, Mr. Kirk or Mr. Munro?

Mr. Munro: No; I think it has been covered from our point of view. I wonder if Mr. Kirk would take us to the next section, on page 8, under the heading "Partial Sale of Farm Land and Re-investment in Farm Business."

Mr. Kirk: Item 6: Another provision that should be made in the bill relates to sale of a part of a farmer's land. As we read the bill it would not be possible—unless under expropriation—for a farmer to sell land and re-invest the proceeds in the same or another farm without realization, and therefore taxation, of capital gains. There are many circumstances when a re-organization of the farm business requires disposal of land and purchase of either other land, or depreciable assets for the farm business. This is particularly important for a farmer who wishes to change to production of another agricultural product, such as a prairie wheat farmer who starts a hog operation. Public policy has in recent years emphasized the necessity of farmers adapting their production to market conditions. The capital gains tax provision now proposed would introduce unnecessary rigidity. There should be no realization of capital gains on such re-investment. This would be a real problem for many farmers, and we request it be taken into account. Not only this, but we would point out that for persons who do not need to invest their capital gains in their own enterprise, the annuity arrangements permit extensive averaging. That is the annuity arrangements in the new bill, which provide up to 15 years of averaging.

The farmer who wishes to re-invest in farming should have a corresponding option, as we have suggested.

There will be many cases where the farmer, on the other hand, will suffer capital losses on disposal of property. If he is faced at that time with new investment in the re-organization of his business, the backward averaging provision may be of little use to him, or unavailable. That is, he may have used them up. We would recommend in such cases that a forward averaging of the capital loss over five years be provided for.

The Chairman: Mr. Poissant, have you any comment with respect to this?

Mr. Poissant: Yes, I have two questions: First of all, you say that a capital loss should be spread over five years. Do you mean to say that it should be spread over any type of income, or only against capital gains in the next five years?

Mr. Kirk: We refer to farming income.

Mr. Poissant: Not only restricted to capital gain in the next five years?

Mr. Kirk: We say that if there is a capital loss presumably one-half of it, if it is in the capital accounting area, could be carried forward over five years, as farm income can be averaged back for five years. However, in the case of a capital loss, where a farmer is re-organizing his business, the availability of that five-year averaging provision may not be there. He may in fact have had very little income during the previous five years, or he may have exercised the averaging option for four or five of the previous five years. He would therefore be faced immediately with a loss, which he should be allowed to apply ahead.

Mr. Poissant: You say the loss should be applied against farming income over the next five years. The brief requests it be applied not only against capital gains, but also farm income.

The Chairman: If there is not sufficient gain, income cannot be encroached on for $1,000 in any year.

Mr. Poissant: Yes, for ever. This is one of the problems that would be faced in drafting the legislation. I refer to the middle of page 8, where it is stated that this is particularly important for a farmer who wishes to change to production of another agricultural product, such as a prairie wheat farmer who starts a hog operation. There would be a difficulty in determining the demarcation line between strictly agricultural and other products. There could be companies or farmers engaged in other than agricultural production. How would the determination of agricultural products be made and any change within that group be allowed to roll over free, which is really what you are asking?

Mr. Munro: Yes.

Mr. Poissant: How should agricultural products be defined? I know of farms in Quebec, for instance, which are farms only in name and are really in the commercial business of raising chickens for barbecues. In your opinion, would that be a change in agricultural products?

Mr. Kirk: Yes; in our lexicon we consider farming chickens for barbecues as agricultural.

Mr. Poissant: Would other by-products remain in the group of agricultural products?

Mr. Kirk: We would not include TV dinners as agricultural products.

Mr. Poissant: Even if they were prepared by the farmer?

Mr. Kirk: Yes, they would not be included in the definition of agricultural products.

Mr. Poissant: That is my point, that there would have to be some definition.

Mr. Kirk: Yes, there would have to be a definition.

The Chairman: Are there any other points that you would like to raise, Mr. Munro or Mr. Kirk? We have already discussed the item on page 9 headed Principal Residence Under Incorporation. We come now to the heading Aggregation of Assets on Valuation.

Mr. Kirk: This is a fairly technical point. It is our understanding that the way the bill now reads, a taxpayer, in setting a valuation-day value on his assets, must adopt, for all his assets as a group, either original cost or valuation-day value, choosing whichever in the aggregate is the higher.

This is clearly not a satisfactory arrangement. The option should be open for each item of property taken individually. We understand too that this latter arrangement is the intent of the Government as a policy matter, and we urge that in amendments brought in the error be carefully corrected. This is an important matter. This matter has come up much more widely than in farm submissions.

Mr. Poissant: You are not referring to the article in the Times and Post?

Mr. Kirk: I was told by my advisers that it had come up.

Senator Connolly: An item-by-item valuation.

Senator Haig: The taxpayer does not set a valuation-day value. The valuation day is determined by the Government, and he values his assets on that base. He does not set the valuation day.

The Chairman: No, he does not.

Senator Cook: It says "A valuation-day value".

The Chairman: It states, "A taxpayer, in setting a valuation-day value on his assets." Are there any further points, Mr. Munro?

Mr. Munro: Not unless you have any further questions. Perhaps we can now turn to page 10, "Adding of Losses to Capital Cost".

Mr. Kirk: The hobby farmer provisions of the bill state that non-deductible losses may be added to adjusted capital cost up to the amount of taxes and interest on borrowings. Non-deductible losses more generally may be added to the capital cost.

The Chairman: The effect of that may be to have less exposure by the hobby farmer to capital gains.

Mr. Kirk: In business generally they may be added to capital cost. Farmers will often suffer losses which, while deductible, are not in fact deducted because of the way the averaging option works out or because he has suffered severe income difficulties over a period of years. Losses in any taxation year, up to the maximum of taxes and interest on borrowings, should properly be added to the capital cost if they could not otherwise be set against income by the taxpayer.

The Chairman: Do you have any comment to make on that, Mr. Poissant?

Mr. Poissant: Yes. In other words, you have the same treatment as is being offered to hobby farmers. In one year of the five-year carried forward loss, you either add the loss of the year to the cost base or you keep the loss and carry it forward against your other revenue, am I right?

Mr. Kirk: That is right. It could not be both.

Mr. Munro: We come now to item 10, Guidance to the Farmer.

Mr. Kirk: This says that we appreciate the assurance of the minister that he will do his best to explain as clearly as he can what this is all about. We offer our co-operation and would like to be consulted in the preparation of guidance to farmers.

The Chairman: I think, Mr. Kirk, you should request an opportunity for consultation. Item 11 is "Transitional Period of Grace".

Mr. Kirk: We were informed by our advisers that it is often very difficult to take full advantage of new laws right away, that the consequences and problems related thereto do not become evident and clear except over a period of time. We suggest that at least one year should be provided for the farmer to review his position, for which period the position of the farmer would be pro forma frozen as at valuation day, for the purpose of making arrangements at any time during a further year's period, so that he does not get caught out on the sheer business of having to act quickly.

The Chairman: Any person to whom it applies is caught by it, if he does not alert himself fast enough.

Senator Cook: We all feel that it is too much too soon, not only for farmers but for everybody.

The Chairman: Yes. The period of grace should be added to whatever the time limits are, to equal a certain period of time within which you can assess your position under the new legislation.

Senator Cook: It should be added more gradually to fit into the system.

The Chairman: It is a terrific job. There are over 250 complicated sections. We know, from former witnesses, that it is not easy to obtain answers. It takes a lot of reading and study. We will have a good look at that, Mr. Kirk.

Mr. Munro: We now have a paragraph on pollution. Would you explain that, Mr. Kirk?

Mr. Kirk: We are saying to the minister that we hope he will give special attention to an adequate definition of pollution control equipment covering farm machinery and equipment. I am not familiar with the area of pollution control equipment for farmers.

Mr. Munro: This is a new ball game that we are in. We have a society that is becoming greatly concerned with various facets of the ecology, and farm pollution is one of them. Technology is concentrating on this matter. We do have smells, odours, and so on. New equipment is appearing consistently and is badly needed to minimize both air and water pollution. But this does not add anything to the income of farmers.

We are asking for some special provision here, that the advice of the Department of Agriculture is sought about equipment that should be eligible for tax exemption. We do not know the dimensions of this ourselves, but we can see it coming.

The Chairman: We are not in a position to define specifically what is pollution equipment, unless you are prepared to give us some help.

Mr. Munro: We are asking that the experts within the taxation department check this out very carefully. We ourselves have some trust in the Department of Agriculture, but we have observed in other jurisdictions where the Government divide themselves, and run in different directions for different reasons, they get out of communication with each other.

Senator Cook: In other words, you are suggesting that they define this pollution equipment, that perhaps we should have public hearings on it, that people should advance their views on whether such equipment should be so defined or otherwise?

Mr. Munro: That may be one answer. We do have some trust in those who are working in the field and helping us to develop this equipment, and we think they should have some say.

The Chairman: It is inconceivable that they would not be concerned.

Mr. Munro: Yes. I hope you are right.

Mr. Kirk: It is our hope that equipment or machinery will not simply be identified as pollution control machines. It will be a complex of technology that will result in pollution control, and what we are concerned about is that they do not so narrowly define what is a pollution control machine that many of the machines the farmer needs for pollution control are, in fact, outside the definition.

The Chairman: On page 12 of your presentation, Mr. Munro, you have a paragraph on depreciation. It has been indicated that capital costs allowances are going to be reviewed. What you are suggesting is a simple single rate to be applied to all depreciable farm assets, namely, 40 per cent on a diminishing balance basis, and 20 per cent on a straight line basis.

Mr. Munro: We feel that the rate of allowable depreciation is in need of review, Mr. Chairman. Let us take as an example, and only as an example, the fact that in my part of the country, southern Ontario, we are greatly concerned right now because we have inadequate corn-storage, and yet if we build a corn storage facility we have to depreciate it at the rate of 2½ per cent, which means it will take 40 years to write off, and before half that time has elapsed the piece of equipment will be obsolete, due to changing technology. It is the same with respect to so many things—feed lots and many other items of equipment and particularly with respect to buildings. The write-off period is hopelessly inadequate.

The Chairman: The minister has indicated that the capital cost allowances will be reviewed. I cannot conceive of them being reviewed in a vacuum.

Senator Cook: Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, he also indicated that they are too generous.

The Chairman: Yes, I believe he did add that with respect to some instances.

Mr. Munro: In taking a feed lot floor, for example, the concrete could be laid twice before the original concrete is depreciated. It is inconceivable that we have to operate in this manner.

The Chairman: Well, we have noted that, Mr. Munro.

Now, you support the co-operatives in their position with respect to this bill. We have not heard from them yet, although they are coming in.

Mr. Kirk: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the co-operatives, first of all, I should explain that, as many of you probably understand, there is a very large overlapping of membership between the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Co-operative Union of Canada. We are supporting their representations. We are not here as expert witnesses on co-operative taxation; we leave that to them. We do, however, support their representations. We are convinced from what they tell us that the provisions of the bill will, in fact, create extreme difficulties for co-operatives in their traditional and self-generating techniques of financing, for one thing. That is leaving aside the basic principles that the co-operatives do not believe they make profits in the first place. But even leaving aside that fundamental question the change from 3 per cent to 5 per cent as the minimum net cost base increases the taxes, of course, and the new procedures for the definition of employed capital are such that the basic techniques of getting capital from the membership and rotating it out again and getting it from the patrons primarily as a means of providing a business facility for themselves as patrons would have to be changed rather radically, and it would seriously disrupt the co-operative method of operation.

That is what we understand from them, but, as I say, we are not here as expert witnesses on the co-operatives. We have been leaving this job to the Co-operative Union and they are the people who can tell you about it.

Senator Isnor: How can you fully support their representations if you do not fully understand them?

Mr. Kirk: We fully support their recommendations because we have a large overlapping of membership, sir. It is just a division of labour that we have not ourselves made ourselves experts in this area. We did not prepare ourselves for such a presentation.

The Chairman: That closes your presentation, does it?

Mr. Munro: Yes, it does, sir, and we thank you for hearing us and we hope you will give due consideration to what we have put before you. I do not think our list is an extremely lengthy one, but we felt it was pertinent.

The Chairman: Well, you heard the course of the discussion. Thank you.

The Chairman: If the committee would remain for a short time, Mr. Poissant is going to take perhaps 15 or 20 minutes to explain the administrative changes. I believe it will be useful to a better understanding of the question.

Senator Molson: Mr. Chairman, before we switch, could I ask what the situation is with regard to the amendments? A motion was put forward.

The Chairman: Did I not mention that last day?

Senator Molson: You may have. I may have missed it.

The Chairman: There is no reason why the committee should not know. The resolution and the request contained therein went forward to the Minister of Finance. I was speaking to the Minister of Finance last Thursday and he agreed that the committee should have the amendments at as early a date as possible. He suggested that when the motion to go into Committee of the Whole takes place in the other place all the amendments which the Government is proposing to put forward will be tabled at that time and they will become available to us en masse right away.

Senator Molson: They have had second reading now, so presumably that motion, will come forward any minute.

The Chairman: Yes, that is right.

Senator Molson: Do you happen to know, Mr. Chairman, how many amendments have received favourable consideration?

The Chairman: No, I do not. I have heard a wide range starting at, perhaps, one hundred.

Senator Molson: Yes, with an upper limit of two hundred.

The Chairman: I do not know, but there will be some advantage in having them all at once.

Another thing we have to look at is the possibility that the review of this legislation in Committee of the Whole in the other place may proceed at a faster pace than we thought it would.

Senator Walker: The fact that they got through second reading is amazing. How could they possibly do that?

Senator Flynn: They had to go to Committee of the Whole.

The Chairman: In Committee of the Whole, where they are dealing with it section by section, there is bound to be much more debate and a great many more questions and explanations. It is pretty hard to indulge in general-debate, I would say, on a bill of this size and scope. It would be a difficult thing to do, and that may be the reason why they decided that it would be better to get the questions going in the Committee of the Whole. In any event, I am sorry I did not tell you this at the opening.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: If I may just say, Mr. Chairman, that has a direct bearing upon the representations we have just heard. Some of the recommendations submitted by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture may be reflected in some of the amendments.

There was an indication from the Government, to start with, that they proposed to bring in each amendment as they got to the section. This would have made it utterly impossible for this committee to function intelligently. At least we seem to have extracted the commitment that all of the amendments will be brought down at one time, and as soon as they are brought down we can relate the amendments to the representations as we hear them.

Senator Connolly: There may be further amendments made as a result of discussions in Committee of the Whole in the other place.

The Chairman: We cannot control that. I should add that your chairman and some of his experts have been thinking that at some stage we should be considering making certain interim recommendations to the Senate; in other words, we should not go through the whole hearing process before we start thinking about what, if anything, we put forward by way of suggested changes. Some of these subjects can stand by themselves, and when we get representations, as on international income, for instance, if we have any views that we think should be reflected in the legislation and are not, possibly our position is that we should feed that into the stream right away.

Senator Walker: That would be a good idea.

The Chairman: The way to do that, of course, would be to make an interim report to the Senate, because anything we are attempting to feed into the stream must go to the Senate; it is then available for distribution, it would go to the Government for their consideration, and might very well in those circumstances become the subject of debate in Committee of the Whole in the other place. We are alert to that situation, and we will try to do something about it pretty quickly.

Senator Walker: Otherwise it would be too late, if you left it to the end.

The Chairman: Yes, it may in one sense be too late. Remember, at some time or other we will see the actual bill, which after it has had third reading in the other place will come to us and to this committee. In that sense it would not be too late, but you will not be able to give it the same studied consideration as if you were feeding it in at this time. We will try to do it reasonably soon, and "reasonably soon", Mr. Poissant, I would say would be within a week or ten days.

Mr. Poissant: Yes.

The Chairman: At the latest.

Senator Connolly: For the first interim report?

The Chairman: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Perhaps I might insert this. I do not know whether you were here at the time we were dealing with this point, Senator Walker. We are not now considering a money bill here, and we are therefore able to deal with the matter on a broader and more flexible basis by making suggestions.

The Chairman: We will move as fast as we can.

Senator Carter: Do I understand you to say that the regulations will be introduced?

The Chairman: No, the proposed amendments that the Government has indicated it will bring forward.

Senator Carter: The whole works, the regulations as well?

The Chairman: No, the regulations are a separate matter. I understood the minister to say that the regulations would be tabled as they became available. Some of them are being worked on now; it is a massive job.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: There is also the problem that you cannot have regulations unless they are related to a definitive section of the law.

The Chairman: But they can be put out in the form of draft regulations.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: It could be done that way.

The Chairman: I would now like to ask Mr. Poissant to make some comments.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Chairman, honourable senators, I have prepared a few notes, which you now have in front of you. There are a few additional things I would like to say. The notes cover sections 150 to 180 of the bill. I have made notes only on the changes made from the present system; anything that is unchanged is not reflected in these notes.

The first section in which there has been a change is section 152(4), which is the old section 46(4). The Minister of National Revenue has the right to open a file on assessment after four years if there was misrepresentation in the original assessment. He could do that only if there was a misrepresentation. If there was no misrepresentation he was bound by the four-year limit. Words have now been added to this misrepresentation provision:

—that is attributable to neglect, carelessness or wilful default.

All my remarks will show that the tax reform reflects the judgments given by various courts in tax cases, many of which have been incorporated into the reform.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Would you advise some of us who are lawyers whether the situation has improved for dishonest taxpayers and resourceful lawyers? If it is mere neglect, unless it comes under the heading of "neglect, carelessness or wilful default", it can still be a serious misrepresentation, and hence the dishonest taxpayer's position is improved.

Mr. Poissant: That is quite right. This is really a legal point.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: This is indicative of fixing so-called loop-holes.

Mr. Poissant: In the case of Taylor the judge decided that any misrepresentation includes innocent misrepresentation, even though the act only referred to misrepresentation. Maybe this is one reason why the old section 46(4) has been amended.

In respect of section 152(5) I say that adjustments on re-assessment after four years are restricted to those items in respect of which there has been misrepresentation or fraud. This is very interesting, because hitherto the department opening a file where there was misrepresentation could check every item in that year, and not only confine the study or examination to matters of misrepresentation. Now the file can be opened after four years, but the examination must be restricted to points in the taxation year subject to misrepresentation or fraud.

I make the additional comment that in the case of Taylor it was held that the burden of proof lies on the minister in the case of misrepresentation or fraud, whereas throughout the general act the onus of proof is usually on the taxpayer. In Taylor the judge decided that in the case of misrepresentation the onus of proof was on the minister.

Again, if the taxpayer waives a notice of the four-year limit he cannot restrict his four-year limitation to one aspect of his dispute with the minister. Once the waiver is signed, he has signed for everything in the four years and the four years are open for all items.

Under sections 161(1) and (2) I refer to the rate of interest. That is new. It will be defined in regulations from then on.

Section 163(1) says:

—attempts to evade payment of tax payable—

I have underlined the following:

—by failing to file a return of income.

It is a little dangerous to have an attempt to evade tax by failing to file a tax return. They say this is really when the tax was evaded, and the return was not filed; but it could be meant to mean that the failure to file this by itself is an evasion of tax.

The Chairman: That contradicts a lot of legal decisions.

Mr. Poissant: Yes.

The Chairman: Section 132 at present says there must be mens rea or a deliberate attempt at dishonesty, to evade tax.

Mr. Poissant: Yes, to evade tax.

Senator Cook: That should be cleaned up, because obviously it is not what is intended.

The Chairman: I take it, Mr. Poissant, you have made notes where we have said that something must be done.

Mr. Poissant: Yes. I think this was already raised in the House of Commons. There is a case on this, which is cited. It is Legare Foundry, 64 D.T.C. 696, where Mr. Legare was successful in saying that he had not tried to evade tax. This is why this section, I understand, was changed. He says you do not evade tax unless you are assessed to pay tax and he said he had not been assessed and therefore he had not been evading. Therefore, it is based now on the filing of the return and not on the assessment, when the bill goes through.

In regard to section 163(2), omissions in returns, this is still the same as section 56(2) of the old act. Here, I would like to make a reference that previously there was a section, 56(3), that says that if you are fined under section 56(1) you cannot be fined again under 56(2). But this saving provision now is being removed. I read the Panko case, 71 D.T.C. 5255, Supreme Court. Under this July, 1971 decision of the Supreme Court, they could apply together, and if you have not got the saving provision you could be penalized on the first one, penalized on the second one, although admittedly the Finance Department and the minister may say this is not the purpose of the intent of the law.

I have raised some points. Omissions in the return could be just in a letter to the department. If you made an error in a letter to the department, in sending additional information, this could be fined under section 56(2). Because you omitted to send your statement in the first one you could be penalized under 163(1) and if you have not got this other provision I think there could be a danger that you could be penalized under both sections.

Now, section 163(3) is a new one. It says that in respect of penalties, the onus of proof rests with the minister for this section only. This section would contradict current jurisprudence. In the case of Pashovitz, 61 D.T.C. 1167, it was held that "the onus falls on a taxpayer appealing an assessment of a penalty under section 56(1)".

I said before that the onus of proof is always on the taxpayer, and so was the penalty under the tax, the onus of proof; and the judge agreed to that, but this they have changed, by this section 163(3), to say that the onus of the proof in the case of any fine or penalty will be on the minister, to prove that the fine is properly charged.

The Chairman: That is a significant change.

Mr. Poissant: Yes.

The Chairman: It is beneficial, too.

Mr. Poissant: It would be, yes.

The Chairman: Let us not do anything about that.

Mr. Poissant: This is to the taxpayer's benefit.

The Chairman: To the taxpayer's benefit, yes.

Mr. Poissant: In regard to section 164(6), I would like to warn honourable senators there about this. I do not know why this section was stuck in there, but I have to go through with it. If you were to read the section in rough language, it comes to this. Where the estate of a deceased taxpayer has suffered capital losses and/or terminal losses in respect of depreciable property, the estate will be deemed to have paid on account of tax payable for its first taxation year an amount equal to the excess of the tax actually payable by the deceased for the taxation year in which he died over the amount that would have been payable were the capital and/or terminal losses deducted from his income.

In other words, they say that if you, by any chance, have a capital loss in the first year after anyone died, you could elect to consider that capital loss to be the capital loss of the deceased, and you recalculate the tax that he would have saved by having himself the capital loss and any additional tax he paid because of that would be deemed to be a part payment of, the estate payment, against the income tax payable by the estate on account of the revenue.

Senator Molson: A capital gain?

Mr. Poissant: Not only capital gains.

Senator Molson: Against income.

Mr. Poissant: If the estate has to pay tax of $50,000—you have to make calculation as to which is the greater benefit. If the benefit is greater to the deceased, you apply that tax against your own tax payable. I do not know why this is there. I should remind you that this section is Returns, Payments and Assessments. That is probably why that section is in there.

On section 165(3), the taxpayer may indicate on his notice of objection that he wishes to appeal directly to the Tax Review Board of the Federal Court. This is rather an important and very good change, I would think. If the taxpayer is sure that on his notice of objection his arguments are put forward, that he has a good valid case, instead of going through the procedure of having the minister to revise the case and confirm the assessment, he may, on his notice of objection, say he wants to appeal directly to the court, that he does not want to go through the proceedings again because it is too long a process, that he wants to clear the matter immediately. If he does this, he must, of course, waive his right of reconsideration. The minister must consent. I do not know what would happen if the minister refused, because it is permitted under the act. It says that he must consent. Also, the minister is deemed to have confirmed the assessment. In other words, he is deemed automatically to consent, to confirm what assessment he has issued originally.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: In connection with subsection (3), I would say that the taxpayer who is so advised by a lawyer is badly advised. I have noticed through the years that one will sometimes file a notice of objection which has no particular merit and it is accepted by the minister. I have found there were notorious notices of objection which have been disallowed, and sometimes by the law of error you can get a minister to confirm a bad appeal.

Mr. Poissant: That is a very good point. In this way, if there were another decision or another settlement that you knew of, you could say that in a previous case it had been agreed, in a similar case.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: You have the right to go to the tax court, anyhow. Why not gamble on the law of error?

The Chairman: We are not making a recommendation.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: No, it is a personal observation.

Mr. Poissant: I think there was a question of time involved, too. In regard to section 165(7), the taxpayer need not file a notice of objection in respect of a re-assessment or an additional assessment when he has objected to the original assessment. As honourable senators know, you may be assessed in one year; the assessor may have found out that in three or four months he has overlooked some items and may re-assess by an additional assessment for the very same year. In the case of Abrahams, 66 D.T.C. 5451, it was decided that once you re-assess for the same year the first assessment is dropped. It is the second one that counts. In the case of Abrahams, he had appealed on the first assessment and he finally discovered that when he was re-assessed, all of the proceedings he had to go through in the first appeal were no longer legally in existence, and he had lost his right of appeal because the time had elapsed, the ninety days and the 180 days. Therefore, now, when you are being re-assessed, all you do is, send a letter back to the court, at whatever stage you are, and you say you are adding your complaint or your arguments to whatever reference was made on the first appeal.

Now I come to section 172 and section 180, and these are both the same. In the past the minister could refuse the registration of the pension plan and he could refuse the certificate for a charitable organization and there was no appeal. You could not challenge his decision. That was the end of it. Now, if he refuses the certificate for the charitable organization or refuses to register the pension plan you have ten days within which to appeal to the Federal Court of Appeal.

Incidentally, I find ten days a rather short period in which to appeal. If you are a charitable organization you may happen to be away when the minister sends the notice, and if you only have ten days you may lose your right of appeal. Although the time can be extended by permission of the Court, I think ten days is too short a period.

The Chairman: Maybe it should be 30 days.

Mr. Poissant: At least.

Senator Connolly: Can you tell us whether it is intended to continue the approvals that have already been given to registered pension plans and to recognized charitable organizations? Or does every registered pension plan have to reapply?

Mr. Poissant: That is a question of administrative procedure. Once you are registered, unless your registration is revoked, you are a bonafide organization.

Senator Connolly: Is that provided for in the transitional sections?

Mr. Poissant: That is a good question. I have not seen it but I imagine it is in the regulations.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I should have thought it would be in the transitional part. Perhaps we could suspend the answer to that question until we have checked into it further.

Senator Connolly: I notice that in certain sections here you refer to the Appeal Division of the Federal Court and in other sections to the Trial Division of the Federal Court. I take it that in every case where there is recourse to the Federal Court it is specified in the act whether it should go to the Appeal Division or to the Trial Division.

Mr. Poissant: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Perhaps you could clarify one point for me, Mr. Poissant. In section 165(3), you refer to the Tax Review Board of the Federal Court. I do not remember the Court having such a division or unit.

Mr. Poissant: You are quite right. There is a typing error there. Perhaps we should make the correction to section 165(3) right now. It should read, "to the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court".

Now, dealing with section 173(1) and section 173(2), if there is a question of law and both parties agree that it should be settled by the Court, if both parties agree in writing they can then go to the Court and get a settlement of that point.

Senator Flynn: They prepare a joint memorandum, do they?

Mr. Poissant: Yes, and submit it to the Federal Court Trial Division. It is decided there instead of having to go through the old procedures.

Senator Flynn: They have that in the Quebec Civil Code now. You can obtain a judgment on a question of law on a joint statement of the facts.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, is that the equivalent of a stated case?

Senator Flynn: Probably.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Poissant: Under section 173(2), with respect to the time taken for determination, the suspension of time would hold for items under dispute as well as for the question of fact being determined, but the time taken would not count for the purposes of the four-year period, the time for filing a notice of objection or the time for instituting an appeal. In other words, the suspension of time applies not only to the item under dispute but applies to everything else as well.

Section 174(1) reads as follows:

Minister alone may apply to the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court—Trial Division for determination of a question of law, fact or mixed law and fact common to two or more taxpayers.

As an example of that, you would have the situation of the buyer and seller of depreciable and non-depreciable assets, where the buyer would say, "my value is this", and the vendor would say, "my value is that". In such a case the minister may apply to the Tax Review Board or to the Federal Court, Trial Division, and have a value fixed by either the Board or the Court. That value is going to be fixed for both parties now, whereas previously it was necessary to go to court for the one and to go to court for the other, if he was in disagreement in both cases.

Now, in this case what the applicant must do in his application is to set forth the question to be determined, the names of the taxpayers to be bound by the determination and the facts and reasons for the determination. He then must send a copy of that to the taxpayers concerned and to other persons likely to be affected.

Senator Flynn: It is the same as in section 173(1), except that in this case he does it alone.

Mr. Poissant: Yes, once it comes to his attention that the vendor has sold an item which is subject to depreciation and other items which are not subject to depreciation. Now, we see this most often in the case of alimony payments, where the person making the payments claims that they are payments and are, therefore, deductible from the income, whereas the person receiving the payments takes the position that they are not payments but are a capital sum and are, therefore, not subject to be taxed. So now the minister faced with this kind of conflict has the right to submit the case to the Court or to the Board for a determination.

Senator Flynn: Mr. Poissant, you said that a copy must be sent to the taxpayers concerned and other persons likely to be affected. I suppose that if someone thinks he is affected he can intervene, even if he does not receive a copy of the notice. In other words, anybody who has an interest in a case may intervene.

The Chairman: Section 174(3)(b) says that the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court may:

(b) if one or more of the taxpayers so named has or have appealed, make such order joining a party or parties to that or those appeals as it considers appropriate.

Senator Flynn: If someone is not advised and not named in the proceedings, he can probably still intervene if he has an interest.

Mr. Poissant: It does not say that. Do you think, Mr. Chairman, that he would have a right to do so?

The Chairman: I doubt it.

Senator Flynn: It is a question of law and the minister is seeking an opinion from the Court. Anybody who may be affected eventually by this decision should be able to intervene.

The Chairman: The question of law is on a set of facts that have arisen in connection with the situation for two or more taxpayers. Those particular taxpayers have to be named.

Senator Flynn: But they say that copies must be sent to the taxpayers concerned and other persons likely to be affected. So I suggest to you that you may miss some of those "likely to be affected" and they should be able to intervene.

Senator Lang: The taxpayers might be corporations and the shareholders might be the ones who are affected.

Senator Walker: It would only be in stated cases.

Mr. Poissant: Let us say there is someone who could be indirectly affected by the decision, and he is not aware of it. But that would not change anything because he is not directly bound by the decision. He could be indirectly affected, but a decision is a decision.

Senator Flynn: I do not know if the court could reverse its stand.

The Chairman: Well, that is a practical matter.

There is something here, Mr. Poissant—at the stage at which the minister applies for the opinion of the court, he has not made an assessment, but yet when you come to section 174(3)(a), it says:

if none of the taxpayers so named has appealed from such an assessment, . . .

But at stage these do not contemplate an assessment.

Mr. Poissant: If he has appealed, then it is too late.

The Chairman: But how could he appeal it? The assessment has not been made.

Mr. Poissant: But a man could have appealed. Let us take the case of an alimony payment, for instance. A taxpayer files a return and he considers that as a deductible alimony payment, and the tax department at the local level refuses to accept it, and he goes through the procedures of appealing it. In the meantime his divorced wife in another remote place did not file a return because she presumed it was not income, and then it was discovered that it was income. Then, I would say under those conditions the appeal has been filed in a proper way and the minister does not have the right to set aside the appeal procedures and say that he is going to appeal directly to the court.

The Chairman: No, that is not the point I am making. The point I am making is that in 174(2) it says at (c):

(c) the facts and reasons on which the Minister relies and on which he based or intends to base assessments of tax payable . . .

Senator Carter: But there is no assessment existing at that time.

The Chairman: There may not be any assessment at that time, because the order he wants from the court is an order determining a question of law so that he can make the assessment.

Mr. Poissant: That is right. I also question the phrase "intended assessment". What is that?

The Chairman: I do not know. Is it something you carry around in your head? Do you write a letter of intent?

Mr. Poissant: That is the first time I have ever seen that in the act.

Senator Connolly: But in that case would not the department make the assessment?

The Chairman: But it does not contemplate that. Look at the material that the minister sends to the court. These are the facts and the reasons on which the minister relies and on which he bases or intends to base assessments and he names the persons. So at that stage there has not been an assessment.

Senator Connolly: The only point I want to make is that he might avoid that by making an assessment in a way that is favourable to the department.

The Chairman: I think the language is not good and it is not clear and we should note it.

Mr. Poissant: I remember when I first saw that in the big book I wondered what was an intention to make an assessment.

Now 178(2) is something new in the act in that if the minister appeals a decision of the Tax Review Board—and by the way this seems to be important because this is the only section where there is a reference to the Tax Review Board—even though you were to appeal to the Federal Court Trial Division directly, it would seem it would not be applied in this case because the reference is only to the Tax Review Board. Now do they want to force every taxpayer to go to the Tax Review Board first and then to the Trial Division and then to the Appeal Court and then to the Supreme Court? Anyway, if there is an appeal from that Board the taxpayer will be refunded his reasonable costs—and I do not know what "reasonable costs" means—as long as the tax involved is $2,500 or less.

Senator Flynn: Well, we discussed that, Mr. Chairman, and the idea appears to be that when the minister appeals and the amount is not higher than $2,500, it is not fair to force the taxpayer to follow before the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court, and I suggest that we should take a note that it should apply in both cases.

Mr. Poissant: Do you agree with that, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Poissant: That an appeal to the Federal Court Trial Division should also be permitted.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Connolly: I could not hear what Mr. Poissant said.

Mr. Poissant: Senator Flynn suggested, Senator Connolly, that section 178(2) should also refer to an appeal from the Federal Court Trial Division.

Senator Flynn: "To."

Mr. Poissant: "From." You can appeal to the Review Board or you can appeal to the Trial Division directly, and if the minister appeals from that one, you get your refund. If he appeals from the Trial Division, the taxpayer would not get it. So you are in agreement that in both cases it should apply?

Senator Flynn: I was wondering whether there was an appeal to the Federal Court of Appeal in the case where there was only $2,500 involved.

The Chairman: Wherever the minister's action takes the taxpayer in that bracket.

Senator Flynn: In any case there should not be an appeal to the Supreme Court.

The Chairman: That is right. But they could obtain leave, and I think it should cover the whole process.

The Chairman: I agree that it should cover the whole process.

Senator Flynn: Even if they go to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Poissant: Why not?

Senator Connolly: Because it may be related to a question of law not necessarily related to the amount involved in the appeal.

Senator Flynn: And not necessarily related only to the individual involved in the particular case.

Senator Walker: But what if the taxpayer wanted to appeal?

Senator Flynn: Well, that would be at his own risk. The principle is that if he appeals in a case like that, it is because he considers there is a principle involved and an important precedent may be created, and therefore the taxpayer should not be penalized because this appeal is in the public interest. But on the other hand, as far as the taxpayer is concerned, he has only $2,500 at stake, so if he takes the risk of going up, then he must assume the cost.

Senator Connolly: There is always the possibility that if he gets to the Supreme Court of Canada, the court might decide that it was a case where the taxpayer should not have to pay the cost.

The Chairman: Senator Connolly, you mean appeal in forma pauperis? That should be quite a hint to the tax collector, if a person is appealing and he says he has no money to pay his costs, that perhaps they had better make a deal with him.

Mr. Poissant: I have another note here that additional assessments, as stated in the present act, have not been defined as yet, although there are many references as to what constitutes additional assessments. Now, under Administration and Enforcement there are only a few comments which most of you are already aware, but I would like to say that some provisions of the present Income Tax Act are not being reported in the new Income Tax Act, but they are being found in the Federal Court Act and the Tax Review Board where you will find most of the procedures for appeal. Some of them were previously found in the Income Tax Act, and they are not being carried forward. They are to be found in their respective acts.

Senator Connolly: Do you suggest that this is a good change, to shorten the Income Tax Act and to lengthen the acts respecting the Federal Court?

The Chairman: No, my own feeling on the matter would be that the taxing statute is a very important statute and it affects everybody, but there should be one place where you can go and look up what your rights and remedies are. Some people do not consult lawyers. They consult tax experts who are not lawyers and who are not chartered accountants and who are not familiar with the taxation system. They would not know enough to look at the Federal Court Act.

Senator Connolly: Did Mr. Poissant say whether it would appreciably increase the number of sections if it were carried in the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Poissant: I would say so. However, I am not a lawyer. I would like to give the Chairman my views on the matter. I am of the opinion that it should not be in the Income Tax Act. The Chairman has suggested that some taxpayers are not soliciting legal advice. I feel that they should. They are trying to interpret this section and they are taking the wrong interpretation. It does not represent their rights because they have not looked at it properly. I think this is a legal matter. The Federal Court Act is a very lengthy document.

The Chairman: The thought I had in mind was that you should be able to find in the Income Tax Act a reference to the sections that are carried into the Federal Court Act, so you are alerted.

Senator Connolly: It could be done by reference to the incorporating sections.

The Chairman: That is right. But you do not have to incorporate each section. There should be a reference, however. That occurs in a lot of the legislation that comes before us now.

Mr. Poissant: Under the old system there were many pages, and I would say that the Exchequer Court took about five or six pages, and the Tax Appeal Board took five or six pages. But of what interest is it to know that the chairman of the Tax Appeal Board is appointed for ten years and he has to be a lawyer? That was in the Income Tax Act. Perhaps it should be a reference.

The Chairman: A reference to the section, yes.

Mr. Poissant: This will just take a few more seconds. It says that the taxpayer may appeal—I think that the wording there is pretty clear. I would like to refer to section 231(2), and this is new to the act:

Minister must return documents seized within 120 days unless otherwise authorized by the courts.

This is as a result of court decisions where the taxpayer has his documents seized as in the case of Lafleur and he went to the Supreme Court and was turned down. The Supreme Court decided that he was not entitled to the document because of an inquiry.

Section 231, subsections (2), (6) and (15) are corrective measures which I think are good and proper.

Section 238(2) is rather new, it extends the penalty to a non-resident who has failed to file a prescribed form on disposition of taxable Canadian property. In other words, he will now be fined just as any other Canadian would be. I admit, of course, that there will be a question regarding collection.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Poissant: But that is their problem. Then, at the end of page 5 under Tax Evasion, Tax Avoidance Dividend Stripping and Associated Corporations, they have not been changed. Mr. Scace referred to that the other day regarding tax evasion, tax avoidance dividend stripping and associated corporations. They are the same.

I would like to make one further comment regarding a comment Mr. Scace made the other day that there is no deemed gift under the present tax reform. I feel that this is an enormous error. There is deemed disposition, but there is no deemed gift. I understand they will have to amend the act to that effect. Under section 4 of the Income Tax Act it described a gift and what was deemed to be a gift. But they removed all of section 4 dealing with gifts because there was no longer a gift tax. If there is no gift tax there should at least be a deemed gift tax. I understand that this is going to be inserted in the amendments. Gentlemen, this is all I have to say.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Poissant.

The committee will adjourn until 2.15 p.m., when we will hear the Canadian Construction Association.

The committee adjourned until 2.15 p.m.

---

Upon resuming at 2.15 p.m.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we have a quorum. We have one brief to consider this afternoon, that of the Canadian Construction Association. Mr. Robert C. T. Stewart, President of the Association and of Cameron Contracting Limited, is present. Mr. Stewart, do you intend to make an opening presentation?

Mr. R. C. T. Stewart, President, Canadian Construction Association: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: With Mr. Stewart are Mr. Chutter, of Ottawa, General Manager of the Canadian Construction Association, and Mr. Sandford, their Taxation Officer.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, honourable senators, we appreciate very much having this opportunity of coming before you, because we appreciate the valuable work that has come from your committee in the past in relation to income tax reform.

To go back in time, since the immediate post-war period the Canadian Construction Association has made numerous submissions to the Government on the need for special recognition in tax law of the construction industry due to the nature of its operations.

Two of the items which have been of particular concern to us have related to the recognition of the problems involved in the assessment of income in construction operations. We have recommended repeatedly that the completed contract method be officially recognized as a fair and equitable means of reporting income. A special brief on this subject was submitted by the Canadian Construction Association in 1949. This was further confirmed in a brief to the Royal Commission on Taxation. It is worth noting that the late Mr. Carter concluded that the estimate of income on construction work in progress was one of the toughest problems he had ever encountered in his professional career. This subject was raised in our brief on the recent White Paper and has been incorporated in our annual briefs to the federal Government.

It might be noted that in the United States this practice has been widely recognized and there American contractors report their income on the completed contract basis for all contracts of over one year's duration. This is more than the Canadian Construction Association is advocating. We suggest that the completed contract method apply to all contracts of two years or less duration.

It is interesting to note, I might say, that when some American companies have come to Canada they have been horrified to discover that here we are required to report income on a more regular basis. Several major contracts with American principals have got themselves into hot water when they have overlooked the fact that on a two- or three-year contract income must be reported annually as the work progresses.

There is one other item of concern to us. We appreciate the provisions that have been made for small business incentive—

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Before you come to that, do you not in practice receive by way of departmental indulgence at this stage the complete contract approach?

Mr. Stewart: I understand that the department does make some allowances when a contract originally contemplated to be completed within two years is slightly delayed due to unusual circumstances. There are special exemptions, provisions or indulgences granted, but it is one of these things that is tolerated in the administration without firm provision for it in law. With the growing complexity of contracts, a two-year contract is not now regarded as a long contract. Some extend for three and four years.

I made reference to the provisions which have been set up for the Small Business Incentive. However, it should be noted that this is perhaps less attractive to the construction industry than to other small businesses within the country. I can only say from my own personal experience that the retention of hold-backs over extended periods of time entails a very substantial tie-up of working capital. Whereas the presently proposed $400,000 of taxable earnings eligible for the reduced rate of taxation is a definite assistance to the smaller companies, the net retained earnings of some $300,000 represented by this does not go very far when major equipment holdings, common in many types of construction, are taken into consideration. There is also the fact that cash flows in construction are frequently extended because of the protracted hold-backs which are often introduced. I know of many contracts that call for a year's maintenance guarantee which, in effect, retains a sizable portion of the hold-back for a period of 12 months after all contract work is essentially completed. So we are concerned about this.

If it is not feasible to change this figure—and it must be acknowledged that some figure has to be chosen as an arbitrary cut-off point—another suggestion might be to provide for accelerated write-offs in other categories of equipment common to the construction industry.

There presently exists one category basically related to earth-moving and concreting equipment which is eligible for accelerated write-off. We have suggested that perhaps greater consideration could be given to other categories of equipment where depreciation, obsolescence, and a straight-forward matter of wearing out during the life of the job, makes it not too realistic to capitalize their initial cost.

The present cut-off point, I might say, is $100 for small tools. With the increasing cost of such tools, this is not as appropriate now as it might have been when it was first introduced.

Senator Connolly: Can you mention the other types of equipment that you have in mind?

Mr. Stewart: I am thinking about specialized equipment, such as flexible tracked vehicles used in some of the northern territories. Pile-driving equipment is another type; also certain types of heavy equipment which represent a major capital cost and which either have a limited life or are required for one specific project.

Senator Connolly: Those are the types of equipment that are now excluded from the regulations?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, from class 22.

Senator Connolly: If you wished to have an enlargement of the class, you would have to be more precise about the categories.

Mr. Stewart: This could be developed. We have had discussions within the association on the particular types that might be more appropriate. I can give the committee more specific cases, namely: "flexible tracked vehicles, four-wheel drive pick-up and service vehicles, floats and float tractors for construction equipment, trucks, et cetera, used in quarries or pits, pile-driving equipment, cranes, aggregate placing equipment, portable asphalt mixing plants and cement mixers".

Those are categories that presently are excluded from class 22. Yet it is equipment that is used in conjunction with heavy equipment that currently has a fast write-off.

Equipment, used in the placing of concrete is eligible for the accelerated, or 50 per cent, write-off. Aggregate placing equipment, which could be an identical or similar unit, is not eligible.

You run into problems in the interpretation and administration of this class which provides that to qualify, the equipment must be designed exclusively for the designated operations.

Senator Burchill: Is not the equipment in that list eligible at the present time?

Mr. Stewart: Not in the accelerated depreciation.

Senator Burchill: What depreciation do they carry?

Mr. Stewart: At the present time 30 per cent. The accelerated rate is 50 per cent. That is in class 22.

The Chairman: What about the wear-out on items that carry the 30 per cent depreciation?

Mr. Stewart: In the first two categories, our feeling is that generally speaking they have a high rate of depreciation because of the nature of the work they are engaged in. Regarding four-wheel drive pick-ups, for instance, we are not suggesting that the ordinary half-ton truck, used on a construction job, should be eligible. However, when you get into a four-wheel drive operation, working perhaps on a pipe line or a major construction site where four-wheel drive is required, the situation is different.

The Chairman: On that basis, since these items would have a more general application or use, it is the particular application or use that gives you the quick wearing out, is that not right?

Mr. Stewart: I do not think that anyone, in practice, would buy a four-wheel drive vehicle unless the conditions under which he proposed to use it were such that he required four-wheel traction. It relates specifically to construction.

I would be the first to admit that there might be an exception. I think it is generally agreed that there is always an exception, where someone might buy a four-wheel drive vehicle to plough snow or do something else, but in the construction industry the bulk of these vehicles are designed for use on a construction site. The floats and float tractors—these are the low-beds that are used to move the loaders and shovels are presently not eligible for the accelerated depreciation.

The Chairman: Would that be the kind of qualification we might put on these items, namely, when used in certain types of operation?

Mr. Stewart: The difficulty there is, how would you relate its use? It might be used 500 times in a year. On 450 occasions it might be used in the moving of class 22, accelerated depreciation, equipment, and the other 50 times it might be used for hauling lumber incidental to its main use.

The Chairman: I am trying to get at a proper classification of these items, when used in the construction industry, that should carry a higher accelerated rate, to say, 50 per cent instead of 30 per cent.

Senator Connolly: Can you police it if you use the words "when used and to the extent used in a particular type of operation"?

Mr. Stewart: Perhaps Mr. Sandford, our taxation officer, can reply to that. He has some past experience of class 22 in discussions with the department. He might be able to offer something regarding the problems involved in defining these categories more specifically.

The Chairman: If you are claiming special treatment—and certainly an accelerated rate of 50 per cent would be special treatment—then you have to identify it with the object that it is related to, and in connection with which you have this quicker wear-out.

Mr. K. V. Sandford, Taxation Officer, Canadian Construction Association: The Committee might perhaps interject the word "primarily or mainly". There is a problem now with class 22, in the words "designed for". A gravel truck might be allowed if it is moving pulpwood, lumber or cordwood, whereas another truck, which perhaps is not designed for this purpose but has been adapted by the construction company, is disallowed. It might be appropriate to take out the words "designed for" and replace them with the words "used primarily for". You would have to add the words "not only moving and placing earth, rock and material, but moving the equipment that does that".

The Chairman: You could drive some rather big trucks through the words "designed for".

Mr. Sandford: There was one road contractor who had an asphalt tank truck. He was moving the liquid asphalt and he was allowed class 22. He expanded his operation to have tank trucks and trailers and had special tractors to move those trailers. The department allowed the trailers, but not the tractors. Their contention was that the tractor was not designed for the purpose of moving asphalt, so they disallowed the tractor portion. This is the type of problem you run into with these words and I think a use criterion would be more to the point.

The Chairman: Use items have been criticized in many respects. I know they have tried increasingly to get away from it in the tariff classifications.

Mr. Sandford: That is right, but the tariff is a one-shot thing as you come across the border, whereas the depreciation class goes on for years, and if it was up to the taxpayer to prove use and primary use by number of hours—50 per cent of the hours, or whatever—then it could conceivably be that one man would have to sell it to someone else who would not qualify. You would have to go back to a different rate, whereas the tariff item applies once and for all.

The Chairman: That is right. It seems to me you would have to work out language that would not be so dependent on the certification of use by the particular person, and it also might relate to the type of equipment used in the construction industry.

Mr. Sandford: Yes, you could relate it to the industry. That would make a good deal of sense.

The Chairman: If you relate it to the industry, if it is a type of equipment used in the construction industry, then, that is the qualification. Is that too broad?

Mr. Sandford: I think that would certainly be an aid to the contractors.

Mr. S. D. C. Chutter, General Manager, Canadian Construction Association: Mr. Chairman, by way of a reference for the committee, in our brief to your committee in April, 1970, Appendix C did develop this whole subject to a fair extent, and some of the items in there might stand as they are. For example, pile-driving equipment is, so far as I am aware, exclusively a construction item. Trucks and other equipment used in quarries and pits, I suppose, have an end use ascribed to them already. Most of these, I think, would have a construction connotation almost exclusively, and I think the appendix went into some detail to point out that with regard to these flexible tracked vehicles and four-wheel drive pickup trucks, a two-year life was about the extent that you could expect this equipment to last in construction. This relates to its actual longevity.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Chairman, you are dealing with relief with respect to small businesses here and you have two approaches, as I understand it. The first approach is the low rate of taxation applicable to the first $50,000 of profit, and the other approach is from the point of view of accelerated depreciation for special categories. Have you considered the latter suggestion dealing with accelerated depreciation? It really comes under the body of the statute proper. Have you considered the justification for the first suggestion; that is, that the first $50,000 be subject to the low rate of taxation and that it should apply to that type of small company where it is established that its fixed assets in ratio to its total assets are in excess of 50 per cent, or in excess of a certain percentage, where you have a situation that distinguishes you from the small retail storekeeper moving inventory in and out, and this type of thing, to which I think you refer in your brief. And your justification for special relief is based upon the fact that you have a high fixed asset position in relationship to your total assets position. Would that not be a better way of approaching it rather than attempting, through this committee, to deal with relief by regulation?

Mr. Stewart: I believe the feeling was that there is the high fixed asset situation which exists in many companies, but there is also the matter of the need for working capital which is applicable over an extended period in many cases. It is somewhat different from that encountered by other small businesses. You made reference to a retail operation. Possibly $300,000—I do not know the earnings after taxes of a retail operation—might represent quite a sizeable organization, whereas in the construction industry you might not have an unusually high fixed asset situation but the lack of liquidity due to extended hold-backs could create the same bind as far as the smaller operations are concerned, or it might tend to limit the effectiveness of the operation. This is why we accepted the small business incentive provided for with this $400,000 total taxable earnings and then said that the Government should also recognize the particular situation that results in other cases in our industry.

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart, I do not think that the small business concept in this bill is of any particular help to the construction industry because the construction industry would have to do much of the financing out of its operations, and there is a limit on the accumulative earnings in this bill, C-259, of $400,000. You can only keep that ceiling of $400,000 from being punctured by periodically paying out dividends to keep reducing it. If you start paying out dividends you are paying out the cash you want to use in your business operations.

Mr. Stewart: The point is that with this proposal contained in our brief, the suggestion is that through the provision of accelerated write-off—

The Chairman: Well, I am just addressing myself to the small business concept. Accelerated write-off would give you cash without affecting your accumulation of earnings.

Mr. Stewart: You still have to earn the cash initially to make your investment.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Stewart: Once you get started on this path it facilitates the healthy growth of the business.

The Chairman: So it would appear that for your industry the proper concept would be one that dealt with your situation and the peculiarities of your situation by adequate write-offs.

Have you any comment on that, Mr. Poissant?

Mr. Poissant: This was one of the comments, Mr. Chairman, which I was going to make.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Chairman, if I may, this committee, in dealing with the White Paper on Taxation, took the position that in so far as small businesses were concerned accelerated depreciation was not the road to provide the relief. That is at page 82 of our Appendix.

The Chairman: That is for small businesses.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes, for small businesses.

The Chairman: We said the reason for it was they did not have a great quantity of fixed assets to depreciate.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: That is why I am drawing attention to that. You make the statement which is confirmed by our report.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Is it correct to say, then, Mr. Chairman, that what the witnesses are talking about not only relates to small construction businesses, but that they are also interested in faster write-offs for a company in the construction industry?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: So that the small business is only a certain segment of their interest.

The Chairman: That is right. That is correct, is it not, Mr. Stewart?

Mr. Stewart: That is right. This would apply across the board, but it would have, we feel, particular significance for the smaller developing companies where the development of working capital is slow at the best of times, and any incentive that can be provided here will lead to development of what we consider would be stronger and more effective construction companies.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, once that $400,000 level is punctured, then you are in that other category.

The Chairman: Yes, in the small business area this would not help very much because once you get up to the $400,000 level the lower corporate rate is gone and you have to pay out dividends to reduce that $400,000 in order to recover that position again.

Senator Connolly: And impair your cash position.

The Chairman: That is correct. Then what they have to do is to turn around and loan the money, take the money out in dividends, pay taxes, and then loan it to the business. The general theory, when we were dealing with small businesses before, was that they were in the peculiar position where they had to generate their own finances. This would appear to be a broad application to the whole construction industry because they do not have the same market availability to finance construction operations. Therefore they have to generate their own finances in whatever ways they are able. Higher write-offs, if you could justify them, would help their situation. I am sorry for taking over, Mr. Stewart.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Stewart, this additional or accelerated depreciation that you are talking about will still not be sufficient, in my mind, to make up for the reduced $400,000, because that would only be the tax on the additional depreciation which you would be entitled to, or which you would have the benefit of. That is really a very small item in the construction industry. Let us take for granted that this is an acceptable recommendation. In my mind it is not enough to suffice for the need which you have. My question is, what would you suggest to improve this $400,000 limit in your case?

Mr. Stewart: I feel that the immediate answer would be to increase the level to $500,000 or $600,000, something of this nature.

Mr. Poissant: That is, across the board?

Mr. Stewart: Yes. Perhaps, we are being a little naive in our approach, but the Canadian Construction Association has always tried to take the attitude that we should not be unreasonable or unrealistic. Unfortunately, taxes are with us and someone has to pay them to provide revenue. This is the level that has been deemed appropriate, and it is being suggested as an arbitrary figure of $400,000. We have not presumed that we are in a position to say that it should be increased 20 per cent or 50 per cent; but if this applies across the board, the accelerated write-offs on certain categories of equipment would tend to offset some of the disadvantages under which the construction industry is working. It is a case of trying to improve or offset the particular disadvantages relating to the construction industry because of the heavy investment in fixed assets and the difficulties that are experienced in raising working capital. As the chairman has indicated, because of the high risk nature of the industry there are not too many public companies, or very many bonds floated or common stocks issued.

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart, the accelerated write-off would enable the smaller construction company to stay at the lower corporate rate for a longer period by keeping it under the $400,000 of accumulated earnings.

Mr. Stewart: Yes it would; and the accelerated depreciation is also an incentive to all companies, both large and small, to maintain more current equipment. You have probably observed as well as I have the number of new machines that you see in the earth-moving industry, large hydraulic shovels, back-hoes, elevating scrapers, heavy dozers equipped with rippers—all of these are made possible because of the accelerated depreciation provided under class 22. There is greater incentive to turn in obsolete pieces of equipment and get newer ones to produce more effectively. This is one of the things that has enabled this section of the construction industry to maintain its position much more competitively than—

The Chairman: You are not arguing against yourself by saying that class 22 and the 30 per cent write-off has improved the situation in the industry already?

Mr. Stewart: It has improved the situation considerably, I would say. It has improved the effectiveness; and this is reflected in the fact that the industry has been able to hold its costs in the face of rising labour costs. What we are suggesting is an extension of this idea to other categories of equipment which are susceptible to actual accelerated depreciation which should also be recognized.

Mr. Poissant: And you do not lose the benefit that you already have from the small business deduction which you would lose in the future.

Senator Molson: Do not most of the smaller construction firms rent the bulk of their machinery on which they might expect a decided benefit from the accelerated depreciation?

Mr. Stewart: Senator, they are in a mixed position. Yes, there are companies that will be renting. My own company is by no means large and we are in a mixed position. We did purchase a sizable quantity of equipment under the accelerated rate. We have purchased new units this year, and we are also renting equipment this year in this category.

Senator Connolly: And the rent you just charge up as an expense?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, this is a business expense.

Senator Cook: But you pay for the depreciation through your rent; your rent is set?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, it is a fixed monthly rental, and that is a total cost.

Senator Cook: The owner sets the rent, bearing in mind he is going to write off the equipment.

Mr. Stewart: Yes, that is right. There is a balance. It is a matter of foreseeing how much use can be made of a piece of equipment.

Senator Molson: This would be the same situation with most companies. They would be in a mixed position, with partly owned, and partly rented equipment.

Mr. Stewart: Yes, we are in that position right now. We have had a particular piece of machinery on rental for four months, and we have it on a basis where we can make application of certain rentals towards the purchase. But we have to ask ourselves: Is there going to be enough work, and can we gamble on this? But this is a problem that anyone in business faces, balancing the capital investment versus the rental operation.

The Chairman: In summarizing, an accelerated rate on the type of equipment that you have been talking about in the construction industry could possibly help in two ways. It could help those who are small business operators by keeping them under the $400,000 ceiling for a longer period, or for an indefinite period, and they would get the benefit of the lower rate; and generally, for the industry, it would increase their cash flow.

Mr. Stewart: And provide incentive to maintain a more efficient operation.

Senator Cook: You could have a piece of equipment that still has life left in it but, because it is obsolete, you could discard it and get new equipment.

Mr. Stewart: Yes. This has been done in the past where, before the accelerated write-offs under class 22 came into effect, it was shown that the contractors were spending a very sizable amount of money on equipment repairs as opposed to equipment replacement; and with the advent of the accelerated depreciation it became more attractive to buy equipment and take the higher depreciation allowed.

Senator Cook: Plus the fact that you would be using up-to-date equipment instead of obsolete equipment.

Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Senator Isnor: Dealing with Senator Molson's question about the rental of machinery, up to the present time you have been arguing this point with regard to the larger companies, have you not?

Mr. Stewart: I think this applies to all companies, Senator Isnor. The smaller companies rent equipment as well as the larger ones. Perhaps with the lack of working capital some of the smaller companies may be compelled to rent because they cannot afford to buy, not having the cash to purchase fixed assets.

Senator Isnor: But the bigger companies, for which your argument is largely presented, do have the cash available.

Mr. Stewart: I think you will find that this applies right across the board. The benefits will increase, certainly, for the larger companies merely because of the volume of purchases. The larger companies may obtain more dollars out of an expansion of the accelerated write-off position, but this is of less significance to them than it is for a small man attempting to finance his first purchase of a piece of equipment.

The Chairman: Do not forget, Senator Isnor, that the smaller companies which would fit into the small business category, by accelerated depreciation may be able to stay longer under the limitation on accumulated earnings and enjoy the 25 per cent rate of tax, whereas the bigger company would be paying 51 per cent.

Senator Isnor: That does not enter into this question of rental very much.

The Chairman: I am not speaking of rental, which is another aspect entirely. Equipment is rented because it cannot be purchased.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Chairman, I would like to press my point. If we were to ask for relief for the construction industry at large, there might be the situation of a construction company having a small portion of its assets in fixed assets, and we would still be asking for an accelerated depreciation simply because it happens to be in the construction business. I believe that would be a good way to have our recommendation refused. If the request for accelerated depreciation were made for the construction industry, not on a functional basis, that is to say not for every company engaged in the construction business but, rather, for companies engaged in the construction business whose capital assets in relationship to their total assets equal or exceed a percentage, there would be a much stronger case.

There could be an extraordinary situation of a construction company functionally that has $100,000-worth of assets, $10,000 in fixed assets and still asks for accelerated depreciation simply because it is in the construction business. If the request were made having regard to the ratio of fixed to total assets, I personally believe there would be a case.

Mr. Sandford: Certain sectors of the construction industry are more capital-intensive than others. The roadbuilding and heavy construction side of it would benefit more from that proposal, whereas a business in the nature of general contracting, not so capital-intensive, would have the same problems with regard to cash flow.

I think your suggestion is that we should produce an alternative that would help all our companies. However, we cannot think of any other than, as Mr. Stewart said, raising the level. However, to tie it to those specifically that have a fixed asset at a certain level might jeopardize some of the other members of our industry who are not in this position.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: You might jeopardize them to the extent that you are not rendering a service to them as members, but you are improving your base.

The Chairman: The accelerated depreciation under discussion is in relation to the equipment and fixed assets of bricks and mortar. Really where they are seeking relief and assistance seems to be in the equipment area.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I was thinking of fixed assets in relation to the categories we are discussing.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Phillips is saying that the same companies are now not buying equipment, but just renting. They would have no relief, and they say this only partly solves the problem of the construction industry, if some have no equipment whatsoever. A ratio of heavy equipment to total assets would perhaps be a criterion for a solution.

Senator Molson: I do not often question Mr. Phillips' opinion on matters. However, I have to question him on this because I wonder if stressing the percentage of assets and fixed assets and equipment would tend to increase unemployment. It seems to me that the construction industry needs relief with regard to some of the settlements that have been made, more than it does in the equipment field. The settlement with the crane operators recently was perhaps a source of some concern to them. However, if we say they must have a high proportion in fixed assets, then presumably this will result in greater mechanization, which will reduce the labour content and therefore increase unemployment.

The Chairman: It might increase the labour content which is required to produce that equipment.

Senator Molson: The heavy equipment, by and large, I think I might say, is mostly not produced in Canada. I am afraid that that is very largely imported. Am I not correct, Mr. Stewart?

Mr. Stewart: There is a high import rate, but there is an increasing percentage produced in Canada.

Senator Molson: It is still very small, is it not?

Mr. Sandford: Perhaps other incentives to the producers would help here, because certainly the labour problems increase the need for mechanization.

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart, would you care to put in summary form what it is that the construction industry is requesting in this area of acceleration and what you hope to achieve?

Mr. Stewart: It is basically set forth in page 5 of our brief. That contains the categories we are discussing and our feeling that the extension of accelerated depreciation to these categories of equipment would be of benefit to the construction industry. It would give a particular advantage to small businesses in construction operations, where the requirements for capital investment and working capital are more pressing than in other phases of business.

I will just mention another item in the current legislation that is of some concern to us. It relates to Joint Ventures; reference is made to it in the brief. Under the new legislation, joint ventures are considered as partnerships, and there are new approaches for the taxing of partnerships.

It presents problems which have not existed in the past, where two or more construction companies may see fit to join forces to undertake a particular project, where financial problems or undue risk associated with the project might be too great for one company.

It has worked effectively. It has been a rather loose and flexible arrangement. From readings that we get on the new legislation, it will tend to restrict, hamper and place additional costs on anyone contemplating future joint venture operations.

Senator Cook: Would the witness mind telling us if the great benefit to the construction industry will also benefit Canada? We are going to do something that will benefit the construction industry. What is in it for us?

Mr. Stewart: I almost wish the honourable senator had given me this question deliberately, because I could launch into a speech on this subject.

In all seriousness, the construction industry is the largest single industry in Canada. It accounts for 18 per cent of our Gross National Product. Everything that the construction industry does affects other Canadians—the local school rate resulting from the cost of building a school, all the utilities, services, hydro electric plants, natural gas pipelines, and so on. Anything that the construction industry can do more effectively, or more efficiently, benefits the whole country. This is the situation in a nutshell.

Senator Lang: How many employees are there in the construction industry?

Mr. Stewart: It has been estimated that there are 568,000 on site and over 600,000 in off-site supporting industries such as manufacturing, design, transportation of constructing, materials, and so forth.

The Chairman: That is an important segment.

Mr. Stewart: If the construction industry is not healthy and not working effectively, the whole country suffers.

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart, would you now care to move on to your next point? Have you finished with joint ventures?

Mr. Stewart: We would like to see something that would exclude short-term joint ventures that are undertaken solely for the execution of a single project, as is common in the construction industry.

Senator Connolly: To be excluded from the partnership rules?

Mr. Stewart: Yes. As we see it, the partnership rules were designed basically to cover groups of professionals, possibly in the legal or accounting fields, in architectural operations, or something of this nature, and not to cover the joint effort of two or more construction companies to undertake a specific project which cannot be practically undertaken by any one of them.

The Chairman: In the course of our study of this bill we had the assistance of a gentleman who had made a considerable study of it. He expressed the opinion that a joint venture was not defined in the bill and that it was not a partnership.

Mr. Stewart: May I say, as a poor contractor, that I would not for a moment question the rulings or interpretations you have received. I only hope they are right.

This is a case which emphasises a remark that I was going to make, namely that there are many items in the bill that are not clear to many people—people who are far better trained in the subject than I am.

I know that the concern which has been expressed throughout the country has been repeated within our industry. There are all kinds of problems. I do not think the department itself really knows what is involved. They may know what they intend. In view of the amendments that are currently being considered, or are being introduced, and the various problems that are bound to arise in the interpretation and implementation of the legislation, we in the industry have grave doubts as to whether it is practical to consider its implementation on January 1, 1972.

There is a high percentage of small companies in the construction industry. I have attended a couple of tax seminars by so-called experts on the implications of the new legislation. I think that I have, perhaps, an average appreciation of economics, finance, and what-have-you; but I am hopelessly lost, and I know there are a lot of contractors who are no better than I am.

The Chairman: Do not say "hopelessly lost," Mr. Stewart. We may find some way out of the morass, or whatever you want to call it.

Mr. Stewart: The ideas are good, but there are so many complications that will have to be interpreted by the department and explained to all the firms of auditors and corporate accountants.

In the case of major companies this may not be too bad, because they have specialists who are quite competent in this field. However, we have a tremendous number of small companies associated with the construction industry in this country, who have an accountant, so-called, who is not a chartered accountant. He has had no taxation training. To attempt to introduce a new system of bookkeeping, a cost accounting system, and one thing and another, to meet the requirements of the new legislation, appears to us to present all kinds of practical problems.

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart, I should tell you that some of us have come to the conclusion that although there is a good deal of complexity in Bill C-259, there are many things which appear, after repeated readings, to be very beneficial.

Mr. Stewart: I do not think I would argue that point. You say "repeated readings". That is an operation that we are going through now, as I see it.

The Chairman: That is right.

Mr. Stewart: The chairman of our taxation committee could not be here today because his company is currently involved in the re-assessment of its position in view of the implications of the bill, in trying to meet the situation, to cope with it, to fit their operations into it, and everything else.

These are all practical problems. Let us multiply them by the number of companies that are affected. I cite construction because that is the field which we represent. You are all familiar with the number of small operators, from the two- or three-man operation to the 10-, 20- or 50-man operation. How can you expect people of this type to conform to the new legislation practically and effectively? With all due respect, the firm meaning and interpretation of the bill has still to be settled.

The Chairman: Apropos that point, in a publication put out by the Clarkson, Gordon Company entitled Tomorrow's Taxes, there is a chapter on partnerships, and a general summary of it, which conforms with your own thinking.

Paragraph I.5 states:

The proposed legislation does not introduce a definition of a partnership. With the introduction of new rules that are considerably more comprehensive and complex than before, it will become even more important to determine whether a partnership does, in fact exist. This issue will become critical, for example, in determining whether a particular joint endeavour or joint venture constitutes a partnership and as a consequence whether property transferred to or from such a venture will be subject to the new rule that treats such a transfer of property as a sale at fair market value, resulting perhaps in taxable capital cost allowances. In such circumstances it will be highly desirable that competent legal advice be obtained to determine the status of the undertaking, preferably in advance of completing contemplated transactions.

Mr. Stewart: It does present one more possible complication, and the suggestion that competent legal counsel be consulted on the matter is good advice, but if everyone else in the country is trying to obtain the same competent legal counsel for advice on the implications of the tax changes between now and the end of December, there is going to be a bottleneck.

Senator Cook: The problem is further complicated by the fact that the learned counsel will have no jurisprudence to go by. They are starting a new act now.

The Chairman: Well, of course, you would have a starting point on partnerships, I would expect, in the provincial Partnerships Act.

Senator Cook: I hope so.

Senator Connolly: What you say, then, is that for all practical purposes it is going to be virtually impossible to get the new system running by January 1st. Have you any suggestions to offer the committee as to detail assuming that the new system is to be brought into effect at that time?

Mr. Stewart: When the legislation is passed we would like to see some period—I do not know what the magic number is; three months, four months, six months—

The Chairman: Or a year.

Mr. Stewart: Some period of time during which there could be adequate publication of the legislation, the development of any regulations that might relate to it, the explanation of any areas that are not clear, and a general educational period whereby businesses could find out what they are supposed to do and how they are supposed to operate. The sudden introduction of new legislation when the people are not prepared for it—and perhaps they should be prepared for it—and when they are not aware of how they are to conduct their affairs to comply with the new legislation, seems to me to be an invitation to chaos.

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart, are there not some aspects of a joint venture that might distinguish that type of operation from a partnership? You have a joint venture when two construction firms undertake a project which they might feel was too big for either one of them to undertake alone. Now, what are the aspects of that in connection with how they would go about laying down their rules of operation? Neither one loses its separate entity. Is that right?

Mr. Stewart: They both retain their separate entities. They simply agree to work together during the course of a particular project and there is some agreement as to the assumption of responsibilities and, presumably, shares in the profit or loss.

The Chairman: You can see a real difference between that and a legal partnership or an accounting partnership.

Mr. Stewart: It is our feeling that they represent quite different fields of operation, and this is why the suggestion has been made that there should be a definition. You could probably arrive at words that would cover the situation, but it is basically for a short term specific project as opposed to a continuing operation designed to cover the affairs of the business.

Senator Haig: Mr. Chairman, is it not sometimes called a consortium?

Mr. Stewart: It could be, yes.

Senator Haig: A group of companies get together to handle a specific project and they enter into an agreement as to the work to be done and the sharing of the profits or losses.

Mr. Stewart: It usually applies to, or is particularly appropriate to major engineering projects where the physical size of the work is beyond the capacity of any one company, or where the degree of risk is such that even if one company did have the physical capacity to undertake the work it would necessitate putting all of its capacity on this one job. Under those circumstances you would have two, three, four, or even five companies pooling their resources. This has happened on some of the major dam projects in British Columbia where the scope of the work was beyond the capacity of any one company.

The Chairman: Mr. Stewart, just pursuing that for a moment. In an ordinary business partnership individuals get together and they decide to carry on a business on a continuing basis, and so they form a partnership. But with a joint venture, two or more companies get together and pool their capacities on a specific project. It is not a continuing arrangement; it has a termination date. It seems to me that there are essential differences and they should be able to work out some definition. I agree that it is hopeless to leave this bill without a definition of partnership because the incidence of liability is great.

Senator Lang: In a joint venture, Mr. Chairman, the two contractors at the same time each enter into a contract with the contractee, do they not, whereas in a partnership the persons joined together do not enter into separate agreements with a third party?

The Chairman: Yes, that is right.

Senator Beaubien: Could we arrive at a definition that would suit the situation, then?

The Chairman: It is practicable to work out a definition, but, equally, it is absolutely necessary that there should be one.

Senator Beaubien: What was done, Mr. Stewart, on the Seaway? A number of companies got together—Iroquois Constructors, and so forth. Did they form separate companies, or—

Mr. Stewart: There were a number of separate contracts and also a number of joint ventures.

Senator Beaubien: Did they form partnerships?

Mr. Stewart: It was usually a joint venture, to the best of my knowledge.

You can have the procedure of creating a separate company for a specific project, but there are disadvantages to this in so far as liability for other people is concerned who may have business with that body. With a joint venture the two or more partners in the joint venture have a continuing liability and responsibility, and this is considered to be in the public interest.

Senator Burchill: Mr. Stewart, has the minister been made aware of the points you are raising before us this afternoon?

Mr. Stewart: Through discussions and representations to Mr. Mahoney, his parliamentary secretary.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Chairman, I am just wondering that once a partnership is defined in the Income Tax Act, would it be agreeable if a joint venture were regarded as a partnership? Or, in the alternative, there could be an election under the Income Tax Act whereby they could elect to be considered to be not subject to the partnership rule and, therefore, be taxed on their share of income of the joint venture. Would that be a satisfactory solution? The partnership rule remains, but if they wished to embark on a partnership arrangement for a specific project where it might be beneficial to them to do so, they could, with the permission of the minister, be taxed on the share of the income from the joint venture and not as a partnership.

Mr. Sandford: I feel that it would be reasonable, as long as it is clear and understood that they have to make an election. Otherwise, they will get caught.

Mr. Poissant: Yes, we do not have to change a rule, and we do not have to define whether it is a joint venture, or if it is a partnership or not. It is merely a case of two people wanting to explore together such new resources, whether it be for this purpose or for that, and we are asking permission to consider this, not as being a partnership for tax purposes, but as our sole business.

Mr. Sandford: If that were a right rather than a benefit decreed by the minister, I think it would be good; and you might have some definition then as to who could make such an election.

Mr. Poissant: In a joint venture, as the Chairman was saying before, in a continuous partnership there is no such provision, but in a joint venture it is one single transaction.

The Chairman: It is a right of election.

Mr. Sandford: Yes, a right of election.

The Chairman: A right of election to take yourself out of whatever may be the benefits in the partnership relationship.

Mr. Cook: You might run into the situation where one would make an election and the other would elect something different.

The Chairman: I do not think they would enter into a joint venture then.

Mr. Sandford: There are problems such as this. If they should happen to get into a partnership, they have to make certain elections in regards to capital cost allowances. One may have a nice profit or a loss that he is carrying forward, and the other may not.

Senator Cook: That could cause a conflict.

Senator Isnor: Mr. Chairman, before we leave this, would you consider the term "equipment", a fixed asset or another term for income tax purposes?

Mr. Stewart: On page 5 of the brief, we identify certain types of equipment which we feel might well be added to the present list of equipment in class 22. These are fixed assets.

The Chairman: You mean they are fixed, of the freehold?

Mr. Stewart: No, they are not fixed, of the freehold. They are moveable, but they are classified for accounting purposes as fixed assets.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions? Have you anything further you want to add?

Mr. Chutter: Mr. Chairman, there was one point with regard to Hon. Mr. Phillips' initial question relating to reporting on the income tax form. He asked whether the Department of National Revenue did not offer certain indulgences in the reporting of income on a completed contract basis; and I think this is one of the main points the Association would like to stress.

So far as I can remember, throughout the whole postwar period, the Department of National Revenue has allowed the contractor, as an administrative practice, to report on the completed contract method for lump sum contracts up to two years' duration. This has worked well, and is used by approximately half of our members. It has worked well so far as we know for the department. It has been an administrative practice now for 20 years or more. The only problem from our standpoint is that it has no legal status, and in the event of a dispute over assessments, there is no right of appeal because there is no legal basis for this administrative practice. What our interested members would dearly like to see, I feel, in the interest of equity and regularity, is to have this administrative procedure, which has been in existence for a couple of decades or more, and is in the United States law, confirmed by being given legal status in our own Income Tax Act, and extended to stipulated unit price contracts. Right now it is restricted, in practice, to lump sum contracts.

The Chairman: You have attached an appendix to your brief.

Mr. Stewart: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: And this is your concept of the language that you would like to have changed from administrative practice to gain statutory support.

Mr. Chutter: Yes, this was prepared last year before the bill to amend the Income Tax Act came out. Basically, this would be the proposal from the Association as to the possible wording.

The Chairman: The Department of Finance would also be in possession of this wording?

Mr. Chutter: Yes, this was filed not only with your committee, but with the Department of Finance, the Department of National Revenue, the Department of Justice and anybody else who might be interested.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Chairman, on this very point, the department recognizes the common practice on the completed contract method but yet in your recommendations, Appendix G—and I agree with you by the way, you are asking for the holdback as well, am I correct? You are asking for the complete contract, and are you not asking in 3(a) on page 2 of this appendix that the holdback be given as well?

Mr. Sandford: The reason that is in there is because we are anticipating what action the Government might take on this bill, and what we are trying to do is legalize the Colford decision if they should come along with some amendment.

Mr. Poissant: I agree with you entirely. I had a case like this in the department. But your brief does not stress that. It merely says the Government recognizes this method of administrative practice. Yet I think, legally speaking, you are entitled to the holdback at the end of any year.

Mr. Sandford: As we understood it, the Bill did not upset this decision. That is the professional advice we obtained.

Mr. Poissant: Is there a recent judgment on that?

Mr. Sandford: The Colford decision has not been upset, so that means we still have it to rely upon.

Mr. Poissant: I know. That should be stressed in your brief that you should be entitled to the holdback, because that is what you are asking in your appendix.

The Chairman: Would you please write us a note specifically dealing with that, since the issue has been raised?

Mr. Sandford: Yes, our whole appendix presupposes this situation. We do not ask for what is in the United States law on completed contracts on jobs of two years' duration, but that the final determination on tax be left until the job is completed and all the results are in.

The Chairman: You want this on a completed lump sum basis, and also on a complete unit price. Anything else?

Mr. Sandford: Mr. Chairman, I think that is all.

The Chairman: We have enjoyed your appearance and your representations here today, and for the manner in which you answered the questions.

Mr. Stewart: That is very kind of you, sir. On behalf of the Association, I can only say we have appreciated the opportunity of presenting our case and trying to explain why we are concerned about the bill's implications to construction in Canada.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

Now gentlemen, before we adjourn, I should tell you what we have for tomorrow. Tomorrow we will meet in Room 356-S at 9.30 a.m. We have three different groups—the National Association of Canadian Credit Unions, the Co-operative Union of Canada, and the Allstate Insurance Company of Canada. And I should point out to you, in case you are making plans for a week ahead, the following week on Wednesday and Thursday, the 20th and the 21st, we have the Canadian Jewish Congress, and Massey-Ferguson Limited. Massey-Ferguson, I take it, will involve international revenues.

Senator Beaubien: And this will be in the afternoon?

The Chairman: No. I am attempting to fit in Alcan Finances also next Wednesday.

Senator Beaubien: They are down for the 27th.

The Chairman: I know, but it would be convenient if we could hear them when we are discussing a similar question, relating to international income, with Massey-Ferguson.

In that case we may enlarge to three hearings on Wednesday, October 20.

On Thursday, October 21 we have a very important group, the Canadian Bar Association. Their hearing has been scheduled to start at 9.30 a.m. Later in the day we will hear the Independent Petroleum Association.

We are endeavouring to hear some of the important aspects which we discussed when we were "going to school" to learn about the bill.

Senator Beaubien: I will not be here during the morning of the 20th. If Alcan could be set down for the afternoon it would suit me better.

The Chairman: Depending on how long the Canadian Jewish Congress takes—I know the points involved—we might hear both the Congress and Massey-Ferguson on Wednesday morning and schedule Alcan firmly for the afternoon. I think we can safely say Alcan will appear next Wednesday afternoon.

We will adjourn until tomorrow morning at 9.30.

The committee adjourned.

---

Published under authority of the Senate by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Information Canada, Ottawa, Canada

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

Banking, Trade and Commerce

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

---

No. 41

---

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1971

---

Fifth Proceedings on:

“Summary of 1971 Tax Legislation”

---

---

(Witnesses:—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Grosart
Beaubien	Haig
Benidickson	Hayden
Blois	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Lang
Choquette	Macnaughton
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Molson
Cook	Smith
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28)

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin
(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, September 14, 1971:

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator Hayden moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Denis, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, tabled this day, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto; and

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Thursday, October 14, 1971.
(49)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9:30 a.m. to further examine:

“Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation”.

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Beaubien, Blois, Burchill, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Desruisseaux, Flynn, Gelinass, Isnor, Lang, Macnaughton, Molson, Smith and Walker—(16).

Present, but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senator Bourget—(1).

In attendance: The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel; Mr. C. Albert Poissant, C.A., Tax Consultant.

WITNESSES:

National Association of Canadian Credit Unions:

Mr. George May, Chairman, Tax Committee and General Manager of the B.C. Central Credit Union, Vancouver;

Mr. Kenneth Weatherley, President of the Ontario Credit Union League and Executive member of NACCU, Ottawa;

Mr. Frederick Graham, Chartered Accountant, Campbell, Sharp, Nash & Field, Vancouver;

Mr. Joseph J. Dierker, Legal Counsel, Francis, Gauley, Dierker & Dahlem, Saskatoon;

Mr. Andre Morin, Director, Research Department, La Federation des Caisses Populaires Desjardins, Levis, Que.;

Mr. Raymond Blais, Director, Technical Services, La Federation des Caisses Populaires Desjardins, Levis, Que.;

Mr. Robert J. Ingram, General Manager, National Association of Canadian Credit Unions, Toronto.

Co-Operative Union of Canada:

Mr. Breen Melvin, President;

Mr. Joe Dierker, Solicitor;

Mr. Martin Legere, President, Le Conseil Canadien de la Cooperation;

Mr. Richard Newberry, Controller, Co-op Federee de Quebec;

Mr. R. H. D. Phillips, Research Director, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool;

Mr. Ed. Chorney, Treasurer, United Co-operatives of Ontario;

Mr. John R. Moore, Treasurer, Maritime Co-operative Services;

Mr. T. Pat Bell, Treasurer, Federated Co-operatives Ltd.;

Mr. G. L. Harrold, President, Alberta Wheat Pool;
Mr. J. A. Dionne, President, Federation des Magasins Co-op.

Allstate Insurance Company of Canada:

Mr. John Atkinson, President & Managing Director;

Mr. Donald J. McRae, Financial Controller;

Mr. Michael G. Welch, Tax Supervisor.

At 12:25 the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Thursday, October 14, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9.30 a.m. to give consideration to the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, this morning we have three groups making submissions: the National Association of Canadian Credit Unions, the Co-operative Union of Canada, and Allstate Insurance Company of Canada.

We have moved to this committee room this morning because some of those making submissions may wish to make them in French. We have the simultaneous translation system working, so that will facilitate the hearing.

The first group is the National Association of Canadian Credit Unions. I have been furnished with a list of the members attending; and they are: Mr. George May, Chairman of the Tax Committee and General Manager of the B.C. Central Credit Union, Vancouver, B.C.; Mr. Kenneth Weatherley, President of the Ontario Credit Union League, and Executive Member of NACCU, Ottawa; Mr. Frederick Graham, a Chartered Accountant with Campbell, Sharp, Nash & Field, of Vancouver; Mr. Joseph J. Dierker, Legal Counsel of Messrs. Francis, Gauley, Dierker & Dahlem, Saskatoon; Mr. Andre Morin, Director, Research Department, La Fédération des Caisses Populaires Desjardins, Levis, Quebec; Mr. Raymond Blais, Director, Technical Services, La Fédération des Caisses Populaires Desjardins, Levis, Quebec; Mr. Raymond Blais, Director, Technical Services, La Fédération des Caisses Populaires Desjardins, Levis, Quebec; and Mr. Robert J. Ingram, General Manager of the National Association of Canadian Credit Unions, Toronto.

I take it those are the appearances. Who is going to make the first presentation?

Mr. George May, Chairman of the Tax Committee, National Association of Canadian Credit Unions: Mr. Chairman, I shall. Perhaps Mr. Dierker might join me. He is our legal counsel. In addition, from time to time, I would like to call on our technical advisers.

The Chairman: Yes, we do not have room for all of them up here, but they will be available. Do you wish to make an opening statement?

Mr. May: Yes, if I may. I would like to put on record two additional members of our delegation who are important to our submission and will probably make a contribution during our hearing today. Mr. Paul E. Charron, General Manager of La Fédération des Caisses Populaires Desjardins is with us; along with Mr. Ives Lamothe, Technical Services, La Fédération des Caisses Populaires Desjardins.

Mr. Chairman, in introducing our submission to the Senate, may we first express our appreciation for the previous report of the committee regarding our earlier appearance before you. We appreciated your comments to the Government on our position.

We should also at the outset like to take cognizance of the amendments produced in the House of Commons yesterday respecting the tax bill, and particularly our position in relation thereto. As you might expect, we have not had much opportunity to analyze these amendments and their effect on the position of the credit unions.

The Chairman: We are in the same position; we have not had an opportunity to view the amendments, and they will not be available until approximately 10.30 this morning. Therefore we are dependent on the newspaper report, and you will have to tell us whether that agrees with your understanding of the effect of the amendments.

Mr. May: We will endeavour to do that. There are some areas which were not included in the amendments, which we interpret from the newspaper report, mainly, and our attendance in the house to hear some parts of the actual presentation. We would like to comment specifically on these, as they will now constitute the key issues with relation to the position of the credit unions and the tax bill.

There are two basic issues in this area. I would like to comment on the amendments and these two basic issues which were not dealt with specifically in the amendments introduced yesterday and call on our legal counsel, Mr. Joseph Dierker.

Mr. Joseph J. Dierker, Legal Counsel, National Association of Canadian Credit Unions: Mr. Chairman, we have had the opportunity of reviewing briefly the actual wording of the amendments, in addition to seeing the newspaper report. We will do so, as they have been presented in the House of Commons.

A review of the amendments which have now been proposed by the Government reveals two areas of concern to credit unions and caisses populaires. First is the area of permitted business activity of credit unions and caisses populaires. The initial draft of clause 137 contained a very serious restriction as to the investments a credit union might make. It was allowed basically loans to members or investments in prime government bonds in the sense of Government of Canada and governments of provinces. This has been modified to permit investment in municipal and secondary government bonds. Credit unions and caisses populaires are, however, concerned about the nature of that definition.

Clause 189, in effect, provides for a penalty tax for monies invested in ineligible investments.

Clause 125 provides for a low rate of tax, basically 25 per cent. This, with some modifications, should be available to credit unions. The Government indicates that they will be introducing some proposals to make this more applicable to credit unions. In that regard we do not have the amendments.

However, we are concerned with respect to the definition of the investments that a credit union can make. If a credit union makes investments other than those specifically defined in that section, a reviewing officer acting for the Department of National Revenue could well construe it as being an ineligible investment under clause 189, in respect of which the credit union would have to pay tax.

We find it a little peculiar that credit unions and caisses populaires should be subject to tax, as other financial corporations, but that there should be a specific provision written into the section defining the investments they can make.

Basically we would like to see provision in the act for a credit union or caisse populaire to carry on a full financial business and exercise the investment powers given under its act of incorporation.

Senator Connolly: Are you referring to clause 189(4)(b)?

Mr. Dierker: I do not have the act in front of me.

The Chairman: Clause 189(4)(b) deals with ineligible investments. Is that the clause?

Mr. Dierker: Yes, clause 189(4)(b) refers to property that was not acquired for the purpose of gaining or producing income from an active business. I am concerned that when this is related to the provision in clause 137 which indicates where a credit union may invest its money which, as I say, is now defined to be government bonds and secondary government bonds, it will be interpreted as being the business activity of a credit union and caisse populaire.

The Chairman: Clause 137 also runs into a number of subclauses; to which are you addressing yourself?

Mr. Dierker: Clause 137(6)(b). You will note that in the initial draft of Bill C-259 basically the investments could be only in bonds guaranteed either by the Government of Canada or of a province. This has been modified in the amendments brought down yesterday to include municipal bonds and public bonds.

Senator Connolly: Is that amendment made to clause 137(6)(b)(i)(A)?

The Chairman: We have not yet seen the amendments.

Mr. Dierker: The proposed amendment is to clause 137(6)(b)(B).

Senator Connolly: (i)(B)?

Mr. Dierker: That is correct.

Senator Connolly: Which now reads:

bonds of, or guaranteed by, the Government of Canada or of a province.

And to that has been added municipal and secondary bonds?

Mr. Dierker: That is right.

Senator Connolly: At both levels?

Mr. Dierker: The wording is this:

or a Canadian municipality or bonds of a municipal or public body performing a function of Government in Canada.

It specifically excludes bonds of corporations, of course, by that definition.

Senator Gelin: Does that include the bonds regarding hospitals subsidized by the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Dierker: I would say yes, if they are guaranteed by the Province of Quebec.

Senator Gelin: It is a guarantee through subsidies: they are not fully guaranteed, as in the case of Hydro Quebec.

Senator Beaubien: The interest is guaranteed.

Mr. Dierker: Perhaps Mr. Morin could answer that.

Mr. Andre Morin, Research Department, La Federation des Caisses Populaires Desjardins: I would think so, Senator. This would be granted, but the problem, at the present time, is that the definition of a caisse populaire is being broadened and it is permitted to have more obligation in its definition, but not to the point where one knows what financial activities it could conduct. In our opinion, the main problem is that we have provincial legislation which is already there to restrict the activities of the caisses populaires, the credit unions. And it seems to us that all the financial activities that are permitted under provincial legislation should also be permitted by legislation as a normal activity because, otherwise, all that is going to happen, we are going to start having a lot of red tape concerning a few investments that can be made. I can give you an example: if credit unions exist in a general finance company, it is a corporation and we are...

Senator Beaubien: That is a very good thing.

Mr. Morin: I agree. If credit unions could support the Société générale de financement, they should pay a tax, an additional tax by buying shares in the S.G.F. because that would be regarded as an investment which is not permissible to credit unions. Provincial legislation provides for it, and at that moment we fall into an administrative trap which must, of necessity, be recognized and there is provincial legislation which already provides for the activity which the caisses populaires, the credit unions, can conduct. Federal legislation which overlaps all that should recognize that, credit unions should be recognized as full-fledged financial institutions. It is not because they are private corporations belonging to a large number of individuals that they should be met with tricky legislation and red tape.

Senator Bourget: Well, what you are asking for is that the conflict which might exist between federal and provincial legislation be eliminated?

Mr. Morin: That is right. Such as section 189 as it now stands, and section 137. We already see a source of conflict there, and it should be specified immediately in 137 that a credit union is a full-fledged financial institution and that the investments, the financial activity permitted under the legislation which governs it is a normal activity.

Senator Connolly: Could I ask this question in English, because I am a little more familiar with it? You speak primarily of a conflict between the law of Quebec respecting investments of co-operatives and the proposed federal act. What is the situation with respect to the other provinces? Is there conflict also?

Mr. Dierker: The answer to that question is "yes."

Senator Connolly: Do you have some concrete proposed amendment which would perhaps reconcile the conflict between the laws of all the provinces and the proposed amendments to the federal tax act?

Mr. Dierker: The suggestion that we are making is that credit unions and caisses populaires be permitted to invest their funds in investments permitted under their provincial acts. That covers the matter province by province. There is also a federal act dealing with some of the centrals.

Senator Connolly: What about subsequent amendments to provincial acts? Would you say that for the time being they should be qualified to make amendments to provincial acts? Is that your idea? It could be that provincial legislatures could amend their legislation from time to time and the federal legislation would not be changed.

Mr. Dierker: With regard to credit unions and caisses populaires making an investment, as from time to time provided under their act of incorporation, as long as the federal act provided that it was an eligible asset within the meaning of section 189, there would be no problem.

The Chairman: The effect would be that the provincial legislature would be writing the ticket, and that would be paramount in the selection of investments.

Mr. Dierker: They presently are, in the sense that provincial governments are the incorporating bodies of credit unions, except for the centrals which operate under the Cooperative Credit Associations Act, which is a federal act.

The Chairman: If amendments come in from time to time, how could you expect a provision now that would say that whatever those amendments might be in the future by the provincial authority, you should have the approval of the federal authority to make those investments? Do you not think that they should have some right of supervision?

Senator Beaubien: Supposing a province said that a credit union could buy junior mining stock?

The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel to the Committee: I think you are asking for something less than you already have in the act. Under section 137(6)(b) you are not restricted to the type of investments covering and including the amendment, because your income need only be derived primarily from and not exclusively from.

Mr. Dierker: I recognize that.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: The word "primarily" could mean, in law, 51 per cent, and you could get the 49 per cent from other sources.

The penalty section, under section 189(4)(b), says:

"Ineligible investment" of any particular corporation means a property that was not acquired for the purpose of gaining or producing income from an active business of the particular corporation.

Surely, the active business of a credit union or caisse populaire is an active business allowed by law. Therefore you do not fall into the danger of ineligible investments. I would say you would have all the protection you need under sections 137(6)(c), and 189(4)(b). My impression is that if we attempted to give you relief we might end up by narrowing your broad rights.

Mr. Dierker: If only I could be sure that would be the interpretation given by the Department of National Revenue to the matter of active business.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Perhaps you should see that I am appointed counsel to the Department of National Revenue!

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: At the usual fee, $1 a year?

Mr. Dierker: I take it that we have your assurance that that would be your opinion?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: That would be my opinion, if you had me appointed.

Mr. C. Albert Poissant, the Committee's Adviser on Taxation: I think that the credit unions, where section 894B is concerned, are perhaps interested in knowing that a company which makes a deposit in a credit union—that should not be classified as an investment which is ineligible but one that is eligible. That is the differentiation; not where you are concerned but where all the other companies are concerned. Is that the interpretation that you want to give it, sir?

Mr. Morin: About section 189, there are two points, two requests that we had made. An initial request was that a credit union be recognized as a financial institution and that any private corporation which temporarily invested funds in a credit union would see its funds invested in a credit union as an eligible investment. You are quite right, this is perhaps the first thing that struck us, that we had to ask for. We confess that when we first presented the matter to the Finance Department, they were somewhat annoyed saying: we are sorry, we forgot. And that amendment has apparently been made, according to the information we have.

The other amendment would be one simply so as not to have any pitfalls concerning the interpretation of section 189 versus 137.

I quite like the interpretation that Mr. Phillips gave: I am not a lawyer, but that pleased me like that. But it seems that one should always be wary of lawyers as a whole.

Mr. Poissant: Unless, as Mr. Phillips suggested a while ago, you have him as a legal adviser in the Revenue Department.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: That would eliminate the whole difficulty.

The Chairman: Would you please carry on, Mr. Dierker?

Mr. Dierker: We are concerned about what we think is a conflict between sections 137 and 189, and I would recommend this matter to the committee for its consideration.

A matter that concerns us greatly is the application of a small business limit to credit unions and caisses populaires. The information presented in the house yesterday was that an amendment was being considered in respect of this, and this part was reported in the newspaper this morning. However, the amendment is not yet available.

The Chairman: What limit are you referring to, the $400,000?

Mr. Dierker: There are two limits. The first is the $50,000 annual limit, and the second is the maximum of $400,000.

The Chairman: Are you addressing yourself to both of those?

Mr. Dierker: It is a combination.

The Chairman: What do you say the $50,000 and the $400,000 should become?

Mr. Dierker: We are suggesting there should be provision written into either section 137, dealing with credit unions, or section 125, which permits a form of deduction for credit unions and caisses populaires which is not presently provided for in corporations.

Senator Beaubien: Deduction of what?

Mr. Dierker: Deduction of income before calculation of the figures. You will appreciate that under provincial legislation and regulations pertaining to credit unions and caisses populaires, money must be placed in reserve by these organizations to provide for their individual solvency.

They are all separate incorporations and are not tied in with the Bank of Canada or anything of that nature.

Once the funds are put in, these reserves become non-divisible and, as such, the credit unions and caisses populaires cannot pass these out.

There is therefore no way that credit unions and caisses populaires can take advantage of the benefit written into section 125 which permits a corporation to continue to have a low rate of tax if it pays dividends, because there is no way it can legally pay dividends from moneys put into reserves.

I suggest that cognizance be taken of this peculiarity and that provision be made to cover it.

The Chairman: In other words, that the $400,000 accumulated earnings would not include reserves?

Senator Beaubien: The reserves would not be considered as earnings?

Mr. Dierker: The reserves would not include the amounts of money that are put into the non-divisible reserve account.

The Chairman: You mean money put in there out of earnings?

Mr. Dierker: That is right. As you appreciate, to a greater extent these moneys are put in out of earnings under compulsory provincial legislation to provide for the solvency of these organizations.

Senator Connolly: Would you tell us something of the history and how these moneys are used? Are they in that reserve account, as you call it, permanently?

Mr. Dierker: Yes. They are put into the organization and they remain in the credit union as long as the credit union exists. If the credit union ceases to exist they will go to some form of charity, generally speaking.

Senator Beaubien: So they really never become earnings?

Mr. Dierker: They are initially earnings of the credit union but they are not capable of allocation.

The Chairman: What use may be made of the reserve account?

Mr. Dierker: These funds can be invested by the credit union and are invested by the credit union in bonds.

Senator Connolly: Allowable securities?

Mr. Dierker: Yes, allowable securities.

The Chairman: But what is the purpose of the reserve?

Mr. Dierker: The purpose of the reserve is to ensure the financial stability of the credit union. These reserves are basically 20 per cent of the income of the credit union per year, on an average.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Dierker: This is speaking in generalities.

Senator Beaubien: You put aside these reserve funds and you invest them. Now, is the revenue earned from those investments considered as income?

Mr. Dierker: Yes, the revenue is income.

Senator Beaubien: It is considered income. There is no problem there.

Senator Molson: Mr. Chairman, what governs the size of these reserves?

Mr. Dierker: In many provinces it is governed by provincial legislation.

Senator Molson: What is it based on?

Mr. Dierker: Generally speaking, it is based on a percentage of the earnings of the credit union. Up to about 20 per cent of your earnings must be put into a reserve fund.

Senator Burchill: Each year?

Mr. Dierker: Each year, yes.

Mr. Frederick Graham, Member, Tax Committee, National Association of Canadian Credit Unions: I believe the limitation, Senator Molson, is carried on by legislation until the amount of the reserve reaches 10 or 5 per cent of the loans outstanding for the shares, as the case might be. In the federal act the amount is 20 per cent of earnings each year until such time as the reserve is equal to 10 per cent of the paid-up capital and deposits, or, in effect, the loans of the organization.

Senator Connolly: What happens after that? Is that amount required to be put in annually?

Mr. Graham: It stops; it does not carry on.

Senator Connolly: Well, I think you had the same idea, Mr. Chairman; that is, if this fund continued to build up at the rate of 20 per cent forever it would amount to an enormous figure.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Chairman, once the limit as set down by federal law has been reached, is there any problem then?

Mr. Dierker: Once the limit has been reached there is no further allocation to this reserve.

The Chairman: Which limit, the federal limit or the provincial limit?

Mr. Dierker: Whichever limit is applicable.

Senator Beaubien: Do you take your choice?

Mr. Graham: It depends on whether you are registered under the federal act or under the provincial act. The only organizations under the federal act are the central organizations. There are only four or five provincial centrals which are registered under the federal act. Under the federal act you must go up to 10 per cent. Generally speaking, the provincial limit is something less. In other words, a local credit union would reach its plateau, presumably, at an earlier stage than a central organization under the federal act.

Mr. Morin: May I comment on that? I would simply like the Senator to realize that it is quite rare for the Caisses Populaires to reach the famous limit on reserves, and I can tell you that if one looks at the province of Quebec, we are obliged by law to place 10 per cent of our annual operating surplus, or of our annual profits, if you prefer, in the reserves. In practice, for the past 20 years we have been carrying an average of 50 per cent of our operating surplus in the reserves; nevertheless during that time, taking one year with another, our reserves have represented about 4.5 to 4.6 per cent of our assets. This is a percentage of the operating surplus, and when it is low, even a high percentage will not necessarily offset the increase in assets; once again, even if we place much more in these reserves than we are bound to by law, we still have reserves equal to about 4.5 to 4.6 per cent of our assets, and if you compare that with other financial institutions you will all realize as I do that these reserves are not out of line, far from it; the other financial institutions all have slightly higher reserves than we do.

Now if we look at section 125, this provides an incentive to force this private corporation to specify the individual owners of its surplus, and that,—the reasoning behind that as we understand it is to enable us, first of all, to have the business income taxed at the individual rate, and then to avoid the problem of "dividend stripping", which occurs later when funds begin to accumulate in these enterprises and the time comes when the shareholder stops investing in the business, when he needs his money, and he has a problem because of his tax. If you take this type of reasoning and try to apply it to the Caisses Populaires, it does not work, because our Act states that this reserve fund is indivisible, no one is about to pocket it and be faced with a problem of "dividend stripping"; it is a joint fund belonging to the entire group of members, for use in providing the small businesses in their own area with financial stability. Bear in mind, as Mr. Viateur said earlier, that the Caisses Populaires are all responsible for ensuring their own stability since they are completely autonomous, and when I tell you that they hold 4.6 per cent of their assets in reserve, and that the other financial institutions throughout the country have more than that, I mean to say that this 4.6 per cent is not exorbitant; there is no problem of "dividend stripping"; the institution belongs to the community which will keep its money there to make its enterprise more stable. There is nothing which would militate in favour of a provision requiring large amounts in it; on the other hand, however, it ensures the stability of quite an important sector of financial activity in Canada.

The Chairman: Mr. Morin, we have been talking so far about what I will call the statutory reserve required by provincial and federal authorities representing a percentage of the earnings of the year which must be put into that reserve and which has very tight restrictions on the use that might be made of that reserve. Now, what you wanted was to have the amount of those reserves not entered into the calculation of the $400,000 limit for small businesses.

Senator Connolly: Or the low rate of taxation for the first $50,000 of profit.

The Chairman: I thought I understood you to say that some of the credit unions put into their reserve funds something in excess of the statutory amount. Now, are you asking that whatever amount they put into the reserve fund should be deducted in arriving at the accumulation of earnings to represent the $400,000 a year?

Mr. Morin: Yes.

The Chairman: You realize you have no limitation and you could build up a substantial operation and accumulate substantial reserves only part of which would be subject to the provincial and federal dictates as to what use you might make of such reserves.

Mr. Morin: That does happen, but you will realize that credit unions have never been limited as to the amount they can put in the reserve. Our reserves are made gradually, at the same rate as assets; believe me, we do not need an incentive.

We already have the weight of democracy behind us; our members—what they put in the reserves of the group cannot be distributed among themselves, and certainly we have a weight behind us where people say, “give us patronage dividends rather than putting the money in reserves.”

The Chairman: Are you saying that whatever amount you put into the reserve in excess of the statutory requirement, provincial and federal, once it gets into the reserve it cannot be distributed other than in the same way that the provincial and federal statutes would permit you to make use of the reserves? Is that what you are saying?

Mr. Morin: I think so, yes.

Mr. Dierker: That is correct.

Mr. Morin: We are speaking of just a calculation of the amount entering into the total business limit concept. We are not speaking of the rate of taxation on this amount. We are speaking of the five per cent on the amount we are placing in our reserves.

Senator Connolly: Perhaps I might act as a devil's advocate here for amoment. If what the witness says were realized, it seems to me that the credit union in question could defeat the purpose of the provisions of the small business limit. In other words, they could put in almost any amount they desired to keep it below the $50,000 annual limit and the $400,000 overall limit. They would seem to be in a position that other taxpayers who might be in the same type of category might not be able to achieve.

Senator Beaubien: They would have an advantage.

Senator Connolly: I think so. I would ask them to deal with that. I am not using a club but I simply say this is the way it looks to me.

The Chairman: Mr. Morin has said that he is not a lawyer and that he is always very careful when talking to lawyers, so maybe we should talk to their lawyer, Mr. Dierker, and see what he has to say.

Senator Cook: Could I ask a question on this point? Is it correct that when you allocate some money to reserve and it has gone once and for all, the members can never get that money? Is that correct?

Mr. Dierker: Yes, that is correct.

Senator Cook: In other words, you have the choice of paying tax on some and retaining some, or paying no tax and allocating it all to reserve?

Mr. Dierker: No, senator, that choice does not exist for credit unions in Canada.

Senator Cook: Not under your proposed amendment?

Mr. Dierker: No. Under the proposed amendment Mr. Morin was speaking about we are bringing to the attention of this committee that a credit union or caisse populaire does not have the ability to reduce this $50,000 and the $400,000 limit in the way a corporation can, because a corporation can by paying dividends get a $4 credit for every $3 of dividends paid out. In the case of a caisse populaire or a credit union, the moneys put into these reserves cannot be distributed. What we are saying is that these reserves are required, that under many provincial legislations there is no choice. Secondly, even if it is not required by provincial legislation, as in the case of Quebec, where reserves in excess of the provincial requirements are put into reserves, this is done under the existing bylaw provisions of the credit union, and to maintain the stability of the caisse populaire. Once these funds are put in there they can no longer be distributed.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: The expression used is “democratic pressure”, I think Mr. Morin said.

Senator Carier: If these reserves are not divisible and cannot be distributed, what advantage is there in building up the reserves beyond what is necessary, beyond what the province requires?

Mr. Graham: That, of course, is the practical answer to what Mr. Morin was saying. Why would the members allow the thing to be built up to such a point to defeat income taxes, when in effect they are losing the right to the moneys themselves? There is no purpose in it, in trying to keep excessive reserves over what can be given back to members.

Senator Carier: Let me put it the other way. Would there not be a disadvantage in building up your reserves beyond what is necessary if they cannot be distributed?

Mr. Dierker: The credit union or caisse populaire will continue to have to be a viable financial institution in the community, and to maintain that position it will have to be competitive with other financial institutions. Accordingly, it will have to pay a return to its members on deposits competitive with other returns, which will automatically commercially limit the amount of money that could be put into these reserves.

The Chairman: That may be so, but as I understood the request that was being made you wanted the right to deduct reserves in any calculation of the $400,000 limitation, no matter how or in what manner, whether by compulsion or voluntary act of the credit union, those moneys went into the reserves. In other words, you want an amendment so that the only limitation as to what would go in excess of the statutory reserves would be what the company decided it wanted to put in there. Now, that is pretty unlimited. Maybe you would have to work out better language to justify that position.

Mr. Morin: This will depend on the Minister of Finance, Senator Hayden, and it is to ask that the first $50,000 of taxable income of a credit union not be considered in the calculation of the total business limit. This is for the first $50,000, but everything over $50,000—at that moment, we come back to the same order, we come under the same standards as private corporations. Everything over $50,000 would be included in the calculation of the total business limit, so that our unions will very quickly come under the 50 per cent rate and our central credit unions, perhaps in the first or second year at the latest will enter into the overall calculation of business. But we want to point out to you that the credit unions—that 93 per cent of the credit unions in Quebec have put less than $25,000 in their reserves in 1969. And those are the small credit unions that we are trying to protect; we are trying to protect them so that they can put sums in their reserves without incurring a high rate of taxation in the more or less short term.

The other question, Senator. We have made a comparison with private enterprise and if you would like to see a few figures, we can hand them out to you. The objective is to make everyone realize, with a very concrete example, that the credit union, in practice, is going to pay a little more tax than a private corporation, and is going to be left with less working capital, and especially, is going to be brought more rapidly up to the high rate of 50 per cent.

My second point: we accept them, those are part of the rules of the game in view of our structure.

But the third point, what is being said is that at that point this runs counter to our legal characteristics.

Senator Bourget: What is the amount of the reserve at this time, in dollars?

Mr. Morin: 105 million, Senator, for Quebec, only, for our Federation.

24264—2½

Mr. Paul E. Charron, General Manager, La Federation des Caisses Populaires Desjardins: It should not be forgotten that the legal reserves are obligatory under provincial legislation, this is a minimum. In actual fact, in our by-laws, it is only ten per cent; 30 per cent is what is being asked for. It should not be forgotten that the reserves which are fixed by provincial legislation are minimums. Actually, the credit unions, through mere caution which experience has confirmed, by virtue of by-laws, have to put 30 per cent, by virtue of the by-laws, because the legal requirement is a minimum, and with inflation, when you take into account depreciations in bonds and immovables. But when we realize that if we examine the figures closely, we have not put too much, nor should it be forgotten, with the taxation that is upcoming, that will not be a further incentive, it will be a lesser incentive. And that is why there should perhaps be a certain compensation by organizing a certain deduction on the 400,000 and by exempting the first 50,000 because there is a relationship between the two; otherwise, at the present time, temporarily, if you leave the legislation as it is, well, the government is going to receive a little more, but I think that by making the change, the credit union will be permitted to fortify itself more quickly and the tax base in "x" years will be greater, and then, the credit union's position will have been strengthened, and the position of the federal government's revenue will have been strengthened. It is a question of administrative prudence, if you like, and that is why we are asking for a deduction and without taking into account that our shares do not increase in value and they are redeemable on request, and our reserves cannot be divided. Therefore, when that is compared to other corporations, a correction must be made; if not, we are in a situation, let us say, I cannot say the word, restricted, which is going to affect, more or less, at least 90 per cent of our credit unions.

The Chairman: What we are trying to do is to understand clearly what it is that you are asking for. Is this it, that the statutory reserves, federal and provincial, be deductible before you arrive at the $400,000 limitation which would qualify for small business; and plus any voluntary reserves that are created by the credit unions; and the amount of those will be a determination by the individual company; and once it goes into that reserve you want it to be deductible, too, before you arrive at the $400,000. Is that right?

Mr. Morin: Our request is to say that the first taxable $50,000, for a credit union, should not be included in the calculation of the total business limit. The problem could be solved in another way which would be acceptable to us also, and that would be to stipulate that all the sums put in the reserves are taxed at 25 per cent, and that would be another advantage, but we will tell you about that right away, we would gain the second time.

The Chairman: Are you saying that the $400,000 limitation is too small? Not if you can make these deductions, but if you cannot, you say it is too small?

Mr. Morin: No, what we are saying is that this section 125 was written with a private corporation in mind and that operates very well with a private corporation in mind. But, take an association like ours into the picture, that is no good, and we have legal characteristics, once again, and we are not talking to you about the social role of credit unions, we are talking about legal characteristics.

The Chairman: You are making one assumption there. You say that for private corporations the $400,000 works beautifully.

Mr. Morin: Yes.

The Chairman: We have had expressions from private corporations where they think it should be $500,000, $600,000, $700,000. So it is easy to speak for the other fellow.

Senator Connolly: Let us say that a credit union has $20,000 that it is required by law to pay into the reserve, and it wants to pay in $30,000. Suppose that extra $10,000 were available to go to the reserve, or to go elsewhere. Where is "elsewhere"? Would it be distributed amongst the members?

First of all, I assume it would be taxed at the rate applicable to credit unions.

Mr. Dierker: First of all, there would be the 25 per cent tax on...

Senator Connolly: On the $10,000?

Mr. Dierker: On the $30,000.

Senator Connolly: All right. Suppose the $10,000 did not go into reserve, how, normally, would you use it? It is taxable.

Mr. Dierker: It would go out to the members of the credit union as interest on deposits.

Senator Connolly: And it would be income in their hands and therefore it would be taxable?

Mr. Morin: Yes, you are right.

Senator Connolly: That is the same position.

The Chairman: Mr. Poissant would like to ask a question.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Morin, you said a while ago that 93 per cent of the credit unions have paid less than $25,000 into their reserves in 1969. Can you tell us what was the profit, or the net income of those credit unions for 1969, first of all, before their reserve, and secondly, after their reserve?

Mr. Morin: The overall profits of the credit unions were 20 million in 1969.

Mr. Poissant: In short, that is where my question is directed. Is the $50,000 reserve which you are asking for a credit union individually too much in my opinion? For the large credit unions as a whole, in Montreal or Quebec, that is alright. Perhaps $50,000 is appropriate, but I think that for the credit unions as a whole, including the 93 per cent you are speaking about, it is perhaps too much and what happens, when you compare a small enterprise, the credit union, would for all practical purposes be exempted for practically its lifetime. Note that under the new taxation legislation, you will be permitted to now deduct reserves to arrive at your taxable income. Then, the $50,000, you will be legally entitled to deduct the reserves from your accounts, the reserves on your investments, other type of reserves, on notes, which means that the income of credit unions fiscally speaking, is going to decrease now—and are you now speaking, in addition to that reserve which will now be permitted by law, of an additional $50,000 deduction per credit union?

Mr. Morin: No. The first question is 93 per cent of the number of credit unions, and the simple answer is to tell you that it is 75 per cent of the income of the credit unions. Does that answer your question?

Your second question, there is a misunderstanding in this room and that misunderstanding should be rectified. We are not asking that the first 50,000 dollars put into the reserves not be taxable in the hands of the credit union; we agree that credit unions pay their share of the government's expenditures and that they be taxed in the same amount as a private corporation, at the rate of 25 per cent. But what we are saying is that section 125 is constructed for a private corporation and if a private corporation individualizes, for example, with the capital stock method which is offered to it, it can then remain at the low 25 per cent rate almost indefinitely. And there is no mechanism permitting a credit union to remain at that low rate, that is the problem. Note one thing, when we speak of private corporations and when we speak of legal characteristics, that is what it is, and when you have a private corporation, if you force, if you suggest to a private corporation through tax incentives like that, to take its surplus earnings and put them into capital stock, you are taking the surplus funds which are divided among the members, and you are putting them into capital stock which is frozen for the company, which is golden working capital. When you ask credit unions to operate in the same way, you are asking them to take money which is in reserve funds that cannot be distributed; therefore, it is our reserve fund that is frozen, and you put it into capital stock which is redeemable on request. It is a move in the wrong direction. Instead of freezing funds and leaving us more working capital, you freeze it. That is why we told you that the mechanism you have provided for a private corporation cannot function for a credit union and for a private corporation. Once again you are going to allow the private corporation to remain several years at the low 25 per cent rate if it individualizes. The purpose of individualizing profits is to prevent the problem of dividend stripping. We do not have it; there is no reason why you wanted to try to force us to go public; on the contrary, the reasons are there to ask the credit unions to build up reserves so that it will be a stable financial institution in the Canadian economy.

Senator Cook: Mr. Chairman, if the amendment proposed by the witness were accepted, would it be limited to the caisses populaires or would it have a wider application? Would it have implications for all taxpayers?

Mr. Dierker: Do you mean would it apply to credit unions as well as to caisses populaires?

Senator Cook: Would the principle involved extend to other forms of co-operative movements?

Mr. Dierker: For the purposes of this discussion let us define co-operative movements as being credit unions and caisses populaires. The principle of non-divisibility of these reserves applies to both caisses populaires and credit unions and only to these institutions. That is the extent of my knowledge, at any rate.

The Chairman: So the amendment would be by way of exception to deal with these two particular types of institutions.

Mr. Dierker: I think the amendment would probably have to be in section 137 where it deals with caisses populaires and credit unions.

Mr. Poissant: If I may ask the witnesses, if the statutory reserve as permitted under provincial law were acceptable as capital for the caisses populaires or the credit unions, and any excess would follow the normal pattern as being part of the $400,000, would that be acceptable? If the answer is no, do I presume that their statutory reserves are not high enough, which then becomes a provincial problem and not an income tax problem?

The Chairman: Mr. Morin, any argument that you make is to support a higher amount in reserve than the statutory reserves, and you say that it is needed.

Mr. Morin: The reserve is needed, yes.

The Chairman: You say you need a higher amount than the statutory provisions would provide, so why should the statutory provisions not be increased?

Mr. Morin: It is a question of the financial stability of the enterprise.

The Chairman: What I am getting at is that you say there are two sources for building up reserves: the statutory requirements, provincial and federal, and also the voluntary contributions which you make out of earnings. You say that that is necessary and is needed to maintain the stability.

Mr. Morin: Yes.

The Chairman: All right, then, why does the provincial authority not recognize that a larger amount of contribution is needed and provide for a larger amount to be contributed to reserves?

Mr. Morin: You would like to see all the provincial legislatures taking the decisions for you.

The Chairman: No. That may be a smart answer, Mr. Morin, but it does not deal with the question at all. If your argument to me was that the statutory plus the voluntary was needed in order to give stability to the credit unions and to the caisses populaires, that would be one thing. Suppose I accepted that, there is still a very obvious answer: if it is needed, apparently the provincial authority does not realize that it is needed because the provincial authority has not increased the statutory amount. So why not have them increase the statutory amount and then we would have no argument here.

Mr. Morin: The other thing I wish to tell you—the reasoning behind it is good—is that there could be provincial legislation which would be the same throughout the ten provinces, which would stipulate that 50 per cent of excess funds be held in reserve. However, when you consider the law governing “Credit Unions” where excess funds are larger, there could be problems for social reasons from one province to another. Now, just considering Quebec province only, the credit unions generally hold more than 50 percent of excess funds in reserve. However, we have to realize that there are already some credit unions that have large reserves and that could justifiably hold only ten percent of their excess funds in reserve, which is sufficient for credit unions that have already built large reserves, while it isn’t sufficient for others. Each has to be treated on its own merit. This minimum of ten percent required by law is a healthy thing, and every credit union should adhere to it. However, practical experience has shown once again that for the majority of credit unions in general, more than that is necessary, even though that law is enough for the larger unions that have sufficient reserves.

The Chairman: But, Mr. Morin, you are asking us to agree to and support an amendment where part of the contribution to the reserve out of earnings would be determined by the individual caisses populaires and credit unions themselves. What we are saying is that you could put it on a stronger basis, if the statutory requirements were increased, or that it may well be that the sum total of the reserves, both voluntary and statutory, should bear a fixed ratio to the deposits—because I understand the reserves are intended to give a certain assurance or stability to the depositors; isn’t that right?

Mr. Morin: Yes.

The Chairman: So there could exist a percentage relationship; that is, the sum total of the reserves, voluntary or otherwise, could bear a relationship not in excess of a certain percentage to the deposits. You tell us what the percentage should be.

Senator Cook: Without a percentage rate, the witness is asking us to accept the judgment of each individual caisse populaire as against the judgment of the provincial legislatures.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Lang: It seems to me that the caisses populaires or credit unions may very well, as a matter of policy, be public rather than private corporations, because they are deposit-taking institutions. Really in one sense I think that this discussion may be academic, because the minister under section 89(1)(g) may very well decide that any particular caisse populaire is a public corporation and, as a consequence, is not entitled to the low rate of tax on the $400,000.

Mr. Morin: Except that you have to take into account section 125 and Part V.

Mr. Dierker: Section 137(7) says that:

(7) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, a credit union that would, but for this section, be a private corporation shall be deemed not to be a private corporation except for the purposes of section 125 and Part V.

The Chairman: That is the way they make the small business provisions available.

Mr. Dierker: That is correct. That is where it comes from.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that individual credit unions have an opportunity to keep themselves as small business corporations in two ways rather than in one way. In the case of the ordinary incorporated company, the company can keep itself in the small business area by paying dividends sufficient to bring it within the $400,000 ceiling. Now, the credit union is saying that it had that right, of course, by paying out its dividends, but it is also saying that the amount paid into—no?

Mr. Graham: No, the dividends are deductible before the computation of income.

The Chairman: Just a minute, now. What I think Senator Connolly is getting at is this. If a private or public corporation which is entitled to the benefit of small business finds it is pushing against its ceiling of $400,000, it can pay out dividends to reduce that amount, but the person who receives the dividends finds that it is income in his hands. Now they reduce the $400,000, but the receiver of the dividend is going to pay income tax on what he receives. Now if a credit union wants voluntarily to contribute, in excess of statutory amounts required for reserves, additional amounts will go into reserves without being subject to any tax.

Senator Connolly: No, it will pay the 25 per cent.

Mr. Graham: It will pay more than 25 per cent.

The Chairman: Do we have to back up and start all over? I thought it was said clearly that what you are asking for is that the statutory reserves plus the additional voluntarily contributions to reserves are to be deducted from the sum total of $400,000 in arriving at the ceiling under which you may operate. Now, did you mean that or not?

Mr. Morin: Oui.

The Chairman: All right, so you meant it. And that means that you are asking that the reserves voluntary and statutory be not considered to be earnings.

Mr. Graham: You still have 25 per cent tax plus. It is a tax-paid transfer, senators, and it will amount to 33 per cent tax regardless.

The Chairman: Well, we have a difference in viewpoint there.

Mr. Graham: Even though it is not part of the $400,000, section 125 only rebates half of the tax.

The Chairman: Are you saying that the statutory reserves that are built up will carry no tax?

Mr. Graham: It will pay a 33 per cent tax. The transfer into the statutory reserves is a tax-paid amount going in so that this has the effect of the credit union paying in respect of that amount 33 per cent tax.

Senator Connolly: I think, Mr. Chairman, that the understanding you had originally was the same as the one I had, but perhaps it was developed later. I heard some one say that it was subject to a tax before it went into the reserve. Then, having put it into the reserve, what you ask now is that it should not accumulate to the point where it is going to puncture this $400,000 ceiling.

Senator Cook: Everybody agrees with that, but the only discussion is how much of this reserve should be considered.

Senator Connolly: All right; both the compulsory contribution and the voluntary contribution should be in this category; it should be exempt. Now suppose for the sake of argument that in the provincial legislature the compulsory amount is increased and increased and increased—this may be an exaggerated example, but I am thinking of the situation of the draftsmen of the federal legislation who have to consider getting, I suppose, the same amount of tax from all taxpayers and the provincial government could reduce the amount of tax that could be collected by the federal authorities by increasing the compulsory reserves. The provincial legislature therefore would be in effect defeating the purpose of the federal act, would it not?

Mr. Graham: The people who are going to operate against that, of course, are going to be the members themselves. Once you transfer it to reserves, you put it beyond the reach of these people forever.

Senator Connolly: So it is not available as dividends.

Mr. Graham: It creates its own defence against that. I mean people would be up in arms if the provincial government said you had to put 60 per cent or whatever amount you like.

Senator Connolly: That is a reductio ab absurdum on my part. But let us take your other arm. You can stop the small co-op from hitting its head against a $400,000 ceiling by distributing dividends to the members, can you not?

Mr. Graham: No.

Senator Connolly: Why not?

Mr. Graham: There was one amendment proposed yesterday to the effect that the dividends paid on shares shall be considered as an interest payment and deductible in arriving at the amount of taxable income. So once that goes through, when we are speaking of the income of a caisse populaire or a credit union, the only income left is going to be the amount which is not distributed which is the amount that goes into reserve. There is no other income. There is no tax creditable on distribution because it cannot be distributed. It accumulates and we cannot distribute it so there is no defence against the $400,000 ceiling.

Mr. Dierker: The real answer on the payment of dividends, senator, is that you are prohibited from distributing the money put into reserves.

Senator Connolly: I can understand that, but I was not talking about those moneys; I was talking about the distributed money.

Mr. Graham: But the only income once the dividends are deducted are the reserves. So you are now left with the income of the credit union. Remember it is all taxable in the individual's hands, but the corporate position is that the only thing left will be the undistributed amount representing the reserves.

Mr. Dierker: I think, senator, we can back up one step on this. The money that the credit union pays as interest on deposits is a business expense.

Senator Connolly: Would you say that again, please?

Mr. Dierker: The money that a credit union or any other financial institution, including a bank, pays on money on deposit is a business expense. So that at the end of the year after adding together your income and expenses, so far as the credit union is concerned all that will be left will be the moneys undistributed, the moneys to be allocated for your reserves. The point we are making is that these are the moneys that will go into reserves.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Dierker, Mr. Morin and I have a difference in view. Are you saying that when income earnings are allocated to reserves in the year (and that would be the net amount of income left after all deductible expenses have been taken away) that notwithstanding the fact it goes into statutory reserve it is income subject to tax?

Mr. Dierker: Yes, it will pay a 25 per cent levy.

Senator Beaubien: But you pay a tax before that money is put into reserve? Isn't the only thing you are afraid of that that money will build up and get you out of the class of the $400,000?

The Chairman: I understand what they are saying.

Senator Beaubien: I know you do, sir, but I was trying to get it clear for myself.

The Chairman: I do not follow it all as a matter of interpretation. Now we are not going to argue out the legal interpretations; Mr. Morin does not want to argue with a lawyer. So, as I say, we are not going to argue it out.

We understand your position and the arguments you have given in support of it, and we can verify whether that agrees with what we think is the interpretation in the act and therefore we can deal with your request on that basis. We have said many things here and we have really threshed out the point very completely. I do not think there is any value in saying anything more.

Senator Desruisseaux: Mr. Morin, what is the present increase in the percentage of the reserves over, let's say, the last two years?

Mr. Morin: Our rate of growth is about 12 percent a year.

Senator Desruisseaux: How much?

Mr. Morin: 12 percent.

Senator Desruisseaux: Deposits?

Mr. Morin: Assets also.

Senator Desruisseaux: I am not talking about assets, I'm talking about deposits.

Mr. Morin: Deposits—it varies on the average—about 12 percent. Deposits represent on the average 85 percent of our assets.

Senator Desruisseaux: Could you expound on that briefly?

Mr. Morin: Yes, going back over the last 20 years, the amounts held in reserves simply maintain these reserves and they are approximately equal to 4.5, 4.6 percent of the assets existing at the year end.

Senator Desruisseaux: Thank you.

Senator Burchill: May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes, certainly.

Senator Burchill: This reserve which is indivisible, are there any conditions or circumstances whatever in which it could be divided?

Mr. Dierker: Yes, on the liquidation of the Credit Union; and generally then it goes to a charity function.

The Chairman: It is there is a reserve in relation to deposits.

Senator Burchill: Yes, but it cannot be touched.

Mr. Dierker: By the members? That is correct, not unless it is wound up. It never returns to the members.

The Chairman: No, but it may go to the depositors.

Mr. Dierker: This is true.

Senator Connolly: In the event of a bankruptcy, for example.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: What happens in the event of a failure of one...

Senator Beaubien: You can deduct the amount of the failure.

The Chairman: Certainly. Quite obviously, the reserve is to protect the depositors, that is assuming the depositors need protection, and the reserves must be available.

Senator Carter: May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman? Is depositors' insurance available through Caisses Populaires?

Mr. Dierker: Just to members of Caisses Populaires, not to members of the Credit Unions.

The Chairman: Not to the Credit Union members.

Senator Carter: I think the answer is "yes"?

The Chairman: In part.

Mr. Dierker: It is available to members of Caisses Populaires but not to the Credit Union members.

Mr. Morin: Saving accounts only in the credit unions of Quebec.

Senator Carter: That is additional protection for the depositors. Would that not be better, rather than building up the voluntary contributions? Would that not be better?

Mr. Morin: We have not asked for deposit insurance. It protects us presently, and the policy of the credit unions is to try to cover themselves, in conjunction with all credit unions, and we hope we'll never have need of this deposit insurance.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Morin, to sum up, your request comes down to this: on the first $50,000, the credit union pays 25 percent. For the remainder, once $400,000 has been paid in and accumulated, the normal amount of tax will be paid. Your request makes sense to me, because if we consider the workings of the treasury as a whole, in effect the treasury is going to receive 25 per cent immediately, and looking at the average tax of shareholders of a normal company who receive bonus dividends, I think the average tax would be seen to be less than 25 percent, or nearly 25 percent.

Mr. Morin: The average tax of citizens in Quebec is 15 percent.

Mr. Poissant: At such a time, the Federal Treasury would immediately gain on the first $50,000, 25 percent, and not being subject to dividends, this tax could not be recovered, while the little company that has profits of $50,000 and that pays out dividends of $50,000 to its shareholders, has paid, for argument's sake, $25,000 in tax; it isn't too rational an example, but for the sake of simplification, let's say the shareholders recover this $25,000 of tax, while the first $25,000 in this case paid by the credit union will, for all practical purposes, be lost in the hands of the members. Therefore, the government could receive its tax almost immediately, if I understand it. Is that what you meant?

Mr. Morin: The example is excellent. The credit unions, as things stand at the moment, are to pay from 3 to 5 million dollars in tax, uniquely for credit unions of Quebec. The change produced by the article under discussion does not change the tax payable by the credit unions. What we are questioning is that we are already going to pay a slightly higher tax than the average tax paid by a private corporation, due to the fact that there is no recovery of the tax payable by the enterprise. But, what we are asking for, is to avoid being pushed up in a short period to a ceiling of 50 percent. And while there are means in existence, moreover, to keep private corporations on the low 25 percent rate, there is nothing of this nature for the credit unions. That is what we are asking for.

The Chairman: Mr. Morin, is it not your case when you transfer earnings into a reserve, you say that they lose the character of earnings because you cannot deal with them in the way in which you would ordinarily deal with earnings. And since the accumulation of the $400,000 is supposed to be an accumulation of earnings, then the moment that you put these earnings in a reserve they have lost the character of earnings.

Mr. Morin: I would agree with this.

Mr. Dierker: Precisely.

The Chairman: Now I understand your point.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: May I touch on a point by way of compromise, being a man of peace? I felt that there is a great deal of merit in the point that the distribution to the members comes to the members by way of interest and not by way of dividend in the normal way, even though it is deductible against the credit unions or caisses populaires. I personally feel that there is a great deal of merit to the point that the statutory reserve plus the voluntary reserve be dealt with in the manner in which you have indicated.

However, I think the Chairman has raised this point: Do you not feel that the combination of both should be related to the deposits or to the total assets, that is, constituting some curve on the freeze? That would appear to make sense. If a recommendation were to come from those of us on the committee who are in favour of this, I think that they would feel more comfortable if they had a little guidance on that point in terms of what the ratio should be to deposits in its totality, or in relationship to total assets.

Senator Connolly: Would Mr. Phillips spell that out more clearly with an example?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Suppose at the end of 1971 you had $1 million on deposit and your statutory reserves plus the voluntary reserves were $200,000—that is 20 per cent for the protection of $1 million on deposit. Now my question is: Is that too high or too low, if you had $2 million of overall assets and you had $200,000 of statutory plus voluntary reserves? Is the $200,000 in relation to the $2 million of assets too high or too low?

The Chairman: Perhaps this is a question that you would like to think about for a while.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: And give us some guidance on.

Senator Lang: Mr. Chairman, the highest figure for trust companies is 20 times.

The Chairman: We would like to hear your views, as quickly as possible, on Mr. Phillip's proposal, by way of summary.

Senator Beaubien: You are asking for a ceiling?

The Chairman: Yes. We would like to hear from you rather quickly because we are going to be giving consideration to this matter.

Mr. Morin: Excuse me, Senator Phillips, but we are to pay immediately, even if we are given the exemption of $400,000 that we are asking for. We are going to pay our part of the national expenses. And concerning that point, we are convinced that we are not dodging taxation in any way and that the credit unions are to pay a little more than the private corporation in that sense; you should not be too preoccupied with the possibility of a credit union having large reserves; here again, because of the weight of democracy, it is very, very unlikely. In the past when we had no tax to pay on amounts held in reserve, we did not build exceptionally large or exaggerated reserves. I do not see why when subjected to taxes, we should change our policy. The danger is rather that our credit unions may try to avoid holding money in their reserves so as not to pay tax, and that is our own business, but in an inverse sense; there is no danger of building exaggerated reserves.

Senator Beaubien: Mr. Morin, there is no danger of you building exaggerated reserves. There is no use in objecting to a ceiling because that is what you want, you want to have a ceiling.

The Chairman: I did not realize that it would take so many words to say "yes" or "no".

Senator Beaubien: We are not lawyers.

The Chairman: We put a question to you, to which you replied in your own good time. Having regard to our demand for some expedition, the answer we would like is "yes" or "no". If you say "no", we would like to know why you say "no", if that is not asking too much.

Mr. Morin: Yes, Senator, it's acceptable, but it doesn't appear necessary to us.

The Chairman: The brief filed on behalf of the caisses populaires and credit unions contains a statement that the restriction in section 137(6)(b)(I) with reference to carrying on business in one province should be deleted. Could we have, shortly, an answer?

Mr. Dierker: Mr. Chairman, shortly, the appropriate amendment has been proposed.

The Chairman: I really want to know why?

Mr. Dierker: Why the credit unions and caisses populaires feel this way?

The Chairman: No; why should there be a restriction?

Mr. Dierker: I do not know why there should be; there was one in Bill C-259 and we requested its deletion. The amendments which have now been filed satisfy that request.

The Chairman: Then there is the obvious answer, and it is a short one.

Are there any other points in your brief which you wish to discuss at this time?

Mr. May: Mr. Chairman, given the amendments which were introduced yesterday, we have touched on the two very complex areas which remain of much concern to us. I think we really have presented the issues which remain outstanding.

Your suggestion that we should make a further submission in writing to the committee with respect to these two outstanding areas in an endeavour to clarify by example and supplementary wording will be followed through immediately.

The Chairman: Does this conclude your presentation? You have expressed the view that we should pay full attention to the amendments which were tabled yesterday. We have not seen them yet, but we will later today and will certainly look at them with every consideration.

Mr. May: Very good. We appreciate the opportunity to appear and your consideration.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: We now have the Co-operative Union of Canada. Mr. Melvin, sitting on my immediate right, is the President. Mr. Legere is the President of Le Conseil Canadien de la Cooperation. Mr. Dierker will also take part in the discussion.

Others present from the Co-operative Union are: Mr. Richard Newberry, Controller, Co-op Federee de Quebec; Mr. R. H. D. Phillips, Research Director, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool; Mr. Ed. Chorney, Treasurer, United Co-operatives of Ontario; Mr. John R. Moore, Treasurer, Maritime Co-operative Services; Mr. T. Pat Bell, Treasurer, Federated Co-operatives Ltd.; Mr. G. L. Harrold, President, Alberta Wheat Pool; and Mr. J. A. Dionne, President, Federation des Magasins Co-op.

Mr. Melvin, will you make your opening statement please?

Mr. Breen Melvin, President, Co-operative Union of Canada: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman and honourable members of the committee. We appreciate very much the opportunity to appear before you this morning. I would like to make two or three brief comments, and then, if I may, sir, ask Mr. Legere if he would care to say a word or two. I should point out that it may not be entirely clear to you that this is a joint presentation of the Co-operative Union of Canada and Le Conseil canadien de la Coopération; and Mr. Legere would like to speak on behalf of his organization.

May I say first of all that the co-operative movement, as represented by those appearing before you and the organizations which they represent, is very greatly concerned at the impact of the provisions concerning co-operatives in Bill C-259 on their successful operation. We are troubled considerably because some provisions appear to require that co-operatives should forsake their particular nature and become oriented toward the return of earnings on investment, rather than the return of savings to members.

Co-operatives have always been user-member organizations and the patronage-dividend method has been employed to return earnings to them. It appears that the proposed amendments would change this emphasis and require that these returns be made on the basis of investment interest.

Secondly, we are quite concerned that the amendments seem to veer away from what we have understood to be the traditional position of Canadian society and of the Government of Canada. That position is that there are three forms of economic enterprise in our society: The public sector; the private sector; and there is the co-operative sector, which is much smaller than the others.

This has been stated on occasion by people in very responsible positions in Government. We have been happy to hear that and have accepted that it was the case. It would appear that the co-operative sector may suffer very greatly. The suggestion might even be taken from the amendments that it has not an important role and really there are only two sectors in the economy as far as business is concerned.

Senator Connolly: What are those two?

Mr. Melvin: The public sector and the private sector.

Senator Connolly: Where would you fit in?

Mr. Melvin: If the amendments are carried forward and become law, it would appear that we would be over into the private sector of the economy without any recognition of the peculiar features of a co-operative business enterprise.

The third point that I should like to make is that upon inquiry from the International Co-operative Alliance, which is the world federation of co-operatives, and is well posted on the activities of co-operatives, we have been advised that although the taxation position of co-operatives in different countries varies somewhat, even considerably, in no other country is a minimum tax base or minimum earnings imputed to co-operatives by law.

This seems to us to be a peculiar and certainly a very different situation. This is one that does not take into consideration the nature of the kind of enterprise in which we are engaged.

Those are the three comments that I wished to make by way of introduction.

The Chairman: Do you say that there is no element of earnings in the operation of a co-operative?

Mr. Melvin: No. I would not go that far.

The Chairman: What happens to the earnings, if there are some?

Mr. Melvin: I would suggest that in the case of a co-operative, the decision of the members of the co-operative, which is made voluntarily, is that earnings would be distributed among them—and they are also the owners—rather than on the basis of investment they have made by way of capital investment or purchase of shares; that it should be distributed to them on the basis of the business they do with the co-operative. In other words, use the patronage dividend device to make this distribution.

The Chairman: Would you not agree that if you are distributing earnings, the person who receives them should be subject to tax?

Mr. Melvin: This applies to the great majority of members of co-operatives, particularly farm marketing or fishery co-operatives. They take these earnings into consideration when determining their own income tax position each year.

The Chairman: Do they take them into consideration at less than the full amount of the earnings that are paid out?

Mr. Melvin: No. The patronage dividend which they receive reduces the cost of their operation and so becomes a part of the calculation of their income for the year.

The Chairman: When you say “part of the calculation”, what do you mean?

Mr. Melvin: It becomes involved in the procedure, in the calculation of their income.

The Chairman: Can you give us an illustration?

Mr. Melvin: Perhaps I should ask Mr. Dierker to deal with this matter in more technical terms.

The Chairman: Mr. Dierker, let us take an example. Supposing a co-operative has earnings of, say, $100,000. Would you please follow that through and tell us what happens to it?

Mr. Dierker: If the co-operatives propose that they be able to distribute this as patronage refunds to their members, and if they are so distributed, the $100,000 will be taken into individual income.

The Chairman: Will be taken into individual income?

Mr. Dierker: Yes.

Senator Beaubien: Is there any tax paid on it first?

Mr. Dierker: You mean under the proposal or under this example? If you have $100,000 of earnings at today's date, a co-operative is permitted to pay this out as a patronage refund, subject to the limitation that they cannot pay patronage refunds so as to reduce their income below a figure equal to 3 per cent of capital employed.

Senator Burchill: On what basis is the patronage dividend based? How is it calculated?

Mr. Dierker: The patronage dividend is calculated on the business done by the member with the co-operative.

The Chairman: And he pays tax on his marginal rate.

Senator Burchill: I get a patronage dividend, and I also have to pay taxes. I wondered what the patronage dividend was based on. I could never figure it out.

Mr. Dierker: The patronage dividend is a deduction to the co-operative as an expense, and it will be taken into your personal income.

Senator Beaubien: Supposing I buy a bulldozer at a cost of $60,000. At the end of the year the co-operative makes some money and I get something back. Do I show that as a reduction in the cost of the bulldozer, or do I show it as coming in as income?

Mr. Dierker: You will show it as coming in as taxable income.

The Chairman: Let us take the example of $100,000 of earnings. There is a limitation on the amount of that you can pay out in patronage dividends.

Mr. Dierker: That is correct.

The Chairman: Is or is not the rest of it, in the hands of the co-operative, subject to tax?

Mr. Dierker: If it is kept in the hands of the co-operatives, it is subject to tax at the standard corporate rate. However, a co-operative can distribute this as a patronage refund after it sets aside the minimum capital employed.

The Chairman: What is the character of the patronage refund in the hands of the co-operative and in the hands of the recipient?

Mr. Dierker: In the hands of the co-operative, it is an expense. In the hands of the recipient, it is income.

The Chairman: The whole of the $100,000 would not be subject to any tax in the hands of the co-operative?

Mr. Dierker: Except for the capital employed feature, yes.

The Chairman: With respect to the capital employed feature, the limitation governs the amount that is paid out in patronage dividends?

Mr. Dierker: That is correct.

The Chairman: But to the co-operative, what is its character in the hands of the co-operative the instant before they pay it out? Is it taxable to the co-operative?

Mr. Dierker: Yes, it is. There are no deductions.

Senator Connolly: Taxable at the corporate rate?

Mr. Dierker: Yes.

Senator Connolly: If it is not a small business company. If it does not comply, it pays the 51 per cent or 52 per cent, or whatever it is?

Mr. Dierker: That is correct. As a point of clarification, the presentation being made here today, once we get into it properly, is not on the basis that a co-operative should not pay tax. We are not quarreling about the payment of tax on moneys kept in the hands of the co-operative; nor are we quarreling about the payment of tax on business done with non-members.

The point we are quarreling about is that there should be a capital employed concept put in between a co-operative and the members, limiting the return that can be paid to members.

Basically, what we are saying is that a co-operative is a form of partnership, a large corporate partnership, and that the earnings be in the hands of the members.

The Chairman: Why limit the amount that is being paid by a co-operative to a member if the whole amount in the hands of the member is subject to his marginal rate of income tax, without any credits?

Mr. Dierker: You mean why is this done?

The Chairman: Yes. Put it this way: Why should it be done?

Mr. Dierker: We do not think it should be done. Our position is that it should not be done. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I could explain the features of Bill C-259 with respect to capital employed?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Dierker: Under the present proposal a co-operative is restricted in the amount of patronage refund that it can pay to its members on the business done with the members, so that it cannot reduce the income below a figure equalling 5 per cent of capital employed.

To the best of my knowledge, this is the only place where in taxation law we have a tax imposed directly on capital where capital is deemed to produce some money. If you take a corporation as an example, honourable senators, there is no requirement on a corporation to produce some money on its capital; it can distribute it. There is, however, a limit imposed on a co-operative.

A co-operative can do away with this 5 per cent limit if it pays out this 5 per cent by way of interest on shares or on member equity, so called. It is important to realize that this payment must be by way of interest. If the co-operative pays a return to its members on capital by way of dividends it cannot reduce this 5 per cent. If it pays interest, however, on its share capital it can in fact reduce its income down to zero.

It is a most peculiar feature because what the tax provision says is that co-operatives may zero out their taxable income if they do two things: firstly, pay interest on member equity equal to 5 per cent; and, secondly, they can then pay the balance out as patronage refunds.

Senator Connolly: Would you give us an example of that?

Mr. Dierker: Let us take $100,000 . . .

Senator Connolly: Please identify the $100,000. This is earnings of the co-operative for the year?

Mr. Dierker: At the end of the year.

Senator Connolly: All right.

Mr. Dierker: Let us take the figure of $100,000 before any distribution. Now, supposing, for the purposes of this example, that the 5 per cent of capital employed amounted to $20,000; at a 50 per cent rate of taxation your tax would amount to $10,000. That would leave you $80,000 that you could pay out as patronage refund resulting in an expense to the co-operative and income to the members. You can pay tax on this $20,000 that you have as your capital employed feature, and at the rate of 50 per cent that will be $10,000, or if we pay $20,000 out in interest we can simply reduce that down to zero, provided we paid the interest to the members.

Senator Walker: You are going a little fast. Just go back over that again, please.

Mr. Dierker: You can do two things with the $20,000. You can pay tax on it . . .

Senator Connolly: And then is the balance available for distribution?

Mr. Dierker: Well, we will not talk about distribution right now.

You can pay tax on the $20,000 or it can go into a tax-paying reserve, or you can get rid of it by paying interest on your member equity; not by paying dividends, but by paying interest on member equity.

The Chairman: It will then become a deductible expense.

Mr. Dierker: Yes, it will become an expense for the co-operative and income to the member. Now, if you put that $10,000 into your reserve and then pay it out as patronage refunds, there is no tax credit on it. If a corporation paid it out there would be a tax credit, but in the case of a co-operative paying it out as a patronage refund there is no tax credit. If a co-operative pays it into its reserve, that $10,000 would be re-taxed every year on the basis of the capital employed.

Our position is simply this: If the Government permits the reduction of the $20,000 by payment of interest to the members, why will it not let us pay it out as patronage refund and have it taxable in the hands of the members?

The Chairman: It would accomplish the same thing.

Senator Lang: It would avoid double taxation.

Mr. Dierker: It does create some serious problems in the capital employed formula as it is presently drafted.

One of the things that honourable senators should appreciate is that the increased tax load is not 3 to 5 per cent. As I mentioned, there is a present 3 per cent capital employed formula. It is not simply a 3 to 5 per cent increase. The formula has been substantially adjusted.

At the present time the interest that you can deduct, for instance, is the interest on borrowed moneys, other than to banks or credit unions. This is no longer permitted. Basically, there has been an addition to what must be included in capital employed and a reduction in what you can deduct.

The Chairman: Mr. Dierker, if we took your example or your suggestion, that if you do not have this capital formula limiting the amount of the patronage dividend and the whole amount were paid out as a patronage dividend, in the hands of the recipient that would be subject to his marginal rate of tax and the co-operative would pay no tax.

Mr. Dierker: Except for tax on non-member business.

The Chairman: Yes, non-member business and tax on moneys put into tax-paying reserves.

Mr. Dierker: Yes. There is one refinement that I should bring to your attention. Patronage refunds paid on consumer items—groceries, and so forth—are not taxable income under the proposal.

The Chairman: How would it work? Does the member get a credit from the co-operative whereby he can pick up groceries, or how does it work?

Mr. Dierker: In some cases, that is correct. In other cases, however, there is a general allocation to the member which can be re-invested in the co-operative. In some cases it is a cash payment.

The Chairman: In making your calculation of the credit to the member, the calculation in the first instance is made in dollars, is it?

Mr. Dierker: That is right.

The Chairman: And then the other thing is how he uses it.

Mr. Dierker: That is right.

The Chairman: He can use it to buy groceries, and I assume he gets substantial discounts because he is a member.

Mr. Dierker: Not generally, no.

Senator Burchill: Just to go back to the question of how this calculation is made: Patronage refund means it is calculated on the basis of the business you do with the co-operative. You purchase goods from the co-operative and you also sell to the co-operative so you have a two-way street. Now, when you say the business which is done, is that the total of your buying and your selling?

Mr. Dierker: This would be correct, yes. What you would do, senator, is you would categorize . . .

Senator Connolly: Who is "you"?

Mr. Dierker: The co-operative would categorize the various methods of business. You would categorize the purchases; you would categorize the selling, and you could have different refund rates in respect of the different activities.

The Chairman: Members may sell their product or whatever their production may be to the co-operative. Now, do they have a preferred position in selling as opposed to a non-member?

Mr. Dierker: I would think that the answer would have to be "no" to that. There are some provisions whereby some co-operatives in Canada do, under contract, require members to deal with the co-operative and to that extent there could be a preference in the sense of making the facilities of the co-operative available to members as distinct from non-members.

The Chairman: How do you calculate the non-members' business? That must be quite an item of accounting.

Mr. Dierker: It is a detailed item of accounting. All business done with non-members has to be accounted for and, generally speaking, what happens is that you calculate the same percentage of earnings of member business as of non-member business and lump them together. There is no way that you can divide . . .

The Chairman: You have to make the calculations on indirect items?

Mr. Dierker: That is right.

The Chairman: And I take it that those allocations are approved by the Income Tax Department?

Mr. Dierker: They are reviewed annually, anyway.

The Chairman: Well, perhaps "approved" is the wrong word. In other words, if the taxes were paid and the moneys were accepted without disputing the assessment.

Mr. Dierker: That is right.

One of the points that concerns co-operatives greatly is that this proposal will have the effect of substantially reducing the amount of moneys available for patronage refund. As some of you gentlemen may know, co-operatives get their equity capital—their corporate capital—by way of the re-investment of patronage refunds. The moment the patronage refunds are reduced the equity capital, of course, is being reduced. This is a serious consequence of this. The equity capital in a co-operative continues to revolve for the payment of members' equities.

The Chairman: The newspaper this morning, which is the only source we have at the moment of the proposed amendment, recites this, and perhaps you will tell me whether it is reasonably accurate and what you think of it:

The Government now proposes that patronage dividends could not reduce income after interest to members, below the lesser of: 5 per cent of members' capital employed, or one-third of the income before patronage dividends, but after interest to members.

Is that reasonably accurate?

Mr. Dierker: That is accurate. There was an amendment before the house yesterday to provide that a co-operative has a right to elect the tax base on which it will pay, either the five per cent capital employed or the one-third income.

The Chairman: Is that satisfactory to the co-ops?

Mr. Dierker: No, it is not.

The Chairman: What is there that is not satisfactory? The fact that they use the capital base at all? Is that it?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Would you appreciate the opportunity of choosing between Scylla and Charybdis, between the rock and the swirling waters? Is that the option given to you?

Mr. Dierker: That basically is the option given to us.

The Chairman: You mean you are going to drown in any event.

Senator Connolly: Have you stopped beating your wife yet?

Mr. Dierker: The one-third income situation is of assistance to co-operatives who are in very serious financial situations. It will help when you are at the door of bankruptcy on a very low income basis. Keep in mind, gentlemen, that we got these late last evening, but the calculations we have been able to make indicate that they are not satisfactory in the general operations of co-operatives.

Senator Connolly: Have you had discussions with officials in the Department of Finance about these points?

Mr. Dierker: Yes, we have.

Senator Connolly: Before these amendments were brought in?

Mr. Dierker: Yes, we did. The proposal the co-operatives made to the Department of Finance and to Mr. Benson was that co-operatives be permitted to deduct all patronage refunds made, and that at the time of the payment of these patronage refunds they pay to the government a withholding tax. One of the problems, as you appreciate, in patronage refunds, is that there has been a suggestion that if co-operatives pay patronage refunds the payment of the tax is delayed. In a corporation you have the payment of tax and then the distribution of dividends, and the ultimate tax settling is fairly prompt. In the case of the co-operatives the patronage refund will be made and will be taken into income only the year after. We have attempted to answer this by saying that at the time of making the patronage refund the co-operative pay to the government a withholding tax, which would be creditable to members for the payment of tax on these patronage refunds, and get rid of the capital employed formula once and for all.

The Chairman: I notice, too, it is proposed in the amendments to phase out the additional liability created by this formula. What the paper says is:

Phasing in the new income tax rules in this way will give the credit unions and co-operatives time to adjust to their new taxable status.

The phasing in is that the rebates will be phased in over ten years by collecting one-tenth of the increase in the first year, two-tenths in the second year and so on. What comment have you to make on that? This is really attempting to make the treatment or the medicine more palatable. Or does it?

Mr. Dierker: It certainly is a form of carrot; there is no question about that. That statement is not in legislative form at the present time. We are presuming that it will apply to co-operatives. We have had some indication that it will.

The Chairman: Was this a request you had made in this form?

Mr. Dierker: No, we did not make this request. Our request has always been that the government should get rid of the capital employed formula once and for all and deal with patronage refunds as an expense to the co-operative doing business. Keep in mind that under all the incorporating statutes—and again we are talking about provincial legislation, as we were with the credit unions—co-operatives must allocate to their members the surplus earnings at the end of the year. It raises some horrendous problems when you consider that the Government is suggesting that the co-operatives keep one-third of their income as a form of discretionary income, which may well be in conflict with provincial statutes requiring them to distribute.

The Chairman: I take it these are co-operatives whose chief business is the sale of, say, farming machinery and equipment of all kinds?

Mr. Dierker: Yes, there are.

The Chairman: If you take the two positions, the co-operative position taxwise and that of the person who is not a co-operative but has a general business operation, in a general business operation the corporation would pay income tax on its earnings, and the shareholder receiving dividends would pay income tax at the marginal rate. For the co-operative engaged in the same field, your suggestion is that the only income tax on the co-op would be to the extent that they set aside tax paid reserves, they would have to clear them for tax purposes at regular rates, and so long as the capital formula applies that amount created by that formula would be taxable income. Is that right?

Mr. Dierker: This is what is proposed.

The Chairman: The sum total of those taxes on the co-op would be, I suggest, substantially less than the private individual engaged in that business would pay.

Mr. Dierker: To answer the question whether it is less or not, you have to take into consideration the corporation and its shareholder, and the co-operative and its member or shareholder. A corporation which has in fact paid tax can then pay out a dividend, in respect of which the member will receive a dividend tax credit, so that ultimately we get down to not too far from personal tax rates.

The Chairman: You think the dividend tax credit the shareholder would receive would balance out any advantage the co-op has in operating according to its methods and the lower rate of corporate tax it would be subjected to? That would be a balancing out in the hands of the shareholder.

Mr. Dierker: The rate of tax in the co-operative and in the corporation will be the same. The quantum of tax actually paid may be less after the co-operative has paid out patronage refunds.

Senator Lang: Otherwise co-operatives would incorporate, would they not?

Mr. Dierker: Would incorporate?

Senator Lang: Yes, if your tax was the same or greater than a corporation a co-operative could incorporate.

Mr. Dierker: This is right. Well, co-operatives are corporate bodies.

Senator Lang: But they could incorporate as a normal corporation.

Mr. Dierker: That is right.

The Chairman: If they did they would pay more taxes.

Mr. Dierker: That is not necessarily a correct statement, senator, because the patronage refund provision is available to corporations, though it is primarily adapted for co-operative methods of operation. Any corporation can make volume discounts.

The Chairman: What I am getting at is that the patronage dividend really parallels the dividend that a regular corporation might pay to the shareholders, does it not, having regard to the consequences in the hands of the receiver of the dividend?

Mr. Dierker: It certainly parallels it to the extent that it is a flowing out of the earnings into the hands of the individual.

The Chairman: Yes, and it is subject to whatever his marginal rate of tax might be.

Mr. Dierker: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: You are midway between the reactionary and the Marxist, is that not it?

Mr. Dierker: That depends on which philosophy book I am reading.

The Chairman: Which one are you reading?

Mr. Dierker: There is one thing, gentlemen, that you should keep in mind when we talk about tax credits. It is that, under this proposal, and even under the amendments to the proposal on the basis of which co-operatives have the right to elect to pay this tax on this one-third of income, if they do elect to pay that taxes and then do elect to distribute this as patronage refund, there is no tax credit to the co-operative for that.

The Chairman: That is right.

Mr. Dierker: And keep in mind that if you pay tax on one-third of your income, that is one-sixth of your income in respect of which there will be no tax credit at all.

The Chairman: There appear to be balancing-out features. When the patronage dividend is in the hands of the receiver, he is not entitled to a dividend tax credit.

Mr. Dierker: We are not concerned with the payment of the patronage refunds that operate as an expense to the co-operative. What we are concerned about is the patronage refunds which could, if paid out of tax paid surplus; and there is no credit given for that. Secondly, if you put that money into reserves and do not pay it out as a patronage refund, you will every year have to pay tax on the money you put into reserve. That is one of the inconsistencies.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I was interested in the first point raised. Why do we employ this concept of capital employed, as against all other taxing nations dealing with co-operatives who do not? What is the origin of it?

Mr. Dierker: It commenced in 1946.

The Chairman: The McDougall Commission?

Mr. Dierker: No. The McDougall Commission did not recommend it.

The Chairman: It was before them as part of their material.

Mr. Dierker: It came in in the form of legislation after the McDougall Commission had reported.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Dierker: But the McDougall Commission did not recommend a capital employed tax.

Senator Connolly: Why?

Mr. R. H. D. Phillips, Research Director, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool: Mr. Chairman, could I respond to that? My understanding of the history of this, Senator Phillips, is that following the McDougall Commission the recommendation was that co-operatives ought in fact to be able to distribute earnings to members and they would then become taxable in the recipients hands. But somewhere betwixt that recommendation and the legislation which followed, there was introduced the proposition that, notwithstanding, a co-operative, because it is a corporate enterprise, has corporate income, and this was a measure of that corporate income, and my understanding is that the 3 per cent rate which now applies was at that time a reasonable long-term rate, in long-term government bonds.

Senator Lang: That is right.

Mr. R. H. D. Phillips: You will recall that the white paper suggested that the percentage ought to be related to the Government's Treasury bills now.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. R. H. D. Phillips: And that the legislation advance is the number of five, which is somewhere midpoint in this and has no more rationale, in my view, than that. That is the history, as I understand it.

The Chairman: I know something about the McDougall Commission, because I was appearing before it on behalf of some people.

Mr. R. H. D. Phillips: I would like, if I may, Mr. Chairman, to respond to the question you had about the recurrence of the patronage dividend from a co-operative to its member, as being similar to a dividend on share capital in an ordinary corporation. This is an illusion, Mr. Chairman, and it is in this respect that the return paid by an ordinary corporation is a return on the basis of the recipient's portion of its ownership. The return in respect to a co-operative is a sharing of the total earnings, in the same way, if I may put it, that a firm of lawyers may share earnings among the partners.

The Chairman: Except that some of them do not share them equally.

Mr. R. H. D. Phillips: They do not in a co-operative, either. They share them on the basis of their participation in the business, and I presume that is how lawyers do it.

The Chairman: The shareholders share in the earnings of the corporation on the basis of the percentage of their holdings.

Mr. R. H. D. Phillips: That is right, but in a co-operative the shareholders have elected not to receive a return on the shares, literally, and this is allowed by law.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions on that point?

Senator Connolly: You say that in a co-operative the participants elect not to take a return on their interest in the co-operative?

Mr. R. H. D. Phillips: In some co-operatives, yes.

Senator Connolly: Surely, the patronage dividend is a return to them?

Senator Burchill: Not on the shares.

Mr. Dierker: Not on the shares. The patronage refund has no relationship to ownership.

The Chairman: If it does not, then everyone would get the same amount?

Mr. Dierker: No. The amount varies in accordance with the business you had done with the co-op.

Senator Connolly: It is based on use, on use of the co-operative.

Mr. Dierker: That is right.

Senator Connolly: The yardstick is variable from year to year, depending upon the amount of business you do with the co-operative.

Mr. Dierker: Exactly.

Senator Connolly: While in the case of a share, if the shareholder does not buy any more shares from one year to another, he gets the same percentage as he always would get in relation to the whole?

Mr. Dierker: That is correct.

Senator Burchill: Mr. Dierker, you indicated that you thought that possibly the change in Bill C-259 was due to the fact that your payments were not made in time. There was a factor of time there, in that your payments were not made until the following year? Did you not say something like that?

Mr. Dierker: I suggested that we proposed to the Government a system whereby co-operatives be permitted to pay out patronage refunds without reference to capital employed. At that time they paid a 10 per cent withholding tax.

Senator Burchill: But why is there that year's delay in sending in your tax? Why is it not possible to send it in in the year of the business?

Mr. Dierker: There is not a year. It is simply that the co-operative declares the patronage refund at the end of the year. It goes into the individual's next tax return. It goes immediately into the individual's next tax return.

Senator Burchill: It goes into the year in which you are operating?

Mr. Dierker: No, it goes into the year in which you receive the patronage refund, which may be the next year. It becomes income when it is made.

The Chairman: What you are really asking us is that we should support an amendment which would remove the capital formula for determining income?

Mr. Dierker: That is correct.

The Chairman: Is that right?

Mr. Dierker: That is exactly it.

The Chairman: Is there anything else? Let us assume that we did that. Whether the Government accepts it or not is another question. When it comes down to an issue as between the two Houses, and they both stand firm, that is another question that will have to be resolved at that time. There are all these interesting possibilities. Is there any other point?

Mr. Dierker: Mr. Chairman, if co-operatives were permitted to deduct patronage refunds without reference to capital employed, the balance of the related problems are automatically eliminated. If it stays in, there are many problems. As I indicated, there is no passing on of credit; you immediately get into the $400,000 limit and we can go through the same type of discussion as we did with the credit unions. You have a mare's nest of problems in connection with capital employed.

The Chairman: Alternatively, you would want us to look at this on the basis that you might not achieve your objective in having the capital formula removed. You might have some second best course that you would want to put forward, is that right? Or, is it all or nothing?

Mr. Dierker: That is a difficult question for me to answer. We would hope that it is all. We would hope that we would get rid of capital employed. However, we have to be practical. If it has not been done away with in the amendments proposed yesterday by Mr. Benson, we would think there are substantial modifications that are required to the capital employed formula.

The Chairman: I will come back to that in a moment. Is there any way in which you could give an estimate as to what the difference in tax revenue would be, to the Government, between using the capital formula and not using it?

Mr. Dierker: I do not know. I do not think we could, because you have to estimate then what co-operatives would do. You have to keep in mind that the bill provides that co-operatives may, in fact, eliminate their taxable income to zero, providing they pay it out in interest. So we then have to guess whether co-operatives will pay interest, and, if so, how much. I do not know that anybody could really make an intelligent guess on that.

The Chairman: It would be practicable to follow that course and pay it out in interest, would it not?

Mr. Dierker: We think it is practical as a corporate move, but it is not what the co-operatives wish to do because they wish to pay out the earnings as a return on patronage and not as a return on capital, and the interest, of course, is a return on capital. Secondly, most co-operatives are incorporated on a share basis. Dividends are not deductible from this, even if they wanted to pay it out.

The Chairman: No, but what you said was that you could reduce your tax in the co-operative down to zero if you paid out your earnings in the patronage dividends.

Mr. Dierker: Right.

Mr. Melvin: The problem there, Mr. Chairman, is that for co-operatives this would amount to a voluntary abandonment of their essential character. That they are certainly not willing to do.

The Chairman: Well, we are just exploring the possibilities here. Mr. Dierker gave the answer that the co-operative could reduce its tax liabilities to zero by paying out its earnings in patronage dividends. I am just pursuing that. What are the objections to following that course. Would they run out of working capital, or what?

Mr. Dierker: To pay it out as patronage refunds?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Dierker: I think the comment I made was that co-operatives could reduce their taxable income to zero by paying interest on member equity to the extent of 5 per cent on capital employed and then paying the balance out as patronage refunds.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Dierker: If the co-operative could pay out everything as patronage refunds, there would be no problem in the co-operative structure. From the best guesses that we can make, if this is permitted together with something in the order of a 10 per cent withholding tax, we should be very parallel to what the Government has proposed.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Admittedly certain portions of the patronage dividends are not taxable in the hands of the recipients.

Mr. Dierker: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: There is a variability there with such things as foods and so on.

Mr. Dierker: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Incidentally, is counsel to Seagram suggesting that beverages should be included in the patronage dividend deductions, or is it solely for pure foods and groceries?

The Chairman: Of course, you can always spend your dividends on the acquisition of products.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I just wanted to know how it works out for patronage dividends.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Dierker, am I right that you were suggesting that the real problem is a deferral of taxes, because some of the recipients of the patronage dividends would account for that revenue only in the following year although they are allowed to take it as an expense in the previous year. You have 12 months after the year-end to consider the payment of patronage dividends. The ordinary company would pay interest this year, would deduct interest this year and would calculate its income tax in this year, whereas you calculate your income and take into account only the patronage dividends paid in the following 12 months.

Mr. Dierker: That is correct.

Mr. Poissant: So there is a deferral of tax because they permit you to do that. Now you say you compromise this deferral of tax which is the problem, really. So now we are willing to have a withholding tax on the amount paid, and what was the amount of tax you suggested? Was it 10 per cent?

Mr. Dierker: Yes, 10 per cent withholding tax.

Mr. Poissant: And that would be paid in the year in which you take into account the expenses. For example, in year one, even though the patronage dividend has not yet been paid, it will be paid in year two because you withhold the patronage dividend in year one.

Mr. Dierker: We would pay the withholding tax at the time of paying the patronage refunds.

Mr. Poissant: Which is still a year after, though.

Mr. Dierker: No. It should not be.

Mr. Poissant: Well, you have up to 12 months after your year-end to consider patronage dividends as an element of expense in a year.

Mr. Dierker: In an operating co-operative, the patronage refund is paid through immediately. The problem in deferment is not really in the co-operative. The problem in deferment is when the recipient will take it into his personal income and settle the final tax bill.

Mr. Poissant: There are two deferrals involved, I think. There is yours, because you would be allowed to take the expenses in the year after, although they would be taken as the current year's expenses, and then there would be the recipient's, who, it seems to me, would be taxed only in the following year.

Mr. Dierker: These things will of necessity balance themselves out as the co-operative operates. The withholding tax would be a compensation.

Mr. Poissant: At the time of payment. Well, at least some of the deferral would be reduced.

Mr. Dierker: It would be covered up.

Mr. Poissant: It would be covered up, yes, and you are suggesting a 10 per cent withholding tax for that purpose.

Mr. Dierker: We think that would be an adequate level, yes.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Are the Government records clear on the point that we are the only country using the capital employed method in respect of co-operatives, where co-operatives function?

Mr. Dierker: I believe we have made that statement to the Government. They should be cognizant of it.

The Chairman: Mr. Dierker, if the capital employed formula were removed, then it would be easier for the co-operatives to reduce their tax liabilities to zero as co-operatives, except where they were creating reserves.

Mr. Dierker: That is right, yes.

The Chairman: And with respect to non-member business, which, incidentally, there has been no comment on, is non-member business a significant percentage of the total?

Mr. Dierker: Referring to across Canada the answer would be no. There are some individual co-operatives where the level is higher, but basically co-operative people have always felt that if the co-operative competes in the business market it should be dealt with as a corporation and as such they have no complaint with regard to income on non-member business.

Senator Isnor: The co-operatives do compete in regular business competition, do they not?

Mr. Dierker: In the sense of dealing with its members it is providing services to the members that they would otherwise go to some other place for, yes. To that extent it competes.

Senator Isnor: But dealing with it from the general public point of view, you cater to the public in general, do you not?

Mr. Melvin: The doors are open, sir, to the public, particularly in consumer co-operatives. To the extent that the public comes to the co-operative to make its purchases the co-operative is competing successfully and is quite prepared to pay tax on the earnings from that non-member business.

Senator Isnor: But your records would not show that.

The Chairman: Yes, they do.

Mr. Dierker: Yes. Our records show every dollar's worth of business. It is required that it be totally calculated.

Senator Carter: Do you keep the same accounts for non-members as for members? You distribute dividends in proportion to the amount of business each member has?

Mr. Dierker: Right.

Senator Carter: So you must keep a separate account for each member?

Mr. Dierker: That is correct.

Senator Carter: How do you find out? How do you know?

Mr. Dierker: Well, each member has his own membership number and when he makes a purchase this number is recorded and a computation is made at the end of a period to show the business done by that member with the co-operative. If it is a non-member, it is merely calculated in the total for non-member business.

Senator Burchill: Are you sure that taxes are paid on non-member business?

Mr. Dierker: Oh, yes, tax is paid on non-member business.

The Chairman: If there are no further questions on this point, is there a further point you want to move onto? Do you want to move into the area of modifications in the event that the capital-employed formula is not accepted?

Mr. Dierker: Well, I have already mentioned some of the areas that concern us greatly if the capital-employed formula continues. The first is that if co-operatives have to pay tax on this level and pay out patronage refunds out of this tax-free surplus, there is no credit. That to me seems to be inequitable.

The Chairman: That is in your brief?

Mr. Dierker: That is in our brief. We have also mentioned the fact that tax-paid surplus put into reserves should be annually retaxed. If there is going to be a capital-employed formula, it should be on member-contributed capital in the sense that it is on the moneys made available by the members to the co-operative. If you are going to deem a return on interest to members it should be on the money that they provide. It should not be on tax-paid surpluses which are annually provided. There are such other innocuous things in the capital-employed formula. For instance, if a co-operative revalues its assets for the purposes of security, or something like that, it would appear that this re-evaluation is included in the capital-employed formula and they will have to pay tax on the re-evaluation of their assets. It is a very innocuous package that has been put together. If for instance the co-operative gets a grant such as an area development grant, it goes into capital-employed even though it is not member-contributed capital. These are the things that are objected to.

Senator Isnor: But is it not up to you as to how you show it?

Mr. Dierker: No, it is provided in the statute that we must include that in the assets for capital-employed calculation.

The Chairman: What you are suggesting is that there should be a definition of "capital-employed" for the purposes of these provisions?

Mr. Dierker: Our suggestion is that if there has to be a capital-employed formula, the definition should be very simple and it is member-contributed capital, period.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Are you therefore saying that if you retain the capital-employed method that patronage dividends should be assimilated to ordinary dividends? If the government retains the capital-employed method, are you saying that one aspect of the relief should be that the patronage dividends in the hands of the recipient should be assimilated like ordinary commercial dividends?

Mr. Dierker: Only those patronage refunds that come out of tax-paid surplus.

The Chairman: But we are not talking about what exists. We are trying to assimilate the position of the person who receives a patronage dividend as opposed to that of the person who receives an ordinary dividend—in other words a dividend tax credit.

Mr. Dierker: Well, you could not have a dividend tax credit for those patronage refunds that act as an expense for co-operative income, but you should have a dividend tax credit for those patronage refunds that the co-operative pays out of tax-paid surpluses. I also want to reinforce the comment that despite these objections, co-operatives basically object to the concept that their form of capital must have a computed return. That is in a nutshell.

Senator Walker: It is the change in principle that you object to?

Mr. Dierker: Well, the capital-employed formula as it presently exists, we object to its existing and to its continuing to exist.

The Chairman: Mr. Dierker, I was wondering if making the assumption that the capital-employed formula continues, you could do this sort of thing; could you give us the shortest statement in the world—other than just “yes” or “no”—say, four points as to modifications, without any development.

Mr. Dierker: Would you like to have that in writing?

The Chairman: Yes, and as quickly as we can get it.

Mr. Dierker: Within the next day or two.

Mr. Martin Legere, Chairman, The Canadian Council of Cooperatives: Mr. Chairman, as it is already midday, I will be brief.

First, I ought to thank you very sincerely for the wonderful welcome that you have given me.

We are happy to see that there have been some amendments since yesterday proposed for the bill, however we wish to tell you frankly that we are not satisfied with the proposed amendments, as I have the impression that the mistake is very simply being moved from place to place. I believe that it has still been forgotten,—and we have to say it again for the hundredth time perhaps—that there is a distinction to be made between a co-operative institution and capitalist institution. I believe that the problem is precisely at this stage where the distinction should be made, and I believe that the law-makers ought to be ready to introduce the amendments we are asking for. Moreover, I believe that the social role of cooperatives should also be considered.

I also believe that, in our country where a just society is preached, that consideration should be given to the fact that cooperatives and credit unions belong in this context. Unfortunately, in Bill C-259, no account has been made of the social fact of the cooperative movements.

Now, honourable Senators, I know your role is precisely to protect society, and we hope that in your recommendations, you will see to it that institutions such as credit unions and cooperatives, which are institutions really close to the people,—we hope you will see to it, and I say it again; that amendments are made to the present bill, and that our recommendations, which have been presented to you, will be put into execution.

Once again, a very sincere thank-you for your kind welcome.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, it is 12 o'clock and we have one other submission. I am told that if we proceed now, the principals will take not more than ten minutes. If the hearing should take longer than that it will be because of the length of our questions. I am referring now to the submission from Allstate.

Is it agreeable, Mr. Atkinson, that we proceed now on that basis? We do not want to shorten your discussion in any way if you think you can do a reasonable job in ten minutes, we will start now.

I should say, honourable senators, that we have the representatives of Allstate and they are: Mr. John Atkinson, President and Managing Director, Mr. Donald J. McRae, Financial Controller; and Mr. Michael G. Welch, Tax Supervisor.

As a preliminary question I should like to ask Mr. Atkinson if we can have his assurance that we are “in good hands”.

Mr. John Atkinson, President and Managing Director, Allstate Insurance Company of Canada: Yes Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Do you wish to make an opening statement?

Mr. Atkinson: Yes. We are in Ottawa, Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, because of the grave concern that we along with our employees, have concerning the effect of the Tax Reform Bill on members of employees' profit-sharing plan. Some provisions of the bill would seem to be punitive and unjust to the employees.

In the brief I refer, of course, to the realization which is deemed to have taken place when the trust delivers to the retiring employee the shares which he has owned beneficially since they were purchased. Also I refer to the taxation of the resulting capital gain as ordinary income rather than as capital gain, thereby doubling the tax—in fact, much more than doubling the tax in most cases, because of the progressive tax rates.

We consider both of these provisions inequitable for reasons which are laid out in the submission before your committee, Mr. Chairman. I would like to emphasize that there is enormous concern and significance to the Canadian employees regarding our employees' profit-sharing plan. It undercuts their effort to provide for themselves in their retirement. This is especially true in the profit-sharing plans which count heavily on investment to achieve a worthwhile and secure retirement.

I would like to make a very brief commentary regarding the employees' profit-sharing plan as compared to the deferred profit-sharing plan. In our company, we have chosen to follow the course of the employees' profit-sharing plan; and 97 per cent of all eligible employees belong to our plan and pay taxes on all elements of income as they continue through their careers with the company. We are taxed on such items as the company's contribution to the plan, dividends from its allocated shares, income from general trust investments, lapsed credits due to those who have withdrawn from the plan before vesting into the plan, and, in the future, on taxable capital gains realized by the trust.

Now, in the deferred plan, the members of those deferred plans do not pay taxes on an incurred income basis. We are not suggesting for a moment that we should receive special benefit as it relates to capital gains under this bill. All we are asking is that the plan, under section 144 does not trigger a capital gains tax.

The Chairman: Then, as I understand it, if section 144 provided for a capital gains tax, your objection would not be the same?

Mr. Atkinson: That is right. We are accepting the principle of the capital gains tax.

The Chairman: The other point which you are objecting to is that a member continues in the plan he has to pay income tax over the entire period of the plan as the plan realizes earnings and as they are attributable to him?

Mr. Atkinson: No, we chose to follow this course right from its inception. What we are saying is that under section 144, the treatment of the employees' profit-sharing plan triggers a capital gains tax, and it is taken into income at that point. We feel that this is a mistake. It is so discriminatory as far as the employees' profit-sharing plan is concerned.

Senator Walker: The shares which you beneficially hold for the employees, do you pay tax on that all the way along?

Mr. Atkinson: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: Yes, you pay income tax on them.

Senator Walker: And when he benefits from it, it is considered in toto and he has to pay tax on it.

Mr. Atkinson: One of the great benefits to us was that we paid our taxes as we went along, with the sure feeling that we would not be taxed on it when we took the plan out. Now, we accept this as a continuing principle; but we are deeply concerned about the fact that when the trust delivers the shares to us it triggers an income tax, under this bill, at our personal rates, which is discriminatory.

The Chairman: Is this the sum total of your submission?

Mr. Atkinson: Yes, this is the sum total.

Senator Walker: This must be a mistake.

Mr. Atkinson: Yes, we think it is very discriminatory and we have communicated that to the department, but up until the present, it has not been changed.

The Chairman: It is hard to figure out the reason or logic behind levying the full income tax rate on a capital gain in this circumstance. This is a capital gain that occurs in the same way that all capital gains occur.

Senator Cook: There should be no change in the beneficial ownership because the trust holds the shares for the employees in any event.

The Chairman: That is right.

Senator Walker: And the tax is paid all the way through.

Mr. Donald J. McRae, Financial Controller, Allstate Insurance Company of Canada: I feel there is one other point which we should raise, and that is when the employee retires and is given his shares, under the present legislation, he is going to be taxed at that time without really realizing the sale of those shares; he is going to be taxed right away. Whereas in other types of trust he can get his shares, and he can sell them over a period of time, thus reducing the amount of taxes that we would have to pay. However, under this legislation, as it applies to our fund, he will be taxed as soon as . . .

Senator Isnor: Taxed on what?

Mr. McRae: On the capital gains.

The Chairman: On the capital gains, yes.

Mr. McRae: . . . as soon as those shares are delivered to him from the trust.

Senator Beaubien: Whether he sells or not.

Mr. McRae: Yes.

The Chairman: Then, there are two areas of capital gain, one that occurs during the current operation of the plan . . .

Mr. McRae: And then again when we sell the shares.

The Chairman: Not when you sell the shares, but when they are delivered.

Mr. Atkinson: Yes, when they are delivered, but subsequent to that, when we sell them.

Mr. Michael G. Welch, Tax Supervisor, Allstate Insurance Company of Canada: If the trust realizes a capital gain, it is passed on to the employee in the year in which it is made and he pays tax on it. The point we are making is that his interest in the plan is of a capital nature, and he has paid tax on everything that went in to the trust. When he receives the shares from his capital interest he should be able to receive them as such and only pay a tax when he disposes of them. They have been his, beneficially, from the beginning. And he should pay tax only when he disposes of them.

Then it should be a capital gains tax, although it is applicable to only half the total amount. So it would appear that there are two inequities here that seem hard to understand.

The Chairman: I should point out that under section 52(5), dealing with the cost of property transferred by the trustee under the employees profit sharing plan, it says:

(5) Where any property has, after 1971, been transferred to a beneficiary by a trustee under an employees profit sharing plan,

(a) subsection (1) does not apply in respect of the property;—

And this is the real stickler:

(b) the beneficiary shall be deemed to have acquired the property at a cost to him equal to its fair market value at the time of the transfer.

So, there is a deemed realization at that time.

Senator Beaubien: At the time of the transfer, whether he owned it before or not?

The Chairman: Whether he sells it or not.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Chairman, upon reading section 144, is this the point that you are making, it is deemed to be a cost acquired by the taxpayer; but is there a deemed realization by the trust at that time?

Mr. Welch: That is the second point; then we must consider clause 144(4). First of all it is clause 144(7).

Mr. Poissant: Yes, the exemption for capital gain realized from the trust is clause 144(7), a deemed realization by the trust.

Mr. Welch: That is a point you would also have to take up after considering clause 144(7). That is the definition of disposition of clause 54(c) should be made applicable to clause 144(4). The definition says "shall be this," but goes on that for greater certainty it does not include:

(v) any transfer of property by virtue of which there is a change in the legal ownership of the property without any change in the beneficial ownership thereof,

That section should be made applicable; it is not at present.

Mr. Poissant: That is for the ordinary trust; there is no change in actual ownership.

Mr. Welch: That is right; in case clause 144(7) were amended and clause 144(4) remained as it is.

Secondly, clause 52(5) should be made to read as does clause 107(2), which applies to all other trusts. That is, it specifically excludes a deemed realization.

Mr. Poissant: Is that a deemed realization in clause 52(5), or a deemed cost to the taxpayer?

Mr. Welch: That has relationship to clause 144(7)(f).

We are saying that everything that cannot be attributable to these things will be taxed as income, and it says the portion, if any, of the increase in the value of property transferred to the beneficiary by the trustee that would have been considered to be a capital gain made by the trust in 1971 if the trustee had sold the property on December 31, 1971 for its fair market value at that time,

Mr. Poissant: In other words, we only need the deemed realization by the trust, because it would be in one of the exceptions. You are suggesting that this is ordinary income because it says that it is not in one of the exceptions. It is not a capital gain realized by the trust. Clause 52(5) is a deemed cost to the taxpayer, but we have no reference to a deemed realization. Clause 52(5), I agree, takes the cost based on fair market value, but nowhere do we have a deemed realization at that time; maybe it should be by the trustee.

The Chairman: Clause 52(5) only establishes the value to the taxpayer, which is fair market value at the time of the transfer.

Mr. Poissant: But who realized the gain?

The Chairman: That is a question of whether it is the trust.

Mr. Poissant: It is income, because it is not a deemed realization by the trust.

Mr. Welch: At present the word "disposed" in clause 144 is taken as not being a deemed realization.

The Chairman: But clause 144(4) makes the gain in the trust, or the loss as the case may be, a capital gain or capital loss to the employee.

Mr. Welch: As far as the trust sells my shares and gain is allocated to me as capital gains and I pay tax on it in that year. The tricky part of it is, what is the definition of disposition? When the trust gives me my hundred shares on my retirement, forgetting clause 144(7) and going back to clause 144(4), it provides that in a disposition by the trust. So we must have the security that disposition would not be interpreted in that way.

That is why I suggested that the definition of disposition in clause 54(c) should be made applicable to clause 144(4).

Mr. Poissant: But are you saying that you would not like this to be a deemed disposition by the trust?

Mr. Welch: All we are really asking is that the shares in the trust and any monies in the trust are of a capital nature to the member, and he should be able to receive either the money or the shares without triggering a capital gain. The only way a capital gain is triggered is by a deemed realization which, although it may not use the word "deemed" is the effect of clause 144(7) and it could be the effect of clause 144(4).

Mr. Poissant: Yes, but if we have a deemed realization of a capital gain, we only solve part of the problem. First we should have a roll-over; the cost base of the trust should be the cost base of the taxpayer.

Mr. Welch: Yes.

Mr. Poissant: If there is to be one, it should not be in the hands of the taxpayer but in the hands of the trust. If there is a roll-over there is no deemed realization.

Mr. Welch: One obvious suggestion is that clause 144(7)(f) instead of providing "the portion, if any, of the increase," should just say "the increase of the value of the property transferred" is excluded.

Senator Cook: There does not seem to be any rationale for a deemed realization.

The Chairman: No, it can be dealt with in a practical manner without any assumption of a deemed realization.

Mr. Poissant: Just a roll-over would solve all our problems.

Mr. Welch: Defining "disposition" as in clause 54(c) would cure the problem of clause 144(4). However, clause 144(7) is the less desirable of the two and must be solved first. In other words, clause 144(7)(f), instead of saying "the portion, if any," should read "the increase in the value", because it is clause 144(7) which triggers this tax to start with.

Mr. Poissant: As ordinary income.

Mr. Welch: That is our first request. We do not think that is right. Secondly, if that is changed, we are also worried about clause 144(4), because I cannot find any definition of disposition in the bill which would apply to that. There is a good definition at clause 54(c) which should apply to it but it has to be specifically set forth, because it is in a different section.

Mr. Poissant: In your opinion clause 54(c) would not apply to the employee in the profit-sharing plan?

Mr. Welch: It says that disposition is not a deemed realization.

Mr. Poissant: That is the definition of disposition and there is no restriction.

Mr. Welch: Yes, it defines disposition, but it says for greater certainty does not include any transfer of property, which is property such as our shares, by virtue of which there is a change in the legal ownership without any change in the beneficial ownership.

With that definition included it could not be held that disposed in clause 144 includes handing them over. Our view is that handing them over to the employee is not a disposition and we want it excluded.

Mr. Poissant: In other words clause 54(c) could be amended to make it clear that it does not apply in the case of shares; that is the roll-over.

Mr. Welch: The other point is that other trusts under clause 107(2), which are not necessarily retirement plans at all, are specifically excluded. They specifically do not have a deemed realization. In other words, clause 52(5) should read as does clause 107(2). Section 107(2) applies to other trusts and not a profit-sharing trust. It says quite specifically that when a property is handed over to the beneficiary, he receives it at what they call the cost amount, at the original cost of the property. He is deemed to receive it not at its current market value but rather at its original cost. This is very important.

Mr. Poissant: In other words, an amendment to 54(c) would do the trick; in other words, "to exclude"?

Mr. Welch: Yes. Section 54(c) should be made applicable to section 144(4).

Section 144(7)(f) should be made to read, not "the portion of" but rather "the increase of".

The Chairman: That makes more sense.

Mr. Poissant: Would you give us a draft of that?

Mr. Welch: I did not want to propose a specific amendment.

The Chairman: However, you are being asked to now, and very quickly. We will, of course, give you today and tomorrow in which to do it; but we would expect any amendments by Monday.

Thank you, gentlemen. That concludes today's hearing. The committee will adjourn until next Wednesday morning at 9.30 a.m.

The committee adjourned.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

No. 42

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1971

Sixth Proceedings on:

"Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation"

(Witnesses—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Grosart
Beaubien	Haig
Benidickson	Hayden
Blois	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Lang
Choquette	Macnaughton
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Molson
Cook	Smith
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28)

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Orders of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, September 14, 1971:

"With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator Hayden moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Denis, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, tabled this day, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto; and

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative."

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Wednesday, October 20, 1971.

(50)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9:30 a.m. to further consider:

"Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation"

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Blois, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Desruisseaux, Gelin, Hays, Isnor, Molson, Smith, Walker and Willis—(12).

In attendance: The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel; Mr. C. Albert Poissant, C.A., Tax Consultant and Mr. Alan Irving, Legal Advisor.

WITNESSES:

Massey-Ferguson:

Mr. Peter N. Breyfogle, Comptroller;
Mr. Roy W. MacLaren, Assistant Vice President,
Public Relations;
Mr. H. Arnold Sherman, Assistant Comptroller,
Taxation;
Mr. Jahan P. Wleugel, Treasurer.

Canadian Jewish Congress:

Mr. Wolfe Goodman, Q.C.:
Mr. Saul Hayes, Q.C., Executive Vice President;
Mr. Barry Clamen, C.A.:
Mr. J.H. Berger.

At 11:50 a.m. the Committee adjourned.

2:15 p.m.

(51)

At 2:15 p.m. the Committee resumed.

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Blois, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Desruisseaux, Gelin, Hays, Isnor, Lang, Smith and Willis—(11).

Present, but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senator McDonald—(1).

In attendance: The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel; Mr. C. Albert Poissant, C.A., Tax Consultant and Mr. Alan Irving, Legal Advisor.

WITNESSES:

Aluminium Company of Canada Limited:

Mr. John G. Lees, Vice President;
Mr. W. J. Reid, Vice President and Treasurer, Aluminium Company of Canada Limited.

At 3:50 p.m. the Committee adjourned until Thursday, October 21, 1971.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Wednesday, October 20, 1971.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9.30 a.m. to give consideration to the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto.

Senator Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I call the meeting to order. We have several submissions today, the first being by Massey-Ferguson. Later in the morning we will hear the Canadian Jewish Congress. This afternoon we will deal with Alcan Finances Limited. Following our adjournment this morning we will resume at 2.15.

The appearances on behalf of Massey-Ferguson are: Mr. Peter N. Breyfogle, Comptroller; Mr. Roy W. MacLaren, Assistant to the Vice-President, Public Relations; Mr. H. Arnold Sherman, Assistant Comptroller, Taxation; and Mr. Jahan P. Wleugel, Treasurer.

Do you intend to make an opening statement, Mr. Breyfogle?

Mr. Peter N. Breyfogle, Comptroller, Massey-Ferguson Limited: Yes. Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I would like to open my comments by saying on behalf of Massey-Ferguson that we are very grateful for this opportunity to discuss with you our views on the Tax Reform Bill.

It has become popular in recent years to play down the value of multi-national corporations to the economies of the countries in which they operate. This is an attitude which I personally consider unreasonable and I thought it might be useful for you if I quoted as an example some facts on Massey-Ferguson in Canada.

- Total assets employed in Canada are $230 million.
- We export from Canada 75 per cent of our production and we export two dollars of goods for every one dollar that we import.
- In Canada we have one of our major engineering centres which is, amongst other things, the centre for our world-wide combine engineering activity.
- Total Canadian employment exceeds 4,000 persons.
- Our world-wide headquarters are located in Canada, providing work not only for the company's own employees, but also requiring such outside services as lawyers, accountants, investment bankers, etc.
- We have more than 60 per cent Canadian shareholders and the dividends our shareholders receive result from operations throughout the world.

These facts demonstrate that Canada plays not only a significant role in Massey-Ferguson's total operations but also that our activities in Canada are important in the Canadian economy.

Since we had the privilege of appearing before you in May, 1970, much has happened to modify the proposals contained in the White Paper on tax reform, however the basic problem still remains. In my comments on that occasion I highlighted the four objectives explicitly recognized in the White Paper

1. The Canadian tax system should not encourage nor discourage foreign investment by Canadians.
2. Canadian companies competing in the foreign market should not be subject to more onerous taxes than their competition (particularly U.S. competition).
3. Canada should promote a climate hospitable to the unrestricted flow of capital across international boundaries.
4. Canadian tax laws should not permit the evasion of Canadian tax through artificial arrangements.

Bearing in mind the economic environment of the past few months and in particular the announcement of Mr. Benson last week, I would suggest that, even more than normally, industry and government share two basic desires—to create jobs for Canadian citizens, to create profit for Canadian shareholders, and in achieving these purposes to create revenue for the Canadian Government.

I said at that time that the White Paper proposals were in fact in basic conflict with the first three of its own objectives, and that the only principle that was given real recognition was the fourth—the anti-avoidance objective. The situation remains basically the same today despite the modifications between the White Paper and the Tax Reform Bill. Indeed, the draft legislation goes even beyond the stated intentions of the Minister of Finance during the presentation of the bill. The result is to increase the tax burden of Canadian companies, and in so doing ensures that the first three objectives which I have just mentioned cannot be achieved.

In the brief we prepared for discussion at this meeting, and in particular in the appendices attached to it, we have gone into some detail on possible alterations to the bill to ameliorate the situation. I do not believe it would be worthwhile for me to repeat these points at this stage, as you have all received the material.

Rather than comment in more detail on the Tax Reform Bill, I would like to preface our discussions with four basic points which, in our view, are more important than any specific technical contribution on the bill which we might make.

1. We have found the bill, as it affects multi-national corporations, to be extremely complex and, quite frankly, a frustrating diversion from the serious business questions which we face—questions which have been so obviously accelerated by the recent United States' action.

2. The effect of the proposals relating to the taxation of the international income of Canadian-based multi-national corporations will be substantial. The proposals will result in a loss of international competitiveness or the departure of such corporations from Canada. While we cannot believe that this represents the intention of the Canadian Government, one or the other, or both, of these results are only a matter of time, if the proposed changes are enacted.

3. Quite apart from this long-term result and in addition to it, we are convinced that now is the wrong time for Canada to establish its long-term policies in the area of international trade and the multi-national corporation. Each of the major trading companies of the world is now engaged in adopting a stance for negotiations to maintain or expand its trading position. For Canada at this time to drastically impair its own competitiveness in international trade appears to us to be almost an incredible course of action.

4. The international provisions assume and require external treaty negotiations to be workable. This is clearly no time for the opening up of provisions of existing treaties or attempting to work out new treaties with the many countries with whom they are needed if the new approach is not to have the most serious adverse effect on our international competitive position. I doubt if any one of us would like the job of renegotiating the U.S. treaty today.

We question therefore the wisdom of attempting in a hurried manner to advance specific suggestions for technical improvements in the bill. Rather, we recommend simply deferring corporate and international provisions of the bill for at least a year. This delay will permit further study, allow time for the international trade picture to become more clear, and free business to deal with today's business problems without diversion of energy to cope with new tax provisions. These tax provisions will do nothing to improve our ability to contribute to the growth of the Canadian economy directly, or to enhance our ability to compete in the world economy and therefore contribute in the long-term to the attainment of the great potential of Canada.

Senator Isnor: What is the percentage of your export business?

Mr. Breyfogle: Seventy-five per cent of our production in Canada is exported from Canada.

Senator Walker: What about to the United States?

Mr. Breyfogle: Somewhere over 70 per cent of production. In other words, 70 per cent out of the 75 per cent.

The Chairman: Are your exports subject to the United States' surcharge?

Mr. Breyfogle: Most of our exports are not subject to the surcharge. However, they do get caught by the "US only" requirement for the investment tax credit, which is supposed to be reduced from 10 per cent to 7 per cent. That is a direct penalty.

Senator Connolly: Will the DISC program affect you?

Mr. Breyfogle: The DISC program will affect us not only because the US manufacturers of farm machinery will have a substantial financial advantage in exporting to Canada, but also because as a company we have tended to keep the greater part of our north American manufacturing facilities located in Canada rather than in the United States. Therefore we lose. Because of that, we do not have the opportunity that our competition has.

The Chairman: Let us analyse that. I take it that at present your competitors in the United States do export to Canada?

Mr. Breyfogle: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: You expect that in the atmosphere of the DISC it could lead to more exports, is that right?

Mr. Breyfogle: They will have an opportunity of obtaining a substantial benefit from a tax point of view. In 1970 the trade balance against Canada was $113 million in farm machinery. It consisted of $274 million imports by Canada and $160 million exports from Canada to the United States.

Senator Connolly: What is the imbalance?

Mr. Breyfogle: Last year the imbalance was $113 million.

The Chairman: The DISC would work to your disadvantage in the fact that the domestic United States manufacturer and exporter would enjoy a lower corporate tax rate in the United States on that part of his earnings which resulted from foreign operations.

Mr. Breyfogle: Yes.

The Chairman: What is the percentage of discount off the regular corporate rate?

Mr. Breyfogle: I should like to ask Mr. Sherman to answer that question.

Mr. H. Arnold Sherman, Assistant Comptroller, Taxation, Massey-Ferguson Limited: The present proposal is that the DISC company will be able to set up profit in its own books on the total transaction, on what the manufacturer manufactures and sells to the DISC, and the DISC resells to the company located in the foreign country, such as Canada.

They have three options. They can either take 4 per cent of the sales price as their profit, they can take 50 per cent of the total profit of the whole transaction, including the manufacturer's profit, or they can take the normal pricing basis if they feel that it is better for them. But in the third case, it is subject to the usual tax by the United States IRS authorities under section 42.

Senator Connolly: For the record, what does IRS mean?

Mr. Sherman: The Inland Revenue Service of the United States. In either of the first two cases, there is a small additional advantage. They can add some 10 per cent of their export promotion expenses to this profit. They look at the three possibilities and take the one that is most favourable. Profit in the DISC is never taxed until it is distributed to the shareholders of the DISC.

The Chairman: The concept is that you have the manufacturer in the United States who manufactures the equipment. Then you have a domestic sales organization in the United States that will obtain the foreign market and will be the vendor and exporter in that market. Regarding the 4 per cent that you were talking about as one of the options, they could take 4 per cent of the total dollar amount of the sales and bring that into the DISC. I am referring to this exporting organization. It is domestic in form.

Mr. Sherman: DISC means Domestic International Sales Corporation.

The Chairman: They can bring that directly into profit. Is that a tax-paid profit, or is it subject to tax after that?

Mr. Sherman: It is subject to tax when the DISC organization distributes it to its shareholder. The shareholder would normally be the manufacturing company in the United States. This tax can be deferred indefinitely. There is no requirement to make a distribution. It can be loaned to the parent company provided it is invested in export related assets. Export related assets are defined so broadly that effectively the DISC can retain the profit while lending the tax back to its parent company. In other words, there is no need for the tax to be paid for ten years.

The Chairman: Is it included in the definition of the use to be made of this money that it can be used to provide additional equipment to manufacture more exportable products?

Mr. Sherman: Yes.

The Chairman: And that is all without any tax deduction? In other words, this is tax deferral on a grand scale.

Mr. Sherman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Would your American affiliate qualify under the DISC legislation?

Mr. Sherman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: There are so many questions I would like to ask.

The Chairman: That is a very interesting question, Senator Connolly. Would you like to develop it?

Senator Walker: We would like to know why they would, with the balance of trade the way it is.

The Chairman: Senator Walker, what I was thinking of here was that there are Massey-Ferguson affiliates operating in the United States.

I take it, Mr. Sherman, that the Massey-Ferguson affiliates in the United States manufacture a product which you export to Canada?

Mr. Sherman: Yes.

The Chairman: How much of the imbalance in exports that come to Canada from the United States is contributed to by your operations in the United States?

Senator Walker: That is a good question.

Mr. Sherman: We export to the United States $2 for every $1 we import, and we represent more or less 50 per cent of the farm machinery exported from Canada.

Senator Connolly: How much of the United States export of farm machinery do you represent in your United States companies?

Mr. Sherman: We would represent a little over 10 per cent of the exports from the United States into Canada. The United States exports twice as much into Canada as it imports from Canada. Our picture is exactly the other way around.

The Chairman: So that your American affiliates exporting from the United States to Canada could qualify under the DISC legislation?

Mr. Sherman: Under the DISC legislation we would set up a DISC corporation and receive the benefit for those goods which we manufacture in the United States and which we import into Canada.

The Chairman: Do the United States companies, who export to Canada and who are in competition in the export area, have other advantages by reason of being United States companies—advantages that are not available to you?

Senator Walker: Other than those under the DISC legislation.

Mr. Roy W. MacLaren, Assistant to the Vice-President, Public Relations, Massey-Ferguson Limited: At the present time the United States exporting corporations have been able to defer profit by the use of offshore subsidiaries. Although the United States enacted the sub Part F legislation in 1962, major corporations in the United States do not have any problem getting around those provisions because there are exceptions and alternatives and groupings that permit a U.S. corporation not to be penalized by the existence of this sub Part F legislation.

As of today a Canadian corporation is in the same effective position. Under the present Income Tax Act they do not have to pay income tax on dividends from foreign subsidiaries. There is an equivalent situation to the position of a United States corporation. However, once Bill C-259 is enacted we would not have this possibility to follow.

I do not feel it is clear from Bill C-259 that we would be taxed in Canada on the profits of our DISC if our United States subsidiary had a DISC, because that section of the bill has to be regulated. It seems clear to me that if we did have a DISC we would lose all of the advantage because when it retained the profit the profit would then be taxed in Canada.

The Chairman: Yes, because the profit of the DISC would enable your export company to maintain without tax in the United States, and you would have to bring it into your Canadian income and it would carry the full Canadian rate.

Mr. MacLaren: Yes.

The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel to the committee: Would you not be subject to this extraordinary situation, that your DISC company in the United States would be an affiliate and if you lend the money to your parent on the deferral you would then have non-business income? You therefore would have foreign accrual property income which would be effectively taxed in Canada under the proposed amendments in this new bill that we are discussing.

Mr. MacLaren: Yes. What I am not clear about is whether we would not also be taxed on the DISC profit as well.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Except that the indication is that the DISC profit would really result from normal business operations and, presumably, it might come under foreign accrual property income.

Mr. MacLaren: It might not.

Mr. Sherman: There is uncertainty in our reading of this area of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: But you do have the extraordinary situation where you get the DISC benefit in the United States, whereas automatically you are affected by foreign accrual property income. Incidentally, this would not be in 1976, but in 1973.

The Chairman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: When speaking of an extension for a year are you suggesting that the sections of the law as presently drafted should come into effect on January 1, 1974; and when you speak of a deferral of a year with respect to dividends are you suggesting that such dividend income come into effect in 1977, rather than in 1976? I am wondering what you mean by deferral by a year. Could you develop that?

Mr. Sherman: What we are requesting is that consideration be given to deferral of enactment of the bill by a year, rather than the time cut-in of the provisions of the bill being deferred for a year. Our purpose there is to provide more time for deliberation, for calculation of the impact of the bill, and for reviewing some of the difficult areas of the text of the bill in terms of its application to multinational corporations, in particular. We believe that if this year is taken the character of the bill will be quite drastically changed, bearing in mind the trade problems which are facing Canada and many other countries.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: This is a very important point, Mr. Chairman, and honourable senators. Are you asking for the deletion of that section which deals with international income pending further consideration? Mere postponement by a year is the very thing that is presently covered in the draft. It seems to me you are either asking for deletion of that section pending further study or, alternatively, that 1973 should read 1974 and 1976 should read 1977.

Mr. Sherman: We are asking for deletion pending further study.

The Chairman: You appreciate that there are many beneficial things in Bill C-259 and, therefore, your request could not take the form of a request that we suspend the coming-into-force date of the bill.

Mr. Sherman: We are not proposing this for the bill in total, of course, sir.

The Chairman: Only for those sections that particularly affect your operations?

Mr. Sherman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: May I ask this general question? It does not really relate to the technical area you are discussing. You are obviously an important multinational Canadian-owned corporation. Are there many other such corporations in the Canadian economy? We do not want to be legislating here for one particular company, so perhaps you would give us some indication of the scope of this problem in terms of other Canadian-owned multinational corporations.

Mr. Sherman: If I could start by making a general answer to this question, it is this: Our belief is that the world is becoming rapidly more technology-oriented and that industry—national corporations and multinational corporations—will rely on a high degree of technology for the base of their future growth. It seems to us that Canada has two choices for its future development. It can either encourage multinational corporations, because a company operating solely in Canada, bearing in mind the population of Canada, is not large enough to support the technological base that is required to compete with other countries—

Senator Connolly: In some areas.

Mr. Sherman: In more and more areas as the world's history progresses.

Senator Connolly: All right.

Mr. Sherman: The other alternative is to obtain this technology from subsidiaries of multinational corporations based in other countries. We believe the former is the better approach for Canada.

I think Mr. Wleugel can recite you a list of these various companies in the Canadian economy.

Mr. Jahan P. Wleugel, Treasurer, Massey-Ferguson Limited: Such corporations as Alcan, Brascan, some of the brewery companies, International Nickel Company. The Polymer Corporation, which is a Crown corporation, is also a multinational corporation. All these companies are indeed affected by this regulation. I am quite sure there are others that can be mentioned, and that you will know of many other examples. These are the important names.

The Chairman: You did not mention Alcan.

Mr. Wleugel: I am sorry, sir.

Senator Connolly: It was that point that I thought we should have on the record, because in fairness to the witnesses we want to make sure that it is not just their problem; it is the problem of a good many Canadian-owned multinational corporations.

Senator Walker: Are they taking the same attitude in the present situation as you are?

The Chairman: Alcan is; we now have their brief and they will be heard this afternoon. I cannot conceive of any of them not taking that position.

Senator Molson: Did we not have that experience in considering the White Paper?

The Chairman: We did.

Senator Molson: I think the record far enough back would show that we have a great many multi-national companies who are very seriously affected.

The Chairman: All the briefs are still available, so we have quite a record compiled already. I was wondering which one of you would care to tackle this question. Suppose we take your situation operating abroad. You would have a foreign affiliate. Let us take the case where you control that foreign affiliate, and the case where you may have only 49 per cent because of national laws in that country. Let us take those two instances and follow through what happens to the earnings of those companies by reason of Bill C-259. Take the first situation, a foreign affiliate which your company controls, which has earnings. Go ahead and tell us what happens under the bill.

Mr. Wleügel: Could we, for instance, take our Mexican subsidiary? Would you first like one we control, or one where we have only 49 per cent?

The Chairman: These are two instances that I would like to have developed.

Senator Connolly: For the sake of making the record clear, I take it we have finished discussing the DISC problem and are now going on to the more general picture.

The Chairman: The DISC position in the States has adverse effects on Massey-Ferguson, or perhaps we should say adverse aspects. For our purposes now perhaps that is as much as we need.

Senator Connolly: That is right.

The Chairman: Now would you get back to my illustration?

Mr. Breyfogle: Could I perhaps make one more comment on DISC. DISC is one part of a United States program, which will be difficult for other countries to cope with. However, it is only one part of an environment in which a company can do business on a multi-national basis. Perhaps of as much significance as DISC itself is the relationship of DISC to the other opportunities granted by legislation in various countries to do business. We therefore feel that the DISC is very appropriate in relation to our discussions on Bill C-259, because there are things we now have which provide assistance to multi-national corporations, which provide an off-set to the DISC in some way but not as a complete off-set. Bill C-259 takes those away, and this is most important to us.

Senator Connolly: Would you think that a DISC legislation in Canada would be a good thing for the Canadian-owned multi-national corporations?

The Chairman: You mean something like the DISC legislation?

Senator Connolly: Legislation, yes.

Mr. Breyfogle: In theory, yes, it would appear to be a good thing. We are concerned about the cost of such a program in Canada, and therefore whether it is practical, or whether there are alternatives that would maintain Canada's competitive posture without going to the lengths of DISC.

The Chairman: But what you have now in Canada under our tax laws works satisfactorily as an off-set to DISC operations in the States.

Mr. Breyfogle: I would say as a partial off-set to DISC.

The Chairman: You have been able to live with it.

Mr. Breyfogle: There has not yet been a DISC in the States, fortunately.

The Chairman: When you say "partially" what do you mean? If you had DISC in the States and you continued with the present law in relation to your offshore operations and the bringing home of the earnings, to what extent do you mean it would partially off-set it?

Mr. Sherman: There would need to be further relief, I think, to take account of the fact that a Canadian corporation pays its income tax very much more quickly than a United States corporation, so there are different cash flow consequences. DISC is very much a matter of cash flow.

The Chairman: What is the difference in the period for cash flow?

Mr. Sherman: A Canadian corporation begins to pay right at the beginning of its fiscal year. The United States corporation has a delay of several months, and the payments are spaced out more over a longer period. I am sorry I do not have the information in my head, but there is a considerable gap. We did look at the timing, and there is quite a big difference in favour of the United States corporation.

Senator Carter: Do you foresee developments in other countries that might compel the United States to modify their DISC legislation?

The Chairman: What you are asking them to do is look in the crystal ball world wide to see if they can see anything brewing there that might be inclined to compel the United States to abandon or reduce its DISC.

Mr. Breyfogle: I think the history of events since August 14 has demonstrated that the United States economy, with all its problems, is still a very significant economy in world affairs. It is still a very highly self-contained economy, and it can go its own way. The DISC advantages are very material in the United States. On the other hand, the sort of advantage provided by many European countries, for example, through tax rebates and turnover tax that is refunded on exports, does not put them in a very good position to put pressure on the United States Government to remove the DISC.

Mr. Wleügel: I think the DISC has perhaps been driven a little out of proportion as far as being an example of typical tax devices used is concerned, because here in Canada you naturally look very much more closely at what the United States is doing in these areas. For instance, Germany has for years had the same type of incentives, not more in connection with the matter of setting up a separate corporation, which really the DISC essentially is, but as a simple tax device in their own tax laws, making for what in essence are either accelerated depreciations related to investments abroad or, in essence, actually permissions in write-off against German domestic taxes on investments abroad.

Just to mention one example, the United Kingdom had its Export Corporation Act, which permitted, actually also legalized, a DISC or a tax deferral of even a larger extent than the United States. This was discontinued in 1966-67 essentially because of exchange control regulations in the United Kingdom. On the assumption again there that the basic reasons for having it would still be valid, one could also speculate that if and when the monetary crisis and the imbalance of exchange rates are being settled, the United Kingdom might take their export corporation concept up again. There is a multitude of ways of doing it. The Japanese do it by permitting the companies to have a leverage of one-to-ten, and substantial direct subsidies to exports. I think we should be very careful here in Canada, not necessarily to say—because the U.S. might find the DISC is the ideal solution on the basis of its setup, on the basis on which it operates—that we should necessarily follow just because of that. I think we would have to look very carefully at what is required.

The Chairman: I did not gather that there was any suggestion here that DISC should be adopted in Canada.

Mr. Wleugel: No.

The Chairman: You were starting out by saying that the system we have at this time, in bringing the dividends home without paying any Canadian tax on them, does give some advantage as an offset to Canadian export sales. It permits them to be a little more competitive. We are not saying that DISC would do the job better. Each country evolves its own tools, you may take it, in fiscal policy, in taxation, in tariffs, in incentives, in subsidies, and in an infinite variety of things. But my question has not been answered yet.

Senator Connolly: I am afraid we diverted the witness from your question.

The Chairman: I would like to get back to that now.

Mr. Wleugel: The basic question?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Wleugel: You mentioned you would like two specific examples. We would like to take the example of the U.K. group of companies which is a subsidiary, as far as Massey-Ferguson Limited is concerned. It is a holding company in the U.K., with operating subsidiaries in the U.K. that is one example. We would like, as a second example, to take a Mexican minority controlled subsidiary. It is a simple example and I think it makes the point very clearly.

With your permission, we should like to add a third example, which is actually in specific legislation. For instance, in a country like Brazil, you have specific incentives through taxation to invest portions of your tax money, as you have to, in the northeast of Brazil, as part of the development of that area. All these three groups have very specific problems related to the current bill. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Sherman to go through these technically in detail, to follow the route of dividends and other problems in these three typical examples. There is a multitude of others, but I think these will do.

The Chairman: Those three will do. Now, Mr. Sherman.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, we start with the U.K., which has a nominal comprehensive tax treaty with Canada, and we must assume that there will be a treaty in effect for the purpose of this discussion. Therefore, under Bill C-259 there will be no Canadian tax on dividends paid by the U.K. to its Canadian parent. However, so far as the foreign accrual property income is concerned, the consequences are not at all clear, either from the bill, which does not have too much on, nor from the Department of Finance press release.

For example, take a group such as ours, of manufacturing companies, trading companies, export, agency companies, where altogether there are probably 30 companies in the U.K. of which perhaps 10 or 12 are active. Of these companies, some would be in a loss position, just from the way things operate, and under the U.K. tax system one company can make good the losses of the other.

We are afraid that if we did that, that payment would become foreign accrual property income. We are not sure what the consequences are, but we are afraid of them.

There are similar problems. For example, if our U.K. engineers were to develop something and another U.K. company wanted to use it, and the company, the third party using it, were to pay a fee, we are fairly certain that that royalty or fee for technical services, or whatever it was, would be part of the foreign accrual property income.

The consequence of any of our U.K. companies having foreign accrual property income is that that income becomes taxable as earned to Massey-Ferguson Limited, whether or not we declare it as dividends, whatever we do, even if we have no intention of bringing it back because the funds are required for U.K. expansion.

There is a further category I did not mention, which is probably more important, that is, intercompany interest. We have a holding company, a Canadian company would make an advance to that company, and then the advances would be used, perhaps, as they are required, by different operating companies. To the extent that interest was charged on those advances within a group of U.K. companies, this would probably be foreign accrual property income and again taxed in Canada as earned. We have to charge interest under U.K. tax rules; if we do, we are taxed in Canada.

Senator Connolly: At present, you would not be taxed, under the existing law.

Mr. Sherman: That is right. That is the U.K. situation.

The Chairman: Just stopping right there, you have a series of subsidiaries in the U.K. and they are subsidiaries of the chief company in Canada. Let us take the inter-relationship there. If one of those companies makes a loss and another one makes a profit, for Canadian tax purposes you are not entitled to offset.

Mr. Sherman: No.

Senator Connolly: Under the new bill.

The Chairman: Under Bill C-259.

Mr. Sherman: Under Bill C-259, the results of each individual company are of no concern to us, because there is no question of taxation on dividends. It is only the question of foreign accrual property income, which is a new concept.

Senator Connolly: It is a new concept?

Mr. Sherman: To the extent that one company has foreign accrual property income and the other has what one might call a foreign accrual property income loss, we are not permitted to offset them. It is one way taxation.

Senator Connolly: Would it be a temporary, even a partial advantage, if there were such things as foreign accrual property income profit and foreign accrual property income loss?

Mr. Sherman: Yes, this is one of the minor measures that would help, certainly.

Senator Connolly: You would still have the problem of taxing the foreign accrual property, if you had foreign accrual property income, under the new Bill C-259, which you have not under the existing law.

Mr. Sherman: That is right.

The Chairman: Is there any difficulty by reason of the fact that it is conceivable under this bill that something which produces earnings from active business operations might lose that character under Bill C-259 and become in part, or altogether, foreign accrual income property?

Mr. Sherman: We really do not know what the concept of an active business is, and I have not been able to find any lawyer in Canada who could tell me what the concept is. It would be unwise for us to proceed on the basis that some of these things are not applicable, since undoubtedly the Department of National Revenue, when it comes to audit our 1973 return, will attempt to tax us on its viewpoint.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: It is always unwise to depend upon lawyers in doing things in that way.

The Chairman: We are not looking for any rebuttal evidence.

Mr. Sherman: We do operate through one holding company in the U.K. which holds a group of many subsidiaries. That is our corporate structure in the U.K.

The Chairman: That holding company is the one which would remit directly to the Canadian company?

Mr. Sherman: Yes.

The Chairman: Then by that route what one would ordinarily think of as income from active business operations could, under this bill, very well be foreign property accrual.

Mr. Wleugel: Since it is routed through a holding company, I think anybody looking upon the corporate structure in the U.K. would say that it is the only sensible way of setting up the corporate structure financially in the way we run the interactions between the various units. We have a holding company which is obviously and absolutely a corporate arrangement, and the question that arises in our minds is whether we will get stuck with taxes actually, potentially, or possibly on the basis of our normal operating income. The answer is something we do not know.

The Chairman: You are saying that the bill is defective in that it does not define some very essential terms.

Mr. Breyfogle: We consider the bill is defective in that it does not properly define a large number of terms.

Mr. Wleugel: Particularly in the section on international income, which is what we are particularly concerned about.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if you will allow me to suspend the consideration of the two other countries, because this has a direct bearing on what we are now discussing. This Senate committee took the position under the White Paper that we were putting the cart before the horse in dealing with the whole question of international income. We so stated in our report at pages 42 and 43, and on the whole history of taxation of international income we took that position.

In effect, we said, "Put through the treaties first and we will know what our treaty countries are and we will know what are not treaty countries." Then, in dealing with the laws of each treaty country or non-treaty country, a multinational corporation will know the incidences of taxation within reason.

When I speak of international income I am speaking of that section which deals with international income of Canadian taxpayers, not the reverse—that is, the income of non-residents and income of Canadian sources—and I should like to know whether we would solve the problem for the present with the suggestion that there are three alternatives: One, that we ask for the deletion of the whole section because of the chaotic and confused situation in the modern world. Two, that we ask that 72 read 73, and 76 read 77, so that we have a respite of two years rather than one year. Three—and this is the one that I like best and would like your reactions to in relation to the Chairman's request—that in regard to the income of the Canadian multinational corporation in respect of any company from a source other than Canada, the application of the present law be suspended until such time as there has been either the completion of a treaty with a country, or a statement by Canada that it is not able to get a treaty. Essentially, the whole section covers what is an affiliate, the treatment of dividends from the affiliate, and, this foreign property accrual income. The determination of what an affiliate will be, of what dividend income treatment will be like, and what foreign property accrual income will be like will depend upon the treaties. This is the delay as covered by the bill in section 72 and moving into section 76. Would not the multi-national corporations be better off in suggesting that the application of this section be suspended until such time as we are dealing either with the treaty country or non-treaty country? In the interval the whole subject matter could be dealt with by the Government either by way of revising its thinking on the domestic wording of the legislation and the regulations therein, or by determining whether there is a treaty. That is why when you deal with Canada and the U.K. you have one set of rules, whereas with respect to Mexico, which you are going to come to, you have another set of rules, and with respect to an undeveloped country you will have another set of rules.

The Chairman: In that connection, Canada would not be at a disadvantage in dealing with any questions that could be classified as tax avoidance.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Definitely not. That is right.

The Chairman: That whole field is open. They are administering the present statute on the basis of agency. That is, that where there is a foreign company that is wholly owned by a Canadian company and all the management and direction comes from the Canadian company, in their assessments the Income Tax Department have been assessing the income of that foreign company as income of the Canadian company on the basis of agency. They have been making these assessments. Some of them are under appeal and some of them have been settled. So there is ample scope in the present law to distinguish between what is a genuine, bona fide business operation outside of Canada, and those efforts which this bill attempts to deal with on the basis of passive income by bringing that income directly into the income of the Canadian company. There is not the urgency because a lot of tax revenue might be escaping the tax collector; there would not be that urgency even if the application of these sections were suspended for an extra year beyond what is contemplated in order to get a proper understanding. Of course, every one will have to agree that it is good for Canada to have multi-national operations.

Senator Hays: In that regard, Mr. Chairman, what kind of money are we speaking of?

The Chairman: Do you mean in dollars of tax revenue?

Senator Hays: Yes.

The Chairman: I am not sure we have that figure.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, the White Paper referred to a figure of $10 million. There is no reference to that in the 1971 Summary, however.

Senator Hays: How much would that affect Massey-Ferguson?

Mr. Sherman: We do not know what the provisions mean, and consequently we are not able to guess. It is too wide a range.

Mr. Wleugel: It would depend largely on our own level of income all over the world. In a normal year we might have $40 million after tax. After all, if we sell in the order of over a billion dollars a year, it might be in the order of $4 million, $5 million or $6 million. Something like that. That is purely a guess on our own situation.

Senator Connolly: I am sorry, would you mind repeating that?

Mr. Wleugel: If we say that our normal world-wide income is $40 million after tax on a billion-dollar sale, that is probably a reasonably historical number. It is not one that we have achieved lately. On that basis, probably income which would be questionable would, perhaps, be in the order of $4 million, $5 million or $6 million.

Senator Connolly: You might have to pay 50 per cent of the total estimated revenue.

Mr. Wleugel: Again it depends upon many assumptions and it is unclear to us, quite honestly, what the bill really means for us. We know a few areas where the bill definitely means something, but most of them are grey areas where we do not quite see the impact because of the unclear definitions related to developing countries where we operate.

The Chairman: We are going to consider Mexico in a moment, but your U.K. discussion has provoked this thought so far as I am concerned, that supposing Bill C-259, with all these provisions we are talking about, is enacted, then this might force Massey-Ferguson to establish just one operating company in the U.K. and carry on all the other corporate operations as branches of that company. That is just a suggestion. Having done that, you would certainly get a pooling of your losses and profits in the branch operations, because they would all be coming into just the one company. If you did that, what would be the result so far as this bill is concerned?

Mr. Breyfogle: I would like to answer that. The proposal you have made—

The Chairman: Well, it was not a proposal; it was a suggestion.

Mr. Breyfogle: The suggestion you have made would be very difficult technically because of the U.K. capital gains tax, and I believe this is where a country gets into very serious trouble if it tries to extend its own taxation pattern around the world, because it is extending its own taxation pattern into a multitude of different taxation patterns based on totally different concepts and theories of taxation. Some things that are defined as foreign accrual property income in Canada would not be so defined in other countries, because those other countries already have an alternative method of raising their tax revenue. These are alternative taxes which we are paying in doing business in those countries. Hence, the addition of foreign accrual property income, and the proposal that you suggested, and the capital gains that might be inherent in such a reorganization, are direct penalties to the multi-national corporations operating abroad when Canada has the type of legislation proposed.

The Chairman: The making of adjustments that would appear to minimize the impact of this legislation as far as Canada is concerned might create an entirely new group of problems in the other country.

Mr. Breyfogle: If we might come back to the discussion we had on the amount of tax involved, if we were to proceed with the implementation of Bill C-259, I do not believe it is possible for us as a company to put a number on this today. Bearing in mind the ramifications of the tax bill as proposed and also bearing in mind the situation we are in, we do not have income diverted from Canada as a company. We have taken steps to legally and within the tax laws of the country within which we operate to minimize our tax bill. If this bill is passed, some of these steps will in fact mean tax penalties in Canada, not in the countries in which we operate, and as a result of these we would rearrange these steps. The rearrangement of these steps will not mean more tax revenue for Canada, but it will mean more revenue for those other countries in which we operate.

On the other hand, as Canada gets into this situation and as Bill C-259 begins to affect more and more multi-national companies in their operations—we have had two examples announced recently of companies who have left Canada because of this situation—Canada will lose jobs. Even if the $10 million as outlined in the White Paper of incremental tax revenue comes to Canada, because of the bill—and this is something which we question as to whether it will happen or not—that is, if I may use the vernacular, peanuts in relation to the simple unemployment benefits that Canada may have to pay out due to the loss of jobs. If you then add the social cost of unemployment on top of that, I think there is a very poor cost benefit situation in the enactment of the international provisions in Bill C-259.

We therefore feel that politically there is a sound and valid reason for deferring the international aspects of the bill, and we endorse very strongly the Chairman's statement that within the current bill the government has the ability to ensure that income is not diverted from Canada.

Senator Hays: What would this $4 million tax bill, or the $46 million that you speak of on $1 billion worth of business, do to your company?

Mr. Breyfogle: I would like to reply to that by saying that I do not think it will be that much, and certainly it will not mean that much extra tax paid in Canada. It will make us less competitive. As I mentioned in my opening remarks, I hope it will not make us leave Canada, but it will certainly impose penalties, and as a result it will mean the losing of jobs in Canada and abroad, and it will lose profits to Canadian shareholders which are taxable.

The Chairman: If I might follow that up. Would you just say what are the different operations that are actually carried on in Canada now?

Mr. Breyfogle: In Canada we have the manufacture of combines for the total North American market and for some overseas markets. This is our largest combine plant, and it is one of the largest in the world.

The Chairman: And what is the amount of employment that it gives directly?

Mr. Breyfogle: Our total employment in Canada—and I cannot give you the combine plant by itself at this stage—is 4,200 to 4,300 people. It ranges up and down according to activity levels, and it has been up to 5,000 when the farm economy was more buoyant. We have a foundry here in Canada, and we have very extensive machine shops and press shops. We also do assembly of balers and a very wide range of implements, many of which are exported as well. We have discussed with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce other possible options for manufacturing in Canada which are under review. This, of course, will depend upon the outcome of Bill C-259, and also, upon the trade relationships between the United States and Canada.

Mr. C. Albert Poissant, Tax Consultant to the Committee: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the witness a question?

The Chairman: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Poissant: You are recommending in your brief that consolidated income tax returns ought to be allowed. Let us examine the situation in light of your first recommendation that this whole group of sections be deleted. Let us examine this, first, on the basis of foreign affiliates only, and, secondly, on the basis of the combination. I realize you are not making this recommendation; but you are making a recommendation on behalf of the group. Let us examine this in two parts: one for all of the outside countries except Canada, and one for the total group including Canada. Would that be of any benefit to you? I am referring to page 9, item 7, which permits Canadian corporate groups to file consolidated income tax

Mr. Sherman: That refers to Canadian corporate groups; in other words, Canadian companies.

Mr. Poissant: I see; by groups you did not mean all groups?

Mr. Sherman: No, Canadian companies.

Mr. Poissant: I thought the word "groups" meant all of the companies, but it is strictly Canadian companies. Would it be of any help if we could have consolidated tax returns for foreign affiliates?

I see two problems here: First, those countries where they do not levy taxes on foreign affiliate companies and, secondly, where the tax is an indirect taxation rather than a direct taxation. This is a problem because once you have incentive with one country you do not want to give it back to that country because that incentive is the reason you are there in the first place. But could we not have an average tax for total world-wide income, except Canada, which would be nil in the country where you obtain the incentive? Could we not have an average income throughout the world and an average top? Would that not take into account this indirect type of income which the Government is after? Secondly, would that not take into account the incentive that you are being offered in other countries where the tax rate is zero which reduces the average? Thirdly, would this not eliminate the problem that exists in countries where you have losses as well; where you cannot carry the loss against other types of income?

Mr. Sherman: It is similar in concept to the United States Sub-part F and they have made it work by offering several ways out to the big companies. If it were written in the way Bill C-259 has been written, with no ways out, and extended to consolidating it world-wide, my judgment is that it would be unworkable because of the complexities involved. One example of this would be foreign exchange. You can translate the financial statements of these foreign companies using this principle, in seven different ways and come up with seven different results according to the way you want to look at it. I can see difficulties in that one small area alone. It would mean you would have to have a small book to translate the financial statements.

Mr. Wleugel: And not only that, but there is income being transferred into Canada which is the second part of the bill as it is proposed, as well as your example where there could be taxation of areas of income which were never transferable to Canada in any form because of the exchange, or the regulations, et cetera.

The Chairman: Yes, the concept of this provision as it is stated by the minister was that he wanted to put the companies operating outside of Canada through their foreign affiliates in the same position they would be in if they were operating within Canada. Now, what you say is that this is utterly impossible.

Mr. Sherman: Yes.

The Chairman: They can do it, however, by saying that if you have earnings abroad they are, for tax purposes, earnings of the Canadian company; and if you have not paid full taxes abroad then you pay the difference between what you paid abroad and what the Canadian rate would be here. This would cut right through the problem of foreign exchange—the problem of exchange control and restrictions of transfer of funds. It just ignores all these problems.

Mr. Wleugel: That is correct.

The Chairman: And it is a desert in which they want you to operate.

Senator Molson: It was mentioned that one or two multinational companies have left the country recently or have ceased operations. Would you care to identify those companies?

Mr. Breyfogle: The two companies that have been identified in the press are the Patino Company and the Hunter Douglas Company.

The Chairman: Now, Patino is a mining company and Hunter Douglas is—

Mr. Sherman: It is a manufacturing operation in Canada.

Mr. Breyfogle: They manufacture building materials and architectural products.

Senator Connolly: Are these U.S. owned?

Mr. Breyfogle: No, they are Canadian.

Mr. Sherman: Hunter Douglas is Canadian.

The Chairman: These are Canadian corporate companies regardless of what their ownership might be.

Mr. Wleugel: It was substantially owned in Canada, so I understand from the press reports of the Globe and Mail.

The Chairman: This is something which easily can be followed up. Now, can we get on to Mexico because this illustrates something else.

Mr. Sherman: Do you want me to answer the honourable Mr. Phillips' comments about the deferment of the provisions before I go on to the situation in Mexico? Mexico is a country where there will be no treaty.

The Chairman: No; you are operating in Mexico, and you have Bill C-259 in force in Canada.

Mr. Sherman: That is right.

The Chairman: And the interest in your operations in Mexico is a minority interest because of the laws of Mexico? A foreigner may not have a controlling interest there; is that right?

Mr. Sherman: That is right.

The Chairman: I just want to know how that works.

Mr. Sherman: There cannot be a treaty between Canada and Mexico because Mexico has said that they are not interested in entering into tax treaties with any countries. They have no tax treaties. So we would be operating under Bill C-259 without the benefits of a treaty. Profits from the Mexican company, to the extent of 49 per cent, would be distributed as dividends. To the extent that they were distributed, 49 per cent would come to Massey-Ferguson in Toronto. We would receive them subject to tax in Canada with a credit for the corporate income tax in Mexico which is currently on a sliding scale up to a maximum of 42 per cent, along with credits for the withholding tax on the dividends. On the face of it, the combination of the two taxes would mean that Canada would not ask for any additional taxes. However, the Mexican Government has some laws also. They are not tax-sparing, but they are laws to encourage new and necessary industries. Under their law, for instance, they would look at our company in Mexico and indicate that two of our products, two major tractors, are necessary to Mexico. Therefore, they have reached an acceptable degree of Mexican content so the income tax rate will be only 25 per cent. The combination of the 25 per cent Mexican tax rate and the withholding tax would mean that there would be an additional tax paid in Canada on our dividends from Mexico.

The Chairman: The simple answer is that the incentive earning derived in Mexico is taxed away in Canada.

Senator Connolly: It is 50 per cent of it. It goes from 52 per cent down to 48 per cent in time. Is that right, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Not the whole of it. It would be taxed at Canadian corporate rates.

Mr. Sherman: With a credit for the 25 per cent.

Senator Connolly: That is right.

Mr. Sherman: To turn to the other aspect of foreign accrual income, this does not appear to be affected in any way by the existence of a treaty. In the case of Mexico, we do not control the company, consequently they would be at liberty to invest surplus funds in any manner. We, as a shareholder, presumably would have our representatives participate in any discussions held by the directors as to the course of action. However, to the extent they realize income from these investments, we would be taxed on 49 per cent, whether or not it was distributed to Canada.

The Chairman: Yes, because the earnings in that Mexican company are transposed into Canadian company earnings.

Senator Molson: Even in a minority position?

Senator Hays: Yes, even though you do not receive them.

The Chairman: Yes, a minority position does not make any difference.

Senator Connolly: Would the current exchange rates prevail for valuing the amount of the Canadian taxable income in that case?

Mr. Sherman: This is explained in a press release of the Department of Finance, that it will be provided for by regulation. I do not really understand it, but I do not think they intend to attempt to convert anything until the time of remittance of a dividend.

Just how foreign accrual property income is determined in a case where property is fluctuating widely, I do not know.

Senator Connolly: It would depend on the day the remittance is made.

Mr. Sherman: There is no remittance.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: It is an accrual basis.

Senator Connolly: Of course, that would be a deemed remittance.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Hays: What would your board of directors do in the event Bill C-259 were passed? Would this mean you would leave Mexico as a majority shareholder? Would there be any alternative?

Mr. Breyfogle: I do not believe it is proper for us to speculate on what the board of directors would do if the bill is amended. Tax treaties and tax evolution in other countries are also involved. We would have to present individual cases to the board after careful study in order to have a clear picture. At that stage the decision would be made.

Senator Hays: How would Canada treat losses in those countries?

Mr. Sherman: There would be no dividend, therefore no tax. However, in the meantime, if the company earned $50,000 from investments while it lost $500,000 on its operation, we would be taxed in Canada on the $50,000 earned. The half-a-million-dollar loss is forgotten.

The Chairman: That would be passive income.

Mr. Sherman: Yes.

Mr. Breyfogle: Taking that to a logical extreme under circumstances which can develop in complex tax environments where heavy incentives exist, it could well be worth while for a non-controlled company with only a minority interest to so arrange its affairs that it takes what is in fact foreign accrual property income and loses on an operating basis. That may be the best solution for that company in its local and business environment.

Mr. Wleugel: And for the majority shareholders.

Mr. Breyfogle: Yes; this is something we cannot change. Further, with respect to companies where we have only a small investment and virtually the total management goes on day to day or even month to month without participation by Massey-Ferguson, we may not discover the existence of a foreign accrual income. We could be in default because of either record-keeping problems or even a desire by the local management to not totally reveal the situation to us as a small minority shareholder in that company.

The Chairman: Are there any other features of this area you wish to discuss?

Mr. Sherman: The third example, of Brazil, is in a middle category. There is no treaty at the moment but there is some indication that one may be signed before 1976. The corporate tax rate in Brazil is quite low as an incentive to corporations to invest in the large area of north-eastern Brazil and the Amazon region, which are underdeveloped. Our wholly-owned subsidiary there has the opportunity to pay a corporation tax at only 15 per cent, provided the other 15 per cent of the total 30 per cent rate is invested in approved projects. They can be loans or actually investment in shares. In the case of loans, they will pay interest; if it is shares, they will pay dividends, not in cash, but in stock. That is customary in Brazil. However, under Bill C-259 the definition of a dividend includes a stock dividend. This is a change from the present law.

The position with respect to our subsidiary in Brazil is that we would wish to take advantage of this opportunity to invest in the north-east. This helps the Brazilian subsidiary's business, in addition to the public relations value of being able to say we have applied so many thousands of cruzeiro to a well known project. Our name would appear on the list of major corporations involved in these important projects. The badly needed development of these areas is also a social consideration.

The alternative is to pay it to the Government as tax. Given the opportunity, we prefer to make the investment, which may some day yield a return to us.

Because we pay such a low corporate tax rate which, combined with the dividend withholding tax is substantially below the Canadian corporation tax rate, any dividends paid by our Brazilian subsidiary to Canada, in the absence of a treaty, will be fully taxable in Canada, with a credit for some part of the tax paid in Brazil.

We do not know what the position would be in the event a treaty were signed. We are making investments which will yield income between now and 1976. We do not know what the consequences will be in 1976, because we do not know if there will be a treaty, nor what such an instrument would provide with respect to these investments.

I do not know what we ought to do in the light of these possibilities.

The Chairman: Yes, but you do know that incentives gained in any other country that apply in abatement of your tax there will be taxed away from you in Canada under this bill.

Mr. Sherman: Yes, tax-sparing does not apply to this situation.

Mr. Wleugel: In this specific example the income derived from an investment in the north-east can in no circumstances be remitted to Canada. This is part of the Brazilian regulations, so it is not even a temporary exchange problem. It is a permanent part of the legislation in Brazil, that you cannot remit the results of these investments in the northeast to a foreign country. You can remit them to your Brazilian operating company, but you cannot remit them to the Brazilian operating company in Canada.

Mr. Sherman: Whether or not there is a treaty, that income is foreign-controlled income earned in Canada, although it can never be remitted to Canada. We have to take some of our Canadian profit and pay that to the Canadian Government as tax on the Brazilian investment income.

Senator Hays: How do the United States and the United Kingdom treat this sort of investment in their tax laws?

Mr. Sherman: The United States effectively remits a credit by the use of averages. A United States corporation with a world-wide operation is permitted to average its taxes, with the result that it can take its Canadian profit, taxed to 50 per cent plus 15 per cent on withholding tax, and its other high tax areas, and use that profit, and the tax credits that result, to offset the situation in countries like Brazil where there are incentives. As a practical matter it is able to avoid paying tax on these incentives.

Senator Hays: Both the United Kingdom and the United States would receive the benefit.

Mr. Sherman: The United Kingdom has a different method of taxing foreign income. There is no attempt to tax that kind of thing unless there is a dividend, and then there is a complicated underlying tax credit.

Mr. Poissant: Have you seen the recent amendments to Bill C-259?

Mr. Sherman: Yes, I have seen them.

Mr. Poissant: Have they changed the problem that you raise in Appendix VII?

Mr. Sherman: I only received them yesterday. I have not had a chance at this particular point.

Mr. Poissant: One change was made in the case of the exit tax which corrected one point that you had in mind.

The Chairman: We have certainly gone into the core of this problem, and we may have it again this afternoon with some variations as it affects Alcan.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Have you been in touch with the Finance Department with respect to proposed amendments on international income? And, if so, do you know when such amendments can be expected?

Mr. Sherman: I have been in touch with the Department of Finance. I think their words were that they will take a look at them. That is as far as they go.

The Chairman: How long ago was that?

Mr. Sherman: A couple of months or more.

The Chairman: Then there has been an opportunity to do something, if the will were there to do it?

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Benson, in his speech the other day, said that he was not proposing any amendments to foreign income. He said, "We have already received a number of presentations relating to the passive income provision, and it seems clear that some changes to the law in this area should be made before the provisions take effect. However, we have concluded that it would be premature to introduce changes at this time before all representations have been received and given the study they require."

The Chairman: That would include any representations that we might make.

Mr. Sherman: Presumably.

Mr. Poissant: That makes your position stronger, if they have not yet had a chance to study all the briefs.

The Chairman: If in the course of the next week you have an opportunity to study the amendments and find anything that is relieving, I hope you will let us know.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Chairman, there is no amendment. I have them all here. There is no amendment except in the case of capital loss raised in their "exit tax". They change the word "disposal" for the words "capital gains".

Mr. Sherman: We are keeping in touch with the Department of Finance.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: You started your presentation by suggesting that the provisions of international income be suspended for a year. We then tried to clarify the situation between suspension for a year and deferment of the section generally, and we introduced the concept of the application of the sections in relation to consummation and non-consummation of treaties.

Leaving aside complete deferment, which may be unrealistic, which do you prefer? Your request is that the applications be suspended for a year, or, alternatively, that the international sections come into play in respect of each country, depending upon the determination or finalization of a treaty or determination that there is no treaty in respect of source of income.

Mr. Breyfogle: If it is not possible to defer introduction of the international section for an additional year, I believe we should combine the three ideas that have come forward during our discussion so far. Firstly, I believe that we should introduce changes in the legislation as outlined on pages 7, 8 and 9 of our brief. Would you like me to read those pages into the record?

The Chairman: No. Let me have a look at them first. We have adopted a different practice from last year. At the last hearing on the White Paper we incorporated the briefs. We found, however, that the account that we received from the Printing Bureau, charging us for their service, was a very substantial one. We therefore decided that we should read the briefs and not necessarily incorporate them as part of the record. It is enough if you refer to the pages. The reference will be in the record, and we can then read the appropriate pages.

Mr. Breyfogle: Perhaps I should read the two pages for the convenience of the committee. I shall commence at the bottom of page 7 of our brief.

Senator Connolly: These are recommendations?

Mr. Breyfogle: Yes:

As an alternative to deferral or withdrawal of the international section of the Bill, the following is a brief summary of minimal amendments which we suggest:

1. Re-define "foreign accrual property income" to restrict it to "diverted income" as was the expressed intent of the Government. Exclude from "foreign accrual property income" income which has not been diverted from Canada.

2. Re-define "foreign affiliates" to include only companies controlled directly or indirectly by a Canadian corporation, as many Canadian companies will neither have nor be able to obtain the necessary information for compliance when a control situation does not exist.

3. Include relieving provisions with respect to foreign accrual property income, to permit deficiencies in one country to offset income in another and to provide loss carry forward and carry back provisions no less favourable than those in effect in Canada for Canadian business income.

The Chairman: Stop right there, please. Mr. Benson made a statement and his idea was, for the purposes of taxation, for foreign affiliates to be treated as if they were operating in Canada. But if they do not give you your loss carry-forward and loss carry-back, they are not doing that.

Mr. Breyfogle: That is correct.

No. 4: Permit foreign tax credits to be averaged, so that credits in high tax jurisdictions can be used to offset liabilities in low tax countries.

No. 5: Permit tax exemptions for foreign subsidiaries involved in corporate reorganizations.

No. 6: Amend the "Exit Tax".

The Chairman: Or departure tax.

Mr. Breyfogle: Yes.

No. 7: Permit Canadian corporate groups to file consolidated income tax returns.

No. 8: Eliminate the tax advantage granted, perhaps inadvertently, to foreign-owned Canadian finance companies.

In addition to those amendments, Mr. Chairman, I believe that, as an alternative to a one-year deferral to the introduction of the legislation on international corporations, we should include both a one-year deferral in the application of these provisions and the proposal suggested by Mr. Phillips that the application be deferred until tax treaties are negotiated with those countries involved.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: On a seriatim basis.

Mr. Breyfogle: Yes. I believe we need the extra year because of the difficulties in tax treaties, and if you do not introduce this extra year's deferral of application, we will perpetuate an additional period of uncertainty of waiting for tax treaties to be negotiated.

The Chairman: We understand what you mean, but if you say the coming into force date of the legislation is deferred until tax treaties are negotiated, that might be a deferral forever. There are some countries who will not negotiate tax treaties.

Mr. Breyfogle: On the basis of knowing that, even if the tax treaties are implemented, for example, on foreign property accrual income, we would have a problem. At least, with the one year's deferral we have another year in which to get our business in order and ensure that we do not penalize the Canadian economy and our Canadian shareholders by not being able to make the decisions which are necessary for the ongoing operation of our businesses.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions? We have had a good run on this and we will have a further run over some of the ground on which we have acquired some knowledge from you. I believe we have the substance of your problem. Thank you very much.

Mr. Breyfogle: Thank you, sir.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we have one other submission this morning, from the Canadian Jewish Congress.

On the list of appearances we have Mr. Wolfe Goodman and Mr. Saul Hayes.

Mr. Hayes, are you going to make an opening statement?

Mr. Saul Hayes, Q.C., Executive Vice-President, Canadian Jewish Congress: Honourable senators, first I would like to thank you for hearing us. I would like to introduce the members of this delegation and explain why we are here.

To my immediate right is Mr. Wolfe Goodman, of the firm of Goodman and Carr, Barristers and Solicitors, Toronto. To his right is Mr. Harry Berger, Director of the Allied Jewish Community Services and also Director of its Committee on Foundations and Endowments. To his right is Mr. Barry Clamen, an accountant with the Montreal firm of Richter, Usher and Company. I am the Executive Vice-President of the Canadian Jewish Congress.

The Canadian Jewish Congress is an umbrella organization interested in the welfare of the Jewish community and its relationship to its citizens across the country. The head office is in Montreal, and it has offices in a number of cities of Canada.

I would like to introduce the delegation and its view by saying that we are here, perhaps happily, because we have no personal interest. It is not a matter of profits or material aspects. We are here on behalf of that private sector of Canadian life which deals with philanthropy, monetary efforts for the commonweal, and that whole conspectus of activities which the private sector has traditionally in Canada effected for the good of the Canadian community. While we are here, you might say, in the interest of the Jewish community, frankly without any mandate, what we are going to say will presumably be the same things which are being said, or which will be said, by any group of dedicated voluntary members of the community who wish to advance the interests of charity, philanthropy and welfare. In that respect I say, therefore, we are here not in any personal capacity or on behalf of any given group of dividend receivers or shareholders, but in the common interests of the community at large.

We greatly fear that some of the aspects proposed under this tax legislation will severely crib, cabin and confine the activities of that private sector which I relate to. My accounting friends are more familiar with the details of it.

With your permission, honourable senators, Mr. Goodman will lead off. I assure you in advance that our brief will be short because it is narrowed down to the simple perspectives of the aspects of it which deal with welfare and philanthropy.

The Chairman: Mr. Goodman, perhaps you can tell us how the bill adversely affects the purposes of your organization.

Mr. Wolfe Goodman, Q.C., Canadian Jewish Congress: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The problem is a familiar one to this committee. This committee examined the White Paper on Tax Reform and in the course of its investigation it recognized the problem which would arise if a donor or testator gave property to charity which had substantially appreciated in value while he had held it. Your committee, sir, stated in its review of the White Paper at page 61:

With respect to gifts of property to museums and other charitable organizations, the Committee wished to retain to the extent possible incentives for the continuation of such gifts, while at the same time, not permitting taxpayers an unfair use of such donations for the purpose of realizing tax benefits not basically contemplated by the taxing statute.

On balance, therefore, your committee came to the conclusion that there should be no capital gains tax imposed on gifts of property to museums, universities or charitable organizations, but that a taxpayer should not be permitted to deduct in the computation of his income a greater amount under section 27(1)(a) of the present Income Tax Act than the cost or value at valuation day to him of the asset donated. Your committee, therefore, succinctly examined the problem and characterized it. We merely wish to draw to your attention that the bill has not resolved this problem, but has in some ways aggravated it.

Senator Connolly: For the sake of the record, Mr. Goodman, would you give us an example?

Mr. Goodman: Yes. Imagine that an individual, under his will, leaves to a community camp council his summer property, including surrounding land, which cost him $10,000 in 1972 and which was worth $35,000 at the date of his death in 1980. He will be deemed to have disposed of this property immediately before his death for $35,000 resulting in realization of a capital gain of $25,000, one-half of which, or $12,500 will have to be included in computing his income for the year in which he died.

Senator Connolly: At his marginal rate.

Mr. Goodman: At his marginal rate, yes. The problem may be somewhat more acute in respect of a gift of depreciable property because there the rule is that the property is deemed to be disposed of at the average of its undepreciated capital cost; that is, its depreciated value in non-technical terms, and its fair market value at the date of death. In those circumstances, if the property has appreciated substantially in value during his lifetime over its original cost there will be a liability for recapture of capital cost allowances, which of course are taxed in full as ordinary income, and also a possible liability in respect of a taxable capital gain, which of course is only half of the gain involved.

In the example in the brief, in paragraph (b), there is a fully rented factory building, which cost $400,000 in 1972; in 1980 it depreciated to $200,000. Let us suppose a fair market value of $700,000, and bearing in mind the type of inflation that has occurred in the last 20 years, it does not seem impossible to imagine those figures. The donor, the testator, would be deemed to dispose of the property at the average of $200,000 and $700,000; that is, at $450,000. This results not only in recapture of the capital cost allowances of $200,000 taken during his lifetime, which must be brought into income, but also in a taxable capital gain of $25,000.

The provisions in respect of inter vivos gifts are slightly different, because there a single rule is applicable to both depreciable and non-depreciable property; that is, it is deemed to be disposed of at its fair market value. Therefore, with an inter vivos gift of depreciable property, such as a factory building or office building, or what-have-you, the tax would be considerably more onerous, involving both recapture of capital cost allowances in many circumstances, and also taxable capital gains.

It is not difficult to understand the concern that the Department of Finance and the draftsmen of this bill felt in respect of what they regarded as unjustifiable tax benefits. We would be blinding ourselves to reality not to recognize that in certain circumstances the situation in the United States, for example, does result in what appear to be unjustified tax benefits. For example, an individual gives marketable securities to a charity; they cost him $1,000; they are worth, say, $5,000 at the date of gift; he gets a charitable donation deduction for $5,000 under United States law, but he is not regarded as having realized a taxable capital gain. Presumably the desire of the draftsmen of the bill was to put such an individual in the same position as though he had disposed of these marketable securities first, and then given the remaining cash to the charitable organization. One can well appreciate that in respect of marketable securities this is perhaps a reasonable rule. Unfortunately, as is the situation with the five-year revaluation rule, what might be reasonable in respect of highly marketable securities might be most unreasonable in respect of property which it is not intended to dispose of.

Senator Connolly: In other words, what you are saying is that he makes this gift and has to make an additional payment out, and it will cost him the amount of the capital gains tax to make his gift?

Mr. Goodman: That is correct, sir. When we are talking about the type of gifts to which I have referred, this can be terribly onerous. I was recently involved in a very large gift to Canadian institutions of art worth several millions of dollars. While I cannot speak for the donor, who has since passed away, I cannot conceive of a gift of that sort being made in 1980 under legislation similar to Bill C-259, where it would result in a substantial cash payment by the donor for the privilege of making this gift.

Senator Connolly: That would apply whether it is done by way of gift or by way of bequest under a will.

Mr. Goodman: Yes, sir. The inter vivos gift situation is a little easier to deal with, because we do have a charitable donation deduction during the individual's lifetime.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: In any event, on the question of inter vivos gifts, the assumption is that with the elimination of gift taxes at the federal level it ceases to be relevant, does it not, under Bill C-259?

Mr. Goodman: Certainly, gift tax is not the problem any more.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: That is what I wish to point out. It is currently, but from the point of view of dealing with Bill C-259 the real problem is the disposition at death.

Mr. Goodman: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: On the application of the capital gain.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: On the application of the capital gain. Under Bill C-259, the federal Government has indicated that gift taxes will not be applicable any more at the end of 1971. Therefore the real issue we now have to face is not in relation to gifts inter vivos but only in relation to gifts on demand.

Mr. Goodman: May I respectfully make a comment on that?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes. I am wondering whether I am right there.

Mr. Goodman: I do not think you are entirely right, sir.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Let us develop it, then.

Mr. Goodman: As far as both gift tax and estate tax are concerned, specific exemption is provided from the application of both for gifts to charitable institutions. With the elimination of gift taxes and estate taxes at the end of 1971, as contemplated by this bill, our only concern is with the tax on the deemed capital gain, either at death or on the making of an inter vivos gift.

The Chairman: At death or on realization, on disposal, "otherwise than".

Mr. Goodman: Yes, if we regard an inter vivos gift as a realization, certainly it is a disposal.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I see your point.

Mr. Goodman: It is deemed to be a realization at fair market value for both depreciable and non-depreciable property.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: In respect of capital gains?

Mr. Goodman: Yes. Under the bill no distinction is made between inter vivos or testamentary gifts to charitable institutions, and to any other donations. It is the failure to discriminate between these charitable and non-charitable beneficiaries that is at the root of our difficulty in the present case.

The Chairman: All they have done is to remove the half on gift tax and estate tax, and got another half now on capital gains, which may pick up the slack that they are losing.

Mr. Goodman: Yes, but that is, of course, a more general question on finance and fiscal policy, on which I could not comment. Whereas in the past great care was taken to ensure that charitable giving, both during one's lifetime and at death, was not inhibited by tax laws, no such care has been taken in the new legislation.

Senator Connolly: In other words, if I may give a concrete example, a will is in being today and the testator is still alive, the will provides for, let us say, a fund of $100,000 to be disposed of at his or her death. Under the present law there is no gift tax, because it a testamentary disposition, and because it is a charitable bequest it does not attract any duty, succession duty or estate tax.

Mr. Goodman: That is quite correct.

Senator Connolly: However, if that will were not changed and the testator died after 1972, they the application of the capital gains tax might very well have an affect.

The Chairman: Except that it would not affect dollars if the gift was of so many dollars.

Senator Connolly: No, it would not affect dollars except in the sense that it would decrease the liquidity of the estate, because there would be capital gains tax to be paid by the testator's estate.

The Chairman: Only if he gave assets, depreciable assets or non-depreciable assets, and there is some gain on death as against cost.

Senator Connolly: Yes, precisely. I am assuming that there is a gain at the time of death.

The Chairman: First of all, one must assume that the disposition is in kind and not just dollars.

Senator Connolly: Yes, of course. I agree there. I am talking now about, say, a will which provided that the balance of the corpus of the estate shall go to such-and-such a charity.

The Chairman: If that is in the form of a depreciable asset, then you have this capital gains profit.

Senator Connolly: And the will that is in being today and is not changed until after 1972 might very well mean that there has been an appreciation over cost, resulting in attracting a capital gains tax.

The Chairman: A lot of wills will have to be restudied. They have been restudied a couple of times in the last couple of years because of threatened changes and they will have to be restudied again.

Senator Connolly: From the point of view of these witnesses and the point of view generally of the Canadian community, it seems to me that if the proposed law does what the witness says, and I have no doubt that it does, then it is going to be extremely difficult for people to make up their minds to make charitable bequests in their wills, because of the danger of capital gains tax. Is that the burden?

Senator Hays: They could give cash.

Senator Connolly: Then they have paid the tax.

The Chairman: I suppose they could even get at you for this. If your will directed that the proceeds on the sale of certain assets be paid to certain charitable organizations, then in arriving at the proceeds of the sale, if there is a gain, the testator's estate has run into a capital gain problem. I do not think he can defeat it just by giving the proceeds of sale of the depreciable asset instead of giving the asset itself.

Mr. Goodman: Not only that; I would question whether it would be desirable.

Senator Connolly: On your point, Mr. Chairman, it goes to the question of liquidity of the estate.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: If people are going to be in doubt about how liquid their estate will be, they will probably, when they come to make their will, take the easy way out and say they cannot take chance on making a charitable donation of the magnitude they originally proposed. Some other device may be adopted. Perhaps some gift will be made, but it will not be the kind that heretofore has been made with full assurance.

The Chairman: It may be that they will have to keep the property that they are giving in the form of non-depreciable property so that at least they will avoid the tax.

Senator Connolly: That is the most difficult thing in the world for a testator to do. How does a testator know what his estate is going to be like ten years hence?

The Chairman: This appears obviously to be interfering with giving for charitable purposes.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Chairman, would you permit me a question?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Goodman, how could you equate a situation like this, where a donor has $20,000, made up of $10,000 in cash and $10,000 in the value of depreciable assets? He has two gifts to make, one to his daughter and one to a charitable organization. You would say that no doubt he would give to the charitable organization the item which may have recapture depreciation. He does not want to be caught with recapture depreciation. How do you equate a situation like this, where the donor would use the charitable donation to get rid of his capital gain tax and the recaptured depreciation?

Mr. Goodman: I recognize that, where we are talking about property that is intended to be sold by the charity, such as the marketable securities that I gave in a previous example—

The Chairman: Is there not a deemed value in those circumstances?

Mr. Poissant: There is a deemed value now, under Bill C-259.

Mr. Goodman: One can understand the situation in which the legislature, Parliament, says that upon the making of a gift of marketable securities these securities would be deemed to be disposed of at their fair market value. This is designed to prevent the situation arising which arises in the United States where, immediately upon the making of such a gift, the charity that receives it disposes of the shares and realizes the money without payment of any tax liability and the government therefore loses the tax on what otherwise might be taxable as a capital gain.

Senator Connolly: Let us stop there for half a second. Say you observe this, that the gain there goes to the charity.

The Chairman: It may be that is part of the solution of this problem. If you transfer the realized gain, as a benefit to the charity and not as a liability of the deceased and his estate, would that accomplish what you are looking for?

Mr. Goodman: That seems possible, sir, particularly since our primary concern is with that type of property which is not going to be disposed of by the charitable organization that we are speaking of. I give the example of the summer camp and a gift. We would expect that the charitable institution would retain that in perpetuity, or substantially in perpetuity. One could understand, therefore, that if an obligation were imposed upon the charitable institution to pay, upon realization of that asset, the amount of tax which the donor might otherwise have paid on it if he had given it to a non-charitable donee, that might be an acceptable solution.

The Chairman: What you do is twofold: you would impose the capital gain and the incidence of that on the charity; and you would defer the tax until realization.

Senator Hays: Could that not be covered by a clause in the act under exemptions?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Hays: And ministerial discretion to exempt?

The Chairman: I would not even have ministerial discretion.

Senator Hays: You get that today in the United Funds. These are all exemptions. You can apply for them.

The Chairman: This would have to be a specific provision, to isolate the capital gain.

Senator Connolly: I think what Senator Hays is talking about is ministerial discretion in determining whether a given organization is charitable.

The Chairman: Yes. I am assuming that, when one is talking about a charitable organization, it is one that is registered.

Senator Connolly: One that is approved.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Connolly: I may be wrong about the theory of taxation in respect of charitable organizations. These organizations are non-taxable and non-profit organizations. If they make a capital gain or any other kind of gain, out of a bequest made to them, through good management, because they are charitable I do not think they should be taxed. I may be out of step with current theories of taxation, but I think this is implicit in our law today, is it not?

Mr. Goodman: Yes, it is certainly implicit in our law today.

Senator Hays: Just to a point.

Senator Connolly: What is the point beyond which it is not implicit?

Senator Hays: If you want to give away money today, you pay estate tax on it.

Mr. Goodman: Not if you give it to a charitable organization.

Senator Connolly: Not on charitable gifts. I think it is an absolute provision of the law.

Mr. Hayes: Mr. Chairman, may I intervene? Senator Connolly's point is one that should be pursued. He says he may be out of line on the matter of what the taxation interest is. He is not out of line on the whole concept of what charities are all about. Therefore, where the sector of private giving and the management by voluntary efforts of charities is concerned, it would be a dangerous step even to permit the idea that later, when the charity gives it up, there will be a capital gain which will then be exigible.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I agree with you 100 per cent. I think that is a dangerous, retrogressive step.

Mr. Hayes: For example, Mr. Goodman's point is that if a man gives his property, his summer camp, and the charity needs it and uses it for ten years but on the eleventh year the whole concept in our welfare society is changed and summer camps of this kind are no longer part of the mores of the community, it could be a terrible imposition on it then to have to pay the realizable value.

Mr. Goodman: That is right.

Senator Hays: On the other hand, I know of churches in expanding cities that have bought corner lots every four blocks and have not been taxed on them, knowing that they were not going to put churches on them.

Senator Connolly: But they are going to put churches on them.

Senator Hays: No, they do not. I happen to know that many of them have sold those lots and have taken the profit. They sell them as the cities expand. I think the tax people have a concern in matters of that kind where there should be a deemed realization of the sale.

The Chairman: I was simply pointing out that there are two routes open: one is to transfer; and the other is to defer. If you transfer the incidence of capital gains tax from the testator, then you are not inhibiting giving, because you are not putting any extra burden on his estate. If you impose the gain and defer the tax until the depreciable property has been realized on, at least you are not defeating the tax revenues completely. Whether this is a retrograde step in the business of charitable giving I do not know. All I was looking at was how you could make the incidence of tax the least onerous.

In the example of the camp property, what would the least onerous be? If it had no further use for such purposes but was in the centre of a large development for real estate and subdivision purposes, or parks, where it might produce a lot of money, then either the charity would enjoy all that fortuitous gain or the tax revenues would gain a bit. It would be one or the other. The question is which way would you go.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Chairman, I think the roll-over free of tax is a good sign, but perhaps there should be some measure to control the avoidance of tax such as, for example, the institution having to keep the gift for a certain number of years after which it would be homefree and would not be penalized unduly. On the other hand, we should make sure that the charitable organization is not used as a conduit for avoiding tax. Perhaps there could be a certain provision that would help to overcome the possibility of such abuses at least for inter-vivos gifts.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a hand in this. If I may respectfully say so, I think we are off on the wrong foot. It is not the duty of this committee to consider taxation of charitable institutions on certain conditions. That is a positive act of tax policy. What we are considering is whether there should be a tax on the donor in an inter vivos gift or the person who died on a testate succession. That is our problem. It is not the problem of going into the whole area of whether charitable organizations or museums or universities, et cetera, should be taxed.

In my humble view, the situation is simple by precedent. It has never been accepted as a tax avoidance or a tax minimization if on death money was given to a charitable foundation or to museums or hospitals. You could give away your entire estate to a hospital and you would not only minimize taxation but would eliminate it completely. That is an important social concept, and there is no reason why that concept should not apply simply because we eliminate succession duties and replace them by a capital gains tax. If we eliminate succession duties federally and introduce a capital gains tax, then we should give to the donor and to the testator the same privileges they had in respect to succession duties. In other words, no deemed realization of any nature whatsoever to a donor or a testator in respect of deemed to be capital gains. Period.

Whether you have the odd case of playing around with situations in which there are listed securities and all the rest of it, once you introduce qualifications into that rule you are striking at the very heart of the point that Mr. Hayes presented here, that we are dealing with a sector of the community that is not indulging in profit. We have already, since 1917, introduced the concept under succession duties that that sector is free of taxes. Why should we not adopt the same principle now that we are eliminating succession duties and introducing capital gains simply by saying that the exemption in toto which was given for succession duties be now given for capital gains—period.

You may get the odd case of the kind to which Mr. Goodman referred, where persons will in certain instances handle the securities by way of gift. So what? It goes to an institution that will be using the money for humanitarian and social purposes.

The Chairman: The principle is just the same.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: The principle is just the same, yes.

The Chairman: Whether I make a gift of securities which have a built-in capital gain or make a gift of a property which, by the time I die, has a large built-in capital gain feature, the principle is the same. What you are looking at is the same. Are you going to look at the end view, which is charity? And if you are going to look at it in that light, then it may well be that this is what we should say and that, therefore, capital gain should not be brought into that picture.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Why should capital gains which now replace the succession duty receive worse treatment than succession duties received by way of total elimination of tax liability on disposition?

Senator Connolly: I should like to make one remark, Mr. Chairman, arising out of the point that Senator Hays made. If the charitable organization is engaged in the business of real estate, and if it is buying real estate and not using it for its own charitable purposes, that is a different kind of thing and it is covered by the present legislation.

Mr. Goodman: May I say that that would be illegal anyway, because the corporate powers of a particular charity would not allow it.

Mr. B. Clamen, C.A. Canadian Jewish Congress: Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to note that if there is no exemption from the capital gains tax, then charities are the ones who are going to suffer as a result of that. To go back to Mr. Poissant's example of the estate with $10,000 in cash and $10,000 in some asset which has appreciated and which might trigger a capital gains tax on death—if there was the exemption, I think the point that Mr. Poissant was making was, of course, that the testator would give the asset which had appreciated to the charitable organization in order to avoid the capital gains tax and give the $10,000 to his family. But I think the reverse situation would be that if there is no exemption, he would give the appreciating asset to his family, but he would not give the full $10,000 to the charity. He would have to hold back $2,000 or $3,000 in order to pay the tax which has accrued on that appreciating asset, and I think that is the important point.

The Chairman: The sum total of what you are saying is that if this proposal remains the way it is, you are inhibiting charitable giving.

Senator Molson: Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat puzzled at a good deal of this development, because I do not think it matters at all if somebody gives away a property worth $10,000 to a charity because it makes his estate look better, as long as he gives it to charity. I do not know why we are spending all this time questioning his motives. I do not think that aspect should come into the picture at all.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Clamen and I have reached that conclusion now, that the end use is what we should look at. And that is precisely the point you are making.

Senator Molson: Well, I have been listening for some time to Mr. Poissant's example, and I am not in the least disturbed if the man should give $10,000 one way or another, as long as he gives it, unless we want to eliminate the whole principle of giving to charity, in which case let us tax it and tax the capital gain, and so on. Otherwise it seems to me that this is quite unreasonable.

The Chairman: But we moved along the line of the process of elimination and we tested all these things and have now eliminated them and you approve of the elimination.

Senator Molson: We have eliminated them in our ideas.

Mr. Clamen: In addition, Mr. Chairman, there would be sufficient anti-avoidance there provided the testator did not receive anything in return for divesting himself of an asset for charitable purposes. To my mind that is sufficient anti-avoidance.

The Chairman: It may well be too that the will speaks at death, so I suppose the latest point in time at which the man is making the gift and the value of it is at his death.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: And he does not enjoy the tax benefits; the poor devil is buried.

The Chairman: Maybe that is one way of avoiding it.

Mr. Hayes: That is called the final solution.

Senator Connolly: A consummation devoutly to be wished. That is what Hamlet says.

The Chairman: Is this the sum and substance of your presentation?

Mr. Goodman: Yes, sir. I should like to add just one comment. The concept of deemed realization at death has apparently been adopted in our legislation from the British legislation of 1965, and it is of some interest that in 1971 the United Kingdom Parliament abolished deemed realization at death. I suspect that one of the reasons for the abolition is the sort of problem that is before us today.

The Chairman: And a new government.

Mr. Hayes: Mr. Chairman, I thank you very much for listening to us and appreciating our point of view.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Chairman, may I also record that the remarks I made here were just to bring up the arguments. Otherwise I entirely agree with your point of view.

The Chairman: That is quite all right.

Gentlemen, we resume our sitting at 2.15 when we will hear from Alcan Finances Limited. That will involve some variations as to form and fact of the principles that were dealt with by Massey-Ferguson this morning.

Then, tomorrow we have a busy day. We have The Canadian Bar Association at 9.30 in the morning and we have the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, and Simpsons-Sears Limited. In the case of the last named, their presentation will be dealing with the question of deferred profit-sharing plans. If you remember, last week we had Allstate Insurance here and their presentation involved profit-sharing plans. There are differences between the two categories of profit-sharing plans. This fits in very nicely, because it will enable you to take a broader look at the provisions in the bill dealing with trust, and where they exclude from the benefit of being a trust profit-sharing plans, deferred profit-sharing plans, registered retirement savings plans, pension plans, etcetera and the element of taxation involved in doing that.

So this will enlarge the area and we will have the problem in greater depth, to decide just how we are going to deal with it.

We will adjourn until 2.15 p.m.

The committee adjourned.

Upon resuming at 2.15 p.m.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I call the meeting to order. This afternoon we have the submission by Alcan Aluminium Limited. Those appearing are: Mr. John G. Lees, Vice-President, Taxes, Alcan Finances Limited; and Mr. William J. Reid, Vice-President and Treasurer, Aluminum Company of Canada Limited.

I understand that Mr. Reid is going to make an opening statement. Then the questions can follow.

Mr. William J. Reid, Vice-President and Treasurer, Aluminum Company of Canada Limited: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to say in opening that I am pinch hitting for Mr. N. V. Davis, the President of Alcan, and for Mr. Paul Leman, President of Aluminum Company of Canada Limited. As some of you may know, Mr. Leman has been ill this past month, and Mr. Davis could not be with you today because of a board meeting, but he does send his apologies.

I would like to open my remarks, honourable senators, with a few words about the general state of our industry. The state is one, as you probably know, of over-capacity in the world, declining volume and prices, and inflationary pressure on our cost structure. I would draw to your attention that both Reynolds and Kaiser in the United States have recently declared losses for the third quarter of the year. Generally speaking, our industry is operating at between 80 and 85 per cent capacity. About one million tons of excess inventory is hanging over the world market.

We are entering a period of great uncertainty and economic difficulty and we feel, based on our present forecasts of demands supply, that this will continue for the next two or three years.

The President of Alcoa, Mr. Krome George, has recently expressed the public view that we are entering a critical period in the industry in which the survival of some of the runners may be at stake. Naturally, the management of Alcan is concerned that Alcan survives through this difficult period and that we will be in a position subsequently to grow and prosper. Thus, it seems to us that the foreign tax aspects of Bill C-259 presents us in Canada with another negative cost factor at a time when we do not need any more bad news.

I would like to refer to Bill C-259 in general. Our broad conclusions from a study of the bill are that we agree with many of the points raised by Massey-Ferguson Limited in their brief this morning. However, in our brief we have concentrated more on the passive income proposals of the bill which are naturally of vital interest to Alcan because of the increasing international and global character of our business. As Mr. Paul Leman has earlier pointed out to you, Alcan's effective income tax cost in consolidation is already higher than that of its major United States competitors. Moreover, these United States competitors and the United States itself appear to be moving in the direction of reducing the effective tax load on our competitors by such expansionary incentives as DISC and the investment tax credit which you are all aware of.

Alcan is looking for tax relief in Canada in order to maintain its competitive posture, and in this context, honourable senators, the foreign tax provisions of Bill C-259 threaten us with substantially increased direct tax expense. Moreover, the quantum of such increased expense is impossible to define precisely because of the uncertain definition of the terms. Exactly what is income from property under the terms of the act? Does it include profit from foreign exchange contracts? Does it include interest on receivables on short term investment proceeds? Does it include proceeds from the sale of technology locally developed, and so on and so forth? There is a great degree of uncertainty in the act.

In addition to the potential increase in the direct tax burden, there would be the administrative cost of compliance involving endless complexities, comparative national tax structures, and the necessary intrusion into the detailed affairs of our overseas affiliates. Such intrusion and the additional cost would be most unwelcome in such countries as Norway, Japan, India and Brazil. Alcan has major holdings in all of these countries and they value their national independence and local autonomy. Alcan does not willingly wish to incur the heavy compliance costs in Canada and abroad and the local suspicions which would be engendered by the intrusion of the Canadian head office and Canadian tax structure into local management, prerogatives and practice.

In this connection I would like to cite to you a practical case, that of the Nippon Light Metal Company in Japan. The Nippon Light Metal Company happens to be the largest aluminum producer in that country, much as Alcan is in Canada. Alcan owns 50 per cent of the shares and this is a company which lists in its statement approximately 125 investments in companies fully owned, partially owned, and minority investments. These, of course, are the investments where we feel the compliance cost would have to be borne in dealing with the provisions of this bill.

To think of the complexities of compliance in this one instance, to say nothing of our holdings in Norway, Brazil, India, and so on, involving a maze of subholdings which even we hardly know about in detail at this stage, the unusual tax structure of the country of Japan and, moreover, the necessity of working in the Japanese language—Japanese statements, and what-not—makes us literally recoil in shock at the prospect.

If the bill passes in its present form, Canada will be the only country in the world with such complex and intrusive rules governing the taxation of foreign affiliates.

Senator Connolly: Just on that point, sir, what you are suggesting is that under this bill, the head office of Alcan in Canada would be more and more involved in the day-to-day operations of the investment program, particularly as it relates to the Nippon Light Metal Company. Is that correct?

Mr. Reid: That is right.

The Chairman: Did I understand you to say, Mr. Reid, that they would or that they should? There is a big difference. Perhaps they should but by reason of the setups in those countries they cannot. In the interests of the requirement of compliance and the extent they may be able to protect themselves against some of these things, certainly they should interfere. Whether you can or not, I do not know.

Mr. John G. Lees, Vice-President, Taxation, Alcan Finances Limited: Is it timely to talk on this point?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Lees: This is a classic example. We have 50 per cent of the shares. We do not have 51 per cent and we do not have the casting vote. Between the Government of Japan and the various establishments we know that we do not control that company. They will run it as they wish, consulting us when they wish to consult us.

Until we received this statement from Price, Waterhouse, prepared two years ago, we did not know that they had 125 subsidiaries. We were aware that they had a few, but not 125.

The Chairman: Do you not receive financial statements?

Mr. Lees: Yes, from the main company showing so much for investments, but it took Price, Waterhouse years of digging to get an analysis, and they produced a statement like this and one of the entries states "others, approximately 100 accounts less than 150 million yen each" and it tells us what the interest on the dividend income was. Even Price Waterhouse cannot find out what those hundred investments are. We have shown this to the department and have asked them what are we going to do.

Senator Desruisseaux: Not even a total?

Mr. Lees: We have total revenue, total investment, but no details.

Senator Connolly: No breakdown?

Mr. Lees: No breakdown.

Senator Connolly: And some are portfolio?

Mr. Reid: Yes, if we were to comply with the law it would force us to go back and investigate every one of those affiliates to find out if we had to pay tax on it or not.

Mr. Lees: We could go to the Japanese and say, "Sirs, do not invest in these companies unless you take at least 20 per cent so we will have at least 10 per cent." That is a rule regarding whether you have a so-called affiliate or not. We could ask them not to invest in companies less than 20 per cent owned, and right away the Japanese are going to say, "We will run this business." The next thing we could say to them is, "When you invest do invest by equity and not by debt, giving rise to interest." And they would say, "Everything is done on banking debt and over-priced interest in Japan and interest revenues"; and we will be in a conflicting position with the board of directors in Japan. Our president, Mr. Davis, has told us quite clearly that we should not discuss this with them. The Japanese affiliate will run this business; and if there is a tax problem we will absorb it in Canada because we have never asked them for this kind of information. They will question our motives. Price Waterhouse have told me that they will refuse to be put in a position of getting tax information because it would ruin their reputation as auditors because the Japanese would not believe that this was purely tax information they were seeking. They would be suspicious that we were trying to get something out of them.

Senator Desruisseaux: Are you the only Canadian company in this kind of situation with the Japanese?

Mr. Lees: The only one of which I know.

Mr. Reid: We are certainly the only Canadian company with a situation of this utter complexity. I am sure that other firms have Japanese subsidiaries, but not with such a large scope and not of this size.

Senator Connolly: But your comments are not restricted to Japan. You have chosen Japan as an illustration, but the same situation can apply—

Mr. Reid: Yes, we have chosen Japan because it seems the most outlandish in terms of language, custom, and general difficulty.

The Chairman: Let us analyse this a little bit. What you are saying is that in Japan, because you have only a 50 per cent interest, you do not control it; and, not being able to control it, there are certain accesses that you do not enjoy by way of getting information that would be pertinent to the compliance that ALCAN must make to this bill. So you are pointing out that that is a complexity. But Japan is just one instance. There are other countries where you have different problems I would imagine.

Mr. Reid: Yes.

The Chairman: Let us say that you are operating in a country where there are tax incentives; where you have a tax holiday. This is a more practical aspect of the matter, it strikes me, because you are going to pay tax on the incentive.

Mr. Lees: Let us stick with Japan for a moment. Their rate of tax, if you look at sheet 1 of Exhibit "B"—let us look at their rate of tax from the Price Waterhouse statement. This is the financial data and how we would comply with the law in respect to this company. This company had a rate of tax in 1970 which was 30 per cent of income, and in 1969 it was 41 per cent. This was because Japan enjoys incentives there. But the difference between that rate and the Canadian rate in that year would be a tax which Alcan Aluminium Limited would have to pay. So, even though this is a publicly registered company—in other words, you can buy these shares on the Japanese stock market—they are registered in Japan, and taxes are being paid as on on-going business, it does not pay the same level of tax as you would in Canada. But this is a concern regarding every one of those examples you have touched on. These companies are paying taxes, but because of the difference in computing income tax, they would pay less than the Canadian rate and Alcan Aluminium Limited would have to pay the difference.

The Chairman: This is the point I am making. That is the effect in many countries, and the effect on you as a multi-national company that if the provisions of Bill C-259 apply, Canada is going to tax away the incentives that you get in other countries.

Mr. Reid: Yes.

Senator Connolly: They are going to tax the incentives but would they be taxed away?

The Chairman: It depends on the rates. I mean, you will get an offset for the amount of the taxes that have been paid in the foreign country; but if that rate is lower than the Canadian rate, then you are going to be paying Canadian taxes on the rest of it.

Mr. Lees: At this point, we are only talking about passive income. And in our brief we are saying that every serious company worth its salt has some kind of passive income because it will have surplus cash. By definition, if it is successful it will have these problems. Most of the countries we deal with have rates of tax which are lower than the Canadian rates. So, by definition we will pay some tax, to the extent that they have these sundry incomes.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Even though it is not related to the so-called diverted income?

Mr. Lees: Yes, sir, that is correct.

Senator Gélinas: How long have you had this investment with the Nippon Company?

Mr. Reid: Since 1952.

Senator Gélinas: And it is only recently that you found out what the investments were?

Mr. Reid: No, I think we have known that they had a large portfolio investment. We have known that there have been a large group of investments, but—

Senator Gélinas: But not 125?

Mr. Reid: Not to my knowledge. I worked on the Japanese situation a few years ago, but I did not realize that there were 125 of them. This is new information which defines the amounts and the scope and, of course, focuses it in the light of this new act. It is sharpening our vision a bit.

Mr. Lees: Sir, I suggest that the point here is that in looking at this kind of investment, Alcan's position has been to avoid asking for that kind of information.

Senator Isnor: Why would you not ask for that information?

Mr. Reid: They are operating quite well, and they are producing very good results, and as long as they are doing well, we tend to leave the subsidiaries alone.

Senator Isnor: That does not matter. You are still entitled to know what is going on, I would think.

Mr. Lees: You could say that, but if another person is extremely touchy and inclined to fly up at the least suggestion, it gives you cause for thought. You do not ask an idle question just to get information. You are very careful and you only ask what you need to ask. It is a prickly affair.

Mr. Reid: May I just speak to that for a moment? When we bought this interest in the company in Japan in 1952, we got it at a reasonable price. The Japanese have not forgotten that we bought in at a very propitious time. I feel it fair to say that we would never get that 50 per cent if we were trying now.

The Chairman: Mr. Reid, are we not running along a parallel line there? Let us get into what is the hard core of the problem. The hard core of the problem is the effect or the cost of compliance.

Mr. Reid: And the additional cost of taxation, or the additional taxation burden on us.

The Chairman: Yes, of course. When you used the expressed "compliance cost", did you mean the administrative cost of complying or the extra cost in the way of paying more taxes to Canada?

Mr. Reid: In my mind I separate the two into an additional effective tax cost to us as an industry, and compliance with the administrative information burdens both in Canada and with our subsidiaries to supply information.

The Chairman: But the major problem is the increased tax cost.

Mr. Reid: Yes, I would think that is the major problem.

The Chairman: Then the cost of compliance, administratively, develops this way: First, it involves substantially more work in documentation and information to be collected; second, in that connection having regard to the way in which operations are carried on and accounting is done in some countries, you may not be able to get all the information anyway.

Mr. Reid: We are not sure that we can get all the data. That is what we are saying, I think.

The Chairman: You might have to face an arbitrary assessment, if you did not produce all the information.

Mr. Reid: That is right, sir, and there would be a cost of compliance in terms of our relationships with these overseas affiliates, which jealously guard their national prerogatives.

Senator Connolly: Have you discussed this with the tax department?

Mr. Lees: Yes, sir.

Senator Connolly: Does the tax department see any way out of this for you?

Mr. Reid: Not yet.

Mr. Lees: They just buttoned their lips.

Senator Connolly: I guess they do not know.

Mr. Reid: I guess ours is a rather complex case in the general scheme of things.

Mr. Lees: They ended up by saying, "But you will comply, won't you?" They put the question mark there.

The Chairman: Well, gentlemen, you are here first of all because we invited you, but, in any event, it was even indicated in the Department of Finance that perhaps you should come before this committee. The way I interpret that is that perhaps they are looking for this committee to do some of the study in depth in order to see what the answers are rather than face the problem in the department itself at the stage at which they are now. If we accept that as being the job we should do, then let us get on with it, but you have to give us some of the answers.

We know what the problem is in Japan. While you can tell us a lot more about it, and we might want some more information about it at a very early stage, Japan does present a very complex problem in gathering the information and even in your giving them directions or ways in which they might go so that your increased burden of tax in Canada would not be as great. Is that right?

Mr. Reid: That is right, sir.

The Chairman: Let us take a few other countries and see how you get along. How about Norway?

Mr. Reid: Norway is a big investment. Fifty per cent is owned by the Norwegian government, with a number of subsidiaries as well. It is not nearly as complicated as the Japanese structure.

The Chairman: Would they be subsidiaries of the Norwegian company?

Mr. Reid: Of the Norwegian company, yes, sir.

The Chairman: Is that 50 per cent investment a statutory limitation in Norway? You cannot increase your 50 per cent?

Mr. Reid: Yes, by agreement we cannot increase our investment. The Norwegian government owns the balance of the shares.

The Chairman: Well, you cannot control the Norwegian government, so if you were desirous of acquiring any more they would have to be willing to sell.

Mr. Reid: That is right.

Mr. Lees: As this is the biggest smelter in Norway the chances are nil.

Mr. Poissant: You have referred to the Japanese companies and the Norwegian companies. Are those companies Japanese-based and Norwegian-based, or could they be deemed to be international companies? In other words, are they Japanese resident corporations or Norwegian resident corporations?

Mr. Lees: The Japanese have reached the growth point where they are ready to move out. For example, the Nippon Light Metal Company is now in the process of developing a mine in Fiji. It has a share interest with us in another mine in Malaya for raw materials—bauxite. It is not beyond the bounds to think that they will begin to move into the Philippines and other areas in the Far East.

The Chairman: By way of carrying their own Japanese company forward or by setting up a national company in the country where they are going to carry on operations?

Mr. Lees: One would imagine they would form their own subsidiary of which Nippon Light Metal would own 100 per cent of the shares, and it would evolve from there.

The Chairman: They would form it in the particular country.

Mr. Lees: In Thailand, for example, or wherever it was. It would be the normal type.

The Chairman: Is there a requirement in countries like Malaya, Thailand, and Fiji that there must be a percentage of domestic ownership?

Mr. Reid: Not in Malaya, to my knowledge. The company in Malaya is owned 75 per cent by Alcan and 25 per cent by Nippon Light Metal.

Senator Connolly: Generally, in the underdeveloped countries these rules are not as rigid as they are in the more developed countries like Japan and Norway.

Mr. Lees: That is right.

The Chairman: Are there incentives in these companies where it is proposed to carry on mining operations? Incentives like accelerated depreciation?

Mr. Lees: Yes. Malaya, for example, gives very generous investment allowances over and above bonus depreciation. All the countries have incentives of different kinds. Some are better; some worse.

The Chairman: Do they have in those countries periods of tax holidays, as I refer to them?

Mr. Lees: They have what is termed, in the British style, "pioneer legislation". Malaya has some of that, and Taiwan has a piece of it. Mind you, we are speculating. This Nippon Light Metal has been growing rapidly with the Japanese economy and has only gone abroad for raw materials.

Let us turn to Norway, which is in the position where the Aluminum Company was ten years ago. The Norwegian company is aggressively interested in seeking markets in Germany and in France and in Britain and would like to buy subsidiaries. We have been attempting to persuade them to stay with Alcan and not to buy their own subsidiaries. We have said that we would assure them a market for their aluminum through our subsidiaries. I do not think you can predict how that is going to come out five years from now. They may well invest and have their own foreign tributaries and subsidiaries.

The Chairman: I ask you stop right there. You can say without speculation, that the earnings generated in these various parts, if this legislation should become effective, would come in to Alcan of Canada as earnings and the only deduction you would have would be whatever your tax cost was. If you are existing and progressing in those countries by reason of those tax benefits, then you are going to pay Canadian tax on those benefits.

Mr. Lees: To the extent that the participation in our hands was less than 10 per cent, this is correct. If we had more than 10 per cent, I would say that the only concern then is as to whether or not there is this so-called passive income. The legislation, as we know, is very complex and one has constantly to remember whether one has more than a 10 per cent interest in the underlying equity or less. Now where we have a 50 per cent interest in this Norwegian company, so long as it takes a 20 per cent or more interest in any other foreign venture, and they mind it simply as a branch plant with no sundry income, no interest income, we will get along. The tax bill would not be fair to say that it would penalize us on that.

The Chairman: All right; let us stop there and let us take a look at an example of that situation. Let us take Norway and let us say that you have a 50 per cent interest there. If this bill and its provisions on foreign income passes into law, will you be affected in relation to the earnings of that Norwegian company in any way in which you are not now affected so far as Canada is concerned?

Mr. Lees: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: Will you illustrate how?

Mr. Lees: This company is a specific example which is right in front of us today. Our engineers in Canada invented or devised a new scheme to control pollution in smelters. They devised it some years ago. What they needed was a big production-sized operation to test it out and to make sure it worked and was effective. The Norwegian Government was ahead of the rest of the world on pollution legislation. This Norwegian affiliate of ours said, "Please, come and try this new device in our operation; it is the best idea we have heard yet." With their help this device was perfected. Today the world is crying for this kind of technique and know-how. It is not a patentable idea, mind you, but it is one that people will pay you a royalty to get. The Norwegians say, "The deal is 50-50; it is half our idea too because we did the perfecting of it." Alcan agreed with them that it should be 50-50. We now have third parties, people in whom we have no interest in Germany and the States coming to us and saying, "Please sell us your know-how." So you are going to see profits in the books of this Norwegian company for their half of the income from royalty, and I say that is income from property.

The Chairman: But your half of what may be generated out of those royalties would be passive income.

Mr. Lees: There is one half that comes directly to the Aluminum Company and that is taxable income here, while half goes to Norway, and half of that half comes back here as passive income and is taxable, and this is the problem we are talking about.

The Chairman: Well, first of all, we eliminate the half that comes directly to Canada because even under the present law you are taxed on that. So then what we are dealing with and what we are concerned about is half of the half, and if that is passive income—

Mr. Lees: It is taxed.

The Chairman: Then you will be hurt in regard to taxes in a way that you are not presently being hurt.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: In addition you are taxed even though you do not receive it since it is permissive income.

Mr. Lees: That is correct. And the Norwegians are extremely tough with their dividends, and trying to get them to increase their normal dividend to give us something extra to pay the tax is another problem.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Your only resource then would be to say that it is active business income rather than royalty income.

The Chairman: Either that or write something into the statute defining active business.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, could you direct me to where there is a definition of passive income?

The Chairman: It is in clause 95(1)(a).

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Did you intend to put a question, Senator Connolly, or may I continue?

Senator Connolly: I wondered whether the definition included tax incentives in the foreign country in question. I am looking at clause 95(1)(a), and at the subheadings (i) to (iv). I wonder whether the definitions there include things like tax incentives and tax holidays and things like that that the Chairman has been talking about.

The Chairman: The question of a tax holiday is that you are looking at offsets in the other country that you will get credit for on the Canadian tax rate. For instance in Thailand they give you a tax holiday, then you do not have a tax credit there and therefore you are paying tax on 100 per cent of the income that would come over. Something else I would draw your attention to is that they do not define "active business" so far as I can see. In 95(1)(a) they talk about "from businesses other than active businesses." Now what does that mean? It may well be that the income source in Norway originally may be from what you and I should understand to be an active business operation, but it can get converted en route to you, and may end up as passive income in your hands. It looks as though something needs to be rewritten there, but at the moment I cannot say what it is.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Continuing along that line, Mr. Chairman, suppose we got away from this esoteric concept of an affiliate—which after all is a new concept and is not necessarily bad—and went back to a controlled corporation, and suppose that in that controlled corporation we could define "active business" as distinct from property or, broadly speaking, investment income then I think that substitution of investment income of some type for foreign accrual property income would improve the situation. "Property" can be derived from property used in active business activities, which is one of the confusions.

If we reverted to controlled company and investment income, could you live with that tax on permissive income?

Mr. Lees: If we took investment income, as I understand it.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Royalty income in my opinion on that basis would be active business income.

Mr. Lees: I think it is money laid out to buy long-term bonds or shares in an amount of less than 10 per cent; just a few bonds.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Surplus monies not needed for the active running of the business.

Mr. Lees: I would say it is probably zero. I gave some figures to Mr. Reid in Alcan's consolidation. There is a total of $30 million in the 70 accounts made up of inter-company dividends. Much of that is dividends from German subsidiaries to German parents. This with interest on bank accounts and so on, but almost all of it representing marketable securities, where we have bought and sold stocks and bonds, totals in the order of $300,000 or $400,000 in the whole group. We could live with a problem such as that.

The only area in which we have to be careful arises in our Indian subsidiary. It issues bonds, receives money a year in advance and puts it out at interest; I do not consider that to be investment.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Let me put it this way: the Government is in love with FAPI and there is a romance with foreign accrual property income. We are faced with the situation in which we are asking, possibly, for a bill of divorce, or we suggest to them that we wish to live in this romance under certain conditions.

Let us assume for the sake of argument that, even though some would go along with you, we ask for deferment of the section, or even complete elimination. Further, assume we must live with what I would call a romance, or let us call it FAPI or investment income. It would appear to me that, provided there was a control or, at least, proof of active participation in investment policy—one or the other—and provided the income was confined to investment income in the true sense of the word, that would be, at least, a common ground for compromise.

Mr. Lees: I agree. That is the sense of our brief. We have made specific textual language suggestions which we think accomplish precisely that purpose.

The Chairman: The word "dividends" somehow in the hands of those drafting this bill must have been equated with investment income. Apparently no thought was ever given to the fact the earnings from which those dividends were generated were the earnings on the active operating business. Why should they lose their character because the manner in which they are paid off is by declaration of a dividend? Why should they have another label because they are dividends? Should the basis not be to determine the origin or source and type of operation which produced this earning?

Mr. Lees: I would not condemn the bill on that basis. I think they endeavoured very hard to allow income to come from a factory in Germany. It goes from that subsidiary to a German parent, and from there to a holding company based in the Netherlands. Let us say we have a financial arrangement in this, and thence it goes to Canada. They have endeavoured very hard not to obstruct that flow of the earnings back to Canada.

A situation in which the money is taken in Germany and it is decided not to send it back to Canada, but to purchase bonds or shares in Bayer or Volkswagen in Germany, presents a problem.

I take it that Mr. Phillips is saying they do have a problem and if we are to have a marriage with FAPI, we must not quarrel if a German subsidiary buys shares in Volkswagen.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: It is merely postponement of a dividend out of surplus at that stage.

Mr. Lees: Yes, but the money might come back to Canada, where the shares would be bought.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: It is postponement of the increase of a dividend rate.

Mr. Lees: That is correct, but this is the purpose of our brief. We are not choosing to argue that issue.

Mr. Reid: Under your definition would a controlled company be one exceeding 50 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: That is my point. There should be no tax on permissive income unless it is diverted income; in other words, unless it is tainted. However, on the assumption that permissive income is taxed, surely it should only be taxed if the taxpayer had something to say about the policy of the investment. The control should be real control.

It would appear to me that the simplest alternative, as I said before, if the romance with FAPI is to continue, is to say, "For heaven's sake, if you are going to tax us, do not tax us on the value based on when we were in control and when, through control, were responsible for this permissive income".

Mr. Lees: That is correct. A Japanese example can be taken as a case in point.

Mr. Reid: That definition of control and a closer definition of the meaning of foreign accrual property income would narrow it down significantly.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: With that, plus the definition of an active business, you would be in the ballpark.

Mr. Lees: Broadly speaking I would say so. Let us take another example of a problem where that would not be perhaps an entirely adequate solution. We have a $10 million problem facing us in the next five years, $10 million of FAPI income in Britain. It is a holding company which issues convertible bonds in the British market. These bonds, if the company is successful, are ultimately converted into shares. This money is then left as an open account advance to a wholly-owned subsidiary to build a smelter permitted by British law due to the British need for smelters because of their balance of payment problem.

Under the British tax law, interest during construction cannot be capitalized. The advice was to keep the interest expense in the holding company and when the smelter goes into operation, instead of just charging that interest at cost, add a point or two. For instance, if the interest rate had been 10 per cent, 12 per cent would be charged thereafter. Over a period of seven or eight years interest during construction will in effect be recouped against the smelter profits.

At this point I have to tell our management that the holding company will be generating a huge passive income which is now to the figure of $10 million, with $5 million Canadian tax to be paid.

They will recoup it in later years in Britain, but there will be no tax paid in Britain because of the large incentives. There will be no credit for British tax. It is a mess. Our answer to this is minimum exemption.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Suppose we pushed this thing further and said that you were subjected to passive income provided you had control, and that it was passive income resulting from investment derived from retained earnings. That would cover the point.

The Chairman: It is not in any sense diverted.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Of course, it does not answer all your problems.

Mr. Lees: Perhaps we could take a leaf from the American book. They refer to dealings between a subsidiary in the same country, all in Britain, Germany, or Japan, where you cannot have passive income. It is only when you deal with third parties, with independent people or foreigners from that country that you have passive income. Perhaps we could take a leaf from their book. It is one of our suggestions that where the transaction gives rise to this passive income all within one national boundary, it is then scratched out.

The Chairman: You say that there should be a common pocket.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: You say that it should apply when there is a bill of divorcement but not when there is a retained romance. But you will not get it, on the assumption that you will not be able to draw a distinction between territorial arm's length and non-arm's length. It appears to me that it would narrow it down very much. It would dilute it considerably by an extension of the meaning of actual business, plus passive income resulting from control, and from income resulting from retained earnings.

Senator Connolly: Senator Phillips, this might be the appropriate time for you to explain to us the meaning of diverted income.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Diverted income is commonly expressed as being related to income subject to Canadian tax, and which because of its territorial use, is acquired in a foreign jurisdiction.

Senator Connolly: In that sense, would the term "diverted income" be used in connection with investment in a smelter in Britain, and invested in a new enterprise there? Would that be an example of it?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would say that is not diverted income at all. In my opinion it is strictly a bona fide extension of the company in the United Kingdom which has paid its business tax in the course of its business operations in the U.K. and then uses its surplus in the ordinary way of expansion. Surely that should not be regarded as passive income.

The Chairman: One of the difficulties here, Mr. Lees, is that if you are able to equate incentives and that sort of thing, which you enjoy in operations elsewhere in the world, to a tax credit that you would be entitled to apply against Canadian tax, it should be of considerable help, should it not?

Mr. Lees: I am not sure that I understand you.

The Chairman: I thought that one of your complaints was that in operating various offshore companies in different parts of the world you enjoy all the incentives, but that Canada taxes them because you have no offsetting tax credit. Is that not a problem for you?

Mr. Lees: In a way. We have many cases of perfectly fine companies where the statutory rate is only 40 per cent. I would not care to say that, even where they paid their full tax of 40 per cent, we should pay 10 per cent or 8 per cent in Canada on some transaction of the kind that we are talking about. I would use the analysis only for certain kinds of problems.

Mr. Reid: That is, of course, one of the worst examples of the tax differential.

The Chairman: If you have a tax incentive, the net result is that a corporate tax of 40 per cent in a foreign country might only be 20 per cent, which widens the gap and you would have to pay on that amount in Canada.

Mr. Lees: Another example where the bill reaches ridiculous heights is that where you have an American subsidiary which is trying to increase its business by acquisition, you buy 100 per cent shares and you do a merger. You merge that company into your base company so that it becomes a division, and the profits of the acquired company are available to use up your losses from investment credits.

The Chairman: If you use up your losses in a foreign jurisdiction you reduce the income.

Mr. Reid: You reduce the effective income tax.

The Chairman: Not only the income tax, but also the amount that would be attributable to you as earnings in Canada, in connection with FAPI.

Mr. Lees: You have to get the credits to offset FAPI.

The Chairman: You would have to equate the same amount of tax losses to the tax credit.

Mr. Reid: Or having used the losses from prior years, to offset them against the profits.

Mr. Lees: I would define the problem more carefully, rather than to compute what these credits would be, which in itself is very difficult.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Would consolidation help you, in addition to the points that we have been discussing? Suppose the Government reversed its position generally on the whole question of consolidation, which was pressed by this committee and supported in this instance by the committee in the other house—or alternatively we supported them. We have both pressed for it. If we succeeded in getting consolidation generally, not necessarily in any relationship to the subject matter that we are discussing, and if we confine passive income to the manner I have indicated—to wit, investment income, preceded by controls, and investment income resulting from surplus or retained earnings—would not the overall effect put you in a pretty fair position?

Mr. Lees: We opted very strongly for that. We still think it is a good idea.

Mr. Reid: It would help us in Canada. That would be another plus for us.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I am taking the overall picture and pushing for the things that are arguable rather than dealing with some of the sophisticated and abstruse features like, for instance, your reference to the handling of the situation in respect of particularly subsidiaries in one country as distinguished from other countries where there is a tendency to be bogged down when you begin to specialize in the repress for relief. We will shortly be asking your opinion on the question of deferment of the application of the section for a while in relation to tax freeze. Sticking to our knitting for the moment, suppose the suggestion were made along the lines that I am saying: back to consolidated tax returns, back to control instead of affiliate, back to business to be more specifically defined, and passive income to be the result of the use of retained earnings. It would appear to me that you would narrow down the area where you could be damaged.

Mr. Lees: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Very considerably.

Mr. Lees: Very considerably.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: As a remedial measure, therapy rather than surgery at this stage.

The Chairman: It would be interesting to have your view on that point, Mr. Lees.

Mr. Lees: As a note of caution, I mention that Mr. Reid did not get a chance to finish his paper. In it he makes the point that our industry is reaching a crisis. Mr. Krome George, President of ALCOA (Aluminum Company of America), is suggesting somebody has to go out of this industry. When he met with Mr. Benson he said that somebody is going to be a gobblee and somebody is going to be a gobbler; what does he want Alcan to do? I would be worried that if we have to gobble up, or try to gobble up, our directors would have to be worried that they would be buying a horrible tax problem. That is what I have stressed, that one of the things we need is the American style 25 per cent of sales exemption. This is what worries me. I think that given the shape Alcan's business is in today your suggestion is adequate, we could live with it.

The Chairman: If you took 25 per cent of sales and put it in a pocket labelled, "untouchable profit", that is the profit of Alcan. Is that the way you want to do it?

Mr. Poissant: No. The 25 per cent is the passive income. If it is within 25 per cent there is no passive income. That would settle Alcan's problem. No doubt this is agreeable to you. How about the other companies? Would you have any ideas?

The Chairman: How can you jump to 25 per cent? How can you just say that if the amount of so-called passive income does not exceed 25 per cent of sales, then it is not to be treated as passive income? Is that what you are saying?

Mr. Poissant: That is what they say. That is what the Americans are using now. They say, "That would serve our purpose. Then we don't have to worry."

The Chairman: That is really very arbitrary.

Mr. Poissant: It is copied from the United States.

Mr. Lees: The American is 30 per cent. If you want to negotiate us down to 10 per cent, we could probably say we might live with 10 per cent, which is arbitrary.

Mr. Poissant: Which is not bad. It means to say that in any type of international co-operation there must be in some places a certain amount of passive income, or diverted income, but it could be for only a very short period, like your $10 million, which is not really your active business, but because of certain circumstances it must be, or as the chairman said before, perhaps it will lose its identity because income from one has become divided with the other one. If it was within a certain range—you say 25 per cent; the chairman may say we could use another percentage—that would solve a fair amount of problems, because then it would be treated as ordinary income, which because of the process is normal.

Mr. Lees: I think the American rationale is: "We don't mind if you have a little bit of passive income. We don't want you to be principally engaged in or primarily devoted to getting passive income". They use 30 per cent as an arbitrary mindless rule to say that if you get less than 30 per cent you do not even fill in the forms. This is all we are saying: give us that kind of a rule, plus these other two changes that Mr. Phillips mentioned, and we will live with it pretty well.

The Chairman: Mr. Lees, you started to analyze the so-called permissive or passive income. A great deal of it in a large multi-national operation is just the wise application of money that is available at the time and not needed in the active business operation to produce money.

Mr. Reid: Cash flow.

The Chairman: That is a sound economic principle, is it not?

Mr. Reid: Yes.

The Chairman: Therefore, maybe you should not correlate income produced in that fashion and call it diverted income, or passive income. In other words, you have to distinguish the character. If it is legitimate and makes economic sense and you are not doing it as a business, you are not doing it as a business, you are not in the business of doing it, then why should it come in that rule? It should not come in the rule. Is that not right? Your idea of the American 25 per cent of sales as an arbitrary figure is perhaps a quick, short way of dealing with the problem and saving a lot of calculations, documentation, accounting and everything else. If you started with the kind of analysis I was talking about it might take a long time and cost a lot of money.

Mr. Lees: Oh yes.

The Chairman: I cannot understand why there should be penalty because a large multi-national company uses moneys not immediately required for the general purposes of the business. They use that to earn money which they will need in the future.

Senator Connolly: And the earnings from which they will ultimately take tax, and perhaps higher tax.

Mr. Reid: Let me give as an example the Indian operation, which is quite large. In the Indian Aluminum Company we have 65 per cent. They are allowed to pay their dividends once a year, with exchange control and whatnot. As they built up their cash flow to provide for dividends they would naturally invest it, presumably in securities and market instruments, and arrange some short term passive income, I suppose. This presumably would fall into the net of the present law, which seems undesirable.

The Chairman: You are referring to Bill C-259. Do not let us call it law before it is law.

Mr. Reid: I am sorry, the bill. You are quite right, senator.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Lees, would you in those percentages exclude or include the know-how and royalties in your mind? You had in mind that one must be excluded before arriving at the calculation.

Mr. Lees: As I say, we made our own studies, which tell me that from what we have seen so far 10 per cent on a group basis, grouping all of them, is probably inadequate.

Mr. Poissant: Including or excluding royalties and know-how.

Mr. Lees: We would not mind. First of all, we say that any royalties coming to an affiliate of the company are out; you do not count it. Then we would not mind about the Norwegians. By definition, that is out, because it is not controlled. I think that kind of a problem gives one enough room, not to worry too much about defining too precisely what is income from property. Our sensitivity and worry on that level would go down, we would be less nervous.

Mr. Poissant: Say, 10 per cent in your case, based on your own experience, would do and you would be home free, there would be no problem? That means all we would have to do would be that "other than active business" would include less than 10 per cent, as it would be deemed to be passive income or other than active business. That would be included in the active business.

The Chairman: Not less than 10 per cent of what?

Mr. Poissant: Of sales.

Mr. Lees: Quite. I think we would be all right with that kind of rule. I am trying to think of the many situations we have. We constantly think of national groups, so that we have a holding company and a subsidiary and we have to add them together. Often our local managers want the holding company separate from the subsidiaries, for all manner of reasons. Sometimes this is royalty income, although attached to the holding company, which does not have much in the way of sales. It would be necessary to do some fine draftsmanship—which I think we have supplied.

Mr. Poissant: Is that 25 per cent included in your draft?

Mr. Lees: Yes, it is at 91.2. I have 10 per cent in there. There was a split conflict of interest. It is Exhibit C.

Mr. Poissant: You have 25 per cent. Shall we call it the Alcan amendment?

Mr. Lees: Right.

Mr. Poissant: Instead of the $500 suggested, which is too small.

The Chairman: It has been suggested that, due to the complications in this phase of the bill, international as well as income, where the provision is that it comes into force in 1973, that should be 1974; and where the provision is that it comes into force in 1976, that should be made 1977. In that way two things might be accomplished: there might be an opportunity to deal with treaties; and also a better understanding of the problems could be gathered in that further period of time. What would your view be on that?

Mr. Lees: Mr. Reid was quizzing me last night about administration. We could only applaud that step, because we are absolutely terrified as to whether we are going to have the staff to do the job. I think that is correct.

Mr. Reid: That is correct.

The Chairman: Remember that under our income tax law every taxpayer is his own assessor. You assess yourself, and if you go wrong you pay the penalty. All they do is tell you when you have not followed the right rules or got the right interpretation; but you have to be your own assessor in the first instance.

Mr. Lees: In our case, what it means is a lot of educating of people abroad, as to new forms to be designed and translations to be made. People in National Revenue who administer this tell me they are going to ask them to file a piece of paper for each subsidiary, with a copy of its tax return attached. In all innocence, what they do not realize is that in Brazil and in some of these places they do not prepare a tax return until two years later. And some of these tax returns are monumental in thickness. The tax return would become several bushel baskets of paper; this is what they literally ask for. I think we all need time to sort out that kind of thinking.

The Chairman: So you would approve such a recommendation?

Mr. Lees: Yes.

The Chairman: Failing that, you make some recommendations in your brief. They really involve modifications of sections in the bill, to lighten the impact on what you think the sections mean and the effect they will have on you. Would you feel that those recommendations, if they were adopted, would meet your situation and perhaps make you a "globbler" instead of a "globblee"?

Mr. Lees: Yes, sir.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: May I put a further question, Mr. Chairman? A further approach by way of suggestion this morning was, that cumulatively, 1973 would read 1974 and 1976 would read 1977; and, in any event, that the sections themselves, with respect to passive income and dividends from affiliates, should not come into effect in respect of the passive income or the dividends of a particular country, until such time as it is established that the country from whence the passive income is deemed to come, or the dividend does come, is a treaty country, with a definitive treaty, or when it is established that there will be no treaty in respect to that country.

The background of that is that this committee—rightly, in my opinion—took the position in its report on the White Paper that we were putting the cart before the horse in dealing with this whole business of foreign income. There is acceptance of the principle, in the sense that we have a law which comes into force in 1972 and 1976, and so on, obviously for the purpose of getting the treaties put through. It has been suggested—and I personally like the suggestion—that we get back to logic and say, "Do not apply the new sections until such time as you have either worked out a treaty or have not worked out a treaty," because the method of treatment of the passive income and the dividend is related to the existence or non-existence of a treaty and, when there is a treaty, obviously to the terms of the treaty.

The Chairman: In doing that, you are not challenging any principle in the bill. All you do is defer its coming into effect for a further period of time.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Frankly, the hope is, Mr. Chairman, that if that is done, the Government will have the opportunity to think it out a little more carefully . . .

The Chairman: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: . . . and will relate treaty negotiations to the problems that have been submitted to them for consideration.

The Chairman: If you interfere with something that is the pride and joy of the author, by direct attack, saying, "Suspend it," that is one thing. If you simply say, "We need more time to understand it," that is simply taken as meaning that you are not challenging the principle. Of course, time may challenge the principle.

Mr. Lees: Mr. Chairman, may I reply to Mr. Phillips? I would say sections 91 to 95 should not involve treaty negotiations in principle, because the whole sense of the sections, if they have any meaning, is to catch those Canadians who are avoiding Canadian tax.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Lees: They should be looked at in that regard. I would not be prepared to negotiate that with a foreigner. That is a domestic problem; it has to be regarded as a domestic policy and it should be settled here. I do not think it is negotiable.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: But the question of tax relief on dividends, as distinguished from passive income in terms of credit, is closely connected with treaties. You have to have your treaties in order to know what you are paying. You are dealing with two factors. We have been concentrating on passive income, but the second one deals with the question of dividends.

Mr. Lees: If I were to approach it, I would get section 95 right. I believe they are gross now. Passive income should be aimed at diverted income. I believe we have suggestions for that.

The Chairman: When we put emphasis on the tax treaty side of it, that is not the important side which you feel the emphasis should be placed on.

Mr. Lees: Yes.

The Chairman: To the extent that these sections are intended to deal with tax avoidance, you are right. That is something that we can deal with in Canada and we now have enough law to deal with it.

Mr. Lees: I feel that government should retain somewhere, either by order in council or at the discretion of the minister, the right to permit a Canadian company to receive a tax-free dividend where the minister is satisfied that tax avoidance was not involved and the tax situation required the investment to be made in Uganda or in Mexico where the investor receives tax incentives. We will never negotiate treaties with some of these countries. I think the minister should have the authority to think it out and say, "Yes, we will give this one exemption; it deserves it".

The Chairman: If our reference to tax treaties bothers you a bit, we will forget that we said it. Let us take only the position that the chief design of section 95 is in connection with diverted income or tax avoidance. They are complicated and the taxpayer certainly is going to have to know his position. He could be inadvertently subjecting himself to penalties, so he should have the full time to study it and perhaps make full representations. Would you agree to that?

Mr. Lees: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: I have not mentioned tax treaties; I have not shocked you at all.

The Minister of Finance has stated on more than one occasion that the purpose of the provisions of the bill was to put a foreign affiliate in the same position as it would be if it were carrying on business in Canada. These provisions in the bill do not do that. They penalize the foreign affiliate as against a Canadian operation in Canada. Is that not correct?

Mr. Lees: That is correct.

The Chairman: So there is an over-exaggeration on this question of tax avoidance.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, could we have an example of just what you mean? I am not controverting it, but I think it would be helpful to have an example for the record.

The Chairman: What I am saying is that if your Japanese company was operating in Canada, I assume it would be part of the overall operation of the Aluminum Company of Canada Limited. Is that right?

Mr. Lees: Mr. Chairman, could I give three examples? This is a good question and it illustrates several points in our brief.

The Chairman: All right.

Mr. Lees: Many of our big Canadian companies are acquiring American subsidiaries, and if we take the example of an American subsidiary manager who wishes to acquire other companies, and the Canadian parent company gives him approval and agrees to raise money for him, he then buys up the shares and he makes a statutory amalgamation. However, he has been operating at a loss for the last two years; he has had losses, but he is seeing his way out. Now, if he makes an amalgamation, as I understand sections 86, 87 and 88 of the bill, he will be deemed to have realized a capital gain on anything he gets from that newly acquired subsidiary. The newly acquired subsidiary is an intangible asset—goodwill being a good example or some shares—anything which is in that subsidiary—he will have to deem an arbitrary capital gain. His American subsidiary is operating at a loss: it will not pay anything for the next two years, but the parent company in Canada will have to pay tax at the rate of 48 per cent on the deemed gain.

If a Canadian subsidiary purchased another Canadian company and made an amalgamation there are generous exceptions and reliefs and there would be no such tax. However, if your American manager said, "Look, I have this little division over in Chicago and I want to put it in a separate corporation—this guy is getting too big for his boots and I want to let him out"—he would transfer those assets to another company. This is covered under section 86 or section 87, I think. In Canada, if you took your Vancouver assets and put them in another subsidiary you pay no tax on the deemed gain on the transfer of those assets provided you retain 80 per cent of them, but if your American manager transfers assets you will have to pay tax on the deemed capital gain.

Senator Connolly: Simply because he is out of the country.

Mr. Lees: And there is no relief extended to the foreign corporation. I am sure it is an oversight, but it is in the bill.

Our English company is going to have losses for three more years because they are getting this smelter started. It is going to have sundry income. If our Canadian subsidiary had losses and at the same time had sundry income, obviously we would have some relief, but we will have to pay tax with respect to our English company because we have this FAPI. The company is operating at a loss and they do not allow us to take the loss on the ordinary basis to reduce the FAPI.

I would say those are the three most effective places where there is discrimination against our foreign affiliates.

The Chairman: Are there aspects here that we should discuss from your point of view? If there are, now is the acceptable time.

Mr. Lees: As Mr. Reid stated earlier, we did read the Massey-Ferguson brief with some appreciation because they did cover a great deal more ground than we did. We were rather single minded. We are terrified of this FAPI business. We would desire some of the points raised in the Massey-Ferguson brief to come to pass. I did notice that they neglected to talk about the instalment payment of income tax. I think it is depressing that Canada is the only country in the world which causes a corporation to pay income tax in January on its current year's liability.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Lees, we have enough problems without attempting to rewrite accounting by corporations. It is really payment in advance; that is what it amounts to.

Mr. Lees: Yes.

The Chairman: I would think that FAPI could be made acceptable if you wrote a real definition of FAPI in terms of relating it to tax avoiding and diverted income. If you have any real FAPI income, you are prepared to pay tax on it, is that right—in the definition I have indicated?

Mr. Lees: That is correct. I would think that Alcan would not have very much of that sort of thing. It becomes so complex that as soon as you put down words to say these things, you have to be very cautious.

The Chairman: If you sit on money and you do not invest it in short-term investment while you are waiting to use it in your business operation, then, from a tax point of view, you are doing well and you are reducing the instance of tax. But the moment you apply it, you may fall into the category of passive income, depending on where you provided the money and where it is used. In any event, if you earn income on it, that income would be taxable. You would get caught in with FAPI, perhaps in a big way.

Senator Lang: The witness mentioned that he was terrified of the impact of these FAPI sections. If the bill went through in its present form and became law, could you re-organize the operations of Alcan to avoid this problem?

Mr. Lees: In my opinion, no.

Mr. Reid: You could take the ultimate step.

The Chairman: The ultimate step might be that what is left in Canada might be merged into a branch operation.

Senator Lang: That is what I am thinking of. You could convert your overall world operations so that the Canadian operation became a subsidiary rather than a parent.

Mr. Reid: Yes. It is a question of plus and minus. This is tipping head offices away from Canada and making them into branch companies.

Senator Hays: Would you consider a holding company in the United States controlling your Canadian operations?

Mr. Reid: We would have to think carefully about that.

The Chairman: Over the years much effort has been put into to ensuring that that situation did not exist.

Mr. Reid: But these things tilt towards those solutions.

The Chairman: They are tilted towards the United States or to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lees: Or to Amsterdam.

The Chairman: It is a problem that should be avoided.

Mr. Lees: Alcan's Canadian shareholding has grown astronomically over the years. Canadian shareholders would have to be consulted. I do not think they would suffer economically if we were to go elsewhere.

Senator Isnor: Why do you paint such a dismal picture of the situation over the next two or three years?

Mr. Reid: The time factor arising out of aluminum investments is quite lengthy. For one reason or another excess capacity has been built into the world aluminum picture, largely through the coming into the industry of newcomers under incentives from government, which are attracting investment into the industry. The aluminum industry is over-built. For one reason or another the demand has not proceeded as anticipated. We anticipate there will be a period of over-capacity in the industry.

Senator Isnor: You mean in your own industry?

Mr. Reid: In the aluminum industry. Surplus inventory overhangs the market and we have to wait for growth to pick up the difference. We are suffering from competitive forces in the industry.

Senator Isnor: It appeared from the way you said it that it was a general statement.

Mr. Reid: It applies to the aluminum industry throughout the world.

Senator Lang: It applies also to the pulp and paper industry and to others.

The Chairman: No doubt we will hear the same story when representatives of the pulp and paper industry appear before us in a couple of weeks.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: They are hopeful that the new bill will get them into trouble with the amount of paper work required.

Mr. Reid: We have in our favour an average 8 per cent growth rate, which we hope will eventually eliminate this problem, provided that the production by newcomers into the industry does not proceed at a faster pace.

The Chairman: We shall have before us tomorrow morning representatives of the Canadian Bar Association, who have quite an extensive brief. We shall hear also from the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada and from Simpsons-Sears Limited. Simpsons-Sears will be dealing with the narrow point of the deferred profit-sharing plan and the treatment of trusts under the bill. The representatives from Simpsons-Sears will be appearing in the afternoon. The committee will adjourn until 9.30 tomorrow morning.

The committee adjourned.

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

1970-71

THE SENATE OF CANADA

PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable SALTER A. HAYDEN, Chairman

---

No. 43

---

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1971

---

Seventh Proceedings on:

“Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation”

---

---

(Witnesses—See Minutes of Proceedings)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

The Honourable Senators,

Aird	Grosart
Beaubien	Haig
Benidickson	Hayden
Blois	Hays
Burchill	Isnor
Carter	Lang
Choquette	Macnaughton
Connolly ( Ottawa West )	Molson
Cook	Smith
Croll	Sullivan
Desruisseaux	Walker
Everett	Welch
Gélinas	White
Giguère	Willis—(28)

Ex officio members: Flynn and Martin

(Quorum 7)

Order of Reference

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, September 14, 1971:

“With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator Hayden moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Denis, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and consider the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, tabled this day, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto; and

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as many be necessary for the purpose of the said examination.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—
Resolved in the affirmative.”

Robert Fortier,
Clerk of the Senate.

Minutes of Proceedings

Thursday, October 21, 1971.
(52)

Pursuant to adjournment and notice the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9:30 a.m. to further examine:

“Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation”

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Beaubien, Benidickson, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Everett, Gelinas, Haig, Hays, Isnor, Lang, Molson and Smith—(13).

Present, but not of the Committee: The Honourable Senator McDonald—(1).

In attendance: The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel; Mr. C. Albert Poissant, C.A., Tax Consultant and Mr. Alan Irving, Legal Advisor.

WITNESSES:

Canadian Bar Association:

Mr. John L. Farris, Q.C., President (Vancouver);
Mr. H. Purdy, Crawford, Q.C., (Toronto); Chairman, Sub-Committee on Tax Legislation;
Mr. J. Albert Brulé, Q.C., (Toronto), Member, Sub-Committee on Tax Legislation;
Mr. Harold Buchwald, Q.C., (Winnipeg), Member, Sub-Committee on Tax Legislation;
Mr. Edwin C. Harris (Halifax), Member, Sub-Committee on Tax Legislation;
Mr. Ronald C. Merriam, Q.C., Executive Director, (Ottawa).

At 12:15 p.m. the Committee adjourned.

2:15 p.m.
(53)

At 2:15 p.m. the Committee resumed.

Present: The Honourable Senators Hayden (Chairman), Beaubien, Benidickson, Carter, Connolly (Ottawa West), Gelinas, Haig, Hays, Isnor, Molson and Smith—(11).

In attendance: The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel, Mr. C. Albert Poissant, C.A., Tax Consultant and Mr. Alan Irving, Legal Advisor.

WITNESSES:

Simpson Sears Ltd. and Simpsons Limited:

Mr. E.A. Pickering, Vice-President, Simpson Sears Ltd.;
Mr. A. K. Hamilton, Corporate Comptroller, Simpson Sears Ltd.

Mr. D. A. McGregor, C. A., Clarkson, Gordon Company.

Independent Petroleum Association of Canada:

Mr. A. Ross, President (President, Western Decalta);

Mr. G. W. Cameron, General Manager.

At 3:30 p.m. the Chairman vacated the Chair and the Honourable Senator Connolly became Acting Chairman.

At 3:50 p.m. the Committee adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

ATTEST:

Frank A. Jackson,
Clerk of the Committee.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce

Evidence

Ottawa, Thursday, October 21, 1971

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce met this day at 9.30 a.m. to give consideration to the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, and any bills based on the Budget Resolutions in advance of the said bills coming before the Senate, and any other matters relating thereto.

Senator Salter A. Hayden (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: The first item that the committee has to consider this morning is the brief of the Canadian Bar Association. Those appearing are: Mr. John L. Farris, Q.C., President, Canadian Bar Association; Mr. H. Purdy Crawford, Q.C., Chairman, Sub-Committee on Tax Legislation, Canadian Bar Association—and honourable senators will recall that he was here before us on the Chamber of Commerce submission; Mr. J. Albert Brulé, Q.C., Member, Sub-Committee on Tax Legislation; Mr. Harold Buchwald, Q.C., Member, Sub-Committee on Tax Legislation; Mr. Edwin C. Harris, Member, Sub-Committee on Tax Legislation; and Mr. Ronald C. Merriam, Q.C., Executive Director, Canadian Bar Association.

Honourable senators all know Mr. Farris, whose name is well known in the Senate.

Mr. John L. Farris, Q.C., President, Canadian Bar Association: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Honourable senators, the Canadian Bar Association very much appreciates the opportunity of being heard by this committee. Our association has been very interested in tax laws and their administration, and our taxation section has been one of the most active in the Canadian Bar organization.

From the time of the Carter Commission we have had a special committee whose purpose has been to study tax reform in depth and to make recommendations. Briefs have been submitted on the Carter Report, on the White Paper, and on the legislation that is now before you.

While this committee has varied over the years, the nucleus has remained the same, and at all times it has included lawyers from coast to coast who are experts in the taxation field.

We continued this special committee in anticipation of this legislation, and it has continued its studies in depth.

With me to present the views of the association are the gentlemen whom the chairman has mentioned. Immediately on my right is Mr. Purdy Crawford of Toronto, Who is chairman of the special committee. Beside him is

Mr. Buchwald, Q.C. of Winnipeg. Next to him is Mr. Brulé of Toronto, and on the far end is Mr. Harris of Halifax. Our executive director, Mr. Merriam, Q.C., is also present.

With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I will turn the matter over to Mr. Crawford.

Mr. H. Purdy Crawford, Q.C., Chairman, Sub-Committee on Tax Legislation, Canadian Bar Association: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Last night, we gave some thought to how we would approach what we regard as some of the more significant issues facing your committee in connection with tax reform. We decided that we would raise those more significant issues by referring briefly to the introduction in our submission and by some of the other members of the delegation dealing with what we regard to be the most significant points. Following that, since our brief is long and technical, we would go back to the committee to deal with it further in whatever way they would like. That is our suggestion.

The Chairman: I indicated to you earlier that I have a question that I wish to ask you at some stage, and perhaps you had better be thinking about it now.

Would you give us your view of what the priorities should be in relation to the difficulties or objections to the bill?

Mr. Crawford: I think by the time we finish this opening part, on what we regard to be the most significant issues, we will have touched on most of the priority items. Then, if you would like to go back to them, Mr. Chairman, and have us write them and add any others you think are relevant, we will do that.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Crawford: First of all, I want to refer to page 2 of the introduction. This introduction, although a bit hard-nosed, was worked out in late July here in Ottawa by fifteen lawyers from across Canada. These lawyers spent three days consulting with the Department of Finance officials and working on the approach of our submission. I am going to read a couple of sentences here:

It is barely two short months since the budget speech and the publication of the first draft. The transitional provisions were not available until the beginning of July, the outline of the resource industry regulations and the international income regulations were even later. We have found it impossible in this short space of time to master the proposed legislation to the point where our criticisms can be in any sense adequate. We do feel confident that for every problem or mistake, we have found in the statute, there are ten we have missed.

The Honourable Lazarus Phillips, Chief Counsel to the Committee: Mr. Crawford, just on that question of numerality and the missing ten, have you found 50 good sections in the statute which, on the basis of the Lord and Genesis, you could say "Sodom and Gomorrah" and save this bill.

Mr. Crawford: My colleague says we will leave the mathematics to the accountant.

I would just like to read on a little further, Mr. Chairman:

In addition, we are sure that some of the possible problems or mistakes hereinafter referred to will, upon further study of the reform legislation, prove not to exist.

I want to emphasize that we think the group of people who did the work are of top-notch calibre. We are sure a good deal of it was done under tremendous pressure, and I do not care how bright and resourceful your people are, the problems we refer to are bound to come up. The second part in the introduction I wanted to touch on is at page 4. It is a general point and I would not put it forward as a priority item, Mr. Chairman, but it is an important item in terms of equity. It is at the top of page 4, where we state:

We have indicated in this Submission, several places where reciprocity of treatment is not afforded to both sides of a transaction, as where a selling price is deemed to be some amount but the purchase price is not deemed so to be. We are sure we have overlooked many places where this will be a problem in the legislation and we suggest that a general section might be included to the effect that such reciprocity will always exist unless explicitly excluded in the statute.

That is the old problem that exists in Section 17 of the present act; and this comes up at least five or six times in our submission. This is a general point but we think it is important. There are two or three places where they have provided for reciprocity to both sides of a transaction. It is difficult to make an argument that the legislature intended reciprocity in the other places.

Finally, honourable senators, we state in the last paragraph:

In view of the complexity of the draft legislation, we are certain that in the course of the next two or three years, many situations will come to light where the technical application of the legislation will be most unfair to taxpayers. We are equally certain that many "loopholes" will become obvious. We assume that it is for the latter reason that the tax collector has retained a broad discretion in cases where the equities clearly dictate a tax should be imposed, even if such a tax is inconsistent with the technical words of the Act. Surely, in fairness, this should be broadened so that the taxpayer has a similar right if he can convince the courts that to levy a tax would be a manifest inequity.

This is quite a novel suggestion. We put it forward seriously, however, in a day when all of the general provisions, the avoidance provisions—and they are becoming more—and the discretionary provisions are weighted in favour of the Revenue. It is time to start giving some serious thought to a provision that is also of general application weighted in favour of the taxpayer.

The Chairman: In ordinary language, you might say that equity is a two-way street.

Mr. Crawford: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Have you any specific suggestions you would like to point to in this connection, Mr. Crawford?

Mr. Crawford: At this point I would like Mr. Buchwald to speak on the administrative problems in this area.

Senator Connolly: I do not want to throw you off your general presentation.

Mr. Crawford: This is the way we planned on doing it.

Mr. Harold Buchwald, Q.C., Member, Sub-Committee On Tax Legislation, Canadian Bar Association: Senator, I believe that the answer to your question will become obvious as we get into the brief.

Senator Connolly: That is fine. Thank you.

Mr. Buchwald: Mr. Chairman, the comments on the administrative provisions of the statute appear at page 72 of the brief, the last section. The Canadian Bar Association feels a particular obligation to look very carefully at the administrative provisions because, after all, the enforcement and effective operation of the administrative provisions comprise our particular bailiwick.

We were pleased to note that the Minister of Finance remarked in his budget speech that when he got to the administration of the tax reform, many of the traditional civil rights and civil liberties of the taxpayers which had been agitated for over many years by the joint committee of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants had been incorporated in the tax reform measures. These, of course, are problems which have been brought to light from time to time by the joint committee of the two associations. Our concern is that while the minister and the Government have met some few of the civil liberty concerns that we have raised, there have only been a few of them. The thrust has not been adequate; it has been—and I am speaking personally and not on behalf of the association—not very much beyond tokenism. Throughout the drafting of the bill, the bill is an enforcement-oriented statute. It leans completely in favour of the revenue in almost all its approaches.

The key item that gives us the most cause for concern is the enshrinement in Bill C-259 of what the Minister of Finance of the day introduced in 1963 as a temporary expedient, the notion of ministerial discretion in the assessment of two key areas of business activity; those being, surplus distributions and asset distributions, commonly called surplus stripping and dividend stripping.

The present odious section, to us anyway, Section 138A is now a permanent section of Bill C-259.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: What is the corresponding clause in the bill? Do you have that reference that handy?

Mr. Buchwald: Yes, I do. It is clause 247.

The Chairman: That corresponds to what?

Senator Connolly: Section 138A.

Mr. Buchwald: Section 138A(1).

The Chairman: I was wondering if you had gone back to look at the record of this committee and the Senate when that section was being considered. The then Minister of Finance was here, I think in December of that year. He was asked for an explanation, which he said he could not give. But they needed something because of a problem they were dealing with, and he said there would be another budget within four or five months and the matter could be picked up again, but it never was after that time. Even this bill does not propose to pick it up and deal with it.

Mr. Buchwald: That is correct. As a matter of fact, in the situation it was alleged to have been required for it appears not to have been legally necessary, because the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Smythe case, which proceeded without the use of that section, indicated that the section was never required, that the Revenue, if it felt an improper surplus stripping scheme had been engaged in, already had within the present Income Tax Act sufficient ammunition and machinery to apprehend that kind of thing without having the ministerial discretion section. Now we find it, as we say, becoming part of the permanent law, for ever, in this temporary expedient in Bill C-259.

Senator Connolly: I just want to be clear on this one point in respect of the present bill. You say that under the old act section 138A would not have been required under the decisions.

Mr. Buchwald: That is right.

Senator Connolly: The equivalent of that, you say, is put in as clause 247 of this bill.

Mr. Buchwald: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Would you say that the scheme of the present bill is such that clause 247 is not required either in the light of these decisions?

Mr. Buchwald: Yes.

Mr. C. Albert Poissant, Tax Consultant to the Committee: There would certainly be less need with a capital gain, because certain of these transactions would become capital gains.

Mr. Buchwald: Precisely.

Senator Connolly: In ruling out clause 247, do you rule out only subsection 1, or the entire clause?

Mr. Buchwald: Just subsection 1. Subsection 2 deals with the exercise of ministerial discretion to associate corporations for the purpose of denying spin-off corporations the low base under the present act. It is comparable to section 138A(2).

Senator Connolly: The third part deals with appeals.

Mr. Buchwald: Yes.

Senator Connolly: That should remain.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Are you satisfied with the rest of Part XVI, other than clause 247(1)?

Mr. Buchwald: Yes, I think so. We would concede that ministerial discretion is probably necessary if it is to be a business purpose test approach for associated companies. It was a problem, and it was met by section 138(2). Once you have subsection 2, with the minister exercising his discretion, I think you have to give the taxpayer a right of appeal so that he can challenge that discretion in the courts, and the courts can say whether it was exercised properly. As the chairman remarked earlier to Mr. Crawford, the imposition must not be a one-way street. The associated companies provision has to prevail because the rest of the act is perpetuating the notion of a low rate in a small business incentive, and the Revenue has to be protected so that only one business can legitimately get the incentive and not a number of spin-off operations.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: But you are also satisfied with the retention of Treasury Board discretion of tax avoidance? Or to put it simply, as I said a moment ago, in Part XVI, which deals with tax evasion, there is nothing basically serious to which you object, other than clause 247(1)?

Mr. Buchwald: That is correct. I would hope there would be a scheme of legislation that would not require a broad sweeping artificial transaction section, as you find in sections 137 and 138, perpetuated in the counterpart clauses of the bill.

The Chairman: It indicates lack of faith in their drafting, does it not?

Mr. Buchwald: No, I do not think so. In fairness to the draftsmen, I do not think you can contemplate every business situation that will be promoted by tax planners and tax payers to avoid the intent of the legislation. I think the ground rules should always be clear on the business purpose or what it is that will attract tax, but until you have that there have to be artificial transaction provisions.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Buchwald, may I put this question to you? Any suggestion from this committee that we eliminate clause 247(1) might be interpreted by the public at large as showing that we condone, directly or indirectly, minimization or avoidance of tax. Can you tell us, on behalf of the Canadian Bar Association officially, and more particularly through its tax committee, that you are satisfied the provisions of the proposed new bill simply do not require the retention of this section, as a group of responsible lawyers across the country?

Mr. Buchwald: This is our unequivocal view, sir.

The Chairman: The plus that you add to it is the Supreme Court of Canada decision.

Senator Connolly: It is based on the decision in the Smythe case.

Mr. Buchwald: Yes.

Senator Connolly: I do not want to have a long discussion about this, but on the question of appeals from acts of ministerial discretion, one such appeal being given in clause 247(3) of the bill, the prospect of success in an appeal from ministerial discretion is fraught with considerable difficulty, is it not?

Mr. Buchwald: The minister's track record to date has been extremely successful, being 95 to 98 per cent.

Senator Connolly: In other words, for practical purposes there is no value in an appeal from a discretionary act, other than that it was palpably unreasonable, palpably inequitable. That kind of base perhaps might succeed, but it is a very difficult thing to achieve, is it not?

Mr. Buchwald: Yes, it is, but is there not this virtue, that the existence of the right of appeal perhaps acts as a restraining factor on an over-ambitious administration?

Senator Connolly: I am very glad you said that. I think that is very wise.

Mr. Buchwald: Knowing that their actions may be challenged, and perhaps they have to this point been quite circumspect in the exercise of that discretion.

Senator Connolly: Well, they are 95 per cent right.

Mr. Crawford: I should comment that the associated corporation provision appeals have not really worked too badly, because of the wording of the section. That is where they are 95 per cent right. Basically there have been no appeals on the dividend stripping discretion, because the minister has such a big stick when he comes to assess, and the risks of appealing are so great that he can force a reasonable settlement, or what he regards as a reasonable settlement.

Mr. Buchwald: It has been my experience, and the information I have from discussing this with other tax practitioners—and, if I may say so, Mr. Phillips, including an eminent partner of yours—is that businessmen are reluctant to engage in activities, to go into a venture, when their advisers indicate to them that they may be vulnerable to subsection 1 of section 138A. They will not know this, they will not have a tax ruling on it, until after the fact. So they have avoided that kind of transaction, rather than run the risk of having to face an assessment several years into the future, when they have re-arranged their affairs and have gone on to something else. But it might be interpreted in that way.

The Chairman: Mr. Buchwald, you must be familiar with something else that happened by reason of this section 138A. That is that purchasers on the other side of the transaction, if they are alert at all to this provision, and certainly their lawyers would do that, ask for an indemnification, to be indemnified against the possible exercise of this section.

Senator Connolly: May I make one further point about section 247(1)? Would you quarrel with the suggestion that was made by the departmental officials, that it is there for an over-abundance of caution? They may agree with you that the authority is in the act, based on the decisions that you have already cited, but the fact that it is there may not hurt. This follows what Mr. Phillips was discussing, but from another angle.

Mr. Buchwald: Yes, I agree they would say that. I would also agree with you that they would say—and we have heard them say—that its presence has apprehended, or brought to an end, a course of conduct they were trying to stop. Its very presence is acting like a big stick and has stopped dividend stripping. They would know this.

Senator Connolly: On balance, having said that, would you still adhere to the proposition that it should go?

Mr. Buchwald: If we are talking about tax reform, about trying to get for Canada a reformed, totally ideal tax system, then this ministerial discretion is not reform, it is "copping out," if I may say so, senator, on the notion of reform. They are admitting that they cannot clean up the statute in such a way that it will be clear and certainly that the administration will flow smoothly. So they have to go back to the big stick method.

I think that what Mr. Poissant said earlier is very appropriate—the introduction of a capital gains tax, and dividend stripping manoeuvres, were designed to create capital gains that would be tax free. A lot of the apprehension surely must go. Surely they are going to get at least 50 cents on the dollar—more than they did before.

Secondly, I think that any time there is ministerial discretion in a statute it ends up in trapping so many things that were never contemplated and it just leans on over-eager Revenue enforcement, not necessarily in the best interests of the taxpayer and thereby not necessarily in the best interests of the country.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Buchwald, I would like to put a question to you now, but still sticking to section 247(1). Somewhere down the line we want to discuss with the association the desirability of eliminating designated surpluses under the new laws, which was closely connected with that section 138A setup. With the introduction of capital gains tax, I want to put a simple question to you. Would the elimination of designated surpluses, in addition to the introduction of the capital gains tax, further fortify your conclusions that section 247(1) would not be needed?

Mr. Buchwald: Yes, I would think so.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Very well, that is all I want to know now. I do not wish to go into it.

Mr. Poissant: May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Poissant: Do you think that we would still need this in a transitional provision?

Mr. Buchwald: I would not think so. No, I would not think so.

Senator Connolly: I am sorry, I did not hear the question, Mr. Poissant.

Mr. Poissant: I am asking this. On January 1, 1972 when the new act comes into force, let us say, if there were still some stripping of surplus that had not been caught, I was wondering whether the department would still need to use section 138A of the old act to enforce its assessment policies. Do you think there would be a need to have it in the transitional provisions? It would be a kind of a phase out, in the transitional provisions, just like the others, but I am not too sure.

Mr. Buchwald: No, I would not think it would be required. However, let me put it this way, that we could achieve that compromise if we had to.

The Chairman: If you had to phase out.

Mr. Edwin C. Harris, member, Subcommittee on Tax Legislation, Canadian Bar Association: May I add one point here. This gets into the corporate tax area. The fact that there is the option now to pay a 15 per cent tax on existing corporate surplus makes the extraction of corporate surplus much simpler and much cheaper than it has been under the present act. Again, I think it makes dividend stripping much less attractive, relative to the alternatives.

Mr. Poissant: No doubt that is so. However, you realize, Mr. Harris that my question was not on this surplus income after January 1, 1972, but on this dividend stripping that could have taken effect before the tax reform.

Mr. Crawford: There is one point we should put on the record, particularly with reference to the question which Hon. Mr. Phillips asked. It is not just the Smythe case that leads us to say that section 247(1) should be taken out of the act and not even put in the transitional provisions either. It is the whole approach of the courts in interpreting the taxing statutes in the last five years. I have really no doubt, if there is a vigorous assessing policy followed by the Department of National Revenue, you would not need section 247(1). You might, through the court cases, throw up an area where there is a problem which can be changed by a specific piece of legislation rather than by a discretionary act.

Mr. Buchwald: Mr. Chairman, there are two or three other items which I would like to highlight and leave it at that, because there are so many other things in the bill. We mentioned in our brief, on page 72, that we are concerned with the perpetuation of the double jeopardy or double penalty method, that is perpetuated in the tax reform. The double penalty appears in section 163 and section 239. We feel that that is not consistent and we do not feel that that is tax reform, we feel that that is over-enforcement.

Talking on ministerial discretion in another area, there is a lot of discretion in a number of other places in the act, and it is perpetuated, we think to the detriment of the taxpayer, in Bill C-259. The minister has discretion as to whether he will register or not register pension plans, applications to be treated as charitable institutions, Canadian sports, authorized sports organizations, and so on.

There is a provision in the new bill, which is not in the present act, for appealing his refusal to register or his decision to deregister once he has granted registration. I do not intend to expand on this, but we do tell you on page 73 what we think the weaknesses are in the proposals outlined, and why we think that the procedure should allow the taxpayer to test the minister's discretion in a court dealing with facts rather than just dealing with law, because of the problems of trying to challenge a minister's exercise of discretion.

Then another thing that gives us a great deal of civil liberties concern is something that the Canadian Bar Association, I am proud to say, has agitated for many years—and on which we thought we had made some yards—and that has to do with investigations and inquiries conducted by the minister into the affairs of the taxpayer that may or may not lead to a prosecution or an assessment of his affairs, and so on. Courts have held that these inquiries are administrative procedures and, as a consequence, the taxpayer has no rights under these inquiries. He cannot refuse to attend. He is not entitled to be represented by counsel. He is not entitled to cross-examine anybody. He is not entitled to a transcript of the proceedings, and so on. To the credit of the minister and of the Government, and to the credit of the officials of the Department of National Revenue, the tax reform bill now tries to meet these requests. They have acknowledged that there is some merit in the requests the Canadian Bar Association has made and they have tried to meet them. We do not think they meet them adequately, and we say that with the utmost respect and appreciation for the gesture that the Government has made in this matter.

The legislation allows the witness to be represented by counsel, but then it goes on to say, however, that if the Department of Revenue feels that this would not be in the best interests of the administration, then the entitlement of counsel to be present and to cross-examine, or what have you, can be eliminated on the volition of the Department of Revenue because the department might feel it would impede the proceedings.

We think that it is fundamental that anybody whose rights are being looked into in this fashion should not be able to have those rights taken away on any pretext—a whim or otherwise, and we mention at page 75 of the brief the key things that bother us.

We note that under section 231 (15) the hearing officer may take away the fundamental right there set out of a person to be present at any inquiry into his own affairs. We feel most strongly this denial of right under section 231 (15) should only be allowed on application by the minister to a Federal Court judge, where he justifies to the court why it should be necessary to deny this fundamental right to the taxpayer.

In this same area we also urge that consideration be given again to the right of the taxpayer or his counsel to cross-examine at such inquiries and to be entitled to a transcript of the evidence.

This has not been forthcoming, although we have recommended and requested it over the years.

The Chairman: Mr. Buchwald, on that point, we did put such provisions into the Estate Tax Act when it originally came in. These were amendments that the Senate added.

Senator Connolly: I am not familiar enough with the new bulk amendments we have had, but they do not cover these points, do they?

Mr. Buchwald: No.

The Chairman: The amendments I was referring to, Senator Connolly, were ones the Senate made to the Estate Tax Act some years ago.

Senator Connolly: I realize that, but I was wondering if the bulk amendments to this act covered the points at all, and I gather from Mr. Buchwald that they do not.

Mr. Buchwald: The point is that with respect to the taxpayer it ends up as a civil liberties tokenism if the rights that are conferred can be unilaterally withdrawn or denied or do not go far enough. That is the point.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Do you think the repeal of section 231 (15) would do the trick, or are there any other danger points, danger sections or subsections, on this particular subject?

Mr. Buchwald: Yes, sir, there are some other danger points, and we have attempted to catalogue them on page 75 of our brief.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Buchwald, section 231 (15) provides that a person whose affairs are investigated is entitled to be present and to be represented by counsel throughout the inquiry unless the hearing officer appoints orders otherwise. What do you want to eliminate?

Mr. Buchwald: "...unless the hearing officer orders otherwise".

Senator Connolly: That is right, and you would also like to have inserted there, "the right to cross-examination and to transcript".

Mr. Buchwald: Yes.

Senator Connolly: Are there any other insertions you would like to see?

Mr. Buchwald: Those are the fundamental rights, I think.

Senator Connolly: These are the things which the Canadian Bar Association has made the subject matter of representations to the minister, and you say that he has met them up to a point but has not met them fully enough.

Mr. Buchwald: That is right.

Senator Connolly: What you propose now is that he go the full way.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: If I may make the suggestion through you, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the Canadian Bar Association that they let us have as quickly as possible the amendments dealing with this question of dividend stripping, section 247 (1) and this whole question of the liberty of the subject and so on. I would ask them to stick to those two main points and give us their draft amendments as quickly as possible.

Mr. Buchwald: We would be happy to provide you with that.

Mr. Harris: Our position on section 247 (1) is simply that it should not be there.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: That is simple, yes, but I would like to see something in more compact form on the question of inquiries and the liberty of the taxpayer and so on in the form of a real amendment.

Senator Connolly: That would be a redrafting of section 231 (15).

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes, a real technical amendment.

Mr. Crawford: Mr. Chairman, we should be able to have that to you in a week or so.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: We want to have it before then.

Mr. Poissant: Mr. Buchwald, do you remember in the original bill that there was no provision for this section 245 (2), the old section 137 (2)? They had left out the deemed gift. Now it has been amended and that has been added. Considering the fact that there is no deemed gift under the new Bill C-259, would you feel satisfied as lawyers that the old section 113, which was part of Part IV which has now been completely deleted, should be repeated in the new bill or that the matters involved have been covered by other clauses in Bill C-259? It is now 245 (2) which they have added together with items (a) and (b) while (c) was left out. They have added item (c), by amendment last week, by saying that it is deemed to be disposition by way of a gift. But nowhere in Bill C-259 do we have what is deemed to be a gift as we had in the section in the previous statute. In view of the fact that they removed all the gift tax provisions in which was included section 113 dealing with deemed gifts and valuation thereof, do you think that the new Bill C-259 would have sufficient coverage to have here and there these deemed gifts?

Mr. Buchwald: The intention is to make sure that no income tax arises on a situation where there is a gift other than a deemed capital gain.

Mr. Poissant: I am sorry, I did not hear the answer.

Mr. Buchwald: I was just thinking out loud in reacting to your question. The scheme of the legislation is that there is to be no gift tax and no income tax arising under the new régime on the making of a gift other than a capital gain or recapture on the disposition of the property. The concern was that by having subsection 3 of former section 137 you are limiting it and you do not cover gift situations.

Mr. Poissant: It did not cover gift situations before, so I think that now we are pleased that this is being inserted.

Mr. Crawford: Perhaps it would help if you would remind us of these particular sections because we do not have the act with us.

Mr. Poissant: Well, it is section 113 of the present act whereby certain transactions were deemed to be gifts. Now we do not have it in the new one. We may say that something would be considered as being a gift, but they do not say what is deemed to be a gift.

Mr. Crawford: I see your point, but I cannot recall for sure what are deemed to be gifts. I would say that obviously it would help the scheme of the legislation if the concept of section 113 were carried forward to clarify that certain things would be treated as gifts with the results that follow and not treated as income.

Mr. Poissant: This is what my question is directed at. If there is no provision for deemed gifts, they may treat that as ordinary income for the recipient. But if it were a gift, the treatment would be altogether different.

Mr. Crawford: Bearing in mind that from the legal point of view a peppercorn takes you away from the gift, I think your point is well taken.

Senator Connolly: I take it the point of Mr. Poissant's question is that if a gift is taken as a deemed gift, then the substance of that gift should not be taken into income.

The Chairman: Well, the point he was really making was that in the present act you have a list of what are considered to be deemed gifts. Now they have not carried forward section 113 in that form to give you that list. So what happens if there are gifts now under the new bill that would fit into the old section 113 if section 113 is no longer there?

Mr. Crawford: They might be treated as income.

Senator Connolly: Where would the section be inserted if it were to be placed in the bill? You have not worked that out, Mr. Poissant?

Mr. Poissant: No.

The Chairman: Are there any suggestions?

Mr. Crawford: In clause 245, subclause 2, subclause 3 or subclause 4.

Senator Connolly: Or we could put it in the definition section.

The Chairman: As long as we put it somewhere.

Mr. Crawford: Well, we want to put it in so that it has the broad sweep, and that it is not limited just to one particular area.

The Chairman: You could put it anywhere in the gift area.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would think that this calls for study and supplementary submissions.

Mr. Harris: Just by way of example, Mr. Chairman, in section 69 (1)(b), which is a section dealing with inadequate consideration and is a modification of the present section, it specifically refers to a gift inter vivos. There are other places in the act too where this is dealt with.

Senator Connolly: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, in view of the very rough taxing provisions in 245(2) it would highlight the matter if the deemed gift provision were included in 245(2) or somewhere close to it.

Mr. Harris: Of course, I do not like this sort of thing being put under the heading of tax evasion.

Senator Connolly: I am sorry, I did not look at the headings.

The Chairman: Well, I think we have taken this far enough. We understand that there is something that should be done there and we will find where. You referred to 69(1)(b).

Mr. Harris: Just as an illustration of the problem.

Mr. Crawford: One of the areas that has not been covered very much in terms of submissions, Mr. Chairman, has to do with some of the provisions in the reform legislation with respect to trusts, and Mr. Brulé, who is Chairman of the Wills and Trusts Subsection for Ontario in the Canadian Bar Association is here this morning and he is going to speak to this point.

Mr. J. Albert Brule, C.C., Member, Sub-Committee on Tax Legislation, Canadian Bar Association: Mr. Chairman, the section on trusts in the brief submitted to you is itself rather brief compared to the rest of the submissions. It commences at page 63. It has been given a great deal of concern to those particular lawyers dealing with this particular area more than others, generally because it is an area that comes into play quite actively in the practice of law.

I might say at the outset that we believe that a great number of the changes in the new bill are directed at the trust, which I suppose could be classified under the general heading of tax avoidance rather than the normal trust we find from day to day in existence and which has been employed over the years to help an individual provide assets for future generations—children and grandchildren—and also in the area of providing needed assistance for incompetents, invalids and so on.

Some of the provisions we set out here in our brief have been amended, I am happy to say, by the new changes introduced in the House last week.

The Chairman: Would you indicate what you mean?

Mr. Brulé: Yes, specifically on page 64 in the second paragraph on the definition of the word "income", this has now been corrected under section 108(3).

The Chairman: You are satisfied with the amendment?

Mr. Brulé: Yes, we are. Then if you would turn over to page 65, the second paragraph concerning the definition of spouse trust—section 104(15)(a) has been amended. So that paragraph we feel has been corrected and we have no further complaint or suggestion to make. The third paragraph on that page which begins subsection (6) of section 104; this has also been corrected by making reference to section 105(2).

The Chairman: Mr. Brulé, I am going to ask you a question which you may not want to answer. With respect to these three places in your brief where you have referred to sections having been changed by the amendments which have come forward, what comment would you make as to the nature of those sections in the first place, which makes these amendments necessary? Is it an obvious error, or a lack of appreciation?

Mr. Brulé: Perhaps I might deal with them individually. First of all, the word "income" as it has been known in the trust law is substantially different from that contemplated by Bill C-259. There are certain situations that exist from time to time where it may be classified as income for one purpose but it is not income for our purpose. We felt this was a rather obvious error, and that has been corrected. So deemed dividends as we have mentioned are obviously one example.

Let us move on to the second amendment which concerns us regarding what has been referred to as spouse trust. We would lose the context when the spouse died but the trust might not be distributed. So it was necessary to make an amendment referring to the rules which apply when the spouse is alive as to the attribution of income to the children where income was being accumulated, and they were not entitled to it at their early age.

Senator Connolly: I am sorry, I did not follow you. Perhaps you would give us an example. It is good for the record, in any event.

Mr. Brulé: As an example, you have a trust which pays income to the widow while she is living, and after her death, the income accumulates until the children are a certain age. The act did omit the rules respecting attribution of that income to the infants during that particular period. This has now been corrected.

Senator Connolly: Now it will be attributed to the children?

Mr. Brulé: Yes, there is provision for that. Then our third reference was to section 105(2) which deals with the necessary expenses for the upkeep of the trust and the allocation of that trust income to beneficiaries. I am sure this was an oversight and it has been readily changed to make it more equitable.

The Chairman: When you use the word "obvious" in connection with these sections, in your brief you indicate that there may be many more.

Mr. Brulé: Mr. Chairman, I feel that we have found more perhaps because in the section dealing with wills and trusts at the time this brief was presented as Mr. Crawford has suggested at the outset, it was rather early in the game. Since then we have had several meetings of our group and we also have had meetings with the Department of Finance. They have been most co-operative and they have asked us to continue these meetings with them. There is a great deal more we have to say that is not in this brief which we are prepared to submit almost at any time.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I hope you do not make it too simple and eliminate the practice.

Mr. Brulé: No, sir. Now, I go back to my original point which was introduced in the first paragraph on page 63 where we indicate that it is rather complex. We have a concept introduced to us whereby a settlor of a trust could change if certain of the ground rules on contribution of capital to the trust changed by different parties. We have certain rules respecting preferred beneficiaries. We believe, as I have said earlier, that it is part of our later thinking that this could be simplified by classifying the trusts and by doing what is being done in certainly one other jurisdiction, that is submitting the trust at the end of the first year of taxation and allowing the minister to decide where this trust fits in, and tax it accordingly. The so-called legitimate trust for children and grandchildren would not be prejudiced. One of our biggest errors at the present time is that an existing trust may fall into a trap, as indeed many of them have, where they find it is subjected to the 50 per cent tax. We feel this is most unfair. A trust that is in existence on June 18, and to which money has been added since that time will find itself taxed at the 50 per cent rate. There has been necessity, in certain cases, to add money to the trust where it has been for the benefit of an incompetent.

Senator Connolly: On what basis would it attract a tax?

Mr. Brulé: Under section 122 of the bill, because there is no specific exemption for particular trusts. Any trust that has been in existence as of June 18 and has had new assets added to it is now being taxed at the rate of 50 per cent. We thought that we would have had at least until the end of this year to look at this more closely. We still have gift tax provisions, and no one can indiscriminately add larger amounts to that trust during this period. Other trusts have now been tainted because we do have simple trusts for children and grandchildren, such things as baby bonuses which are simply added to the child's trust and the child can benefit from it in the future. But it then becomes subject to the 50 per cent rate of tax.

Senator Connolly: Under section 122 of the bill?

Mr. Brule: I am speaking without reference to the particular section. This is where we find our taxation rules.

Senator Connolly: Mr. Chairman, this would seem to be a point which we should go into.

The Chairman: This is exactly what we are doing, senator.

Senator Connolly: I do not mean to hold up the committee unnecessarily.

Mr. Poissant: In other words, Mr. Brulé, what you are asking is that in respect of a trust that was formed under a gift program of, let us say, $2,000 a year, which was a bona fide trust prior to June 18, 1971, they should have the right to continue on that program...

Mr. Brule: At least until the end of the year, if not indefinitely.

Mr. Poissant: I would go further than that. If they were originally formed for that purpose under the existing law at that time why would you not go so far as to say they should carry on the same, not adding more assets than their privilege in the prior period?

Mr. Brule: Mr. Poissant, we have suggested that a trust could be classified and if a trust fell into this category—I have referred to it as a so-called trust for a child, or a protective trust—it would only be taxed on the same basis on which it is now being taxed, at the present rate without exemptions.

Mr. Poissant: Would you have that apply for all trusts?

Mr. Brule: No, not for all trusts. We do believe that in a classification there are certain trusts, especially the so-called tax avoidance trusts, where they should, in fact, be taxed at the 50 per cent rate.

Mr. Poissant: What is the position of a trust that could borrow or had more capital than in previous years? Would that not be a type of tax avoidance?

Mr. Brule: That is correct; that is why we feel that it should not be given special treatment. Otherwise it could result in a form of income splitting by allowing the trust to borrow and make profits at a lower rate than an individual. However, that would manifest itself in two ways: First of all, if the trust itself had the right to borrow and the department saw the trust; secondly, if during the action of its yearly transactions, as evidenced by its income tax return, it did in fact borrow, the minister would have the right to move it from one to another classification.

The Chairman: It would appear that clause 122(2) aims at that.

Mr. Brule: That is correct; I would have no quarrel with that.

The Chairman: I can see uses for it.

Mr. Brule: We believe that at the outset the legislation was drafted, perhaps, solely thinking of tax avoidance and not return on tax planning.

The Chairman: That was admittedly the plan; the design of this bill is to close all gaps that existed. They did not say anything about opening others.

Mr. Brule: No, they closed some that we feel should be closed.

The Chairman: What would you suggest by way of amendment in order to cure this problem?

Mr. Brule: We feel that trusts should be classified and put into regulation. Then, depending on what category each trust found itself in, it would be taxed accordingly. That is spouses' trusts, children's trusts, certain protective trusts.

The Chairman: That may be a long range view.

Mr. Brule: It is not difficult; as a matter of fact, we feel this is simpler than the provision contained in the bill. We have already discussed it with the Department of Finance.

The Chairman: With that introduction by you and the simplicity of it being so apparent to you, we would say that you should draft it and send it to us.

Mr. Brule: As a matter of fact, senator, we have it almost done.

The Chairman: When will we receive it?

Mr. Brule: As soon as I can assemble my committee. We have already submitted this to the Department of Finance and discussed it with them.

The Chairman: But they have not dealt with it?

Mr. Brule: They have neither dealt with it nor returned it to us.

The Chairman: Perhaps we will.

Mr. Brule: Thank you.

Mr. Poissant: As an alternative in the event the definitions of the various trusts were not accepted, would it be acceptable that at least those bona fide trusts now in existence that have been receiving money over the past years be allowed to continue doing so, and be treated as previously?

Mr. Brule: Yes, and it should go one step further. There will certainly be occasions in the future to create trusts, again with respect to the incompetent or invalid who will need monies placed in trust for his care and well-being. It is certainly unfair to have that particular money taxed as income earned by the trust, at the rate of 50 per cent. He could be given the money personally today and personal rates would be paid. The individual being an incompetent, that cannot be done; a trust must be created, which would be taxed at 50 per cent.

The Chairman: In your opinion the creation of classes of trust is in essence simple. However it may be a basis for the department to say this is a new idea and they wish some time to consider it.

Against that possibility we should have an alternative amendment to deal with the problem you put forward.

Mr. Brule: We will put both forward.

Senator Carter: I am not sure whether this situation would be termed a trust. I am thinking of benevolent funds for the army and navy, which originally were made up of funds accumulated in canteens. Subsequently, veterans' organizations have added to them and I think occasionally there is a Government grant. I assume that these funds are an income. Would you put them into a separate category? Are they taxable under this law?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: It is a different clause.

Mr. Brule: They do not come under these provisions at all; they are charitable organizations, depending on their operation. I think the department adjudicates whether they are charitable; if they are, there is no income to them.

Senator Carter: What would be the position of a single veteran who is in a mental institution and entitled to free treatment and his pension builds up into a sort of trust? He is not in a position to administer his own funds.

Mr. Brule: That situation, I believe, is governed by a separate statute. However, the funds were deemed to be deposited in a trust to be used for his benefit, administered by an individual or corporate trustee, the income earned on it would be taxed at 50 per cent.

Senator Beaubien: 50 per cent is a new rate for this.

Mr. Brule: Correct; previously it was a personal rate for taxing a trust as an individual, with no exemptions.

Senator Connolly: Have you any comments to make with regard to the percentage of tax?

The Chairman: Senator Connolly, the whole design of this section was based on tax avoidance. The rate prescribed indicates that; it is a penalizing rate. Therefore everything not considered to be taxable income should be removed from this clause.

Senator Connolly: Yes, Mr. Chairman; the only specific example given by Mr. Brulé, is the case of an individual who sets up a trust, for instance, for a disabled child and pays the maximum annual amount of gift into it, of $2,000.

Mr. Brule: The maximum tax-exempt amount.

Senator Connolly: Precisely. Under the present act the income from that trust is taxable at the beneficiary's rate.

Mr. Brule: Yes, if there is a designated beneficiary and the money is paid to or on his behalf.

Senator Connolly: Or attributable to him.

Mr. Brule: Yes.

Senator Connolly: The new scheme proposes not to use the marginal rate of the beneficiary, but a flat 50 per cent rate.

Mr. Brule: That is correct.

Senator Connolly: And, as the Chairman says, for the purpose, perhaps, of curing a situation which might be tax avoidance.

Mr. Brule: It is the higher of the individual or corporate rate; 50 per cent would be the floor rate.

The Chairman: This clause does not apply, of course, to every type of trust. Perhaps I should put it this way: Senator Connolly's illustration depends on whether this contribution of $2,000 per year had started before June 18. If it had started and then was being continued by these $2,000 contributions, it would be caught under clause 122.

Mr. Brule: That is correct.

The Chairman: But if the trust were set up as a new item in January, 1972 the $2,000 contributions each year would not be affected by clause 122.

Mr. Brule: You would be caught at the outset, depending on what is happening with regard to the attribution of the income.

The Chairman: Supposing this trust that Senator Connolly was talking about was established on January 18, 1972?

Mr. Brule: Then we would follow the provisions of Bill 259 on attribution.

